This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

OFFICIAL REPORTS

OF THE

SENATE

STATE OF LOUISIANA.

TUESDAY, Jan. 25.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

After the reading of the minutes, the report of the Managers of the Citizens' Bank was laid before the Senate. Mr. Kenner moved to dispense with the reading of the report as it was rather long, and contained many figures and statistics which could not well be understood except through careful perusal.—But inasmuch as the report was in relation to a subject which was of great interest to a large number of his constituents, he moved that five hundred copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

He also moved that in addition to the usual number of standing committees, another be appointed, to be called the "Committee on Banks and Banking," and that this report be referred to the said committee.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. Clifton. An act making an appropriation out of the swamp land fund for the purpose of rebuilding Grande Levee in the parish of Pointe Coupeé.

Mr. McCay. An act to repeal the homestead law.

Mr. Evans. An act for the emancipation of Judson A. Howerton, a minor, in the parish of Bienville.

Mr. Short. A bill to amend the act to organize a levee district in the parishes of Madison, Carroll and Catahoula.

A bill to appropriate a portion of the land fund to the completion of the Levee at Point Lookout in Carroll parish.

Mr. Hodge. An act relative to the proscription of judgments.

An act to annul certain entries of lands under the act of March 17th, 1852, which had been previously entered in the land offices of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Lacey stated that in accordance with notice given by him, he would now introduce several bills. While the Secretary was engaged in reading them,

Mr. Short rose to say that he thought Senators would derive very little information to the objects of the bills from simply hearing them read, and that a more proper course would be to refer them to appropriate committees. The thirty-third rule made it incumbent on the presiding officer to appoint standing committees on the first or second day of the session. He thought that these bills ought to be referred to the special committees, and then reported on, when every gentleman might be enabled to form a correct opinion on their merits.

Mr. Wickliffe remarked that the usual course was to read the bills first and refer them afterwards.

Mr. Kenner thought the President of the Senate had scarcely had time to decide on the committees yet.

Mr. Short moved that the rules be dispensed with, and the bills be read once by their titles.

The motion prevailed and the bills were read by their titles.

Mr. Kenner moved a dispensation of the rules, to enable him to introduce a bill to place the money belonging to the school fund in the State Treasury instead of suffering it to remain, as at present, under the control of the State Superintendent of Public Education.

The bill also authorizes the Treasurer to pay warrants in favor of school teachers, issued by the State Superintendent, and audited by the proper officer.

Mr. Kenner explained his object in introducing this bill. He said that in the general appropriation bill of the last session, there was a certain section which was susceptible of misconstruction and misapplication. Under that section, a large amount of money belonging to the School fund is now in the bank in this city, without security of any kind, and subject to the order of the State Superintendent of Public Education. The law provided that of the $240,000 composing the School Fund, one-fourth should be paid each quarter to the State Superintendent; and under that law about $60,000 were now subject to the order of Col. Nicholas. The money ought to be placed in the State Treasury; and his only object in introducing this bill was to effect that, and to prevent difficulty arising from the false construction which the law of last year bears.

Mr. Wickliffe thought that the construction of the law alluded to by Mr. Kenner was in every respect false, and never intended to be placed on it by the Senate.

Mr. Kenner observed that the law, as it reads, warrants the erroneous construction to which he referred. He read the section in question, and contended that it fully warranted the construction placed on it, although the Legislature had never intended it.

Mr. Lacey asked if the State Superintendent gave no security? In that case, he thought the money ought to go into the Treasury.

Mr. King rose for information. Other Senators were more familiar than he, with the operation and effect of laws of this kind, and he would like to know in what manner this would operate. He merely wished to have light on the subject. It appeared to him that the words of the bill simply authorized the State Superintendent to draw warrants in favor of school teachers. He wished to know whether that officer drew warrants of no other kind. If so, he would like the words of the bill to be more explicit.

Mr. Kenner had no objection, if the words of the bill were not explicit enough, to alter the phraseology so as to meet the views of any other gentleman.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The resolution granting enre compensation to J. B. Walton, Secretary, and Jules Cassard, Assistant Secretary of the Senate, was taken up, and, on motion of Mr. Griffin, laid over, subject to call.

Mr. Kittridge introduced a joint resolution instructing our Senators, and requesting our representatives in Congress, to endeavor to obtain an appropriation for removing certain obstructions in Bayou Lafourche, which had been placed therein by persons acting under the authority of the United States.

The rules were dispensed with, the resolution read three times, passed, and sent to the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Kennedy, Clerk of the House, informed the Senate of the concurrence of the House in the act to place certain School funds in the State Treasury.

He also requested the concurrence of the Senate in the House bill to provide for the expenses of the General Assembly.

The rules were, on motion, dispensed with, the bill read three times and passed.

Mr. Rivers gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill amending the act in force in regard to rhe State Printing.

The Senate then went into executive session, and, immediately afterwards, adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 26, 1853.

SENATE.

The Senate met, pursuant to adjournment—26 Senators present.

After the reading of the minutes, the President laid before the Senate the list of the Standing Committees, which was read by the Secretary, as follows:

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Judiciary—Messrs. Lacy, King, Short, Nicholls, and Hodge.

Commerce and Manufactures—Messrs. Derbes, Neal and Martin.

Unfinished Business—Messrs. Neal, Patterson and Slack.

Education—Messrs. Wickliffe, Lewis, Evans, Lauve and Smith.

Internal Improvements—Messrs. King, Griffin, Todd, Kittridge and Kemp.

Mr. Palfrey rose to present a resolution instructing our Senators. and requesting our Representatives in Congress, to endeavor to procure an appropriation for clearing out and staking off channels in Vermillion, Atchafalaya and Cote Blanche Bays, and for placing buoys therein; for building a light house on Raccoon Point; and for removing the Customhouse of the Teche district from Franklin in the Parish of St. Mary, to Pattersonville, in the same Parish

Mr. Palfrey said that before submitting the resolution to the Senate, he would like, with leave, to make a few remarks on the subject, as it was one of great importance to a large section of the State. The Atchafalaya is the channel through which the commerce and products of a rich and productive section of the State finds its way to the sea. By the laws of the United States, this section is called the Teche District. Its custom-house is located at the town of Franklin, situated on Bayou Teche. The trade of this region is already great, and exhibits a large and progressive increase.

The number of entrances at the port of Franklin, amounts to 200 annually, and the exports of sugar reach from 30,000 to 35,000 hhds. But its prosperity is checked, and its commerce interrupted, by the difficult navigation of the Bay, which is impeded by shoals and other obstructions. These difficulties are increased by the pilots, who are in the habit of shifting the stakes which mark out the course of the channel—thus perplexing navigators, and subjecting vessels entering the bays to the payment of full pilotage, which otherwise might be avoided

It is proposed to construct a railroad, which is to cross the Atchafalaya at a point where it widens into a lake; and here, no doubt, at no distant day, a town will arise, which will be the depot of that region, and the point whence will be shipped a vast amount of produce.

The construction of a lighthouse on Raccon Point is also an absolute necessity, and demands the attention of Congress. It is, to the navigator coasting the shores of Louisiana, a place of great importance, being the last point of land visible on the course generally taken from New Orleans to Galveston. It is, as it were a new point of departure for vessels engaged in that trade. It is also directly on the course of vessels bound from the bays, before mentioned, to New Orleans, and other ports. From these facts it will be seen that Raccoon Point is a place of great importance to the navigating interest, and no one can doubt that a lighthouse should be constructed upon it.

In regard to removing the Customhouse of the Teche District from Franklin to Pattersonville, he would also say a few words. As he had before said, the commerce and navigation of the port is already very extensive, Franklin is the site of the customhouse at present, and vessels frequently experience difficulty in reaching there. Masters of vessels are frequently obliged to make a journey into the interior of 18 miles, to enter and clear their vessels. It is obvious, therefore, that Franklin is too far from the sea to be the port of the District. Pattersonville is 18 miles farther down, and being very near the sea coast, is certainly the most eligible locality for the customhouse. There is no more reason that it should remain at Franklin than that the Customhouse of New Orleans should be situated at Donaldsonville.

Mr. Palfrey moved that the rules be suspended and the bill pass to its second and third readings.

The rules were suspended, the bill read three times and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Wickliffe. An act to emancipate Murdock Marion Shaw. Read twice by its title, and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

An act to emancipate Laura Ann Ruff. Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Evans. An act emancipating Judson J. Overton.

Mr. Derbes gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill authorizing Justices of the Peace to appoint Curators ad lites in certain cases.

Mr. Griffin moved to increase the Committee on Public Lands and Levees by the addition of two members.

The Senate then went into executive session, and immediately adjourned.

THURSDAY, January 27, 1853.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

The President announced the names of Messrs Griffin and Kenner, as additional members of the committee on lands and levees.

A message was received from the House, stating that the Speaker had signed the bill authorizing the Governor to employ a special messenger; also asking the signature of the President of the Senate to the bill appropriating $50,000 to paying the expenses of the General Assembly.

The report of the Superintendent of Public Education, was read as follows:

REPORT
Of the State Superintendent of Public Education.

To the Honorable the members of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

It is my duty to present to the Legislatu,e a statement, showing the condition of the Schools and the funds provided for their support. The Act of the last session brought great confusion and embarrassment upon the whole system. Abolishing the office of Parish Superintendent, and requiring the duties hitherto performed by him to devolve on the District Directors, at once removed the most efficient agents through whom this office operated, and substituted others entirely unknown to it. The first duty under the new law was to learn who the directors in the several School Districts were. The obtaining this information involved a considerable loss of time. It was only to be obtained from the late Parish Superintendents, who had, very much to the dissatisfaction of many of them, been just legislated out of office. Letters were promptly addressed to all of them; but although the desired information was received from most of them, yet our tardy and uncertain mails brought them in very slowly, and after the lapse of considerable time. Had the law not been hurried into operation so speedily, but the superintendents been permitted to serve out the first year of their term of service, the people in the districts would have been enabled at the September elections, to select directors, with a view to the performance of the new and important duties imposed on them. Had such a prospective operatinn been given the law, it would have taken the place of the old without a jar, and all would have worked hermoniously.

It is believed that had the Superintendents been retained in office till the expiration of their first year, they could have been brought more generally to a settlement of their accounts, as required by the law, than has been done.

Under the interpretation given the two acts in relation to Parish Superintendents, those who were in office at their passage have been required to settle their accounts, or so much as had accrued since their last election, at this office—all accounts prior to that time were settled with the Recorders of the parishes. The vouchers of all such as settled here, were carefully examined, rejecting such as were not authorized by law. They are now on file in this office. Such as were obtained for building, purchasing, renting or furnishing School Houses, were rejected as not warranted by the law prior to the act of last session.—There is, however, much reason to believe that such expenditures of the school moneys have been made and recognized in the settlements with some of the Recorders.

Such a mass of duty was thrown upon this office by the late act, in receiving and paying out the School money, and keeping accounts with the several school districts—amounting to between seven and eight hundred—and also with each of the parishes, that it was, perhaps, physically impossible for any one man to perform it. The Legislature having directed the work to be done, without providing for the employment of a clerk, or appropriating one dollar for the contingent expenses that the office must necessarily incur, there was no alternative between applying so much of the school money as was necessary for these purposes, or to let the work remain undone. I deemed it my duty to apply the necessary means for carrying out the express will of the Legislature. My office was entirely without furniture—not a place to keep papers either in order or securely; new books were to be purchased to open the numerous and complicated accounts required by the law to be kept. I determined to employ a clerk at a very low salary—entirely too much so to command the services of one capable of discharging the duties. Very little conversant or practised in the art of book-keeping, and under the constant apprehension of errors, so liable to be committed by inexperienced accountants, my time has been so fully occupied with duties more properly belonging to the Auditor and Treasurer, as not to be able to give the requisite attention to the duties proper of the office. With all the care and diligence that it was in my power to bestow, errors may have crept in, although I am not aware of any. With duties as onerous as any office in the State House—with probably as heady demands for postage, printing and furniture as any other—my expenditure for clerk hire and contingencies will probably not much, if at all, exceed the hals of what is allowed to some of them for contingencies alone.

I have deeply felt the responsibility of taking and applying any portion ef the school funds to these purposes, without the express authority of law, but it was absolutely necessary, or the whole system would have been suspended. It is proper to add, that it produced no embarrassment to the schools, that the full amount due each district was apportioned to it, and warrants drawn by its authorized agents were always promptly paid to the extent of the funds for which it was entitled to draw.

Every part of the late law in relation to the fiscal operations of this office, calls for revision. The paying out of the school money should be restored to the regular accounting officers of the Treasury. In that department competent clerks are employed conversant with accounts, and they have adequate checks to guard against errors or mistakes.

But one of the most important restorations would be that of Parochial Treasurers. Whether this might be best done by reviving the office of Parish Superintendent, or assigning the duty to some officer,—is a question of no little importance. I still am of opinion that Parish Superintendents, under judicious restrictions, would give great efficiency to the system of Free Schools. I have thought that the Sheriffs might be made convenient Parish Treasurers.

Notices were given of a large number of public and private bills, which will be introduced hereafter

A communication was received from the Adjutant General, which was referred to the Committee on the Militia.

Mr. Parham, Chairman of the Committee to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. Theard, giving extra compensation to Messrs. Layet, Solomon and Marshall, made an adverse report.

Mr. Theard, of the minority, made a favorable report.

Mr. Parham. Before the vote is taken, I wish to say a few words touching the report of the majority. As the amount asked was for extra services, our first inquiry was, whether any extra services had been performed? We could not perceive that gny work had been done for which payment had not been made, and have reported upon this and other facts. This is not the time, when the Treasury is empty, to make donations of public money.

I will be told there are precedents for such a course—that whig and democratic legislatures have granted such demands or requests as this, baseless as it is. Sir, precedent is not law—precedents have no weight with me, when they run counter to the plain dictates of common sense, and that equal and exact justice which should be extended to every man. I find that by a law of 1852, the chief clerk of the House received $2,000 for sixty days services; which is $30 per day; the minute clerk $1,000 for the same service, which is $16 per day; the sergeant-at-arms $900, which is $15 per day. This, I think pretty fair pay; but we are now asked to add to this aggregate amount $1,200, for what reason, I have yet to learn Do this, and there will be an entering wedge for all subsequent donations of this kind. Officers of our House, whose salaries are fixed by law, will make similar request,

They might be made to retain the poll tax collected by them respectively, and to that extent pay warrants in favor of teachers after the warrants have been audited and approved here. Such warrants, in the hands of the Sheriffs, to be taken as so much money at the Treasury. The Parish's pro rata share of the remaining two-thirds of the Mill Tax collected throughout the State, might readily be settled through the Sheriff. There is so much well-grounded complaint on the part of the teachers, of the difficulty and expense of obtaining their pay. that it makes it desirable to give every facility compatible with the efficient working of the system.

There will accompany this a statement of the amount apportioned to each parish, the amount paid out, and the amount unpaid; also, the amount of

Digitized by Google

School money on deposit in the Branch Bank in this place

You will also find a statement of the amount paid into the Treasury by the Superintendents who have settled their accounts in this office.

From it, large sums appear to have been in their hands, although there was a very general complaint of the want of money for the support of Fre Schools. No doubt all this would have been corrected by requiring short periodical settlements. It is, no doubt, equally certain that they would have been more efficient officers, had they been amenable to any one for the faithful performance of their duty,

The money thus paid into the Treasury has been the source of much dissatisfaction among teachers and directors. It was seen that the law directed that it should be passed to the credit of the parishes respectively, and they could not understand why it should not be at once paid to them. But it appeared that there was no adequate appropriation for the purpose. Not anticipating that the amount to be paid in would prove so large, no doubt the Legislature considered the appropriation of the 29th January, 1852, sufficient. Such was my own impression, and seeing that the appropriation was for the express purpose "of paying the parishes of the State, and the city of New Orleans, the amount unpaid and accruing to them from collections of the last year." I doubted that such payments might be made under it. Such, however, was not the opinion of the Auditor, but the Attorney General concurring in the opinion with me, there was received in account of the moneys paid in by the ex-parish superintendent, on the 15th July, $11,294 21, it being all that remained of the appropriation of the 29th of January, unexpended.—This appropriation amounted to one hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars, and out of it the apportionment for the quarter ending the 31st December, 1851, amounting to $88,820 44, was necessarily to be paid, but many parishes never claimed and did not receive any thing, which is of course due to them. It is not only important to those parishes who did not draw, or who have amounts due them from the money paid in by the ex-superintendents, that an early appropriation be made, that they may be aid. In the act of the 18th of March, has seemed to me that an injustice is done the School Districts, which was perhaps not intended. It directs that the money paid into the Treasury by the ex-superintendents should be entered to the credit of the parishes respectively, when it obviously, by the provisions of the previous acts, was vested in the districts. If it go to the parishes, it will be equally divided among the districts, and thus put the districts who had only a part or none of the money due them, on the same footing with those who had drawn all they were entitled to. I can hardly think the Legislature intended this, and earnestly hope the act may be amended in this particular.

Before closing this report, I will offer a few suggestions that seem to me to be conducive to the advancement and efficiency of the Free Schools. One radical error is the multiplication of districts; The consequence is, that the money apportioned to a parish is so divided as to give an inadequate compensation to the teachers. One great object, perhaps the greatest, is to elevate the character of the teacher. A great means to effect this, would be the making his compensation such as to induce a continuance in his situation, and avoid the evil of perpetual changes. There should be more care in their selection. A board to be called "The Board of Instruction," should be formed in every parish, whose duty it should be to examine teachers, and give certificates when found worthy, but they should be expressly forbidden to give a certificate to the immoral, intemperate, or incapable. Such a Board might be well formed from the most capable and respectable of the teachers of the parish, and be required to meet at stated periods for the purposes indicated. None would be more interested in expelling from their profession the immoral, intemperate and ignorant who now disgrace it.

No doubt the most effectual mode of obtaining good teachers is through the instrumentality of a normal school. There is none such in the United States, and the only one on this continent is in Canada, the good effects of which are spoken of in the highest terms. One teacher so trained is said to be fully equal to two, who have not had the benefit of such instruction. The wants of the State would, perhaps not justify, nor render it necessary to incur the expenses of an institution exclusively devoted to this purpose.—But there can be no good reason why those who are educated at the public expense at Jackson, or for whose instruction the State may provide in other institutions, might not be required to be so taught as to initiate them in the art of teaching. Such a class annually introduced into the body of teachers, would soon render the schools efficient, and the office of teaching them respectable, thus saving the time of the youth, the money of the State, and elevating the entire population. Although there is no normal college in any of the States, there are many who have a certain number of their youth instructed with a view to their becoming teachers, and thus requiting the State for the benefit derived from their institution. The State of Louisiana has made, and no doubt will continue to do so, very liberal donations to her institutions of learning, and migh tvery fairly require of them similar service. The State of Virginia educates at her University, thirty-two meritorious young men, who are not themselves, and whose parents are not able to incur the expense. One is taken from each Senatorial district, and they attend for two years, at the end of which time others are appointed, and during that time are free of all expense of board, professors' fees, and University charges. By way of recompense for assistance thus offered, they are expected to teach some public or private school within the limits of the State, for two years after leaving the University.

Of all the agencies for the advancement of Free Schools, the various reports on education from other States seem to ascribe as much or more utility to the formation of teachers' Institute, than any other The teachers of each parish might for to such an Institute meet at stated periods within the parish, there to confer, compare their several modes of instruction and discipline. At such meetings lectures on education should be delivered by some one or more of their own body, or by any one else invited to do so, but especially by the State Superintendent, who ought most certainly to be again required to visit the schools. Such meetings should be public, and could not fail here as they have elsewhere to exercise the most happy influence, not only on the teachers themselves, but on the people of the parish in regard to the great cause of education. It would very much enlarge the benefits of such associations if the several parish institutes were to send a delegate from each to a central meeting to be held once a year at this place. Such a delegation would bring the most full and accurate information as to the condition of the schools and their wants all over the State. If such meeting were held during the session of the Legislature obvious advantages would result as well to the schools as to the teachers; as the most intelligent among them would probably be selected to attend the meeting Not only instructive lectures could be delivered by the members of the body, but by the distinguished gentlemen who are generally in attendance on the Legislature.

It is of great importance to the efficient discharge of the duties of this office, that provision be made for the employment in it of a competent clerk, who should be authorized to act as assistant during the occasional absence of the State Superintendent.

I am sorry to say that very few reports of the Schools have been received, and they of various dates, giving very little satisfactory information. It is very much to be doubted whether reports in the future can be counted on with more certainty. Perhaps if the average number of children who attend school were made the basis of distribution, and not the whole number resident in the district, it would give more security for their being made. Such a basis of distribution, it has been thought, would increase the attendance, and also remove the temptation to exaggerate the number of resident children of school age.

I submit herewith the opinion of the Attorney General in relation to the balances paid into the Treasury by the late Parish Superintendents.

ROBERT CARTER NICHOLAS,
State Superintendent Public Education.

The report was, on motion, referred to the Committee on Public Education, and 200 copies ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wickliffe offered a resolution, providing that no committee have power to appoint a clerk till the consent of the Senate be received.

Mr. King offered a substitute excepting the Committees on the Judiciary, Finance, Internal Improvements, and Lands and Levees.

Mr. Wickliffe was opposed to the substitute. He did not think that every committee should have the power of appointing a clerk, but when any committee should come before the Senate, through its chairman, and ask for a clerk, as indispensably necessary for the performance of its duties, the Senate would always grant the request. He moved that the substitute be laid on the table indefinitely. The motion was carried, 15 to 14.

After some further debate, the resolution of Mr. Wickliffe amended by fixing the compensation of clerks of committees, at $4 per day was adopted.

On motion of Mr. King, it was resolved that the Committees on Internal Improvements, Judiciary, Finance, and Public Lands and Levees, be each authorized to employ a clerk, and that two more members be added to the Committee on Internal improvements.

On motion, Mr. Derbes was placed on the Committee on Enrollment, and Mr. Theriot on the Committee on Commerce and Agriculture.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

In accordance with previous notice, Mr. Rivers introduced a bill, entitled "an act to amend the third section of an act entitled an act in relation to the public printing."

The bill was read twice and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Kenner offered the following resolution:

Whereas, it appears by the reports of the Auditor and State Treasurer, made to the two Houses of the General Assembly, that the ordinary current expenses of the State are greater than the ordinary current revenue—thus causing an annual deficit of nearly one hundred thousand dollars unprovided for, except by loans—and whereas the sum of $300,000 of debts proper of the State, will have matured on or before the 1st June, 1857, and as it is a wise policy in all matters of finance to provide for the payment of a debt previous to its maturity, and if the payment is to be met by taxation, it is advisable that the taxes should be spread over a series of years. in order that the burden from its diffusion will not be grievous to the people:

Be it resolved, That the Standing Committee on Finance of the Senate, be instructed to report a bill or bills embracing such measures of retrenchment of the expenditures of the State as may be practicable. Also such reforms in the assessment of property and in the collection of revenue, and such increase in taxation on property and licenses as may be required to meet the current expenses and the debts proper of the State.

Mr. Kenner moved the suspension of the rules, and that the resolution be read a second and third time and passed.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Kenner. Sir, in offering this resolution, I considered that I had a duty to perform. The time has come when it is absolutely necessary to do something to relieve the State from its pressing embarrassments. We must look forward to a time, and that not far distant, when the State will present to the world a spectacle of hopeless bankruptcy, or we must provide ways and means to meet the exigency. My only object in offering this resolution, is to devise some means by which the State may be enabled to adopt energetic measures to relieve itself from the impending bankruptcy which is hanging over it.

Mr. Lacey rose for information. He wished to know whether the effect of the resolution would be to compel the Senate to adopt any bill brought in by the Finance Committee, or whether the adoption of its suggestions would be optional with the Senate.

Mr. Kenner replied, that the effect would not be to compel the Senate to adopt the bill to be brought forward by the committee.

Mr. McCay thought that the whole subject belonged properly and exclusively to the Finance Committee, and he could see no use for the resolution, unless it were introduced for Buncombe. It was the duty of the Finance Committee to take such subjects into consideration, and no doubt that committee would, in due time, make a report in accordance with the views of the resolution.

Mr. Kenner. I am astonished, sir, to hear such remarks emanating from a Senator on this floor. When the gentleman has acted here for two or three months, he will discover what perhaps he does not now know, that I am as little disposed to cater to that feeling which is commonly called Buncombe, as any Senator in this body

My only object, sir, in offering this resolution is, as I before stated, to press upon the Senate, the necessity of adopting some measures to relieve the state from its embarrassments. The fact is now staring us in the face that the State is on the verge of bankruptcy. There can be no doubt of the fact. Why, sir, in the streets of this very town, the capitol of the State, we hear daily of judges of our courts, descending from the benches from which they administer justice, to sell warrants on the public treasury, at a discount, in order to realize their salaries. When we see such things as this, sir, can it be wondered that we should blush for the position which we occupy? For years, the current expenses of the State, have exceeded the revenues, and thus an annual deficit has occurred, which had to be provided for by loans. We have borrowed, and borrowed and paid interest on interest, till now no gentleman in this Senate, can tell how much interest we are paying. But, in addition to this, in order to reduce the excess of our expenditures we have been guilty of bad faith, in borrowing from different funds, donated to us by Congress, such as the school fund, the swamp land fund, &c., without allowing any interest, or making provision for repayment It is to devise some means to remedy this state of affairs and to restore the credit of the State, that I have offered the resolution, and yet I am met by insinuations of Buncombe, Buncombe, Buncombe.

If it is the duty of the Finance Committee to take the subject into consideration, is it not also the duty of the Senate?

I have adverted to the fact that we have borrowed at different times, from the funds donated to us. At this moment, as I am informed, there is a proposition before the other House, to borrow $50,000 from the swamp land fund. And to do what with it! Why, to put it into our own pockets. I insist, sir, that this is a legitimate subject for the consideration of the Senate, and I cannot see the propriety of referring it to the Committee on Finance. The object of the resolution is to instruct the committee to do a certain thing: why, then, refer it to that committee to report on itself?

Mr. Kenner moved a suspension of the rules which was granted, and the resolution was passed, only one Senator, Mr. Hodge, voting against it.

Mr Kennedy, clerk of the House, announced that the speaker had signed the bill to place certain school funds in the State Treasury.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. Wickliffe gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill making appropriations to the respective school districts of all moneys paid into the Treasury by the parish superintendents, in accordance with the 2d and 5th sections of the act of 1852, abolishing the office of parish superintendent.

Mr. Nichols. An act for the appointment of weighers of sugar and cotton, in and for the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Hodge gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill restricting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, in civil cases, to questions of law only.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Agreeably to previous notice, Mr. McCay introduced a bill to repeal the homestead law.

The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Mouton. An act to emancipate Susan Littell, a minor, wife of Dr. Vincent Bouqui, of the parish of St. Landry.—Passed.

Mr. Kittredge. An act to emancipate Eliza Moran. Passed

Mr. Martin. A resolution directing the State Engineer to cause obstructions to be removed from bayous Pierre Pont and L'Ours.—Adopted.

Mr. Short. A resolution instructing the Treasurer to lay before the Senate, at as early a day as possible, a tabular statement of the amount received into the Treasury of the five per cent. proceeds of the public lands, under the fifth section of the act of Congress, approved February 16th, 1811, (revised statutes, page 19,) and what amount of said funds has been paid out for roads and levees, and what amount for other purposes; and also a statement of the amount paid for works of internal improvement since the creation of the internal improvement fund, under the act of 1833, (revised statutes, page 327,) and the objects to which it has been applied, and the amount paid for the expenses of the Board of Commissioners for internal improvements prior to the act of 1842, or prior to the time at which the internal improvement administration went into the hands of an Engineer, (revised statutes, page 327, section 388,) and the annual expenses of the management of the fund since the appointment of an Engineer.—Adopted.

A bill introduced by Mr. Palfrey, regulating the duties of Notaries, without the city of New Orleans, was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The Senate then went into executive session, and immediately afterwards adjourned.

FRIDAY, Jan. 23, 1858.

Immediately after the reading of the minutes, Mr. Mouton, from the Committee on Contingent Expenses, made a report in regard to a quantity of stationery, for which a bill had been presented to the committee by Messrs. Corson & Armstrong, the stationery having been purchased by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the last session.

The Committee reported against paying the full amount of the bill, ($800.)

After a few discursive remarks from several Senators, the whole subject was referred back to the Committee, with authority to act as they might deem proper.

Mr. Mouton offered a resolution prohibiting the Sergeant-at-arms from purchasing anything for the use of the Senate, without authority from the Committee.

The resolution was passed.

NEW ORLEANS AND RED RIVER TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

Mr. Lacey stated that, a few days ago, he had introduced a bill to incorporate the New Orleans, Red River and Texas Telegraph Company. The bill had been handed to him by a gentleman of New Orleans, and he had presented it without reading it over — Subsequently he had ascertained that the bill as it is drawn up is not worded in such a manner as to express the views of the author. He would therefore request leave to withdraw the bill, that the necessary corrections might be made.

Leave was granted.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Reinhart, Assistant Clerk of the House, informed the Senate that Mr. E Solomon had been appointed Chief Clerk of the House pro tem., in place of Mr. Kennedy, who had obtained leave of absence.

Mr. Griffin, from a special committee, reported that he had examined the contingent expense account of the Treasury, and found it correct.

The resolution of Mr. Martin, prohibiting the introduction of wines or liquors into any of the anterooms of the Senate chamber, was taken up.

Mr. Martin moved its adoption.

Mr. Wickliffe said that he was glad to have an opportunity to express his concurrence in the principle of the resolution, though he thought that this year it would be superfluous. He was assured the Committee on Contingent Expenses were inflexibly opposed to the system of introducing wines and liquors, and paying for them out of the State Treasury, which had heretofore prevailed, and that it was determined not to make any allowance for the payment of such expenses.

Last year, there might have been some necessity for a resolution of this kind, as he would proceed to show, by reading from the report of the committee on contingent expenses of that session. From that document it appeared there had been paid to

E. J. Hart & Co. for sundries.....	$505,90
B. B. Hart, " "	593,75
A. W. Bell & Co, " "	200,00
Hiriart, Clerk, contingent expenses,	150,00
Hart & Co. for lamps, candles, &c.	394,63
Bonnecaze, for candles, tumblers, &c.	122,32

From this statement, the Senate would see the necessity for the resolution, not that it would have any practical effect at this session, for, as he had said before, the committee on contingent expenses here, was dead against liquors, and the gentleman would find them go heart and hand with him in this matter, but it was necessary for a precedent for the future.

From the statement which he had read, the Senate would see that over $1900 had been expended last year, and in that amount, the liquor bills were included. He did not say that $1900 had been expended for liquor, but the liquor bills were covered up in it, and as the committee had not separated the items, he could not do so. Of course, therefore, he could not state the exact amount which had been expended for liquor, but Senators could imagine for themselves, from the statement, the sum which had been disbursed in this way by that Legislature of retrenchment and reform. At this session, the resolution would be practically useless, as the committee would not consent to any expenditures of that kind, but it was proper to let the people know what had been done at the last session. He hoped the resolution would pass.

Mr. Burthe said that the gentleman who had just spoken was under a mitake. That gentleman had come to him (Mr. Burthe) as Chairman of the Committee on contingent expenses, at the last session of the Senate, and asked him to point out the sums which had been expended for liquor. He replied that he was not able to do so, but referred the gentleman to the heads which included them, and by a reference to which he could satisfy himself on the point. If the gentleman had taken the trouble te go into the office and examine the vouchers, he could easily have ascertained the precise amount which was expended for liquors.

Nevertheless he would vote for the resolution of the gentleman from Assumption, as it was time to put an end to the grog-shop in the corner.

Mr. Wickliffe remarked that he did not assert that the whole amount of $1900 was expended for liquors. He had merely said that the liquor payments were covered up in that amount.

Mr Burthe said it was true they were covered up in it, but they did not reach anything like such a sum as that.

Mr. Lacoste was opposed to the resolution. He thought that the liquor bills of the Senators should not be charged to the State, but they could not deprive Senators of the individual right of having and keeping liquor for their own use. Another reason for opposing the resolution was that water drinkers were never good men.

Mr. Derbes offered a substitute instructing the Committee on contingent expenses not to allow anything for wines and liquors.

Mr. Mouton said there was no use for the substitute, inasmuch as the Committee were, to a man, opposed to allowing anything in payment for wines or liquors, and they could not be strengthened in their opposition by the resolution.

Mr. Martin moved to lay the substitute on the table and called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Kenner could not vote to lay the substitute on the table as that would be consecrating the principle that they wished the committee to pay such bills.

Mr. Martin withdrew his call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Derbes renewed the call.

The yeas and nays were taken and resulted in deciding that the substitute should not be laid on the table

Mr. Martin moved an amendment, prohibiting the Sergeant-at-Arms from permitting the introduction of liquors.

Mr. Griffin thought that the operation of such a resolution would be injurious to Senators of a dyspeptic temperament.

Mr. Martin would be willing to amend further, by permitting any Senator to exempt himself from the rule, on having his name recorded on the journal, when he might, if he liked, keep a bottle of liquor in his desk.

The amendment of Mr. Martin was laid on the table.

The adoption of the substitute was moved.

Mr. Kenner hoped that the Senate, in its cooler judgment, would not pass the resolution, as it would be a sort of reflection on the members of the committee, who had declared that they would not sanction any payment for liquors.

The substitute was then adopted by a motion of 20 yeas to 10 nays.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Lacoste. An act to authorize William Bridges, and Elizabeth McBein, his wife, to adopt Minerva Jane Campbell. Passed.

Mr. Derbes. An act to amend the 3d section of an act, entitled an act, to provide for the sale of a portion of the swamp and overflowed lands granted to the State by act of Congress, approved 2d March, 1849, and 28th September, 1850, and to appropriate the proceeds thereof. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Short. An act entitled an act to confirm the sale of the land situated on Raccourci Cut-off. Passed.

BILLS FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Solomon requested the concurrence of the Senate in an act to borrow money to defray the expenses of the State. Finance Committee.

Also in a resolution requesting our Representatives, and instructing our Senators in Congress, to obtain a weekly mail from Wainsborough to the crossing of Boeuf River at Columbia Crossing. Passed.

Also, in an act making an appropriation of moneys paid into the State Treasury by the Parish Superintendents of Public Schools. Referred to the Committee on Public Education.

Mr. Solomon also reported that the House had concurred in the Senate resolution, relative to the removal of obstructions on Bayou Lafourche.

An Act for the relief of Harrel McNeal.

An Act for the relief of Thomas C. Bickham.

An Act for the relief of Thomas D. Nix.

An Act to appropriate a certain sum of money to the payment of Assessors of taxes for 1852.

After going into Executive session, the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1853.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

Immediately after the reading of the minutes, Mr. Clifton from the Finance Committee, to which was referred the bill appropriating a certain sum of money for the payment of assessors of taxes, for the year 1852, reported favorably, with a few amendments reducing the appropriation.

The bill provides that the payments should be taken from the funds of which the assessors are collectors, respectively.

Mr. Rivers wished to know why the money should be taken from these funds, specified in the bill.

Mr. Clifton said that it was a matter entirely regulated by law. He believed the bill was drawn up according to custom. The senator from Ascension could say whether this was the case or not.

Mr. Kenner replied that the collectors of the general fund must be paid from that fund, and the collectors of special funds from those funds respectively.

The report of the committee was adopted and the bill passed.

Mr. Clifton from the same committee reported a bill for the relief of Thomas C. Bickham, Sheriff of the parish of Washington.

He explained that the object of the bill was to pay to the Sheriff, the commissions due to him by law, which, together with the amount of his collections, he had paid into the hands of the Auditor, though not within the period prescribed by law. He was not in default, having paid up every dollar collected.

Mr. Hodge said that he was opposed to such bills as this on principle. The law imperatively requires that collectors should pay up their collections by a certain date. It requires certain duties of its public officers, which ought to be fulfilled. But as long as the Legislature allows relief to them, after having failed to comply with their obligations, they will never fulfil the requirements of the law. Consequently he should, on principle, record his vote against this bill, and call for the yeas and nays on its passage.

Mr. Boatner remarked that if the gentleman understood all the features of this case, he would not oppose the bill. The principle advocated by the gentleman was a correct one. But the circumstances of this case were such as to make it an exception. It was no fault of the person for whose relief the bill was introduced, that he had not made his returns in season. The fact was owing to a change in the law Under the law which was in existence last year, the collectors had given bonds to pay up their collections, prior to the 31st of December of each year. A subsequent law passed at the last session of the Legislature changed the time from December 31st to December 1st. Many of the collectors could not change their usual course this year, and they had acted in full conformity with ther bonds and obligations, although they had not paid up until a few days after the 1st of December, the time specified by the new law. They were not defaulters to any amount at all.

Mr. Burthe corroborated the statements of the Senator from Caldwell.

Mr. Hodge said that under these circumstances, he would withdraw his opposition and vote for the bill.

The bill was then passed.

The same gentleman, from the same committee, reported favorably on the bill for the relief of T. C. Nix collector of State Taxes for the Parish of Catahoula; also favorably on the bill for the relief of the late sheriff of the Parish of Rapides.

Both bills were passed.

Mr. Kenner, from the committee on Banks and Banking, made a report, accompanied by a Bill, changing the qualifications for Directors of the Citizens' Bank, by amending the 17th section of the charter, so as to make all persons eligible who are citizens of the State, and possess 50 shares of stock at the time of the election. The bill is to go into operation when the act is accepted by a majority of the Directors in number and amount.

The bill was read once and referred.

Mr. Lacey, on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, reported unfavorably on several bills for the emancipation of minors. The committee deemed it inexpedient to encourage special legislation of this kind, and could see nothing in the present cases justifying a deviation from the rule.

On motion of Mr. Griffin, the report was laid on the table, subject to call.

Mr. Palfrey introduced a bill making an appropriation for the payment of the arrearages due by the late State Constitutional Convention.

Mr. Palfrey explained that an appropriation of $25,000 had been made to defray the expenses of the Convention, but it was exhausted some time before the adjournment of the Convention. With all the economy possible, for it economised time, which is the same as money, the Convention could not make the appropriation hold out. It therefore became necessary to effect a loan, which was made in the name of the State. The obligation given was to the amount of $7000, and the total amount of deficit left by the Convention was something over $8000. It was to meet this amount of arrearages, still due, that he presented this bill.

Mr. Burthe wished to know whether the Senator desired to have the bill passed at once, or preferred its reference to a committee.

Mr Palfrey thought that the urgency of the case, and the nature of the debt, demanded the immediate passage of the bill.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. Slack offered a resolution instructing the State engineer to make a survey of bayou Plaquemines, and to report on the propriety of erecting works at the mouth of the said bayou, for the purpose of preventing the entrance of drift wood.

Mr. Short wished to know whether this would cause any expenditure from the internal improvement fund.

Mr. Martin said it would not.

Mr. Slack stated that works of the kind alluded to in the resolution had once been erected at the entrance of Bayou Plaquemines, but many years ago they were destroyed by fire. Since that time, serious inconvenience and damage to property had been occasioned by the loss of these works. The resolution merely suggested the propriety of rebuilding them, and thus removing the causes which annually produce so much injury. The drift wood which enters the bayou, accumulates in large quantities, and obstructs the flow of the water to the Gulf. Disastrous innundations are the result.

As the resolution contemplated nothing more than a mere report from the State engineer on the propriety of reconstructing the works in question, he hoped it would pass.

Mr. Short supposed that this would require some outlay from the internal improvement fund. In his section, they had heard a great deal of the internal improvement fund, but not a cent of it had ever reached them. Senators ought therefore to excuse them for showing some natural curiosity in looking into this matter, and for wishing to pick up some of the crumbs which fall so plentifully in other sections. Senators must therefore be repeated, really excuse them for desiring to know how this interesting internal improvement fund, of which not a solitary dollar had ever been seen in his section, was disposed of. They had heard of appropriations being made for bayou Plaquemines and bayou this and bayou that, but that was all they knew about it. They wanted now to know the cost of these things.

Mr. Slack said it was exactly for that purpose that he had introduced the resolution. Its object was to find out how much the proposed works would cost.

Mr. Short remarked that if it would require nothing but the regular salary of the State Engineer he would offer no opposition, but if it involved any encroachment on the Internal Improvement fund he would not consent to it.

Mr. Martin explained that the resolution did not touch the fund at all. It only required the State Engineer to perform a work within the strict line of his duty.

The resolution finally passed.

UNITED STATES SENATOR.

Mr. Griffin offered a joint resolution to go into an election for United States Senator, on Friday, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the expiration of the term of S. W. Downs.

Mr. Martin would ask whether the Senator had given any notice of his intention to introduce such a resolution. The rules required that notice should be given, and he would hold the Senator to the rules.

Mr. Griffin was unaware of the existence of any such rule.

Mr. Martin replied that the joint resolution was in the nature of a bill. The Senator should know the rules as well as he. They required notice to be given, and he objected to the introduction of the resolution in this way.

The President decided that the resolution was out of order.

Mr. Griffin wished the rule in question to be pointed out He did not know of its existence.

Mr. Martin said that the President had already decided the resolution out of order, and he again objected to its introduction at present.

Mr. Griffin then gave notice that he should introduce the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. Hodge introduced a resolution, requiring the State Engineer to examine and report on the propriety and practicability of making a canal, with locks, around the falls of Red River, at Alexandria, of removing or improving said falls, and of the cost of such works as may be necessary.

The resolution passed.

Mr. Palfrey asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill entitled "an Act to authorize Banking in the State of Louisiana," which he moved should be referred to the committee on Banks and Banking.

Mr. Palfrey said that the bill he now presented was similar in every respect to one now before the other house, having for its object the establishment of what are called "Free Banks," and that in making this motion his object was to give time to the Committee on Banks and Banking to examine with the care and attention which the subject required, the bill which he now offered for the consideration of the Senate. It was a subject which involved important financial and banking details, and the bill, if enacted, would have for good or evil, a very sensible effect on the currency of the country. He did not wish it to be inferred, that in offering this bill he was in favor of its passage, or that he was pledged to its support. He had not examined the subject sufficiently as yet to be able to decide what course he would take upon it—and it was for the purpose of producing deliberation on its provisions in the Committee on Banks and Banking without loss of time, that he made his motion,—which was to refer the bill at once to that committee.

On motion of Mr. Palfrey, the bill was read twice and referred to the Committee on Banks and Banking.

Mr. McCay gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill for the cancelling of bonds given by public officers, and for the erasure of mortgages resulting from the recording of said bonds.

The same gentleman introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee to examine the books of the Treasurer,

BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. Mouton—An act for the relief of Pierre Onezenie Broussard, late Parish Superintendent of the Parish of Vermillion. Judiciary Committee.

An act for the relief of Alexander McDonald, a resident of the Parish of Vermillion. Committee on Claims.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

A resolution for an application for a post-office at the French Settlement in the Parish of Livingston.—Passed.

On motion of Mr. Short, part of the report of the Register of the Land Office was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, February 3.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

After the reading of the minutes, Mr. Kenner asked and obtained leave to introduce, without notice, the following bill:

An act to prohibit the circulation of small notes.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the promulgation of this act, it shall be unlawful for any individual or association of individuals, authorized or not authorized, to carry on the business of banking, or for any body politic or corporate within the State of Louisiana, to make, emit, issue, or cause to be issued, to pay out or receive in payment, any bill of credit, bank note or promissory note, or any other instrument of writing, to be used as money or as a circulating medium, in a less amount or of a less denomination than five dollars.

Sec. 2. Be it enacted, &c., That any individual or association of individuals, or bodies politic or corporate, violating the provisions of this act, shall forfeit for each and every offence, the sum of ten dollars, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in the name and for the use of any person who shall sue for the same, and prosecute such suit to judgment, before any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 3. Be it enacted, &c., That the penalty inflicted by the second section of this act, shall not be enforced against any individual or individuals other than those issuing or causing to be issued said small notes, who shall pay out or receive in payment any note or notes as prohibited by the first section of this act, for and during the period of six months, after the promulgation thereof.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Banks and Banking.

Mr. Griffin having the floor, stated that he rose for the purpose of obtaining information on a certain subject. He had been appointed by the President a member of the Committee on Internal Improvements. He had attended the meeting of the committee at the hour for which it was called, and at that meeting an election for clerk of the committee was held, when Mr. Coco was duly elected by a majority of the members. He understood that some exception had been taken to this action of the committee, and he consequently desired information from the Senate as to the right of the committee to appoint its own clerk.

Mr. King said that he had himself intended to bring this subject to the notice of the Senate at a proper time, and with a view to this he had drawn up a report of the proceedings of that meeting, which he would read for the information of Senators, in order that they might know exactly what had been done at that meeting of the committee.

He then read the following report;

The Chairman of the Committee of Internal Improvements, in behalf of himself, begs leave to submit the following report:

The subject to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate will be found stated in the following copy of the proceedings of said committee.

"Committee of Internal Improvements, meeting Feb. 2d.

All the members of the committee present.

Mr. King, Chairman, informed the committee that he had employed on the 28th of January Mr. Louis Castera Clerk of the committee. That he had found it necessary to do so.

Mr. Griffin made the following motion:

"I move that Mr. Bienvenu Coco be elected Clerk of the Committee on Internal Improvements."

The chairman decided the motion was not in order, because by the resolution which had recently passed the Senate no committee should have the right to employ more than one clerk. That Mr. Louis Castera had been appointed clerk of the committee on the 28th ult., by the chairman, and was now the acting clerk of the committee. That until he was displaced there was no vacancy, and there could be no other clerk elected.

Mr. Griffin appealed from the decision of chair, which appeal was sustained.

Before the question was put to go into the election of a clerk, Mr Griffin moved to amend his motion by nominating Mr. Coco Clerk of the Committee"

At this stage of the proceedings I read over to the committee the foregoing record of the proceedings and called the attention of the members of the committee to the same. I understood the committee to assent to the correctness of the report.

I then informed the committee that I should protes against any further action on the part of the committee on the question and should report the proceedings to the Senate for their advice on the subject, whereupon I withdrew from the committee. I will further state that in making the appointment of Mr. Castera I acted in conformity with what I had understood to be the invariable usage upon the subject in both branches of the Legislature. That the chairman of the committee had always heretofore selected the clerk of the committee, and that such a proceeding as an election for a clerk in committee had been heretofore unknown.

Under the circumstances I have felt it my duty to refer the matter to the Senate, in order that it might be determined whether I have transcended the powers properly pertaining to the office of chairman.

Respectfully submitted,
WM. W. KING.

Mr Griffin objected to the report which had been read being received as the report of the Committee. It might be the report of the Chairman, but it was not the report of the Committee. He then read the following report from the majority of the Committee.

"Pursuant to previous notice the Committee on Internal Improvements met on the 2d of February 1853. The following members present: Messrs. King, Griffin, Todd, Kittridge, Kemp, Evans and Nicholls. The Committee being organized for business, the chairman, Mr. King, informed the Committee that he had appointed M. Louis Castera, Clerk of the Committee.

"Mr. Griffin then moved that Mr. Bienvenu Coco be elected Clerk of the Committee on Internal Improvements.

"Mr. Kittridge seconded the motion.

"The chair decided said motion out of order.

"Whereupon Mr. Griffin appealed from the decision of the chair, and upon the question being put by the chair, shall the decision of the Chair be sustained? Messrs. King, Kemp, Evans, voted yea: Messrs. Nicholls, Todd, Kittridge and Griffin voted nay. The appeal having been sustained and so announced, the chairman, Mr. King, withdrew without putting to vote the original resolution.

"Mr Nicholls, seconded by Mr Kittridge, nominated Mr. Kemp as chairman of the committee pro tem.

"Mr. Kemp having taken the chair, the vote was taken upon the original motion of Mr. Griffin—Whereupon Messrs. Nicholls, Todd, Kittridge, Griffin, voted for Mr. Coco, and Messrs. Evans and Kemp, at their request were excused from voting.

"The chairman pro tem, then announced Mr Coco as duly elected Clerk of the committee.

"The Committee then on motion adjourned.

[Signed] P. H. KEMP,
Chairman pro tem."

Mr. Wickliffe stated that he had listened with great attention to the two reports which had been made, one by the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements, and the other by the Senator from Avoyelles, as an exculpation of himself from the dilemma in which he had been placed.

Mr. Griffin — Excuse me, sir; the report which I have read is not my own; it is the report of the Committee, and as such I presented it. I do not offer it as an exculpation of myself; I am simply the medium through which the Committee reports its action to the Senate.

Mr. Wickliffe. Then, sir, the report ought to have been offered and read by the temporary chairman of the Committee, (Mr. Kemp,) but, at the request of the gentleman, I will correct myself. I will say, then, that I have listened with great attention to the two reports presented—one by the chairman of the committee, and the other by the Senator from Avoyelles, acting in behalf of the majority, and in justification of his course. From these reports I learn that the President of the Committee on Internal Improvements, in the exercise of an established privilege, had appointed a clerk; that the Senator from Avoyelles, and other members of the committee, wished another gentleman appointed; and that, after the appointment of a clerk by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Avoyelles, in conjunction with the gentlemen on the other side, had proceeded to elect another clerk—thereby violating an established usage and express resolution of the Senate, which declared that no committee shall have more than one clerk. The action of the chairman of the committee was legitimate and regular, and ought to be sustained by the Senate.

Mr Hodge wished to say a few words on this subject. It was one which involved a serious question—the right of committees to appoint their own clerks, or the right of the chairman to make the appointment in opposition to the known and expressed wishes of the majority. The question was no longer, in his opinion, open. It had already been decided by the Senate itself. He (Mr. Hodge) had, on a previous day, introduced a resolution to permit chairmen of committees to appoint clerks whenever they considered it expedient to do so. That resolution had been rejected—and thus the Senate had expressly refused to grant the power claimed by the chairman of the committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Griffin assented to the remarks of the Senator from De Soto.

Mr. Wickliffe thought there was a mistake. He did not recollect any such resolution having been acted on.

Mr. King thought the gentleman had mistaken the case, and called for the reading of that part of the Journal referring to the subject.

The Secretary read the portion alluded to.

Mr. Rivers thought that this subject had already caused much unnecessary debate, and was likely to produce much more, unless soon settled. In order, therefore, to calm the troubled waters, he would offer a resolution referring the whole subject back to the committee, with instructions to select its own clerk.

Mr. Rivers subsequently withdrew this resolution.

Mr. Wickliffe offered a resolution, which he afterwards withdrew, authorizing the committee to appoint its clerk when it shall agree unanimously.

After some further remarks

Mr. King rose and stated, that in making the appointment to which a portion of the committee had taken exceptions, he had not acted unadvisedly. Being a new member, he had endeavored, before making any appointment, to satisfy his own mind on the point—and he had acted not on his own ideas, but on the experience of others. Among those with whom he had consulted, was the Senator from Ascension. That gentleman had told him that the right to appoint the clerks of committees had, by custom, been yielded to the chairman. Subsequently the Senator had called on him, and in the course of conversation on the subject, stated that he had never known a case of disagreement, on a point of this kind, between a committee and its chairman, and he could not, therefore, say what had been the custom in such an emergency.

He (Mr. King) had also consulted Mr. Moise, Mr. J. E. King, and many old members of the Legislature in both branches and of both parties, and they all concurred in saying that it was customary for chairmen of committees to appoint clerks. Every chairman in this House had appointed his clerk, at this session. He himself was a member of another committee of which the members, by common accord, had conceded to the chairman the right of appointment. The Chairman of the Finance Committee had appointed the clerk to that committee, and the Chairman of the Committee on Lands and Levees had done the same, and to show the manner in which it was effected he would read the mandate of appointment used on that occasion: "I have appointed Mr. Edwin Floyd clerk of the Committee on Lands and Levees.

H. SHORT, Chairman.

Mr. Floyd has since been acting on that appointment, and in accordance with it, expects to draw his salary as clerk.

He (Mr. King) in appointing Mr. Castera, had acted in the same manner as the other chairmen. He had only exercised a right always, hitherto, conceded to them. If the Senate desired to take away that right, it should have done so by means of some rule or resolution declaratory of its purpose, but under the circumstances, he did not wish to be charged by the Senate as having transcended his powers, a charge which would be implied in a refusal to recognize his appointment of a clerk.

Mr. Wickliffe offered the following resolution:

Digitized by Google

Resolved: That the action of the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements, in the appointment of a clerk, was in accordance with the usual established custom of the Senate.

Mr. Griffin did not exactly comprehend the drift of the gentleman's resolution, in fact he did not think the gentleman himself understood it.

Mr. Wickliffe replied that he was not in the habit of voting in the dark, or of offering resolutions which he did not understand. When he needed information on this or any other subject, from the Senator from Avoyelles, he would call on him.

Mr. Todd said, that being a member of the Committee of Internal improvements, he felt it necessary to submit his views in regard to the matter under discussion.

It had been contended that the chairman acted in accordance with usage in appointing a clerk to the committee—even admitting this to be so, usage did not make law. But he apprehended that upon investigation it would be found that the usage extended only this far, that the chairman makes the appointment with the concurrence of the members of the committee, and after consultation with them. It is perhaps the custom of the chairman to designate some one to act as clerk of the committee; if the committee ratify the choice of the chairman, either expressly or by their silence, then the person so designated acts as clerk of the committee; the appointment only vests after such subsequent ratification, but if the committee on meeting should resolve to go into an election, then they expressly repudiate the choice of the chairman, and his power in the matter ends. So far from usage sanctioning the course pursued by the chairman of this committee, he apprehended that it would be found to be the first instance that a chairman ever undertook to appoint a clerk in opposition to the wishes of a majority of the committee.

No right could be clearer than that of a standing committee to elect their clerk. It is conceded that a committee has a right to elect even its chairman, although such chairman has been appointed by the President of the Senate, and if such be the case, how can it be denied that the committee has a right to elect its clerk? The powers of the committee in making appointments of this kind are somewhat analogous to the powers of the Senate. The President of the Senate has the right by courtesy to appoint the different committees, but the Senate, if they choose, can deprive him of this right and exercise it themselves, and we have a recent instance of this having been done.

To deny then, the right of the committee to elect their clerk, would be to establish an odious principle; it would be to say in effect, that this was an isolated case where the republican doctrine does not prevail—that the majority should rule—and would be subjecting a committee, it might be, to the tyranny of one man. Although the matter which has given rise to this discussion is a small one, the principle involved is of some importance, and one upon which he desired to see the decision of of the Senate.

In making these remarks, and the course he had taken in this matter, he disclaimed now, as he had done before, any intention to reflect upon the chairman of the committee. The whole question was one of personal preference, and in expressing that preference in the manner he has done, he had not intended to show any want of courtesy to the honorable chairman.

On a motion of Mr. Rivers to lay this resolution on the table, the vote stood:

Yeas:—Messrs. Burthe, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd.—(13.)

Nays: Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Kemp, King, Lacy, McCay, Mouton, Patterson, Short, Theriot, Wickliffe —(13.)

The result being a tie, and the President voting in the negative, the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

The question then being on the resolution, Mr. Lacey offered the following as a substitute:

Resolved: That the Senate do concur in the action of the Chairman of the Internal Improvements Committee.

The substitute was accepted by Mr. Wickliffe

Mr. Kenner here rose to make an explanation. The Senator from New Orleans had, in his remarks, alluded to him, (Mr. Kenner) and as the gentleman seemed to be laboring under a misapprehension, he felt himself constrained to make such an explanation of what had occurred as would set the matter right: Some time ago, the chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements had called on him and asked him his opinion in regard to the power of appointing clerks, vested in the Chairmen of Committees. He had replied that he believed the custom of the Senate was, through courtesy to the Chairmen, to recognize their action in the appointment of clerks. He had, however, subsequently called on the gentleman, and informed him that he had never known a case of disagreement, on such a subject, between a committee and its chairman. As for himself he had been appointed Chairman of the Committee on Banks and Banking, a majority of whose members were opposed to him in political views. Under these circumstances he had immediately expressed his determination to yield to those gentlemen all right to appoint the clerk, as he considered that although courtesy sanctioned by custom, had hitherto induced the Senator to recognize appointments made by chairmen of committees, it would be still more discourteous on his part to take advantage of a position which he held only at the option and through the courtesy of the committee, in order to appoint a clerk in opposition to what he knew to be the wishes of the majority of its members. This was the substance of his communications to the Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. King rose to make a counter explanation. He said that he had not at all misunderstood the tenor of the Senator's communications. That gentleman, in speaking as he did, had no reference to his (Mr. King's) case; he had referred to his own case, he having been appointed Chairman of a committee the majority of whose members were politically opposed to him. As for himself he had made the appointment of a clerk in accordance with what he understood to be the usage of the Senate, and he had done so before a meeting of the committee had been held, and before he had any reason to know what its opinions or wishes were. He had appointed a clerk in good faith, and because he thought he had a right to do so. If he had that right, then the committee had no right, subsequently, to go into an election, as the Senate had expressly declared that no committee should have more than one clerk.

Mr. Griffin offered the following substitute for Mr. Lacey's substitute:

Resolved, That the Committee on Internal improvements, in electing a clerk of said committee, had a right to do so.

Mr. Derbes called for the previous question on the substitute. The previous question was seconded by the following vote:

Yeas—Messrs. Boatner, Burthe. Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Griffin, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Neal, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Taylor, Theriot, Wickliffe—19;

Nays—Messrs. Hodge, Kenner, Lauve, Nichols, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Todd—8.

The question was then put on the substitute of Mr. Griffin.

The yeas and nays being taken, resulted as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Burthe, Clifton, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd—14;

Nays—Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Patterson, Short, Theriot, Wickliffe—12.

Mr. Mouton remarked that when the motion for the previous question was made, he was about to remark that he thought it would be interesting to inquire how much had been spent in this discussion. He had made the calculation, while listening to the debate, and found that it had already cost the good people of the State something over $53. He thought it was now time to be done with it.

Mr. King here tendered his resignation as Chairmain of the Committee on Internal Improvements.

Mr. Kenner hoped the gentleman would withdraw the tender of his resignation. He thought that after reflection on the subject, the Senator would not insist on resigning, as he felt confident that the committee, in their action, intended no disrespect. Assuredly, they could find no gentleman more competent to fill the place of Chairman, and none whose eminent fitness for the station they more fully appreciated.

Mr. Lacoste said that he thought Mr. King was right in resigning after the deliberate disrespect which had been manifested towards him in the action of the Senate.

Mr. Kenner repeated that he was confident the committee intended no disrespect towards the Chairman. If he thought that a single member of that committee had intended the slightest discourtesy towards the Chairman, he would move to reconsider the vote adopting Mr. Griffin's substitute.

Mr. Todd hoped that the chairman would continue to serve. As for himself, he certainly intended no disrespect, nor did he believe that any of his colleagues had been animated by such a sentiment.

Mr. Nichols made a few remarks to the same effect.

Mr, King said that he should persist in his determination to resign. He could not consistently maintain his position as chairman of the committee, when the Senate had refused to sustain his acts as chairman—acts done in accordance with all previous custom.—Gentlemen might say that they intended no disrespect—that everything they had done and said was meant in a Pickwickian sense—but for his part he could not draw any such distinctions. He viewed the whole proceeding as a virtual charge against him of having transcended his privileges, and he was not willing to retain his position as chairman under such a charge.

Mr. Clifton asked the gentleman to withdraw his tender of resignation for a moment, in order that he might move a reconsideration

Mr. King assented—when

Mr. Clifton, having voted in the affirmative, moved a reconsideration of the vote adopting Mr. Griffin's substitute.

The yeas and nays being called on the question of reconsideration, resulted as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Patterson, Short, Theriot, Wickliffe—13.

Nays—Messrs. Burthe, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichol, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd—13.

The President voted in the affirmative, thus carrying the motion to reconsidor.

The question was now on Mr. Griffin's substitute.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay it on the table.

Mr. Short remarked that he had been so unfortunate, previous to the present moment, as not to be able to explain his views on this subject. At first he thought the question one which should not be suffered to take up the time of the Senate, but an interesting discussion had sprung up in which he had wished to take part. He was prevented from doing this by the operation of the previous question, which was a parliamentary manœuvre he never before understood. He had thus been cut off from presenting his views before. This is a case of first impressions and some gentleman had said that never in any previous book or history was any thing similar to be found. Being a case of first impressions, he hoped the people would not receive an unfavorable impression of what was going on here. His own views of the subject were that even if the Chairman had a right to appoint the Clerk, he should have been slow to exercise it in opposition to the wishes of the majority of the Committee.

In such a case there could be no harmony in the Committee. It would be like a wagon with a horse before and a horse behind pulling against each other with all their strength. Nevertheless it appeared to him that, waiving the question of right, courtesy had always yielded the privilege of appointing the Clerk to the Chairman. If it was a matter of courtesy it ought to be decided according to the laws of courtesy, the highest law which could be brought to bear on it. He should therefore vote to sustain the action of the Chairman.

The yeas and nays were then taken on Mr. Wickliffe's motion to lay Mr Griffin's substitute on the table and resulted yeas 13, nays 13. The President voted in the affirmative and consequently the motion to lay on the table prevailed.

Mr. Lacey then moved that his substitute be passed.

Mr. Todd moved to amend it by adding the words "notwithstanding said appointment was in opposition to the wish of a majority of the Committee."

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend still further by adding the words "which opposition was not known to the Chairman till after he had made the appointment.

Mr. Hodge asked why the committee had been increased in number by the addition of two members.

Mr. Wickliffe replied that the gentleman manifested a more intimate acquaintance with the scenes behind the curtain than he was possessed of—he had nothing to do with increasing the committee.

Mr. Lacey made some remarks explanatory of the position of the question. The action of the President, in appointing a clerk was certainly in accordance with previous custom, and exercise of the right had always been conceded to him, and the Senate ought not now to repudiate his acts done in accordance with general usage. As to the question raised by the amendments, he thought it had no bearing on the point at issue. It was impossible for the Senate to decide on what may be the views of the committee, on a point of this kind, and he should therefore vote against these, and all amendments till he could reach a vote on the original resolution presented by himself.

Mr. Kenner remarked that in voting on these amendments they were voting on a question of fact, and not of theory. Every Senator ought to be guided in giving his vote, by what he understood to be the facts of the case.

Mr. Wickliffe said that the Senator from Ascension ought to recollect that in his own case, where he had yielded his privilege of appointing a clerk, he had done so from the fact that he had been appointed chairman of a committee, the majority of which was opposed to him in politics, and he ought not therefore, himself, to make an appointment, when he had the best possible grounds for knowing that the committee would prefer a different person from the one he might select. The case of the chairman of the Committee on Int. Improvements was very different. He had no reason to know that the exercise of the appointing power by himself would be distasteful to the Committee. For his part, he would not consent, by his vote, to cast censure on the chairman of that committee, who had but exercised his just rights—rights always hitherto recognised by the Senate. If this thing of having appointed a clerk in direct opposition to the known and expressed wishes of the committee, had been brought home to the chairman, he would vote differently, but under the circumstances of the case he was certainly in favor of sustaining the chairman.

Mr. Kenner again stated that the question involved in the amendments, and now before the Senate, was simply a question of fact. The question of courtesy had nothing at all to do with it, though he might ask which was the most discourteous, for the Committee to appoint a Clerk against the will of the Chairman, or for the Chairman to persist in retaining his Clerk in opposition to the wishes of the majority of the Committee. But so far his question had not been answered, and he should like to have information before voting. Senators could not vote on a question of facts without knowing what the facts are.

He would therefore ask whether the majority was opposed to the appointment made by the Chairman.

Mr. Hodge remarked that the majority was opposed to it.

Mr. Mouton said that a statement of the whole case was to be found in the report of the committee, and that of the chairman.

The yeas and nays were then taken on Mr. Wickliffe's amendment.

The vote being 24 ayes to 2 noes, Messrs. Burthe and Griffin voting in the negative, the amendment was adopted.

Mr. Lacey then moved to lay the amendment of Mr. Todd, as amended, on the table.

Mr. Griffin called for the yeas and nays, which being taken resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, Short, Theriot, Wickliffe [14].

NAYS—Messrs. Burthe, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd [13].

Consequently the amendment, as amended, was laid on the table.

Mr. Lacey moved the adoption of his substitute.

Mr. Kenner moved to amend by inserting the words "through courtesy."

Mr Boatner moved to further amend by adding the words, "without attaching any censure to the other members of the committee."

The amendments were adopted, and the resolution finally passed in the following form:

Resolved, That the Senate, through courtesy, do concur in the action of the chairman of the Internal Improvement committee, in his appointment of a clerk, without attaching any censure to the other members of the committee.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. Hodge — An act to change the name of Jas. H. Shotwell to Andrew Lawson, Jr.

Mr. Lacey — A resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to report a bill, or bills, for the organization of the Judiciary system of the State.—Passed.

— An act dividing the State into Supreme Judicial Districts, as provided by article 64 of the Constitution.

Mr. Theriot — An act to emancipate Angeline Victorine Blanchard, a minor, wife of A. W. Warren. Judiciary Committee.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. Burthe — An act to repeal an act to provide a homestead for the widow and children of deceased persons

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, February 4, 1853.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

On motion of Mr. Derbes, Mr. Horatio Davis, the Secretary of the Senate, obtained leave of absence, and on motion of Mr. King, Mr. St. Colombe Davis was appointed Secretary of the Senate pro tem., and took the oath of office.

The Secretary pro tem. informed the House that the Senate had granted leave of absence to Mr. Horatio Davis their Secretary, and had appointed Mr. St. Colombe Davis Secretary pro tem., to act in his absence. He also informed the House of the concurrence of the Senate in—

An act for the relief of Harrel McNeil, late Tax Collector for the Parish of Rapides.

An Act for the relief of Thomas C. Beckham, Sheriff of the Parish of Washington.

An act for the relief of Thomas D. Nix, Collector of the State Taxes for the Parish of Catahoula.

And of the concurrence of the Senate with amendments in an Act to appropriate a certain sum of money for the pay of Assessors of Taxes for the year 1852, and requesting the concurrence of the House of Representatives in said amendments.

He also requested the concurrence of the House of Representatives in the following bills and resolutions:

Resolution requesting our Representatives and instructing our Senators in Congress to obtain the establishment of a Post Office in the French settlement of the Parish of Livingston.

An act to make an appropriation for arrearages due for the expenses of the members of the late Constitutional convention.

Resolution instructing the State Engineer to examine the falls in Red River and for other purposes: Also

A resolution instructing the State Engineer to make examinations of the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine and report thereon.

On motion of Mr. McCay the joint resolution appointing committees to examine the books of the Treasurer, was laid on the table indefinitely, and the following joint resolution emanating from the House of Representatives, was taken up. On motion of Mr. McCay, the rules were suspended, and it passed:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That a joint committee consisting of five members of the House and three members of the Senate be appointed to examine the books of the Treasurer." The Speaker of the House had appointed Messrs. Brown, Ventress, Douglass, White, McMurdo, of said committee.

The President appointed on the part of the Senate, Messrs. McCay, Burthe and Wickliffe, of said committee.

Mr. Derbes introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee composed of three members from the Senate be appointed by the Chair to confer with a similar committee from the House to examine and report on the condition of the State Library. The rules were suspended and the resolution passed, and the Chair appointed on said committee Messrs. Derbes, King and Burthe.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. Neal. An act to improve the navigation of Sabine River.

Mr McCay. An act to amend an act entitled "an act to organize District Courts in the parish and city of New Orleans."

Mr. Theriot. An act, to remove the court house, recorder's office, books and papers belonging thereto, from the right bank to the left bank of the Mississippi River, in the parish of St. James.

Mr. McCay asked and obtained leave without previous notice to introduce a bill, entitled "an act to authorize the cancelling of bonds given by public officers." On motion the rules were suspended and it was passed.

Mr. Millard, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably on the claim of L. H. Latille for witness fees, and introduced a bill accordingly.

Mr. Wickliffe stated that there is in existence an act which provides that each parish shall pay its own witnesses. There was no good reason, that he could see, for making a special exception in this case, and unless some were shown, he should oppose the bill.

Mr. Millard said that in 1841, the year in which these liabilities accrued, a different law was in force, under which the State paid witnesses. The bill had been presented, but the Auditor had refused to audit the account.

Mr. Wickliffe stated that if the Committee had examined the subject carefully, and were satisfied on the point, he would offer no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. Hodge desired that the bill should lie over till Senators could obtain more information on the subject.

Mr. Griffin remarked that the Auditor had only refused to audit the bill, because no appropriation had been made with reference to it.

Mr. Derbes said that the Committee had fully investigated the subject. They found that in 1841 the State paid witnesses, and it was then that the services for which this bill was presented, had been rendered. The reason that the Auditor had refused to audit the account was, because, as he said, the debt had been proscribed.

Mr. Hodge said he had been informed that the only reason for the refusal was, because no appropriation had been made. He was informed by the Senator from Avoyelles that an appropriation would be made. He confessed that where there were general laws in existence, covering cases of this kind, he did not see why special exceptions should be made. He should make no motion in regard to the bill, but he wished to record his vote against it. All that he desired now, was time to investigate the subject, in order to be sure that he would be right in voting for the bill. He had come here resolved not to vote for any bill without thoroughly understanding it, but if gentlemen resolve to hurry things through in this way, they must do so without the aid of his vote. The Senator from Avoyelles had said that the only reason of the refusal to audit the bill was, because no appropriation had been made to meet it. Other gentlemen said the reason was, because the debt was proscribed. If such was the case he was not sure he would not vote against the bill on that ground alone. Proscription is a presumption of payment. This was the theory of the law, and it was always held to be good ground of defence against a claim. He did not think that the Legislature ought to be annoyed in this way by the presentation of little claims like this, ten or twelve years after they became due. If gentlemen wished to place themselves in this position, all very well; but he for one had no desire to do so. He wished to have time to ascertain the merits of the case so as not to vote in the dark.

After some further remarks the bill passed

Mr. Griffin introduced a petition of a number of citizens of Avoyelles Parish, asking an appropriation to make Levees, and dam certain Bayous in said Parish. On motion said petition was read and referred to the Committee on Landings and Levees.

Mr. Griffin, in accordance with previous notice, introduced the following resolution, which was read for the first time.

"Resolved, That the General Assembly will meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Friday next, 11th inst., at 12 o'clock, M., for the purpose of electing a Senator to the Congress of the United States, to fill the vacancy that will be occasioned on the 4th of March next, by the expiration of the term of the Hon. Solomon W. Downs."

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee. In his opinion all questions partaking of a legal character ought to be referred to the proper committee for its decison. He thought that the Judiciary Committee ought to be requested to give its opinion on the subject, as it was one which came peculiarly within the province of that Committee. They should be requested to investigate the subject, and report on the probable grounds which exist for contesting the seat of Mr. Benjamin. No Senator could object to the proposition. It was made in perfect good faith, and there could be no doubt either of the capacity of the Committee, or its ability to make a report before the day designated for the discussion of the resolution. He hoped that Senators would vote for the reference.

Mr. Griffin said it had been his understanding with Messrs. Kittridge, Martin and others, that the subject should not be brought forward before Thursday. He wished that it should be made the special order for that day.

Mr. Wickliffe had no objection to amend so as to make the resolution the special order for that day; but he must insist on his resolution to refer to the Judiciary Committee. He thought that such preliminary action was perfectly legitimate and proper. As for himself he wished something tangible to be presented to him. He wished that those gentlemen who had taken the ground that there should be an election for Senator, should give some reasons for their opposition to the election which had already been held. Surely gentlemen can have no objection to hearing a report from the Judiciary Committee on the subject. The question to be acted on, is one of purely a legal character, and can therefore with perfect propriety be referred to that Committee. But when the report is made, the Senate is not by any means bound by it. Every Senator remains at perfect liberty to use his own discretion as to the manner in which he shall act, but it is perfectly certain that the reference to the Committee mentioned is right and proper.

Mr. Lacey said that he did not think the Senate had any right to force the committee to bring in such a report, and he therefore thought the reference inexpedient and useless. The Senate can ask the Committee whether it is for or against a given proposition, and can, with propriety, ask it for a legal opinion on any subject of legislation. But it could not press this right to the extent of demanding a report on a subject like this. The gentleman certainly did not understand the objects of committees

Mr. Wickliffe remarked that if he did not understand it, he did not know who should— Why did the Senate have committees if not that they should report on any subject referred to them. That was one of the principal objects for which they were formed. This subject was especially one deserving the attention of the committee, and he desired that it be referred, in order that light may be shed on the darkness which now surrounds it.

Mr. Rivers thought that as there was great differences of opinion on the subject, the views of the Judiciary Committee ought to be obtained.

Mr. Mouton was in favor of referring the resolution to the Judiciary Committee, in order that it might be elucidated by the views which that Committee would present. For his own part, he was free to say that he would be glad to oust Mr. Benjamin from the place in the Senate of the United States, to which he has been elected if it could be done in accordance with right, but he would not consent to do it, if the effort involved any violation of law and justice. He would therefore like the subject referred to the committee, and he knew other gentlemen on that committee, who were also anxious to have a full expression of its views.

Mr. Short remarked that he was himself a member of the Judiciary Committee, and as a member of it he was in favor of the reference. He would have no hesitation in expressing his opinion, either as a Senator or as a member of the committee. If the subject be referred, he should go farther than merely to take a position for or against the resolution, he should report on all the circumstances of the case and on what had hitherto been done, including the action of the last legislature which elected Mr. Benjamin. If the committee should find that a point of constitutional law was involved in this question, he did not doubt that any opinions the committee might entertain in regard to it, would be faithfully reported to the Senate. In forming and presenting his own views, he desired to have the aid of the other members, which must be of use in enabling him to form a correct opinion. His desire to have the matter referred might seem like undue anxiety on his part to have it brought before that committee of which he was himself a member, but he was willing to incur all the responsibility which might thus be thrown upon him, as he considered it proper that on a question involving so grave a point the opinion of that committee, as a whole, ought to be obtained. On a question of this kind, the grounds on which a man is willing to go before the country, ought to be put on record.

Mr. Wickliffe again pressed the reference. The Senator from Avoyelles had introduced a resolution and moved to make it the special order for a particular day, and seeks the support of the Senate for his motion. In accordance with custom, and believing with others that it would be proper to do so, he had moved to refer the resolution to the Judiciary Committee. The Senator now claims precedence for his motion. This was not right. A motion to refer always has precedence, and if carried it could not interfere with the gentleman's motion. There was no reason why the committee could not examine the subject, and make its report prior to the day fixed. He certainly hoped that it would be done, so anxious was he to have light thrown on the matter. He desired to have the opinion of the Judiciary Committee before him, as he was satisfied it could yield the light which was so much needed.

Mr. Griffin said that he had the highest regard for the chairman of the committee, and that respect for his opinion, just expressed, should guide him in his vote. He could not consent to referring the resolution to the Judiciary Committee, when the chairman had declared his opposition to such a disposition of it.

Mr. Wickliffe meant no disrespect towards the chairman in insisting on the reference. On the contrary, he had the highest regard for his learning and his profound acquirements, and had no doubt that he would make an able report if the matter came before him. But this was a serious question. It involved a legal as well as an important constitutional point, and the Senate had a right to claim a report from the committee in regard to it. The opinion of the committee would be of great weight in enabling Senators to form a correct judgment, and he could see no reason why there should be an unwillingness, on the part of any of its members, to make a report.

Mr. Lacey remarked that he knew perfectly well that the Senator from Feliciana was animated by no sentiment of disrespect towards him, in pressing this matter as he did—he was aware that the gentleman was animated by totally different motives. For his own part, he would state at once that he had no desire to dodge this question, and he would therefore give his opinion at once, in order that Senators might comprehend his position.

He believed that the election of Senator, made by the Legislature, last year, was illegal, and that it was the duty of this Legislature to proceed to an election as if none had been held. The election of Mr. Benjamin he believed to be null and void, inasmuch as the law under which it was made—the law of 1846—was in conflict with the Constitution of 1845. At a proper time, when the subject might come in a more tangible shape before the Senate, he would present in a more extended form, the reasons and arguments which had brought him to this conclusion. For Mr. Benjamin he had the highest respect; indeed there was no man whom, personally, he would rather see fill a seat in the United States Senate. He was sorry that Mr. Benjamin was the gentleman placed in this position, and that he was forced to assume such an attitude towards him. But not, as long as he lived, would he sacrifice his view of right and wrong, and what he thought to be his duty under the Constitution and laws, to any considerations of a personal or private nature.

He would willingly make a report on this subject, whenever it might be placed before him, but he very much doubted whether the Senator from Feliciana would ever be convinced by any arguments that could be presented to him. He thought the motion to refer was perfectly useless, and only intended to encumber the ample resolution which had been introduced by the Senator from Avoyelles. He was not opposed to the motion because he desired to avoid the issue, for when the question came up, he would vote to go into an election for Senator.

Mr. Wickliffe said it was true that his mind had been made up on this subject, but he was one of those persons easy of conviction. If his vote could deprive Mr. Benjamin of the seat to which he had been chosen, and there were no legal and constitutional obstacles, he would most willingly give it—as the gentlemen of the opposition on this floor, who knew him, could testify. His personal feelings in favor of Mr. Benjamin were not by any means so strong as those of the Senator from East Baton Rouge; on the contrary, he did not profess to be influenced by any such sentiment. But he considered that on a question of this kind, Senators should vote in accordance with their own judgments.

Mr. Griffin said that he had not expected the least opposition to his motion. It came upon him like a cloud in a clear sky. He had agreed with General Martin and other gentlemen that the subject should be deferred till Thursday, and he consequently made the motion to make it the special order for that day. It was the general understanding that such would be the course of proceeding.

Mr. Wickliffe remarked that he and the Senator disagreed materially in regard to the existence of any such an understanding. The Senator had not acquired any vested right for his motion, and he cannot claim precedence for it over a motion to refer.

The gentleman had said that the opposition came upon him like a cloud. He (Mr. Wickliffe) hoped that a ray of light would soon penetrate the cloud which seems to rest over the Senator.

Mr. Hodge said that he did not exactly understand the position of the question. The motion to dispense with the rule had not yet been put. The Senator from Feliciana had expressly stated that unless the Senator from Avoyelles should accept his amendment referring the resolution to the Judiciary Committee, he would call for the yeas and nays on the motion to dispense with the rules. He understood that the gentleman had not accepted the amendments, and Senators certainly had a right to vote on the motion to dispense.

Mr. Griffith said that his motion was to dispense with the rules on the motion to make his resolution the special order for Thursday next. The Senator from Feliciana wished to refer the matter to the Judiciary Committee, but he could not consent to accept the motion as an amendment, unless his own motion were first acted on.

Mr. Wickliffe said that every Senator knew, and the President knew, that he was opposed to the motion to dispense with the rules, unless his motion to refer were acted on as an amendment.

Mr. Griffin. I could make a motion to fix the resolution as the special order for Friday next, without a dispensation of the rules.

Mr. Wickliffe—True, but that would not cut me off from my right to move a reference.

Mr. Griffin—I had a right to introduce the resolution without a suspension of the rules.

The President decided this point in the negative.

On motion of Mr. Griffin the rules were then suspended.

Mr. Griffin—Is my resolution now before the Senate?

The President—Yes, sir.

Mr. Wickliffe—What day is specified in the resolution?

Mr. Griffin—Thursday is the day mentioned.

Mr. Wickliffe—Mr. Secretary, please to read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, which specified Friday.

Mr. Wickliffe—Now, will the Senator move to amend his resolution?

Mr Griffin—Yes sir, if it is desired.

Mr. Wickliffe—Oh no! I only wish the Senate to make the motion.

Mr. Griffin—Then let Friday stand. I have no objection.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone till Friday, and resulted—nays 18, yeas 5, as follows:—Yeas, Messrs. Griffin, Kittridge, Lacey, Millard, Neal (5)—nays, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Hodge, Kemp, King, Lauve, McCay, Mouton, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Theriot, Todd, Wickliffe (18.)

Mr. Wickliffe moved a reference to the Judiciary Committee. If any objections were made he should call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Griffin—I have objections. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. Short—Does the motion fix any day for the committee to report?

Mr. Wickliffe—Let them report when they please.

Mr. Short—I will amend them by inserting Thursday.

Mr. King could not see any reason for a reference to the Judiciary Committee. The question was one purely political in its nature, and he did not see what the Judiciary Committee had to do with it.

Mr. Wickliffe was sorry that the gentleman was not present when the discussion was going on, as he might perhaps have formed a different opinion. The question was not a political one by any means. It was a purely legal and constitutional question.

The yeas and nays being taken on the motion to refer, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Hodge, Kemp, Kittridge, Lauve, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Theriot, Todd, and Wickliffe, (19 yeas.)

NAYS—Messrs. Griffin, King, Lacey, Neal, (4 nays.)

The motion was carried and the resolution referred.

On motion, the Senate adjourned until Monday, 11 o'clock, A. M.

MONDAY, Feb. 7th, 1853.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

Immediately after the reading of the journal a message was read from the Governor informing the Senate that he had approved the resolution instructing our Senators, and requesting our representatives in Congress to endeavor to procure an appropriation for the improvement of Cote Blanche, Vermillion and Atchafalaya Bays, and also the resolution in regard to the removal of obstructions in Bayou Lafourche.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Lacey from the Judiciary Committee reported adversely to the bill authorizing Justices of the Peace to appoint Curators ad litem in certain cases.

Mr. Derbes said he should like to have heard some reasons stated for the report of the committee. He therefore moved that the report lie on the table subject to call.

Mr. Lacey reported favorably on the bill to organise and regulate the department of Secretary of State, with a substitute for the 3d Section:

Favorably on the bill to organise and regulate the department of the Treasury with a substitute for the 3d Section.

Also favorably on an act to authorise the Mayor and select men of the city of Baton Rouge to divide that city into two election precincts:

Favorably on an act authorizing Antoine Garanteer and Adelaide Bonnere, his wife, to adopt Edward Pierre Louis, son of Genevieve Bonnere.

Mr. Short, on behalf of the majority of the Judiciary Committee, to which had been referred the bill for extending the right of pre-emption to certain persons located on swamp lands, in the parish of Livingston and East Baton Rouge, submitted the following report:

The undersigned members of the committee to whom was referred the bill extending the right of preemption to settlers on the swamp lands in the parish of Livingston and East Baton Rouge, respectfully report that by the second section of the act of 1852, the right of preemption was granted to such persons as had made settlements on the swamp lands, granted to this State by acts of Congress, provided that application and payment was made within twelve months from the passage of the act.

The bill submitted, proposes to extend the right of preemption for twelve months longer than specified in the act of 1852, as to the settlers on such land in the said parishes

Though the subject of the bill is one which more properly falls within the duties of the committee on public lands and levees; yet the committee to which it has been referred have no hesitancy in reporting against the policy of legislating for one or two parishes, on a subject of this kind, as it would lead to the passage of bills probably for each parish in which such lands happen to lie, and it would only increase the confusion which now exists in relation to the location and entry of lands.

To prevent this, no bill should be passed which does not establish a uniform rule, as to all the lands granted to the State.

This will introduce that simplicity into the Land Office Department, which will make it easy to be understood and economically managed.

The right of preemption granted by 2d section of the act of 1852, gives until the 17th day of March 1853, to make application and payment.

And the undersigned members of the committee, do not, at this time, deem it expedient to report in favor of a general bill extending the right of preemption; as they understand that a bill will be introduced to suspend the sale of swamp lands, until the surveys of the different townships are completed and first offered at public sale.

In this event, the class of persons specified in the second section of the act of 1852, can be provided for, if deemed expedient, a question upon which the undersigned are not prepared to report, not deeming it properly a question for this committee.

[Signed] H. SHORT,
W. W. KING,
THOS. C. NICHOLS,
BENJ. HODGE.

Mr. Lacey, from the same committee, submitted the following report:

To the Honorable the Senate
of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, one of the Judiciary Committee, to which was referred the consideration of an act entitled "an act granting an extension of time for the application and payment of the swamp and overflowed lands lying in the parishes of Livingston and East Baton Rouge," begs leave to report:

That the lands covered by the act under consideration, were originally settled upon as public lands of the United States; and that since such settlement the aforesaid lands have been granted by the General Government to the State of Louisiana, by acts of Congress approved 2d March, 1849, and 28th September, 1850. By an act of the Legislature approved March 12th, 1852, the settlers upon the aforesaid land were required to make application and payment for the lands settled upon by them, within one year from the 17th day of March, 1852, otherwise to be deprived of the privilege accorded to first settlers.

It appears that those who are intended to be affected by the bill submitted to the committee, are limited in their pecuniary means; that they have to rely upon their own industry, and the products of the land settled upon by them, to meet the payment of the price of such land; that so much of their time has been consumed in clearing their lands and fitting the same for cultivation, and in endeavoring to make roads, or rather routes, to the same; that they have as yet been unable to realize a fund out of which to pay for their property; and finally, that the result of a refusal to grant the indulgence contemplated in the bill, will be to take from the hardy, honest and industrious settler his home, and to turn it over to the hands of the public speculator.

For these reasons, the undersigned earnestly and respectfully prays your honorable body to pass the bill hereabove referred to,

G. L LACEY, Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, the rules were suspended, and the resolution from the House, instructing our Senators, and requesting our Representives in Congress to endeavor to procure the establishment of a daily mail between New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Bayou Sara was taken up and passed.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. Hodge. An act fixing the salaries of Judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Lacey—An act dividing the State into four Judicial Districts, conformably to the 64th article of the Constitution.

Mr. Lewis. An act amending the act incorporating the Catholic Orphan Association of New Orleans.

BILLS PASSED.

An act to change the name of James H. Shotwell to Andrew Lawson, jr.

An act to emancipate Angeline Victorine Blanchard, a minor, wife of A. W. Warren.

The following resolutions from the States of Connecticut, Indiana and Vermont, were read and referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Executive Department,
July 30th 1852,

SIR—I have the honor to transmit to you the accompanying resolutions, adopted by the General Assembly of this State, at its session in May last.

I am, Sir, with great respect,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) JNO. H. SEYMORE,
To his Excellency the Governor of Louisiana.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
General Assembly,
May Session, 1852,

Resolved by this Assembly: That the Union of the United States, and the Constitution by authority of which the Federal Goverment is administered, were results of a spirit of compromise and mutual concession among the conflicting interests and sentiments of the people of different sections of the country; and that it is the duty of every good citizen now to exercise the same spirit of compromise and concession in cases of sectional differences of interests or opinions for the purpose of preserving for themselves and their posterity the blessings resulting from that Union and Government, in the perpetuity of which are involved not only the future welfare and prosperity of the people of this country, but also in a great degree the progress of the cause of civil and religious liberty, and free government throughout the world.

Resolved: That in a government like this, in which all political power emanates from the people, by whom all rulers and legislators are appointed, and to whom they are responsible, it is peculiarly the duty of all citizens to yield cheerful obedience to all laws regularly enacted by their representatives, until such laws shall have been legally adjudged by the proper tribunal to be unconstitutional.

Resolved: That the series of measures denominated the compromise measures, adopted by the last Congress, disposing finally and peacefully of a variety of questions which had previously disturbed the country, embarrassed the Government and the National Legislature, and seriously threatened the existence of the Union, were wisely adapted to the fair adjustment of the vexed questions at issue, and constituted a fair and equitable compromise of the whole subject; and that said series of measures, as such compromise, met the full approbation of this assembly.

Resolved: That the act termed "The Fugitive Slave Law" is, in the judgment of this assembly, in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, containing merely provisions in detail necessary to carry into effect the provisions of that instrument; and that it is the duty of all good citizens to sustain the execution of said Act by all lawful and proper means.

Resolved: That his Excellency the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Governor of each of the several States of the Union, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

THE STATE OF INDIANA.

In the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Fifty-two.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

On the subject of the Slave Trade, and for the purpose of colonization.

Whereas, Considerations of philanthropy and patriotism alike demand an earnest effort to suppress the African Slave Trade, so long a reproach to the Christian world, and a base outrage upon an unfortunate race of our fellow-men. And, whereas, the praiseworthy efforts heretofore employed for that purpose have proved ineffectual; therefore,

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That it is the judgment of said General Assembly that some other and more efficient policy should be adopted on that subject.

Resolved further, That it is the judgment of said General Assembly, that it is the duty of the Government of the United States of America, as the leading nation of the world, in announcing and maintaining the cause of civil and religious liberty and ameliorating the unfortunate condition of mankind everywhere, by all proper and lawful means to use the necessary powers to crush effectually this revolting piracy.

Resolved further, That reason dictates and experience has shown, that this crime against our race, and the just laws of God, can be more certainly put down, than by any plan heretofore tried, by the planting and rearing to maturity and power Colonial states upon the African coast, with republican forms of government, from the free black population of the United States; and that it is the duty of the Congress of the United States and of the legislatures of each of the States of this Union, to enact such laws in harmony with each other, as would promote a general system of colonization, not only for the purpose of suppressing the African slave trade but also to separate, as far as possible, the white and the black race upon this continent, by sending off, where they might consent to it, all colored persons in the United States, with outcost, and providing for their comfort there for a reasonable period afterward; thus making some compensation to an injured race for the wrongs and oppressions of ages, and relieving ourselves from a population which although amongst, can never be of use, in social or political rights; and for that cause are at all times, liable to become a source of public charge and of public annoyance in each State where they reside, and of causing irritation and bad neighborhood in the feelings of the States themselves

Resolved further, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested, to use their efforts to secure the passage of laws by the Congress of the United States, and that all the sister States of this Union be likewise earnestly requested to co-operate, by similar laws, for the promotion of the foregoing objects.

Resolved further, That the Governor forward a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the Governors of all the States in the Union, and to the heads of the leading colonization Societies of the United States: and that he be requested to open a correspondence with such Societies and other persons, within his discretion, who may be devoted to the objects aforesaid, with a view to elicit information generally upon the subject and especially to obtain plans best calculated to promote the objects above contemplated. And, that he be further requested to lay such information before the General Assembly of this State, at its next annual meeting, with such recommendations touching them and the cause of colonization, as to him shall seem advisable.

RESOLUTIONS FOR THE PROMOTION OF PEACE.

1st. Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to press upon the consideration of their respective Houses, with as little delay as may be, the propriety of a joint resolution, requesting the President of the United States to propose to all nations with whom we have regular diplomatic intercourse, the establishment of a permanent board to settle all international disputes or claims.

2d. Resolved, That the Governor be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, and to the Executive of each of the States of the Union, inviting the latter to lay the same before their respective Legislatures and request their co-operation.

STATE OF VERMONT,
Secretary of State's Office,
Montpelier, Nov. 14, 1850.

I hereby certify that the foregoing are correct copies of resolutions adopted by the General Assembly of this State, on file in this office.

TUESDAY, FEB. 8, 1853.

The Senate met at the usual hour. Mr. Mellard, from the Committee on Claims, reported against the bill for the relief of Alex. McDonald.

Mr. Mouton presumed that the committee had investigated the subject thoroughly, so that he would offer no objection.

Mr. Millard said, the Committee on Claims, on examining the subject, found that the parish of Vermillion had, within the last two years, received the whole amount of money to which it was entitled under the law, and if any then remains due to this person the committee think that the parish of Vermillion is the proper authority to which to apply. If anything is due to him, no doubt the parish of Vermillion would willingly pay the sum.

Mr. Short, from the majority of the Judiciary Committee, read the following report on the resolution to go into an election for U. S, Senator.

REPORT

To the President and members of the Senate of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned members of the committee, to which was referred the Joint Resolution relative to the election of a United States Senator, respectfully report:

That they can find no law or constitutional provision, which would authorize the Senate to meet the other branch of the General Assembly, for the object specified in said resolution, and would briefly state the grounds upon which they base this conclusion.

They believe it to be the duty of those exercising the powers granted to any department of the government. whether legislative, executive, or judicial, to inquire—first, whether they have a right to take the action proposed; and, second, if they have the power, whether the period has arrived at which they can constitutionally and legally exercise it.

The proposition being made, that the Senate should meet the other branch of the General Assembly, to proceed to the election of United States Senator: the first inquiry, then, is, has it the power to do so?

Secondly: Has the period arrived at which it can constitutionally exercise such power?

This body, as now organized, derives its authority from the Constitution of 1852, and the laws of the State not inconsistent to the provisions of such Constitution.

Art. 34 thus provides:

"In the year in which a regular election for a Senator of the United States is to take place, the members of the General Assembly shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on the Monday following the meeting of the Legislature, and proceed to the said election."

By this provision of the Constitution, the Senate, constituting a branch of the General Assembly, has, undoubtedly, the power vested in it to meet with the other branch, for the purpose specified in the resolution, whenever the period arrives when this power can be exercised legally and constitutionally.

This leads to the second branch of the inquiry—has the period arrived when the power can be exercised?

The offering of the resolution presupposes that this is the year in which a regular election of a United States Senator is to take place, or that there is a vacancy in the Senate of the United States, requiring the action of the General Assembly of this State to provide for it. Does either case exist in point of fact? That there is no vacancy in point of fact, as yet, is not disputed. Hon. Pierre Soulé's term does not expire until the 4th of March, 1855, and the term of the Hon. S. W. Downs does not expire until the 4th of March, 1853. If the Senate, then, is required to meet the other branch of the General Assembly, and proceed to an election of a United States Senator, it must be assumed that this is the year in which a regular election can legally take place, to fill the term which will commence with the expiration of Mr. Soulé's term, or to fill the term which commences at the expiration of the term of the Hon. S. W. Downs.

Sec. second of the Act of 1846, thus provides:

Be it furthur enacted, &c., That on the first Monday following the meeting of the Legislature, in the session thereof, commencing in the year in which the term of office of any Senator or Senators, chosen to represent this State in the Congress of the United States of America, shall expire, or in case there is no session of the Legislature in such year, then in the year next preceding such year the two Houses shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives and proceed to to the choice of a Senator or Senators, to represent the State in the Congress of the United States of America, in place of the Senator or Senators going out of office. And the person or persons having the greatest number of votes, shall be declared duly elected Senator or Senators, provided such number be a majority of all the members present. Approved February 13th, 1846.

This Act stands unrepealed, so far as any ordinary legislation is concerned, and this cannot be the year in which a regular election is to take place to fill the term commencing at the expiration of Hon. Pierre Soule's term.

It must be assumed, then, that the present General Assembly, deriving its powers from the Constitution of 1852, must proceed to a regular election for Senator of the United States, to fill the term which commences on the 4th of March next, when the term of the Hon. S. W. Downs expires.

There being nothing in the above Act inconsistent with the Constitution of 1852, the Constitution not having fixed the year in which a regular election is to take place, the present General Assembly might proceed to elect, provided no election had been made for the term of a Senator, to commence on the 4th of March next. But an election was held in January, 1852, by the General Assembly then in session, and the Hon. J. P. Benjamin was elected to fill said term.

This leads us to the inquiry:

First—Was the election then had in accordance with the Constitution of 1845, and the above recited section of the Act of 1846? And if the election then had be considered valid by the then existing constitution and laws, has such election been set aside and made void by the adoption of the Constitution of 1852, which has called together the General Assembly in the year in which it could not meet regularly under the Constitution of 1845?

The Constitution of 1812 had no provision in it as to the time, place or manner of electing a Senator of the United States. It provided for the meeting of the Legislature every year, and at a time prior to the 4th of March, so that a regular election of a Senator could be fixed by the Legislature, to take place in the identical year in which the term expired.

Article 1st, Section 4th of the Constitution of the United States, thus provides:

1st. The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may, at any time, by law, make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

In virtue of the power thus vested in the Legislature, assembled under the Constitution of 1812, they passed the following act:

"SEC. 1st. That on the second Monday in January next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator or Senators to represent this State in the Congress of the United States, is or shall be chosen, if the Legislature of this State shall then be in session, and if not, then, within eight days after a quorum of both Houses shall be assembled at the place where the Legislature shall then be sitting; the two Houses shall meet in the House of Representatives, and proceed, by joint ballot, to the choice of a Senator or Senators to represent this State in the Congress of the United States, etc."

This act remained in force up to the 13th of February, 1846, and furnished the rule by which the Legislature was governed as to the time, place and manner of electing Senators to fill a regular term, so long as they met under the Constitution of 1812.

The 37th article of the Constitution of 1845 thus provides:

"In the year in which the regular election of a Senator of the United States is to take place, the members of the General Assembly shall meet in the hall of the House of Representatives, on the Monday following the meeting of the Legislature, and proceed to the said election."

This article of the Constitution, in no respect, took from the Legislature the power of fixing the year, in which an election for United States Senator should take place. But in the year in which it is to take place by law, (and the Legislature had a right to fix the year by the 4th section of the 1st article of the Constitution of the United States,) then the members of the General assembly are directed to "meet in the hall of the House of Representatives on the Monday following the meeting of the Legislature and proceed to said election."

By the Constitution of 1845, article 5, the General Assembly is required to meet every second year, on the third Monday in January next, ensuing the election; but the first session of the Legislature, by the article 159, was to be held on the second Monday of February, 1846. But, after that, no regular term could be held under the Constitution of 1845, except as provided for in the 5th section.

The State of Louisiana then found itself in a new state of existence, and had to provide for the exigencies of the change which had taken place in the organic law. Finding that they could not meet every year, and that a regular term of a Senator of the United States must necessarily expire in a year in which they could not meet regularly under the Constitution, they repealed the 1st section of the act of 1812, by the 1st section of the act of 1846, which reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the 1st section of an act entitled an 'Act prescribing the times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators to represent this State in the Senate of the Congress of the United States of America,' approved September 1st, 1812, be and the same is hereby repealed."

The first section of the act of 1812, being inapplicable and furnishing no longer a rule by which the Legislature could act in the election of Senator, they established the rule which is given in the 2d section of the act of 1846, above quoted, that is, in the session commencing in the year in which the term of a Senator expires, they can proceed to elect in that year. But if it expires in the next year in which they could have no session under the Constitution, then they provide for the election before the year in which the term expires. Under the rule thus established, Mr. Benjamin was elected in January, 1852, and was proclaimed duly elected Senator of the United States, for the term of six years, from the 4th of March, 1853. This act was done by the people of Louisiana, through their General Assembly, convened under the Constitution of 1845, and according to the rule established for doing such an act, contained in the 2d section of the act of 1846.

If the election of Mr. Benjamin thus had, be void, it must be on the ground:

1st. That his election is null, and was at the time it took place, by virtue of some provision of the Constitution of the United States, of this State, or some law existing at the time the election took place, or that the change that the State has undergone by the adoption of the Constitution of 1852, or, lastly, that Mr. Benjamin has not the qualifications or capacity required in 3d section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, which reads thus:

"No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen."

We have no evidence that Mr. Benjamin stands in a situation to be excluded by the above provisions; and the action of the Legislature in electing him, is taken as "prima facia" evidence of his possessing the constitutional qualifications. And the undersigned do not wish to be understood as taking the position that the present General Assembly can constitute itself a judge in this matter, for the 5th section of article 1st of the Constitution of the United States, provides that each House shall be "the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members."

We proceed then, to the other two grounds—1st. As to the Constitution of the United States, is the election void by virtue of any other of its provisions?—Article 3d, section 1st of the Constitution of the United States, provides—that "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote." The Senate of the United States is a co-ordinate branch of the Federal Government, the office of Senator is one involved in the composition of that body, its existence or non-existence is not involved in any particular organization of the State Government. It does not grow out of, nor is it involved in any change which may take place in the organic law of the State. As long as the State exists under any form of a Constitution, and remains in the Union, it is the duty of the Legislature of the State, and it has the right to choose its Senators, and to fix the time, place and manner of doing so. This, the State of Louisiana did, and in accordance with the provisions of the 2d section of the act of 1846, elected Mr. Benjamin.

So far, we have seen nothing in the Constitution of the United States, to vacate the election of Mr. Benjamin; and there being nothing in the act of 1846 which contravenes the Constitution of 1845, and Mr. Benjamin being elected by the rule established by that act, the undersigned have come to the conclusion, and one which they deem cannot be shaken, that the election of Mr. Benjamin took place in accordance with the provisions of the law governing the election at the time it took place. This leads us to the last branch of the enquiry. Did any power exist in the State of Louisiana, after the election took place to vacate it? No one will contend, we presume, that, under the Constitution of 1845, any General Assembly could have been convened which could claim the right of vacating the election.

It has been suggested, however, that as under the Constitution of 1845, the General Assembly might have been convened by the Governor of the State under the 54th article of the Legislature of 1852 usurped the power of electing at that time.

It is true, the Governor, by the 34th article, "may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the General Assembly at the seat of Government;" but the undersigned cannot perceive how such a discretionary power in the Governor, which he may, or may not, exercise, could take away from the Legislature the exercise of a power granted to them by the Constitution of the United States, even admitting that the choice of a Senator to the Senate of the U. S., comes within the meaning of the term "extraordinary occasions," as used in the 54th article. It does not appear to the undersigned that it could strike either the Governor or the Legislature, either before or after the session of 1852, as extraordinary, that a term of a Senator of the United States would expire on the 3d of March, 1853. A thing that takes place at fixed periods, cannot be looked upon as an "extraordinary" thing—the Legislature, foreseeing the fact which must be provided for, did provide for it, not deeming, we presume, that they were usurping a discretionary executive power of the Governor, which might, could, would or should call them together in January, 1853, to provide for an "extraordinary" event

But again. At the time that the election took place, no law had passed the Legislature submitting to the people of Louisiana the question as to the reorganization of the State under a new Constitution, and no period had been fixed or even contemplated, at which a new Constitution would be adopted or go into effect. And the credentials of Mr. Benjamin, or the evidence of the right granted to him to take his seat in the Senate of the United States, not being coupled with any contingency as to whether a constitution would be made by this State before the 4th of March, 1853, or that there might be a majority of the General Assembly in favor of setting aside the election, the undersigned are unable to see how the change which has taken place in the State, by the adoption of the New Constitution, can affect a right granted prior to such change. If the office of Senator in the United States Senate were one created by the State of Louisiana, and growing out of State organization, any change in this organization, by which this office is abolished, might destroy the right of an individual elected or appointed to fill it. But the act of the General Assembly, in electing Mr. Benjamin in 1852, not being at all involved in the re-organization of the State, they cannot see how the people of Louisiana, through the General Assembly of 1853, can abrogate or set aside an act done through the General Assembly of the same State in 1852. It appears to the undersigned, that in no light in which they can view it, can the General Assembly claim the power of electing a Senator at this time, there being no vacancy in the Senate of the United States, and no term of a regularly elected Senator expiring in the present year, which has not been provided for in accordance with the existing laws applicable to the election. The change of a Constitution vests powers for future action—it can give no right to abrogate what has been done under the old one.

And the undersigned respectfully submit to the Senate the foregoing reasons, against the passage of the resolutions submitted to the committee.

H. Short,
B. L. Hodge,
Thos. C. Nichols.

Mr. Wickliffe moved thet 5,000 copies of the report be printed.

Mr. Martin moved that half the number be printed in French and English.

Mr. Lacey—How many copies of the Governor's message were ordered to be printed?

Mr. Wickliffe—5,000, sir.

Mr. Lacey—I cannot see the necessity of having so many copies of this report printed. Have 5,000 copies of any committee report ever been printed?

Mr. Wickliffe—Yes, there were 5,000 copies of Mr. Griffin's Internal Improvement Report printed.

Mr. Martin—Between this and the Governor's message, the report is much the more important of the two.

Mr. Lacey—Sir, I object to the printing of so many copies. In the rage for economy which prevails, I do not see why so much should be expended on this report. I am willing to vote for a reasonable number, but 5000 is entirely too many.

Mr. Wickliffe—The publication of 5000 will cost very little more than the publication of 2,500.

Mr. Lacey withdrew his objections.

The motion to print 5,000 copies, 2,500 in English and the same number in French, was carried.

Mr. Lacey then read the report of the minority of the committee. The report simply expresses a total dissent from the reasonings and conclusions of the majority of the committee.

To the Honorable, the Senate
of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, members of the Judiciary Committee, to which was referred the consideration of the joint resolution providing for the election of a Tnited States Senator, beg leave to report that the undersigned had not supposed that the majority report of the Judiciary Committee would be presented to the Senate this day; and they have been compelled, during the reading of the same, and without previous consultation, to make this, their report, in the premises:

The undersigned are obliged, respectfully, to express their dissent from the report of the majority of the committee—the undersigned not concurring either in the argument or conclusions of said report, and recommend the adoption of the joint resolution referred to the committee.

George S. Lacey,
Wm. W. King.

Mr. King, from the Internal Improvement Committee, read a report, stating that the committee had found a number of important documents, lying over from previous sessions of the Legislature

He moved that they be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. Martin was totally opposed to the printing of these documents. He presumed that among them was the report of Mr. Ricker. That report never would be read, as Senators never could be brought to listen. It would consume all the time of the Senate, for a day at least, simply to hear the reading of it.

Mr. King said that the committee had been very careful in selecting such documents as they considered of public interest and importance, and all together, those which they had selected for printing, occupied but 121 loosely written pages, which was not longer than many a lawyer's brief. If they were too long they ought to be printed in order to give every member an opportunity of reading them for himself.

Mr. Nichols hoped there would be no objection to the printing of these documents. It was absolutely necessary for the information of the members of the committee themselves. He had not the slightest knowledge of what had been done by previous committee, or what report had been made. He must confess that, though he was a member of the committee, he was in total ignorance of all the subjects which might come before him for examination. He had said in the committee room, without having any idea of what was to be done, or having any means of procuring the necessary information. The printing of these documents was a matter of necessity, and he hoped it would be ordered

ELECTION OF U. S. SENATOR.

Mr. Lacey asked whether the joint resolution to go into an election for United States Senator had not been made the order of the day for Thursday.

Several Senators replied that it had not.

Mr. Lacey said that notwithstanding his great respect for the gentlemen he still would like to have more definite information. He wished the facts to speak from the record, and again asked whether the resolution had not been made the order of the day for Thursday. He was under the impression that it had been so fixed. He had understood the Senator from Avoyelles, now absent, to say that there was an understanding between himself and several gentlemen on the other side, who were absent when this matter was last before the Senate, that the subject should not be brought up before Thursday, and he thought it had been made the special order for that day.

Mr. Martin explained that the understanding between himself and the Senator from Avoyelles, was purely of a private nature, and that the Senate had nothing at all to do with it. The Senator had only agreed with him, that he would not press the subject before Thursday, when those gentlemen who were then absent would again be in their seats.

Mr. Wickliffe thought the whole subject had better be postponed till after the report was printed, and laid before the members. He would then be perfectly willing to have a day fixed; but in the meantime he wanted the benefit of the light which the Judiciary Committee had thrown on the subject.

The Secretary read from the journal showing that the motion to fix a day had been lost.

After some further conversation,

Mr. Lacey said that he was willing to abide by the record; and he could now make a motion to fix the consideration of the resolution for Thursday next.

Mr. Wickliffe objected to the introduction of the resolution in this way. He thought that it should lie over under the rules.

Mr Lacey did not see why the resolution should be subjected to the formality of lying over under the rules.

Mr. King had no desire to enter into a discussion on this subject, but he thought that it interfered greatly with the duties of the Legislature.

It ought to be disposed of at once, and thus an end put to the profitless discussions to which it might give rise.

Mr. Wickliffe did not wish to put the subject off. It was proper to meet the subject as soon as possible. But there would be ample time for this after the printing of the report. It might suit some gentlemen to speak on the subject on Thursday, but it might not be so agreeable to others. For his own part, he desired to wait for the printing of these reports. He wished to have them both before him—to compare their reasonings and conclusions, in order to see whether there was any conflict between them. He could see no hardship in this. He, for one, had not been disturbed by the question. It had not been a source of annoyance to him; it had not interfered with his legislative duties. He hoped that the Senator from New Orleans would not allow it to interfere with him, and he hoped that gentleman would continue his duties as Chairman of the Internal Improvement Committee, just as if there were no such question before the Senate.

After some more desultory remarks from various senators, the resolution of Mr. Lacey was adopted.

THE VETERANS OF 1814 '15.

Mr. Lewis, from the Committee on Militia, reported favorably on "an Act making appropriations for the payment of pensions due the veterans of the war of 1814 and 1815."

Mr. Kenner said that he was willing to vote for a bill of this kind, but before doing so he would like to ascertain with precision, how much would be sufficient to cover arrearages of this nature. He thought that for this purpose, the bill ought to lie over for a short time in order to allow investigation. He would briefly explain the nature of the case as it stands at present The last Legislature passed a bill appropriating $15,000 for the aid of persons classed as pensioners, for services rendered during the invasion of 1814-'15. The terms of the law were to this effect.—Any person who had fought in the army during that invasion, and who could prove his services, and the fact that he was in needy circumstances, to a Board composed of the Governor, Auditor and Treasurer, would be entitled to receive a pension of $8 per month. Under this act a much larger number of pensioners than was contemplated by the Legislature which passed the law, had presented their claims. It would take at least $50,000 instead of the 15,000 appropriated, to pay these claims. It is now proposed to appropriate $5,000 to pay up the arrearages. If this is to be done it would certainly be better to make provision for the whole amount at once, than to appropriate a sum sufficient to cover only a small proportion, and which, in comparison with what is needed, is a mere drop in the bucket.

Mr. Wickliffe had a very distinct remembrance of the act referred to by the Senator from Ascension. At the last session he had done all he could to prevent its passage, as he thought the law was much better as it then stood. Under the previous law, it was required of each pensioner to make proof of the circumstances of his case, in an application to the Legislature, for relief, and then his petition was acted on separately and with reference to its merits individually. But the last Legislature adopted a different system, and we ought to carry it out. In his parish there were two persons, and the Senator from New Orleans had informed him that in that district there was a much larger number, who, under the act of last year, were entitled to relief. They had imagined that the $15,000 appropriated would be enough, and not anticipating the rush of applicants which had taken place, they had not been in so much of a hurry as some others, to come here and receive what was due to them under the law. When they did apply they found that the sum appropriated had been exhausted, and they were therefore disappointed in the expectations of relief they had been induced to form by the action of the last Legislature. He was consequently extremely anxious for the passage of this bill. These were not solitary instances. He knew that there were old soldiers, and many of them who were actually suffering for the necessaries of life. The amount proposed in the bill was not large—it might not be nearly enough to cover the arrearages—but if it was a mere drop in the bucket as the gentleman had stated, why not give it at once ?

Mr. King stated that he felt great repugnance at expressing any opposition to the pension system which had been adopted by the Legislature. But he must confess that when he looked at the condition of the State—with an impoverished, he might almost say a bankrupt treasury—he felt some alarm at entering on a career of this kind. He would like to give his support to some such bill, but he required time for investigation. He would like the bill to be recommitted in order to give time for more mature consideration. The Senator from Ascension had stated that the amount required would be about $50,000, which was certainly a very large sum. He would therefore move to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Wickliffe thought the proposition of the gentleman from New Orleans a most extraordinary one. The bill had been referred to the Militia Committee, and that Committee had reported favorably on it. The gentleman now wishes to take it out of the hands of that Committee and refer it to another.

Did the gentleman think that the Committee on Militia had not given due attention to the subject? Did he imagine that that committee was not competent to examine and report on the subject ? If he did not, why be guilty of the discourtesy which would be implied in taking this bill out of its hands ?

Mr. King said that he could not see what the Militia Committee had to do with monetary affairs. This is purely a matter of dollars and cents, and as such ought, in the first place, to have been referred either to the Finance Committe or to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. Kenner would like to make a few observations on this subject before it is finally disposed of. He had looked into the matter attentively, and he thought that when he had explained the true position of the case, Senators would agree with him in wishing the bill recommitted for a short time. For one, he was disposed to do anything for the aid of those old soldiers who had served the country and the State in the war of 1815, and come to their relief when necessity compels them to solicit it. He would gladly vote for some provision for their benefit. It was for this reason that he desired the bill to be recommitted, in order that time might be allowed for the preparation of an amendment making the requisite provision for the full amount which is rendered necessary by the Act of last year. In order to show the result of that act, and the amount which would be required for its fulfilment he would read the following passage, bearing on the subject, from the Report of the Auditor of the State :

"In connection with the suggestion made in a preceding portion of this Report for the repeal of the Pension Law of the last session of the Legislature,

Digitized by Google

I will state that the sum of $15,000 appropriated for the year 1852, under the Act, was exhausted during the first six months, so that the second instalment to each claimant could not be paid; it would require the like amount to do so, besides about ten thousand to fifteen thousand dollars more to satisfy other claims, perfect under the Act of No. 220, now before the Board established. It will take all of the fifteen thousand dollars per annum to satisfy claims that will be made. The Act establishes the right to a pension in any one who performed military service in 1814, and 1815, and under other conditions, and makes the oath of the claimant and two other persons, proof of the existence of the conditions."

We have passed an Act appropriating $15,000 to carry out the provisions of the law which grants a pension of $8 00 per month to persons who performed military service during the invasion of 1814-'15. We have found that the sum appropriated is not large enough by at least $50,000, which sum will be required to fill the amount which is now ascertained to be needed on account of the presentation of so great a number of claims. If Senators are determined to carry out this system of granting pensions, they ought not to give out the money in driblets, such as would be the amount named in the bill before the Senate, but it would be more proper to recommend the bill in order to give time for maturing a plan by which the whole subject could be disposed of at once.

The gentleman had said that in his parish there were two very respectable old gentlemen who did not run here in a hurry to receive their pay immediately after the passage of the pension law by the last Legislature. He admired those old gentlemen; they have helped the State in times of peril, and they deserve well of the country—they ought to be paid for their services:—and why did he think they ought to be paid?—why because among his constituents there were eleven persons precisely similarly situated. They were not in a hurry either—they did not run down here to receive their money the moment the bill was passed, and they ought to have their share of any appropriation to be made, just as well as the two constituents of the Senator from West-Feliciana.

As the amount proposed in the bill is not sufficient to meet the claims presented, he wished either that the amount be increased so that it will be enough to satisfy all, or else put an end to the whole system at once.

Before concluding, he would say that he had listened attentively to the remarks of the Senator from New Orleans, and he thought them exceedingly appropriate and well-timed. He was himself of opinion that the reference of the bill to the Committee on Claims was improper, as the matter was simply an affair of dollars and cents, with which that committee had nothing to do. The subject did not belong properly to the Militia Committee; it belonged to the Finance Committee, or to the Committee on Claims.

Mr Lacey said that if the question was merely one of time—that if further opportunity for amendment were desired—he might coincide with the Senator; but if the object was to take the bill out of the hands of the committee to which it had first been referred, he would oppose it. He could see no reason for a more thorough investigation than that which had already been bestowed upon the subject; and if only through courtesy to the Militia Committee, he should oppose the proposition to remove the bill from its charge.

Were these merely a claim for pensions on the part of particular persons, he might feel disposed to hesitate before granting the request. Much as he might wish to feed the hungry, and minister to the wants of the suffering and war-worn veterans of 1815, he would pause before entering upon a career of this nature. But when he took the legislature of 1852 as a starting point, where was he placed? That Legislature passed an act granting $51,000 to the veterans of 1815—did it intend to make a promise and to break it? Did it mean to offer pensions, and then refuse them? Did it say to those war-worn veterans of 1815, who had perilled their lives in defence of the State, "come, and you shall be provided for; your wants will be supplied; the State will care for you"—and then turn them away disappointed from the doors of the Treasury? In what a position, then, was he placed, looking at the Legislation of 1852, and the results flowing from it. He was disposed to act in good faith, and to carry out the provisions of the act of last year. If the proposition of the Senator from Ascension is only for the sake of gaining time for consideration, he should be willing to consent to it; but if the object be to change the bill from one committee to another, he should be compelled to oppose it. If he looked at the question simply on its merits, he should feel himself bound to carry out the provisions of the act of 1852, which has solemnly granted pensions to the veterans of 1815.

Mr Martin remarked that for his part, being chairman of the Militia Committee, he should not feel at all hurt if the bill were referred to the Finance Committee.

Mr. Lacey remarked, that if the chairman of the Militia Committee had no objection to this course of proceeding, he certainly should offer none.

The bill was referred to the Finance Committee.

According to previous notice, Mr. Kenner introduced a bill to make an appropriation for the compensation of Presidential electors.

Passed.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Classifications of Senators.

On motion of Mr. Martin, the Senators proceeded to draw lots for classification under art. 17 of the Constitution.

The following was the result of the drawing:

1st Class, (short term) Messrs. Derbes, Kenner, Kemp, Lewis, Martin, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Palfrey, Patterson, Smith, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd, Wickliffe.

2d Class, (long term) Messrs. Boatner, Burthe, Clifton, Dupré, Evans, Griffin, Hodge, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lauve, McCay, Nicholls, Rivers, Thériot.

BILL CLOSING THE LAND OFFICE.

Mr. Short asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the sale of a portion of the swamp and overflowed lands granted to the State by acts of Congress approved March 2d 1849, and September 28 1850; and to appropriate the proceedings thereof.

A motion being made to refer the bill to the Committee on Lands and Levees,

Mr. Short said he was opposed to the reference, because one of the most important objects of the bill would be defeated by it. He would state its objects briefly. There was now a bill in the lower House before the Committee on Lands and Levees, the object of which is to adopt such a system as will protect all the alluvial lands of Louisiana which are subject to inundation. Under this bill, a commission to be hereafter appointed, will have authority to classify these lands. After the classification, scrip based on the value of the lands may be issued, to provide for the building of levees, in accordance with the classification made by the commissioners. Then we would always have a fund on hand, for the construction of levees. But as soon as it was known that it was the intention of this Legislature, to pass such a bill, large parts of the most valuable lands were selected and taken up on speculation, thereby, while the bill is in an incipient state, profiting by the intended action of the Legislature, by taking up the best lands, so retarding one of the most important measures contemplated by the Legislature The object of this bill was to arrange the levee system, and the public lands, so as to have an available fund, either by means of the issue of scrip, or if it would suit better, by a loan on the lands. He did not think that they ought to suffer this object to be retarded. At present, large quantities of the best lands were being selected—and for what purpose? because it has been seen that this Legislature has a disposition to put forward such a system as will realize an available fund. With that sharp eye which speculators always have out, they had seen and pounced upon the finest lands, and as soon as the system goes into operation, the speculator would be found in possession. As soon as the classification is commenced, it will be found that all the best lands are in the hands of these persons. It was in order to defeat this plan and to have a consultation of the Land and Levee Committees of both Houses, in order to prevent the system to be adopted being interfered with by speculators, that he had offered this bill and now opposed its reference. He desired that the available funds, which he expected would be realized, should not be taken from the State by these sharp eyed persons before the State had even caught a glimpse of them.

Mr. Griffin said he would like to know how this bill would effect planters who desired to enter lands lying back of them, which were necessary to their agricultural operations.

It appeared to him that the bill would operate upon them as a restriction, in this respect, as they certainly would not go out into the swamps, among the mosquitoes and alligators, to gain the settlement required by the bill. He should oppose it.

Mr. Hodge remarked that he had a substitute to offer, which he thought would meet the views of the Senator who had presented the bill. The lands in question had been donated to the State by the acts of Congress of 1849 and 1850. After the passage of those acts, and before the lists had been made out and sent on to the General Land Office, many parties entered portions of these lands in the Land Office of the United States. The Commissioner of the General Land Office subsequently decided that all the entries made after the passage of the acts of 1849 and '50 were null, they having been made subsequent to the passage of those acts by which the United States passed all right and title to the lands. Afterwards, under the State laws, other parties came forward and entered the same lands. The Register permits these proceedings, under the sanction of the opinion of the Attorney General, which has been submitted to the Senate recently, attached to a report from the Register of the Land Office. He thought that under these circumstances it would be better to close the Land Office, in order to prevent the impositions which are practised under the opinion of the Attorney General. The substitute which he had offered, would effect this.

Mr. Lacey thought that so far as the substitute was concerned, the Senator from De Soto had better not press it. The Register of the Land Office had very recently come to the Judiciary Committee with important documents which he had received from Washington on this subject. These had yet to be examined. By some mistake, also, the report of the Register of the Land Office, which had been ordered to be printed, had not yet been laid before the Senate. The reports had been printed, but were inadvertently, distributed in the other House. There was no reason for offering the substitute, as everything necessary to be done, under the circumstances, could be provided for in the original bill. He hoped the gentleman would not press his substitute, as Senators had not yet had time to examine the reports. He hoped the Senate would act on the bill without reference to the substitute.

Mr. Hodge thought that the Senator would not insist on the withdrawal of the substitute, when he informed him, that he (Mr. Hodge) had the report of the Register of the Land Office, and the opinion of the Attorney General before him. The Register says that he cannot refuse to let parties enter lands under the circumstances stated. He would ask the Senator whether he thought this right, whether he did not think that parties entering lands in good faith, under our laws, ought to have precedence. It was for the purpose of preventing trouble of this kind, and to relieve many persons in his own district, who had been involved in difficulties by the action of the Register of the Land Office, that he offered this substitute. He believed that unless the Land Office were closed, many more troubles of this kind would arise, as there were even now, in this city, parties who had come here to enter lands in this way. He therefore thought it wise to close the Land Office. What was the purpose he expected to achieve by this? Only to prevent the sale of any more warrants except to actual settlers.

The Attorney General was mistaken in the construction he had put on the law, and the Register had already transcended his duties in permitting lands to be entered as he has. He (Mr. Hodge) saw, on the part of the Register, an evident disposition to recognize the validity of these entries, because he was backed by the opinion of the Attorney General. As for himself, he would not sacrifice his sense of duty to a popular prejudice, nor would he be willing to legislate expressly for the benefit of squatters on the public lands.

Mr. Short said that it would be an easy matter to relieve the bill of those portions which appeared to be objectionable to the Senator from De Soto. He was perfectly willing, if it was not satisfactory in its present shape, to modify it in such a manner that it might pass at once. The class of persons who have entered lands at the several Land Offices, are provided for by an act of the last Legislature. It was decided by the Secretary of the Interior that entries of land in the General Land Office, made subsequent to the passage of the acts of 1849, '50, were null and void, having been made after the United States passed title to the land. At the last session, an act was passed by the Legislature, to receive back the money paid into the General Land Office, on account of these entries. If Louisiana receive the money back, what will be the effect? She cannot take the land and the money too. There is also an act now before Congress, providing for paying over to Louisiana, all the money received at the General Land Office for land entered subsequently to the passage of the acts of 1849, '50. That ought to suit the gentleman, but if it would not, let him offer some proper amendment to the bill.

He would inform him that he was mistaken if he supposed that he (Mr. Short) had introduced this bill merely for the benefit of the residents on public lands. The bill would confer a benefit on his constituents, and many others who reside on the swamp lands, exposed at any moment to all the dangers of inundation.—He had still another object, which was to preserve the land from the grasp of speculators, till they could be made available as a foundation for a levee and drainage fund. In this way the lands could alone be made inhabitable for those who have located on them, and made the country fit to live in. This was his object, and not to curry favor with the squatters, as had been insinuated by the gentleman.

Mr. King would offer an amendment to the substitute, to relieve the case of its present embarrassment. The objects of both the bill and the substitute were the same—to stop the mania for speculation in the public lands. The substitute compels an entire suspension of business in the Land Office. He thought it could be made perfectly satisfactory by a slight addendum providing that pre-emptors should not lose any of their rights by the suspension. He therefore offered the following amendment to the substitute:

"Provided that the provisions of this bill shall not apply to pre-emption claims secured by the second section of the above recited Act."

Mr. Hodge accepted the amendment.

The substitute finally passed, as amended, in the following form:

"Be it enacted, &c., That the Register of the Land Office and the Treasurer, Receiver of public monies, be and they are hereby required not to sell any more warrants under the Act of 17th of March, 1852; provided that the provisions of this bill shall not apply to pre-emption claims secured by the second section of the above-recited Act."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Kennedy, clerk of the House, asked the concurrence of the Senate in an Act for the relief and final settlement of the Union Bank.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, Feb. 10, 1853.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment—Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor, in the chair.

The Secretary requested the concurrence of the House in the following acts and resolutions:

An act authorizing the Mayor and Board of Selectmen to divide the city of Baton Rouge into two elective precincts, and fixing the manner of conducting elections.

An act to emancipate Murdoch Marion Shaw.

An act to change the qualifications for Directors of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana.

An act to emancipate Angelique Victorine Blanchard, a minor, wife of A. M. Warren.

An act to change the name of James H. Shotwell to Andrew Sausen.

An act to change the name of the New Orleans Catholic Association for the relief of Male Orphans.

An act to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the swamp and overflowed lands granted to the State by acts of Congress approved 2d March, 1849, and 28th September, 1850, and to appropriate the proceeds thereof.

An act to make an appropriation for compensation of Presidential electors—also,

A resolution making it the duty of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives, to define the districts, and jurisdiction of the District and other inferior Courts, and for other purposes.

A resolution for the relief of Jerome Tourné.

He also informed the House that the Senate had concurred in a resolution instructing the Standing Committee on Banks and Banking to examine into the condition of the incorporated Banks of the city of New Orleans, and report thereon.

He also requested the signature of the Speaker of the House to the amended bill entitled An act to emancipate Susan Little, a minor, wife of Dr. Vincent Beagne, of the Parish of St. Landry—

And informed the House that the President of the Senate had signed the amended resolution of the House instructing our Senators, and requesting our Representatives in Congress, to procure a daily mail between New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Bayou Sara.

The following Senators gave notice that they would on to-morrow, or some future day, introduce the following bills:

Mr. McCay—An act for the relief of Purvis Duegué, of Jefferson Parish.

Mr. Nichols—An act to emancipate Alcide Ginsoletin, a minor;

An act for the relief of Mrs. Joseph De Buclet.

Mr. Mouton—An act to repeal a portion of the 4th section of an act entitled an act to explain certain articles of the Civil Code now in force in this State—approved April 1st, 1826; and to revive, re-enact and amend the three hundred and fifth article of the Civil Code of Louisiana.

Mr. Lewis—An act to incorporate the Southwestern Industrial Fair Company.

Mr. Derbes—An act to repeal an act entitled "an "act allowing appeals in all cases from judgments of "Justices of the Peace in the city of New Orleans— "and to amend the 16th section of an act to define "the jurisdiction, and determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected for the Parish and "City of New Orleans;" approved 1st June, 1846.

Mr. Mouton, according to previous notice, introduced—

An act for the more speedy and easy administration and settlement of successions in this State.

On motion the rules were dispensed with, the act underwent its first and second reading, and it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Kenner, from the Committee on Banks and Banking, to whom was referred an act to prohibit the circulation of small notes, reported favorably, with amendments.

ORDER OF THE DAY—THIRD READING.

An act entitled an act to amend an act entitled "an act forming a Levee District, to be comprised of the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Catahoula, for the better protecting the same from inundation, was read a third time and passed.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

Being 12 o'clock M., the following resolution was taken up, and received its 2d reading.

Resolved, That the General Assembly will meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Friday next, the 11th inst., at 12 o'clock M., for the purpose of electing a Senator to the Congress of the United States, to fill the vacancy that will be occasioned on the 4th of March, by the expiration of the term of the Hon. Solomon W. Downs.

Mr. Lacey rose and made the following remarks: When the resolution, now under consideration, was offered by the Senator from Avoyelles, a motion was made by the Senator from West Feliciana, to refer the matter to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate This reference I opposed, because I conceived that the bearing of the resolution was political in its nature; it did not involve an enquiry into such questions as ought properly to be passed upon by any body except the Senate itself; I was fearful too the reference might be the means of producing delay—a fear which I am free to confess, has not been realised; moreover, I desired the Senate to pass upon the resolution, without having its view turned towards or against the resolution, by the color of a report. I am glad, Mr. President, that the matter is now in the hands of the Senate, and that we are permitted to advance to a final vote upon the resolution.

I am told, sir, that if I advocate the passage of the resolution, I will throw myself in the light of a partisan, and will be accused of attempting, in violation of law, and in opposition to the vested rights of Mr. Benjamin, to force a democratic member into the Senate of the United States. I would ask the honorable Senators, where is the necessity of increasing the democratic strength in that body? Have we not now a clear majority? Cannot the President elect, in the hour of his trial, lean upon it for assistance? Yes, sir, he can; and when that grief-stricken man turns his back upon the quiet grave in which lies sleeping the mangled form of his darling child; when he shall have wiped from his eyes, the burning tear, which nature forces from the broken fountains of his wounded heart: when his tale of sorrow, of sadness, and of grief shall have become hushed by the responsible cares appertaining to the high position to which he is called, he will find, in the honorable body, to which I am seeking to send a representative from this State, a support equal to any emergency; an influence and a power, capable of sustaining any recommendation of his administration. What need then for the course, which is ascribed to me? I doubt not, the honorable Senators around me, will consider the accusation, as undeserved, as it is ungenerous and unkind.

Again, sir, it is asserted that the resolution is doomed to defeat, and that its friends will come out of the contest, routed, and in dismay. The opposition, we know, is great; we shall be opposed by the entire strength of the whig Senators, and I regret to know, that in that opposition, they will be sustained by a part of our political friends. Yet, sir, we are undismayed. The appeal had better been directed to our judgment, than to our fears. We will contend against the storm as it plays in its fury around us, and if at last, weak and powerless, we are overcome, by a power, which we cannot control, it will be destiny and not choice, that has brought us to that end.

Before proceeding to place the Senate in possession of my views, relative to the unconstitutionality and illegality of the election of the Hon. J. P. Benjamin, I deem it not improper to notice the objections which have been urged against the passage of the resolution, now before the Senate. These objections are not without some little degree of plausibility; but when calmly enquired into, their force disappears, like the morning mist before the rising sun. What are those objections? It is contended in the first place, that this Legislature cannot go into an election for a U. S. Senator, because, Mr. Benjamin having been chosen by a previous Legislature, and being in possession of his commission, the only body which can enquire into the validity of his election, is the Senate of the United States. I have never known the doctrine carried so far as is contended for on the present occasion.

If Mr. Benjamin's election was in violation of the organic law of the State, the doings of the Legislature, which gave to him his commission, and the commission itself, is as worthless as the paper upon which the commission is written. It possesses no binding force whatever; gives to the appointee no rights; is, in fine, a perfect and absolute nullity. A commission obtained in violation of the Constitution, will not protect the person holding such commission, even after he had obtained his seat; and one granted in violation of law only, gives no better right, as long as the person is unsworn and has not entered upon the discharge of the office to which he pretends to have been chosen. That the Legislature has the right to enter into a second election, before the first shall have been declared void, was expressly settled by the Senate of the United States, in the year 1834, relative to the conflicting claims between Messrs. Robbins and Potter, from the State of Rhode Island. In that case, Mr. Clay contended that the Senate of the United States could take no steps to enquire into the rights of Mr. Potter, until the seat of Mr. Robbins, was denied him; and yet, the Senate of the United States appointed a committee to enquire into the claims of Mr. Potter, who held under the second election. Here is a complete acknowledgment, by a whig Senate, of the right of the Legislature to enter upon a second election, previous to the first being declared void by the Senate of the United States. Whether, then, the election of Mr. Benjamin be in violation of the Constitution, or of the law, he is not as yet beyond the reach of the Legislature, and the same tribunal, which pretended to throw the senatorial robes upon his shoulders, can now disrobe him.

Again, it is said, that the honorable members, who now so ably represent the State, in the Senate of the United States, were chosen in the same manner as Mr. Benjamin, and that in order to give validity to the rights of the former, we must sustain the claim of the latter. Suppose, Mr. President, that Mr. Downs and Mr. Soulé were both chosen in violation of the Constitution and the law, (a point I deem it unnecessary to argue,) does that fact authorize us to ride over the organic law, and to turn our backs upon the legislation which we have solemnly sworn to maintain? For one, I never could discover the soundness of that argument, which maintains, that two wrongs make a right, and I will never be governed by it.

This brings me to the consideration of the unconstitutionality and illegality of the election of Hon. J. P. Benjamin; and in doing so, I shall endeavor, in my own humble and feeble manner, to satisfy this honorable body:

1st. That the act of 1846, through which Mr. Benjamin claims to derive his authority as Senator of this State, is unconstitutional;

2d. That if it be constitutional, it did not authorize the last Legislature to proceed to the election;

3d. That if it authorized the election, the choice was but inchoate or imperfect; to be perfected, only in case there was no session of the Legislature in the present year.

I have assumed then, Mr. President, that the act of 1846 is in violation of the Constitution; and in making good this position, I direct the attention of the Senators to the following considerations:

The framers of the Constitution, by the words "regular election" in the Constitution of 1845, contemplated an election in the year in which a regular term expires; the act of 1846 fixes such election in certain emergencies in the preceding year; there is a contradiction between the organic law and the statute of 1846, and consequently the lattter is unconstitutional.

Did not the framers of the Constitution of 1845, in article 37, by using the words "regular election" contemplate one occurring in the year in which a regular term expired? In order to answer this question properly, we must not content ourselves in looking at it through a light of our own creation, but, permitting our minds to run back to the period when this article was under consideration in the Convention, we must view it through the light which hung around that honorable body. That the framers of the Constitution, by the words regular election, contemplated one taking place in the year in which the regular senatorial term expired, is evident, because

1. Such had been the unvarying rule, in this State, for thirty-two years. From the time Louisiana threw around herself the mantle of sovereignty, and was admitted as a State into this glorious Union, up to the adoption of the article 37 of the Constitution of 1845, no other rule had been followed; this rule had become consecrated by the dust of thirty years; it had stood firm and unchanging through that long lapse of time—and can we for a moment suppose that the framers of the organic law, in the use of the words "regular election," intended aught else than to continue that rule, which had "grown with the growth, and strengthened with the strength" of the State?

Again. It is evident that such was the intention of the framers of the Constitution, because thereby they enabled the people to fill a vacant seat by one whose political opinion was a reflexion of the popular will. This is a great and an inestimable privilege; and no construction of the organic law, or the statutes of the State, ought to be maintained, which deprives the people from filling, directly or indirectly, a vacant office, or excluding from it one whose political opinion is directly opposed to the wishes of the people, as expressed at a popular election. I cannot but conclude, for the reasons above stated, that our construction of the words "regular election" is correct—and that that construction was intended to be given to it by those fathers who brought the words into existence.

It is argued, however, that the words "regular election" mean such an election as takes place to fill a regularly expired term, and which is had in pursuance of the rules laid down by the Legislature. This argument very plainly asserts the right of the Legislature to fix the time when the election is to take place and that the election when thus fixed, is regular in its nature.

The evil tendency of this construction shows its error; for, if the Legislature can fix any period which to it may seem proper, there is no limit to the time—and it may provide for the election of a Senator five years before the term of office has expired. Nay, further—not only may the Legislature fix the time of the election five years previous to the expiration of the regular term, but a subsequent Legislature can reverse the rule, and establish some other mode and time equally absurd. Can we give to the words "regular election" a construction which will be productive of so ruinous a state of things? Will we not rather conclude, that by them is meant an election occurring in the year in which the term of office expires? Such must have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution.

Having shown that, by the words "regular election," the framers of the organic law contemplated one occurring in the year in which the regular Senatorial term expired; having furthermore shown the dangerous tendency of the opposing construction; I would ask the Senate in what year does the statute of 1846 contemplate to hold the election? I answer, in the preceding year. There is, consequently, a direct contradiction between the constitution of 1845, and the law of 1846—and the latter is, therefore, unconstitutional, null and void.

I am told, however, Mr. President, that article 37 of the Constitution of the United States, gives to the Legislature the power to fix the time, place and manner of holding the election for a U. S. Senator; and, that sustained by the overpowering weight of the constitution of the United States, the act of the Legislature, in fixing the time and manner of such election, rises above the implied, or even expressed, provisions of the State constitution. This argument seems to me unsound. It is true that the article of the Constitution of the United States above referred to, does declare that the Legislature shall provide for the time, place, &c., for an election; but that article, so far from making the right of the Legislature exclusive, intended, as a self-evident proposition, that such legislation should be subordinate to the Constitution. What would become of State sovereignty—where would be our boasted State rights—if the Constitution of the United States could place a Legislative act above the organic law of a State? I will not permit my mind to dwell upon the sad realities flowing from a position so unsafe and so unsound.

I come down to the second proposition which I have presented for the consideration of the Senate, and now proceed, briefly to show, that if the act of 1846 be constitutional, it did not authorize the Legislature of 1852, to proceed to the election.

I must confess, that this act, seems to me not only unintelligible, but absurd. It makes the Legislature shape its action, upon a contingency, which is hidden in the bosom of the unseen future: a condition which cannot be known at the time the Legislature is called upon to act. But with its absurdities, I have nothing to do. I will take the act as it is, and reason out my cause upon its face.

The statute of 1846, provides that an election for a United States Senator, shall take place in the year, preceding that in which the regular term expires, only in case there is no session of the Legislature in the last mentioned year. The condition or contingency upon which the Legislature could elect in a preceding year, was no session in the year in which the term of office expires; a session is now being held in the year in which the regular term of office expires, and consequently, the contingency not having occurred, the Legislature was not authorized by the face of the act of 1846, to go into an election in the year 1852. It is useless to tell me there was no session for the present year contemplated by the laws in force at the time of Mr. Benjamin's election The act of 1846, does not speak of a thing in contemplation of law but of a simple naked fact; a session, or rather no session of the Legislature.

But I may for the sake of the argument," compromise matters with my opponents. I might admit that the act of 1846 was not in violation of the constitution of the preceding year; nay, further that the election of Mr. Benjamin was authorized by the provisions of that act; what then is left to us? I answer the strongest point of our whole case; a position, which has not been, and cannot be successfully attacked by the Hon. Senators who oppose the resolution which we are seeking to pass.—It is this: that the election was imperfect, inchoate in its nature; depending for its validity upon the fact of no session of the Legislature in the present year. In adopting this view, we give force to the law of 1846 so far as it authorizes an election in the preceding year, and do not destroy the true meaning and object of the Statute, which demands an election in the year in which a regular Senatorial term expires — Our law is thereby rendered harmonious and each portion throws in its notes to make sweet music of the whole.

But Mr. President, I am consuming too much of the time of the Senate, and must draw to a close.

Before doing so, I would ask the Senators what harm can there be, in submitting this vexed question to the Senate of the United States? If Mr. Benjamin be legally elected, that Hon. body will not take from him his vested rights, but will permit him to occupy the proud position which he is so well qualified to fill. Is there, I woud ask; any doubt about the question? If there be, and I must confess there is not much with me, where must be thrown the benefit of that doubt? For one I am disposed to give it to the Democratic party. I have ever been a faithful member of that party; it was that party which placed me in my present honorable position, it is that party which reflects the political feeling of the people of the State: I have been with it in the moment of its prosperity, and it shall have the benefit of my doubts, and my support in the hour of its adversity.

But enough, Mr. President. When I went up to the altar of this Chamber and placed my hand upon the bright pages of that inspired volume, I performed a ceremony of deep significance and importance; I swore to support the Constitution and the laws, and that oath, I will, regardless of consequences, endeavor to perform.

I think Mr. Benjamin's election is not supported by law, and so thinking, whether I sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish, I am for the resolution.

When Mr. Lacey had concluded, Mr. Short rose and said:

Mr. President and Senators:—It is known to a few Senators on this floor—it is known at least to those with whom I have been familiar—that from the first I have been opposed to the movement which gave rise to the resolution under discussion. I regret that this movement proceeded from the source whence it has—a source which I have always respected—a party which from the foundation of the Government to the present time has always professed to be governed by principle.

Mr. Wickliffe. It is only a portion of the party which urges this movement.

Mr. Short. It may be only a portion of the party this time, but I wish to act with all. I regret this movement for another reason—a reason personal to myself, and I beg the indulgence of Senators while I briefly advert to it: For some years, as a private citizen, I have had a tolerable standing as a democrat in the section of country in which I reside. I regret that for the first time, in the Senate, I am compelled to depart a little from the action of my party. It has gone forth, and probably reached the section of the country in which I live, that I have acted in defiance of the Constitution. In looking over some names in the newspapers I have found in connection with "the Moutons, the Wickliffes, the Boatners, the McCays," that even Short of North Louisiana, who always did battle with such strength of arm as he possessed in defence of Democratic principles, has acted in disobedience to the injunctions of the Constitution, and gone over to the Whigs. I regret that I have been compelled to take this position, but I am glad that I have this opportunity of explaining my views on the question. I do not like to disagree with the party with which I have always acted. I dislike to separate from old friends on any question; but when I see a movement like this—when it is a question not what the Legislature ought or ought not to do in the performance of its legislative functions under the Constitution—but a movement which I view as a deadly blow at the fundamental principles of government I care not whether I act with Whigs or Democrats, I am bound to oppose it.

I would do the same as if an enemy were to attack the country, when we would all go forth to battle under a common flag, and when the contest is ended return again to the old companions with whom we had been associating in former days

Viewing the question as I do, I would ask, on what do our institutions rest? I take it that every constitution, and every law passed by virtue of that constitution rests on elections by the people taking place at the time and in the manner established by law. Am I not right? Does not our whole political edifice rest on the sacredness in which we hold the result of the ballot box? From my boyhood, when I have looked over the exciting contests in which great masses of the people, North, South, East and West, have been swayed like the ocean when the winds play over its bosom, when the votes were counted, it was like oil upon the troubled waters, and the result came to us like a decree of destiny. Every American respects the decree of the ballot box. I never before this occasion, saw an attempt to treat the result as null, or as if no election had been held. From the first I have decided to take a position against this movement; though my arm may be weak and my voice as the last reverberation of an echo, I determined to oppose it. You may read me out of the Democratic party if you will, but I can go home before my constituents, satisfied that I have done my duty to the country.

I come now to the position taken by the Hon. Senator (Mr. Lacey) from East Baton Rouge. I have admired the exceeding amiability of the gentleman in the argument of this question. I trust that I shall not fall behind him in courtesy and good nature. The gentleman said that he could not concur in the positions of the report which has been laid before the Senate. I have, in connection with two gentlemen on the other side of the House, who happen to be on the Judiciary Committee, embodied and presented to the Senate the reasons and the conclusions arrived at, that the Senate has neither the constitutional power nor the right to go into an election. I hope that for the little time I have been associated on the Committee with two Whigs, I shall lose nothing in the estimation of my democratic friends. I can say that these two Whigs are pretty good specimens of young Americans; but whether they will ever come within the meaning of the term Young America, I cannot say, but I hope they may.

We have reported to the Senate our conclusions in regard to the resolution. Whether those conclusions are right, I leave to the Senate to decide. But I would ask in candor if gentlemen think them wrong or right? I make no claim to infallibility—it is human to err. All I ask is a fair examination, and that the arguments presented in the report be fairly met.

Have they been fairly met by the gentleman from East Baton Rouge?

The gentleman starts out with the assumption that the election of Mr. Benjamin is null—a conclusion never arrived at by the Committee. He assumes the fact that the election is null—in order words, that there has been no election, and brings authority to prove that we are compelled to go into an election. The Committee has not taken such a position. Upon this conclusion he has erected his argument. This reminds me of an anecdote of General Putnam. He had a young officer who prided himself on his skill in erecting fortifications. In the absence of the General, he constructed one according to all the scientific rules of fortifications, and admired it very much. When the General returned, the young officer took him to look at it. The General cast his common-sense eye over it, and informed the young officer that it was built most admirably, but he had one objection to it. "Great God!" replied the officer, "what can it be?" "Why," said the old General, "it's not in the right place; the enemy are never going to come here."

Now, that part of the argument is built on an assumption of a fact: that there has been no election—and that because there has been no election, therefore we should elect, is a position which cannot be assumed until it is first established that there has been no election. Has an election taken place? If not, there is nothing in the way of an election—a null thing is nothing. On the other hand, he admits that an election has taken place, and in order to get rid of his assumption, he argues that the act of 1846 is unconstitutional.

Is not this the position of the Senator?

Now, sir, what do we mean by an unconstitutional act? It is the doing something by a Legislature either directly prohibited by the Constitution, or inconsistent with it. If an act be unconstitutional, it must be so in one of these two ways.

I come now to that ugly piece of road which the gentleman has so adroitly got around. He gets over it in this way: The Constitution of 1812 says nothing of the time, place or manner in which the Legislature is to elect a United States Senator. Am I not right in this? The next question is, where is the power vested to prescribe the time, place and manner of electing? The 1st article, 4th section of the Constitution of the United States says that the Legislatures of the States shall have the power to fix the time, place and manner of elections.

The first Legislature which met under the Constitution of 1812, passed an act which provided that the Legislature should meet on a certain day in the year in which the Senatorial term might expire, and proceed to the election of a Senator of the United States; which must be at a time prior to the 4th of March.

The Constitution of 1812 was superseded by the Constitution of 1845. When the new Constitution was adopted, what became of the old Constitution? What are you going to do with it? Are you going to embalm it, and still cling to it? Are you going to suffer the living body to be encumbered with this old carcass, which has been thrown aside as useless?—When the new one took effect, the old one was gone. But there is something else to be preserved.

The gentleman says that the law of 1812 had been followed for 33 years—and having been preserved for so long a time, he asks us not to desert the old thing which has served us so well. Don't, for God's sake, part with a thing which is so well calculated to reflect the will of the people. If the Constitution of 1812 was dead and buried by the Constitution of 1845, are you going to impart more power, more value to the old statute? Are you going to attach it to the Constitution of 1845, and so consecrate it that you will never get rid of it?

But I intend to leave no dodging place on this rough piece of road, over which the gentleman has travelled with such facility.

The gentleman asserts the real construction of the Constitution of 1845 to be, that it incorporated the act of 1812 by implication. I take a stand on that point. I deny that the real construction and interpretation of the constitution of 1845 is that it intended any such thing. He means this: that the law of 1812, requiring the election of a U. S. Senator in the year in which the vacancy occurs, is impliedly incorporated in the Constitution of 1845, and that, therefore, the 37th article of that Conititution intended the same rule to prevail. That in no other year could a United States Senator be elected, is the inevitable conclusion from his argument: and that the 37th article of the Constitution of 1845 so embalmed and consecrated the law of 1812, that no subsequent legislature could in any way alter or repeal it. If he wishes to show that this conclusion is legitimate, he must show that the premises are well founded. Every conclusion necessarily rests on two premises. Here the gentleman, to get rid of the awkward position of his conclusion resting on only one leg, incorporates the old statute of 1812 into the Constitution of 1845. That is an assumption of the gentleman. So clearly has this point been established by sophistry, as to be taken for a fact.

While on this point the gentleman will permit me to refer to what took place at a primary meeting, held in the city of New Orleans, since the commencement of this session of the Legislature. I have a great respect for these primary assemblages; they are the reserve on which we at last throw ourselves back when we meet the enemy—they are the expression of the popular will. The political existence of many gentlemen depends upon them. But I wish to show how clearly a conclusion has been impressed on some minds by this system of logic, that by frequent reiteration it caused them to take for a fact, what before had only been reached by a torturing process of ratiocination.

Here Mr. Short read the following extract from a speech of Mr. T. J. Durant, as reported in the True Delta of Feb. 3d:

"It was a question with many competent to express an opinion—citizens of strong common sense, as well as able and instructive jurists—whether the adoption of the Constitution of 1852 did not vitiate the act of the Legislature of 1852. But there was no need of entering into this discussion. The Constitution of 1845, exactly in the same words as the Constitution of 1852, provided that the election should take place in the year in which the vacancy occurred, and letting the opponents of another election take the strongest position they could, the supporters of another election could advance to the discussion, as if the Constitution of 1852 had never been adopted, for the Constitution of 1845, Mr. Durant repeated, was express on that point. No Senatorial term expired in 1852, and the Legislature was guilty of a usurpation in going into an election, and their act was null and void, the Constitution—that of 1845 itself, again be it understood, providing that they should elect in the year the vacancy occurred.

"But, they would say—true, such were the terms of the Constitution, but there was an act of the Legislature, passed in 1846, in view of the fact that its sessions were biennial, and in contemplation of the contingency that a vacancy might occur in a year in which the Legislature did not meet in regular session—the Legislature of 1846 passed an act providing that the Legislature should, in such contingency, in the session preceding the year in which the term expired, proceed to the election. Our (the meeting's) opponents looked upon this as active support to their cause."

So often had this been reiterated that gentlemen can swallow down without examination, a figment of the brain, palmed off as a fact and a constitutional principle. The gentleman has said, and I am glad he has said so, in the outset of his remarks, that he would not appeal to authority but would let the light of reason guide him in his path But some things may be established by authority which are overthrown by the authority of reason. The conclusion of the gentleman that the election must take place in the year in which the vacancy occurs must necessarily rest on the incorporation of the act of 1812 into the constitution of 1845. On such an assumption, are you going to set aside a solemn act of the Legislature of Louisiana, and rush headlong into this election? The gentleman says that the Constitution of 1845 must be construed according to what was intended—that it must be construed according to what is now assumed, was intended by those who formed it.

Mr. Short then read from Story's Commentaries on the Constitution vol. 1st, p. 389.

"Every member necessarily judged for himself, and the judgment of no one could or ought to be conclusive upon that of others, the known diversity of construction of different parts of it, as well of the mass of its powers, in the different State Conventions; the total silence upon many objections which have since been started, and the strong reliance upon others, which have since been universally abandoned, add weight to these suggestions. Nothing but the text itself was adopted by the people, and it would certainly be a most extravagant doctrine to give to any commentary then made, and a fortiori, to any commentary since made under a very different posture of feeling and opinion, an authority which should operate an absolute limit upon the text, or should supersede its natural and just interpretation.

"Contemporary construction is properly resorted to to illustrate and confirm the text, to explain a doubtful phrase, or to expound an obscure clause; and in proportion to the uniformity and universality of that construction, and the known ability and talents of those by whom it was given, is the credit to which it is entitled; it can never abrogate the text; it can never fritter away its obvious sense; it can never narrow down its true limitations; it can never enlarge its natural boundaries.

"MR. JEFFERSON'S RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.

"What sort of a rule is that which, without regard to the intent or objects of a particular clause, insists that it shall, if possible, (not if reasonable,) be construed in favor of the States, simply because it respects their citizens; the second canon is, on every question of construction, (we should) carry ourselves back to the time when the Constitution was adopted; recollect the spirit manifested in the debates; and instead of trying what meaning may be squeezed out of the text, or invented against it, conform to the probable one in which it was passed. Now, who does not see the utter looseness and incoherence of this canon? How are we to know what was thought of particular clauses of the Constitution at the time of its adoption? In many cases no printed debates give any account of any constructions, and where any is given, different persons hold different doctrines.

So it will be seen by the authority which I have read, that every rule of construction on which the gentleman rests his conclusions, fails him. This is the true construction. The 37th Article of the Constitution merely directed the manner in which an election was to be held in the year in which a regular election is to take place. This does not take from the legislature the power of fixing the year in which an election shall take place. But what is the year? Does the Constitution of 1845 fix the year in which an election must take place? No, it does not. But if the Act of 1812 is incorporated into the Constitution, then I will say that the election must take place in the year expressed in that Act. But what is meant by a regular election within the meaning of the 37th Article of the Constitution of 1845? Is it to fill an unexpired term? No, it means an election of Senator for the full term of six years. The Act of 1846 designates the manner of holding the election. Action under that law has been uniform, and there has been no reason advanced to shake the constitutionality of the act. Even the great Hampden, whose subtle logic took the Court House in this Parish by storm, and nearly demolished one wing of the Capitol, never established this point. It seems that the people of Louisiana, in adopting the Constitution of 1845, put themselves in a very awkward position, if that Constitution required the doing of a thing, and coupled it with an impossibility.

But how does he get out of this predicament? He says, that this word 'is' in the Act of 1846, is very ambiguous, because the Legislature is to elect, provided there is no session in the year in which the term expires. He asks, if it might not appear very absurd, that the Legislature, at the year previous, should look into futurity, and provide for a contingency, which they could not foresee. But the gentleman cuts this Gordian knot. "Oh!" he says, "the Legislature must dive deep, into futurity before acting." Admirable way! Yes indeed, it must have dived deep. It was the duty of the Legislature of 1852, to dive very deep; so deep, that it ought to have seen the incipient elements of a new Constitution. It ought to have seen the seeds which were already planted. Oh! ye men of the Legislature of 1852, why did you not go through this process? Why did you not look over the State, at New Orleans, Red River, Madison, and along the bayous and alluvial regions, and see the seeds of this new Constitution? You should have seen the seeds sprouting, the blossoms coming out, which, before the 4th of March, 1853, were to bloom in all the beauty of a new and perfect Constitution. Not only this, but such a Constitution was to be brought forth, as would not only be enabled to perform all the acts necessary for its own existence, but to destroy everything which had been done before. This is a glorious discovery in this age of progress; I have tried to keep up with it, but I find myself unable to do so. I come now to the last position; but first, I will refer to the difference which the gentleman says, exists between the French and English texts of the Act of 1846. The English text, he says, provides that the election of a United States Senator shall take place in the year, in which the term expires, or if there be no session in that year, then it shall take place in the year previous. But the Legislature foresaw, that under the old Constitution, no session could be held on the 3d Monday of 1853. This is a fixed fact, on which there can be no dispute It is true, that the Governor, in the exercise of his discretion, has authority to call an extra session of the Legislature. But what is given as the reason? It must be an extraordinary occasion. If it was an extraordinary thing, that the term of Solomon W. Downs, as United States Senator, was to expire on the 3d of March. 1853, then it ought to have been left to the Governor; and he should have called the Legislature together, to provide for this extraordinary event, which is as fixed as the dates of an almanac. If the gentleman comes to this conclusion, then I must admit, that the Legislature had better left the subject alone. The difference between the French and English texts, is this; the English text provides that the Legislature shall do a thing in the year in which it can be done. The French text requires it to be done a year afterwards, when the Legislature cannot do it. I have heard of Irish bulls, but here is a French bull which butts the Irish bull off the bridge.

I come now to the last position of the gentleman. He says, that art. 34 of the new Constitution, requiring an election at any session of the Legislature, held in the year in which the vacancy occurs, is imperative. Even admitting the Act of 1846 to be Constitutional, he takes the position, that the credentials of Mr. Benjamin were only an inchoate mandate. I know of no law authorizing such a conclusion. This I take to be the proper construction. If any office under the dominion of a State, be changed by a change in the organic law, it destroys the tenure of the office. But if an act done, and title created, are perfect for a fixed period, at the time of creation, then, no change in the organic law, can affect the tenure of the office, unless the office be involved in the change of the organic law itself. The right granted a Senator of the United States, taking his seat in a co-ordinate branch of the General Government, is not touched by any change in the organic law of the State, it not being an office involved, or growing out of the State organization.

The gentleman, in his remarks, has made an appeal to State Rights, and State Sovereignty. I have myself, to the extent of my humble abilities, tried to understand what is meant by State Rights. What I mean by State Rights is, that action under either a State, or Federal Constitution, shall be confined to the respective powers of each, under the strictest construction, that the one may not incroach upon the other.

But when a thing legally irrevocable, such as the election of a United States Senator, is done in accordance with the laws of the State, then, to step forward and say that it must be set aside because it is not in accordance with the popular will of this day, is not State Rights. Such a right has not grown up under any of the Constitutions of this country. It does not spring from Democratic principles—it never sprouted from Democratic stock. If the majority of to-day is to set aside the acts of the majority of yesterday, on such grounds as this, we have reached a point which I never wish to see in this country. If you are going to change the nature of our government from that of a Constitution, resting on the respect which every American has for the result of the ballot box, to a government of pronunciamentos and emeutes, where the government of to-day falls before the barricades of the night and the mobs of to-morrow, then I wish no longer to live under it.

What change in the State of Louisiana has been effected by the Constitution of 1852? Are not the people the same? In my section they are the same. I see the same friends, the same faces since the adoption of the Constitution as before it, and I naturally come to the conclusion that it is the same State now that existed under the Constitution of 1845.

True, there has been some re-organization of the government, some change in the organic law; but do you take the position that, on this account, all rights previously existing, have been set aside? If so, you change Louisiana from a magnanimous and chivalrous State, to something like those insects which pass from one form of existence into another without recollecting what had taken place in the first.

There is another thing which we should not forget. By putting down a movement of this sort, we will discourage any attempt hereafter on the part of any succeeding legislature to set aside a solemn act of this kind done by a former one.

If it were perfectly clear that no election has taken place, then we might go into an election; but here we are called upon to undo a thing which has been legally done. But the gentleman says that no harm can result from an election, and that, therefore, we should elect. Why, on this principle, you might elect Senators year after year, give them their credentials, and let them travel over the country as Senators of Louisiana. True, they would say they had not taken their seats, but they have the mandate of the legislature. These mandates would become as plenty as scrip, and it might be very good scrip, if we could only find a place to locate it. The only difficulty with the gentlemen would be that they would find no place to locate.

I took my stand against this movement from the first, and shall continue to oppose it. To set aside an act of this kind because we have the power to do so by the last expression of popular will, would be attended with the most dangerous consequences. Why, it would place us in the situation which we are in, of the overflowed district; first comes the crawfish, and makes a small hole in the levee, through which the water begins to spout; then comes the levee breaker, and a bigger hole is made; this is followed by the crevasse, against which all human efforts are in vain. What takes place in the physical, frequently happens in the moral, political and religious world—the first step to break through that which the law has established, may be followed by another, and by and by, what cannot be effected by sophistry, will be reached by brute force. I am determined to oppose the first step that leads to such a consequence.

On the conclusion of Mr. Sbert's remarks, Mr. Wickliffe said:

I am aware, Mr. President, that the hour-hand admonishes me of the lateness of the period at which I have risen to speak upon this question. I must, however, ask the indulgence of the Senate while I make a few remarks for the purpose of placing myself right upon the record. I regret that my friend, the Senator from Madison, has not dealt fairly by me in this case; I had hoped that he would leave me something to reply to, but he has completely annihilated the arguments of the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, leaving him not a single position to stand upon. In this situation, where am I to go, what shall I say? Shall I turn to the report of the minority of the Judiciary Committee? I find nothing there, except an agreement to disagree with the report of the majority. They have advanced not a single argument for this conclusion. Where are their reasons? why are they not given? It could not be for want of time, as is insinuated in the report. They had the resolution before them for five days; therefore there is no ground for the complaint of want of time. The Senator from East Baton Rouge says that he considered the resolution to be of purely a political character; I differ with him on this point, in toto. The gentleman may look upon it with a political eye, but I cannot and will not. It is a question purely constitutional and legal in its character. It involves the legal and constitutional rights of a Senator of Louisiana, who has been duly elected, as is admitted, and who holds his commission from the Governor, and stamped with the broad seal of the State. I deny also that the motion to refer the resolution to the Judiciary Committee was made for the purpose of producing delay in acting upon it. It was made in order that the issue might be fully and fairly presented; that I might go back to my constituents and say to them, here is the issue, these are the grounds on which the seat of J. P. Benjamin, in the Senate of the United States is contested. I almost thought that I was going to be read out of the democratic party, by the Senator from East Baton Rouge, for taking this position. I have been a democrat of long standing, and if I know myself, all my impulses are democratic. But the gentleman seems to think that because the whigs vote with me on this subject, I have gone over to them. It is rare that they ever vote with me, and I am fully convinced that this time they are right, because they vote with me.

I have no disposition to call in question the gentleman's democracy, for he and myself, side by side, have fought its battles. I well recollect that during the canvass of 1851, when I had an unlooked-for opposition, I urged upon my democratic friends to vote the democratic Ticket, because we were bound by the Constitution of 1845, and the act of 1846, to elect a United States Senator at the session of the Legislature which was about to meet. The Senator from East Baton Rouge did the same. At a political meeting in this parish he urged upon democrats the necessity of concert of action, as we were bound at the ensuing session of the Legislature, to elect a U. S. Senator to succeed S. W. Downs. Whence this change? Has the spirit of Hampden produced this sudden and midnight conversion?

But the gentleman went further. He says that he is accused of being influenced by partisan feelings, in advocating this resolution. By whom is he accused? Not by me, or any one else that I know. It may be his self-accusing conscience that makes the charge. I believe that the gentleman is a good democrat.

The gentleman has said that we are bound to support the Constitution of the State. Yes, we are bound to support the Constitution of the State, but we are bound also to support the Constitution of the United States. The oath which he and I, and you, sir, have taken, is this: "I solemnly swear to support the Constitution of the United States," &c. That Constitution says, the time, place and manner of electing Senators shall be left exclusively to the Legislature of the respective States. Has not the time been fixed by the act of 1846? Has not an election taken place in obedience to that act? This the gentleman admits. What has been done? The first session of the Legislature held after the adoption of the Constitution of 1845, passed the law known as the act of 1846. Was not this done in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution of the State, and of the Constitution of the United States? Under that act two Senators—the number to which we are entitled under the Constitution—Solomon W. Downs and Pierre Soulé, were elected; and last year the Legislature, in conformity with the provisions of the act of 1846, elected Mr. J. P. Benjamin to succeed Mr. Downs, whose term will expire on the 3d of March, 1853. But the gentleman has attempted, like Thomas J. Durant, to incorporate the act of 1812 into the Constitution of 1845 and 1852. The latter gentleman, Mr. Thomas J. Durant, was a candidate before the last Democratic State Convention, for the nomination for Attorney General. Fortunately for himself and the party, he was not a successful candidate—for his speech, as reported in the True Delta, evinces his total unfitness for the high office to which he aspired.

The gentleman in his speech referred to authority, and held up this book—a book of contested elections—with such an air, that I really thought there was something important in favor of his position contained in it. But there is nothing in the case which he has cited, analogous to the one under discussion. I have yet to learn that an interregnum existed at the time Mr. Benjamin was elected, or that the State had then neither a Governor nor a Legislature

The gentleman invokes the language of Clay and Wright to support his position. See how far they favor him. In the case of Pottor vs. Robbins, cited by Mr. Lacey, Mr. Clay's position was, that the Senator first elected should take the oath and seat, inasmuch as he had his credentials properly made out—and the Constitution of the United States gave to Rhode Island, as to each other State, two Senators

Then see what says Silas Wright, upon whose authority the gentleman so strongly relies:

"Mr. Wright, of New York, regretted extremely to see such a question as the present before the House. He was almost wholly ignorant of the nature of the case, and of the peculiar laws by which Rhode Island was governed. He wished to know whether he was called upon to pronounce upon a preliminary, or upon a definitive measure—upon the propriety of electing, or upon the election, of either of the contending candidates. He must confess that the conduct of the Legislature of Rhode Island appeared to him a little extraordinary. They send to the Senate of the United States, a Senator whom they declare, by the certificate granted him, to have been duly elected, and, at a subsequent session, they send another, declaring their previous election to be null and void! Had the Legislature of Rhode Island the power to do this—to decide at all upon this question? Had they not, on the contrary, by the election of Mr. Robbins, referred the matter to a higher tribunal than themselves—that of the Senate of the United States—which was now alone able to decide upon the case?

"He again expressed himself to be ignorant of the entire merits of the question. He had never seen the statute of Rhode Island, and hoped he should not be called upon to give his vote, until he had acquired the necessary information. He would conclude by moving that it be referred to a committee of inquiry."

Why did not the gentleman state the position of Silas Wright correctly? Why did he refer to the minority report made by Silas Wright? But even had he understood the report correctly, he would have found in it no grounds to sustain his position.

Mr. Lacey. Will the gentleman read on a little further? If so, he will find a passage in the speech of Mr. Ewing, which leaves the inference that the remarks of Mr. Wright had not been correctly interpreted.

Mr. Wickliffe, I will read on—but this was the speech made at the time of the presentation of the credentials, and the gentleman will find nothing here to warrant the inference which he has drawn.

[Mr. Wickliffe then read some passages from the speech of Mr. Ewing, and the following extracts from the report of the committee:]

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

"In the performance of this duty, the State acts in its highest sovereign capacity, and the causes which would render the election of a Senator void, must be such as would destroy the validity of all laws enacted by the body by which the Senator was chosen. Other causes might exist to render the election voidable, and these are enumerated in the Constitution, beyond which the Senate cannot interpose its authority to disturb or control the sovereign powers of the States, vested in their Legislatures by the Constitution of the United States.

"Your committee having regard to these rules, as applicable to all contested elections in the Senate, proceed to apply them to the case now under consideration.

"It is admitted that the sitting member, Asher Robbins, possesses all the qualifications required by the Constitution of the United States, to be a Senator in Congress, and that his commission, as such, is in due form, according to the laws and usages of Rhode Island. These points being conceded, the remaining, and the only question to be decided, is, was the body by which he was chosen a Senator, the Legislature of Rhode Island; or was it merely an assemblage of citizens without authority to pass laws, prescribing that which is right, and prohibiting that which is wrong, to the people of the State? On this ground, both parties seem content to rest their claims to a seat in the Senate.

"The time at which the election took place, and the manner in which it was conducted, were in strict conformity with the laws of Rhode Island. The two Houses met in Grand Committee, according to law, at the session of the General Assembly next preceding the expiration of the term of service of Asher Robbins, then a Senator in Congress, and elected him for another term of six years, to commence on the third day of March, 1833, and then the Grand Committee assembled for this purpose, was dissolved. The choice was made by the Legislature of the State, whose laws are held to be valid and binding throughout the State. They command and receive obedience from the people. No objection is made, or can be made, either to the time or manner of the election. The Senator elected has all the qualifications demanded by the Constitution, and his commission or credentials were in due form delivered to him, and presented to the Senate.

"Your committee hold this to be a vested right, the obligation and effect of which, no subsequent Legislature of that State could impair; still less, had they the authority to proceed to the election of another Senator, until the seat of the Senator elect had been vacated by a solemn decision of the Senate of the United States. With these views of the subject referred to them, your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Asher Robbins, being duly and constitutionally chosen a Senator in Congress from the State of Rhode Island, is entitled to his seat in the Senate."

The gentleman contends that we have a right to proceed to the election, inasmuch as the Hon. J. P. Benjamin has not taken the oath and seat. I will leave the gentleman to reconcile this position with those of the report to which he has referred.

[Mr. Wickliffe then read the following extract from Silas Wright's minority report:]

"Has, then, Mr. Potter been validly elected a Senator from this State? That the body by which he was chosen was the Legislature of the State, has not been questioned; but in speaking upon that point, the majority of the committee express the opinion that that Legislature had no authority to proceed to the election of another Senator until the seat of the Senator elect had been vacated by a solemn decision of the Senate of the United States. If, speaking legally and constitutionally, there was a Senator elect, then this opinion is unquestionably sound, as it will not be contended that any Legislature of a State has the power to vacate a seat in the Senate. To be more explicit and intelligible: if Mr. Robbins's election was voidable only, and not void, a subsequent Legislature could not act until the vacancy was produced by the decision of the Senate. But if, as the undersigned has expressed his opinion, the election of Mr. Robbins was not made by the Legislature of the State, then it was not voidable, but absolutely void; it was not an election within the requirement of the Constitution of the United States, and the vacancy existed from the expiration of his former term in March, 1833. If the Senate shall come to this conclusion, then the undersigned is not aware of any ground upon which it can be contended that any constitutionally organized Legislaturecof the State had not the power to fill that vacancy; or that the election of Mr. Potter, made by such a Legislature in October, 1833, is not valid."

"The resolution submitted by the majority of the committee was in the following words:

"Resolved, That Asher Robbins, being duly and constitutionally chosen a Senator in Congress from the State of Rhode Island, is entitled to his seat in the Senate."

"And the question being taken thereon, was decided in the affirmative as follows:

"Yeas—Messrs. Bell, Bibb, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Poindexter, Porter, Preston, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Waggaman, Webster—27.

"Nays—Messrs. Benton, Brown, Forsyth, Grundy, Hill, Kane, King of Alabama, King of Georgia, Linn, Morris, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, White, Wilkins, Wright—16.

"So Mr. Robbins was confirmed in his seat.

"Resolved, That the said Elisha R. Potter ought, under the circumstances of the case, to be paid the compensation of mileage allowed by law to members of Congress, for his travel from his place of residence, in the State of Rhode Island, to the capitol, and returning; and also the per diem allowance of a member of Congress for the time he actually attended at the city of Washington, during the contest pending before the Senate in relation to the seat claimed by him, and occupied by the Hon. Mr. Robbins; and that the Judiciary Committee be instructed to prepare a bill for that purpose.

"It was decided in the affirmative. Yeas 24. Nays 22."

The gentleman has made an appeal to State Rights in this matter. I need not tell the gentleman that I am a State Rights man, and in my position on this question, I am fortified by the authority of J. C. Calhoun. How did he appear on this occasion, to which the gentleman has referred? Has the gentleman not read his speech? Has he not seen him standing, when the Senator from Rhode Island presented his credentials, precisely in the position in which I would stand. The gentleman may attempt to read me out of the Democratic party, but if he succeed, he will read me out in the company of John C. Calhoun. Now, sir, has not J. P. Benjamin his credentials? Does not the gentleman know that a joint resolution, passed by the legislature, after his election, authorized the Governor to give him his credentials? What does the gentleman wish to do? Why, sir, to place the Democratic party and the State in a false, and what I conceive to be a disreputable position, by sending three Senators, as far as the act of this State is concerned, when the Constitution of the United States, which we have all sworn to support, allows but two.

This case, which the gentleman has invoked is pregnant with reasoning, pregnant with argument which oppose the position of the gentleman, and which fortify my position that this Legislature has no right to inquire into the validity of Mr. Benjamin's election. He has passed from our hands to those of the Senate of the United States, who alone are the proper arbiters of the case. And what was their judgment in the case the gentleman has cited? They decided that he who holds the commission is entitled to the seat—that Asher Robbins being duly and constitutionally chosen a Senator in Congress from the State of Rhode Island, is entitled to his seat in the Senate. The voice of Clay, to whose authority the gentleman has referred, was raised in behalf of a time honored precedent, and of constitutional rights. What was the consequence? The oath was administered to Mr. Robbins, and a committee was appointed to investigate the matter. The gentleman seems to think that this appointment of a committee bears upon the case now before us. Does he not know that all contested election cases are referred to committees? What did this committee report? It reported that the election of Mr. Robbins was in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the State of Rhode Island, and that no subsequent Legislature could deprive him of his right to a seat in the Senate. Among the names of those who voted to sustain the report of the committee, I find those of Bibb, Calhoun, Poindexter, Preston, and Porter of our own State. Who that knew Porter would say, as the gentleman has intimated, that he was influenced by party considerations or prejudices, in giving the vote that he did? The gentleman says the vote was of a political character. Not so, they were votes given by sworn Senators of the U. S.; here they are, Messrs. Bell, Bibb, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Lee, McKean, Mangum, Norden, Poindexter, Porter, Preston, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Swift, Tipton, Tomlinson, Waggaman, Webster, 27 in all, to 16 nays.

I now come to the last point in the case cited.—This individual, Elisha Potter, asked mileage and per diem from the Senate, and though he was endorsed much more strongly than we could endorse any one to take Benjamin's seat, his request was granted by a majority of only two votes. Was not this a stronger case than any we could present? Did not the Legislature of Rhode Island declare the previous election absolutely null and void, yet the person whom they elected was almost refused, even his mileage, by the Senate.

I, for one, representing the constituency that I do, will never consent, by my vote to place the Democratic party in such a false position, as to send a Senator to Washington only to be turned away from the doors of the Senate Chamber. I never should be able to look my constituents in the face and say I thought I had done right

I never could tell them, that I had obeyed the mandates of the Constitution and the laws, if I should vote otherwise than I intend to vote on this question.

I, for one, never can be induced to enter into this movement. I shall vote against it, as I have determined from the start. In the beginning, I took a position by the side of Mouton and Short, and two or three other gallant spirits. Senators will pardon me for mentioning their names. We were weak at first, but I am glad to see that now the sober second thought has come, and that the vote of this day, in the other House, has given the death blow to this movement. I am now convinced, that the Democratic party will be placed right on the records of the country.

On motion of Mr. Griffin, to adopt the resolution, Mr. Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays.

The vote being taken, resulted as follows:

Yeas—Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Griffin, Kemp, King, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Neal—10.

Nays—Messrs. Clifton, Evans, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Martin, Mouton, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Smith, Taylor, Thériot, Todd and Wickliffe—17.

Consequently, the resolution was lost.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, Feb. 11, 1853,

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

After the morning business, Mr. Clifton introduced the following bill, providing for the appropriation, out of the swamp land fund, of a certain sum of money to finish Grand Levee, in the parish of Pointe Coupee.

AN ACT,

Making an appropriation out of the Swamp Land Fund, for the purpose of completing the rebuilding of the Grand Levee, in the Parish of Point Coupee.

Whereas, The completing of the rebuilding of the Grand Levee in the Parish of Point Coupee is absolutely necessary for the protection of nearly one-third of the State of Louisiana from annual inundation.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the sum of thirty-six thousand dollars be appropriated out of the proceeds of the swamp lands granted to this State by Congress for the purpose of finishing the rebuilding of said Grand Levee.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That the following named gentlemen, to wit: James R. Harris, Robert McRea, and Col. Charles Morgan be and are hereby appointed a board of commissioners to superintend the execution of said work.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of said commissioners, or a majority of them, to offer said work to the lowest bidder per cubic yard, at such period as they may deem most expedient in the current year, giving at least thirty days notice thereof, by publication in at least one newspaper in the cities of Vicksburg, Natchez, New Orleans, and in the parish paper of Pointe Coupee.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall also be the duty of said commissioners to lay off said work, and to receive and receipt for the same to the contractor or contractors as the work progresses, and when the said work, or any part of it is received by them, to state in said receipt the amount to be paid to the contractor or contractors for the work thus receipted for, and the said receipt shall be a voucher to the Auditor of Public Accounts, upon which he shall issue his warrants upon the State Treasurer, who shall continue paying such warrants until the levee shall be finished, or said appropriation of thirty-six thousand dollars be exhausted.

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That in case of the death, refusal to serve, resignation or absence from the State of any of the above named commissioners, that it shall be the duty of the police Jury of Point Coupee to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby.

Mr. Clifton explained the object of the bill, which was to repair or finish Grand Levee, which was now in a very dangerous condition.

Mr. Rivers asked that the consideration of the bill be deferred for a few days, till a full Senate could be had. Many members were now absent who might oppose the bill. It was not fair to force this bill through in the absence of these gentlemen.

Mr. Clifton explained that it was a case of necessity.

Mr. Rivers asked whether the alarming information concerning the state of the Levee, had been received since the departure of so many Senators.

Mr. Clifton said that information had been received to-day After some remarks from Messrs. Rivers, Short and McCayagainst, and Messrs. King, Clifton and Nicholls, for the bill, the previous question was moved and carried, and the bill finally passed.

On motion, the Senate then adjourned.

MONDAY, Feb. 14, 1853.

There being no quorum, the Senate adjourned till to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

TUESDAY, Feb. 15, 1853.

By joint resolution, the Senate adjourned to Wednesday, Feb. 23, at 11 A. M

WEDNESDAY, Feb. 23, 1853.

The Senate met, pursuant to adjournment.

BILLS APPROVED.

A message was received from the Governor, stating that he had approved the act to emancipate Susan Litell.

The resignation of Mr. Mouton as a member of the committee on contingent expenses, was tendered and accepted.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Secretary requested the concurrence of the House in the following acts:

An act to emancipate Judson J. Howerton.

An act to emancipate Laura Ann Robb, wife of Perry Dorman.

An act regulating the duties of Notaries without the city of New Orleans.

An act relative to the removal of the seat of justice in the parish of St. John the Baptist.

An act for the emancipation of Alcide Gonsalins.

An act making an appropriation out of the swamp land fund for the purpose of completing the rebuilding of the Grand Levee in the parish of Point Coupee.

He also reported to the House the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills and resolutions:

An act for the relief of the minor children of John Sulser, deceased.

A resolution instructing the Committee on Charitable Institutions to make a thorough examination into the affairs of all such institutions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr King. An act authorising proceedings in rem, to recover loss and damage caused by any carelessness, neglect, or want of skill in the direction or management of any steamboat, barge, flatboat or water craft.

An act authorising proceedings to compel judgement debtors to disclose their property. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Martin. An act for the incorporation of Building, Mutual Loan, and Accumulating Fund Associations.

Mr. Lacey. An act relative to district attorneys throughout the State of Louisiana, the parish of Orleans excepted.

An act to divide the State of Louisiana into four Supreme Judicial Districts for associate justices of the Supreme Court.

An act to provide for the election of Chief Justice, four Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, and the District Judges of the State of Louisiana, out of the Parish of Orleans.

An act to amend an act entitled "an act more effectually to prevent slaves from obtaining any spiritous and intoxicating liquors, without the consent of their masters.

And various other bills.

Mr. Lacey stated that there was a large number of bills before the Judiciary Committee, which ought to be printed, and he therefore moved for the printing thereof.

Mr. Wickliffe said it was rather unusual to have bills printed before being reported on, unless they were of a very important nature. If there were two or three bills of a conflicting nature, he should think that the Judiciary Committee ought to decide on the proper one, and report it to the Senate.

Mr. Lacey remarked that these bills were all of an important character. Some had come from the lower House, and been referred to the Committee, and it was almost impossible for the Committee to consider them all, without having them printed.

The bills were finally ordered to be printed.

Mr. Kenner's bill prohibiting the issuing of small notes, by individuals, for circulation, was taken up.

Mr. Short offered an amendment prohibiting individuals from issuing notes of any denomination. He said that, as he understood the bill, it did not prevent the issuing of notes for more than five dollars, by any individual who might choose to put them in circulation. He wished to prevent every individual from exercising this power. He had therefore offered this amendment, which provided that no individual, unless permitted by some general or official law, should have the right of issuing paper money.

Mr. Kenner said that the object of his bill was to put a stop to what was commonly known as shin plaster currency. The general law, which would doubtless be passed at this session of the Legislature, contains a provision covering the object proposed by the gentleman. He therefore did not think it necessary to pass the amendment, as it would have the effect of embarrassing the bill.

Mr. Short. Do I understand that the bill referred to by the gentleman, contains a provision prohibiting individuals from issuing notes of a greater denomination than five dollars?

Mr. Kenner. Yes sir.

Mr. Short. Then I withdraw my amendment. I did not understand that such was the nature of the bill.

THURSDAY, Feb. 24.

The following communication from the Mechanics' Society of the city of New Orleans, was then laid before the Senate, and read.

Mr. Lacey moved that, as an act of courtesy, the thanks of the Senate be returned to these gentlemen who had put themselves to the trouble of having their rooms measured, and moved to lay the communication definitely on the table.

Mr. Martin said that he thought the motion of the gentleman extremely discourteous, and that it ought not to be adopted. He thought the communication should be laid on the table, subject to call, and not indefinitely.

Mr. Lacey replied that nothing was farther from his thoughts than to exhibit any discourtesy towards the persons who had laid the communication before the Senate. His only desire was to have this question settled. He wished to quiet the long and unnecessary agitation which had been got upon this subject. He was convinced that, at this session, at least, no attempt would be made to move the seat of government, and there was no use of wasting any more time on it. If the Senator thought that any discourtesy was involved in his motion, lay the communication definitely on the table, we would be perfectly willing to withdraw it. But he did think it necessary to put a stop to this agitation. He did not suppose that the Senate could for a moment entertain any idea of removing the seat of government to the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Martin differed with the gentleman in his last supposition. He had taken some pains to ascertain the feelings and views of Senators on this subject, and thought, in fact, he was certain that an actual majority were in favor of removing the seat of Government; but he did not think that the proposition could command a constitutional majority. He certainly did think that the motion of the Senator from East Baton Rouge, to lay the communication indefinitely on the table, exhibited a want of courtesy, and was of opinion that it should be withdrawn.

Mr. Derbes—I move, sir, to refer the communication to a special committee.

Mr. Lacey—Then, sir, I insist on my motion—to lay on the table indefinitely.

Mr. Martin—If the object of the gentleman be merely to obtain a test vote on this question, he can achieve it by offering a resolution, embodying his views. But it does seem to me, I repeat, that his motion is wanting in courtesy.

Mr. Lacey said that he should insist on his motion. He would again state that he intended no discourtesy towards these gentlemen. He pressed his motion in order to obtain a test vote, but he would not offer a separate resolution against the measure; he would not place himself in so absurd a position.

Mr. Martin said there was no such question before the Senate.

Mr. Short thought that the gentleman making the resolution might show a little more respect for the gentlemen who had laid the communication before the Senate, since they had taken so much pains to do what they thought was for the comfort and convenience of the Legislature. They had not contented themselves with simply offering such accommodations as were at their disposal; but they had taken the trouble to measure their rooms in order to show that they did not wish to cramp up the Legislature in an insufficient space. He thought that this demanded that more respect should be paid to them than simply to thank them for their trouble, and then lay their communication indefinitely on the table without conidering it at all. The gentleman had said that he intended no disrespect by his motion. Whatever construction the gentleman himself, might place on his language, the idea of it, and to express one's ideas, was all the use of language, was to say to the authors of the communication, that they had meddled in affairs which did not concern them, and to mind their own business in future. That was the idea conveyed by the language of the motion.

Mr. Wickliffe hoped that the Senator from East Baton Rouge would withdraw his motion, and let that of the Senator from New Orleans prevail. He wished to put a stop to the agitation on this subject, and he thought there was no chance for the proposition to remove the seat of government. But these persons in New Orleans, no doubt, acted from the kindest motives, and thought they were doing the Legislature a service, in measuring their rooms, and laying the information thus obtained before the Senate. He was himself prepared to vote against any proposition having for its object the removal of the capitol, but there were others who thought differently, and were in favor of it. The least that could be done would be to refer the communication to a special committee.

Mr. Lacey stated that he made his motion merely for the sake of obtaining a test vote, and thus putting a quietus to this unnecessary agitation. He had expressly stated that he meant no disrespect by it. As the Senator from Madison considered language so important a vehicle for the transmission of ideas, he trusted that Senator would hear him when he said that he intended to be very courteous indeed. He had the kindest regard, and the highest respect for that worthy and important body composed of the mechanics of New Orleans, and nothing could be farther from his thoughts, than to say or do anything in the slightest degree disrespectful towards them. He had simply stated his object, and, having done so, he would now withdraw the motion.

Mr. Short was satisfied that the gentleman intended no disrespect, but his language was susceptible of a construction which perhaps he himself did not mean it to bear.

Mr. Lacey—As the gentleman is a democrat, I hope he will permit the sober second thought to prevail.

Mr. King presented a petition of the Louisiana Rice Mill Company, for a charter, and the use of a portion of the swamp lands, for the culture of rice, for a limited time. The main question involved was in regard to the propriety of a grant of Lands. He moved that it be referred to the committee on Internal Improvements.

After a few remarks from other Senators, Mr. King withdrew his motion.

Mr. Wickliffe thought the subject ought properly to be referred to the Judiciary Committee, as there was an important legal point involved in it. He doubted whether the public lands could be taken for any such purpose. The act of donation fixes the purposes to which these lands must be applied, and he thought the proposed measure would be a violation of that act.

Mr. King remarked that the gentleman probably did not understand the object of the petitioners.

Mr. Wickliffe said that he understood the object was to get hold of about twenty thousand acres of the public lands; to have the use of it for some years, and then to have the privilege of saying that they would buy it if they liked, at $1 25 per acre. He felt confident that there were a great many people in the State who would like to do just the same thing, if they could get the chance. The question, he would repeat, does involve a legal point, as to the power of the Legislature to divert the swamp lands from the object specified in the act of donation, to other purposes. The bill proposes, as he understood it, to give a large amount of the public lands, or the usufruct thereof, to a company, for the purpose of allowing it to cultivate rice on them. He should like to have the opinion of the Judiciary committee on this point.

Mr. Kenner—The Constitution settles that question, so that it cannot be a point at issue. However, I have no objection to the reference, as I am satisfied that the petitioners will never get what they ask for.

Mr King said that the proposition was not to divert the public land from the purposes specified in the act of donation. The company merely proposed to take certain rear lands, not now cultivatable, and to use them in such manner that they would become fit for cultivation. This was no diversion—it was only making the lands saleable. It was an object of great importance to the State to introduce the cultivation of rice, which is one of the most profitable branches of agriculture, and to which the climate and soil of Louisiana are peculiarly adapted If the Legislature has power to grant preemption rights to settlers, it certainly has the right to do what is proposed in this bill. If practicable, nothing could be a more desirable object than to see this scheme carried out, and our miserable swamps converted into fruitful fields and blooming gardens, suited for the abode of an industrious and happy people.

After some further debate, the petition and bill were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, Commerce and Manufactures.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The bill organizing the Treasury Department, was taken up in its order

Mr. Martin thought the bill was superfluous, inasmuch as an act was already in existence for the same purpose. He moved its reference to the Finance Committee.

Mr. Lacey explained that the object of the bill was to organize the Treasury Department by an act of this Legislature, and thus to do away with the doubt which existed in the minds of many persons, who thought that the new constitution put an end to all offices existing under the old. He wished, therefore, to embrace all the State Departments in a series of bills, so as to leave no room for uncertainty on the subject.

Mr. Martin. As the subject admits of some doubt, I think the motion to refer is proper.

Mr. Lacey had no objection.

The bill relative to the education of youths at the expense of the State, was taken up. The Committee on Education had reported unfavorably on the bill.

Mr. Wickliffe explained the reasons which had induced the Committee to make an unfavorable report. He said the Committee had come to the conclusion that when the State bestowed the benefits of education on any person, it did not do so with the intention of constraining them afterwards, and of forcing them to adopt any particular profession. The bill proposed that, on completing their education, these youths should pledge themselves to adopt the profession of school teachers, for a certain time. The Committee thought they should be left free to follow their own inclinations, and not compelled to bind themselves as apprentices, in this way. These were the objections to the bill, urged in Committee; nevertheless, if the Senator was anxious for the bill to pass, he would not oppose it.

Mr. Lacey explained the object. He had conversed with Col. Nicholas, the late State superintendent of Public Education, and had received from him the suggestions which were embodied in the bill. That gentleman had explained to him the great benefits which other States had experienced from the system of normal schools. But as they, for various reasons, could not be established, we should endeavor to secure as near an approach to them as circumstances would admit. Now, is this unfair—that when a person is admitted into an institution, cloted and fed, and endowed with the benefits of a liberal education, he should be asked to devote a portion of his time to the service of the State? There was scarcely any hardship in this; there was nothing anti-democratic in it. It was merely carrying out the system of normal schools.

The object of the bill was a good one. It was admitted by all to be good. The Committee even had not reported against the main object of the bill. The only objection urged against it, is that it is not right to ask a person to teach. These persons receive incalculable benefits from the State. They are maintained and educated at its expense; their minds are trained by a liberal course of instruction, given to them at the expense of the State. It is important that the State should receive something in return—that minds so trained should be directed to the education of our youth. There was no reason for the objections urged against the bill—there was no hardship in its requirements.

As had been suggested by one whose attention had been turned to educational subjects, and who had given much time to the consideration of the question, the bill proposes to compel persons who receive such vast benefits from the State, to give a portion of these benefits to the State in return. And after all, we take no bond but their word. He trusted that the object of the bill—one crowded with so much good to the State, and calculated to be of so much advantage—would not be defeated by the objection which had been made by the Committee.

Mr Lacoste wished to know whether, under the bill, one of these persons could be forced to become a schoolmaster, if he did not wish it.

Mr. Kenner called for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read by the Secretary.

Mr. Kenner said that he should certainly vote for the bill, with some alteration. The principle involved in it was a good one. With so much need for good teachers, as exists in this State, we yet had comparatively few who understand the profession. There was nothing new in this proposition The same thing had been done in all the States where the common school system is in operation. It had not only been done by individual States, but also by the United States. The General Government had an institution at West Point where young men were educated at the expense o the government, with the understanding that they were afterwards to enter the army and give their services to the country. The same thing was the case with young men destined to command at sea. There was an institution called a naval school, where they were educated, and they were expected afterwards to enter the navy. There was no hardship implied in this. We say we are sadly in want of teachers. We proclaim it abroad. We send all over the country to get them, and invite them to come here and help to educate our youth. We ought then to take every means to procure them at home. In regard to education, we in Louisiana were now in the same position as France in regard to a navy. France expends millions in the construction of ships of war; she has hundreds of armed vessels, formed on the finest models, perfectly equipped and in the best order—but there is one essential element of a navy which she has not, and which, with all her efforts, she cannot procure. She has no sailors, and without sailors she can have no navy. He appealed to gentlemen to say how it was in their respective parishes. In what a condition was public education throughout the State? Good teachers were the greatest consideration under the present system, and at the small salaries allowed, competent persons could not be found to adopt the profession. Until this time we have done nothing to carry out our system of public education. We could not pay much more money to carry it out. We did not have the money to spare, but we must do something to secure good teachers. The proposition in the bill was therefore a good one. As the gentleman from East Baton Rouge had said there was nothing anti-republican in it—nothing anti-democratic he might say, because he hoped, and supposed that the gentleman had not used that word in a party sense. If we do not do something practical, such as the bill contemplates, our whole system of public education would soon go to the dogs. He hopen the bill would pass in spite of the opposition of the Committee on Education. He would however move that the word indigent be stricken out wherever it occurs.

Mr. Lacey was extremely glad that the bill had received the valuable support of the Senator from Ascension. He hoped that the members of the Committee on Education, would reconsider their opposition, and give their support to the bill on its final passage. He hoped every Senator would support it. This proposition to which exception had been taken, was not new, it was not a creature of his imagination. It was adopted by all the normal schools which had been so successful in the northern States and Canada. If adopted here it would have the effect of making our teachers a race of liberally educated scholars. He hoped therefore that it would pass.

Mr. Short asked whether the State would provide a school for every teacher.

Mr. Lacey said that he would give his plighted word, and when he might say that he was ready to enter on his duties as a teacher, that he was ready and willing to fulfill his promise, h would have done every thing that could be required of him. His promise would be kept—his pledge would be unbroken.

On motion of Mr. Kenner, the bill was recommitted.

FRIDAY, Feb. 25th, 1853.

Mr. Kittridge introduced a bill to provide for the pledging of growing crops.

Mr. Burthe moved that the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee The object of the bill was one of great importance, and Senators ought to have time to give it due consideration before being called on to vote on it.

Mr. Kittridge said it was true that the bill was one of great importance to tillers of the soil, but notwithstanding this it was perfectly simple in its nature. It interfered with no vested rights and there was no necessity for the reference.

Mr. Burthe hoped that the bill would not be pressed at this time—that opportunity would be given for reflection. He must confess that he had been taken by surprise by the introduction of the bill, and was not prepared to vote on it at this time.

Mr. Pulfrey seconded the motion to refer. The matter was of too great importance to be lightly hurried over.

Mr. Kittridge had no objection to the reference. He moved that the bill be made the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. Lacey said it was impossible for the Judiciary Committee to report to-morrow. So much business had been thrown on that Committee, that it was absolutely out of the question for it to examine this bill, and report to-morrow. He would suggest that it be made the order for some day next week.

Mr. Burthe did not make the motion in order to press a report to-morrow. The Committee would report at its leisure, and when perfectly prepared to do so.

Mr. Short remarked that it was true the bill was only to pledge something which was not pledged before—but it would interfere much with the duties of Sheriffs. When the seizure carries with it, the growing crop, it produces a conflict between the seizing creditors and the merchant.

The bill was finally referred to the Judiciary Committee, and made the order of the day for Thursday next.

Mr. Martin offered a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to draw up a bill prohibiting the holding of more than one office of emolument by any State officer, and to cancel the commissions of such as already held two.

Mr. Martin explained the object of the resolution It was intended to apply, principally, to Clerks of Courts who hold commissions as Auctioneers. Under the Judiciary bill of 1846 they were authorized to issue licences to other parties to make sales. The effect is to cause a cumulation of offices in one person and it gives Clerks an undue advantage by permitting them to prevent others from having the benefits of the office of Auctioneer. His object was to instruct the Judiciary Committee to prepare and report such a bill as would promptly put a stop to this cumulation of offices, as it is in direct contravention of Article 122 of the Constitution.

The bill for the relief of ——— was taken up.

Mr. McCay said that as he understood the report the sum was paid more than a year after it was due. Now if the gentlemen would return to the report of the Treasurer, and examine it attentively they would be surprised. They would find that over $60,000, in commissions had been returned in this manner by the State. and the amount was greater last year than in any previous one. In some instances commissions for as far back as 1847 had been paid. Now there must be a screw loose somewhere, to produce such a state of affairs. When only a few days had elapsed between the time of payment, and the period at which the money was due, he could have no objection to paying the commissions, but when six months, or a year, had passed he felt no disposition to do so.

Mr. Derbes moved that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that it lie on the table, subject to call, as Mr. Boatner, who knew something of the circumstances of the case, was absent.

Mr. Derbes remarked that he was a member of the Committee which had reported favorably on this claim, and he had been under the impression that it was precisely similar in its character to those which had already been allowed by the Senate. He had wished the bill to be recommitted, as he desired to place himself right before the Senate.

Mr. McCay called for the reading of the report.

The Secretary read the report, after which the bill was laid on the table subject to call.

Mr. Rivers asked that the bill requesting our Representatives, and instructing our Senators in Congress, to obtain a grant of the shallow lakes in Louisiana, be taken up.

Mr. Rivers stated that on account of the vast accumulation of drift wood, at the Red River raft, the waters of the river overflowed, annually, a vast section of country, which was returned to the land office as lakes. These lakes were shallow and unfit for navigation. Under the acts of Congress, the raft would be removed, and the country drained of these superfluous waters, and they could then be reclaimed and rendered arable. The object of the bill was to get the Secretary of the Interior to have it surveyed and entered on the lists as swamp lands; otherwise conflicting claims to these lands might arise, since when the lakes are drained they might be entered, and returned as high lands.

The bill was taken up and passed.

SATURDAY, February 26th, 1853.

RAILROAD CORPORATIONS.

Mr. King introduced a bill amending the 2d section of the act of 1847, limiting the existence of companies formed under it to 25 years.

Mr. King stated that his amendment proposed to exempt railroad companies from the restrictions imposed in that section, by extending the time of their corporate existence to 50 years. He wished to ascertain the sense of the Senate on this subject, as he thought 25 years much too short a period for railroads, and, at the same time, was opposed to granting any perpetual charters.

Mr. Short said that the bill intended to exempt railroad companies from the provisions of of the act which limits the existence of corporations formed under it to 25 years. The only change proposed is to amend that act so as to give to railroad companies a longer existence—a longer corporate capacity than they can have under the acts of 1847, '48. I do not myself see any good reason why a railroad, which is to be a substantial advantage to the State, should not have a longer existence. If it should forfeit its existence by any act of its own—if it should commit suicide—that would be a different case. But I wish to give them a longer life—in other words, the capacity to sue and be sued, so as to give that degree of confidence to capitalists who are invited to embark their funds in enterprises of this kind, that they may be certain of a profitable return. It might take ten or fifteen years before they would realize such a per cent. on their investment that they could come to the conclusion they had made a good bargain. My object at this time is, therefore, to call the attention of the Senate to the exception which will be made by the bill in the 2d section of the act of 1847 in favor of railroad companies. If before the expiration of 25 years, another mode of travel shall be discovered, more economical, and more expeditious than by railroads, if balloons should be used, and people navigate the air instead of passing over the surface of terra firma, then let them travel that way—the existence of a railroad company cannot prevent it. But as long as railroads are useful and beneficial, as long as they are profitable, they ought to be permitted to exist, and to retain their corporate capacity, always reserving to the legislative power to limit them, and to prevent monopoly.

Mr. King thought that the object of this bill was not sufficiently understood. He would read the section of the act referred to, and which he proposed to amend.

[Mr. King read the said section and amendment.]

A Senator asks me how adequate compensation is to be judged. I answer that it is to be judged by the opinion of men, by the decisions of Courts, and in various other ways. The decision of such a point could be removed from the State Courts to those of the United States. These corporations are private corporations. Their property is as much private property as is the property of individuals. Many persons suppose that on the extinction, or expiration of a corporation its right of property ceases. This is an error. The corporation in such a case only loses its corporate existence, or the power of suing and being sued. Its property is not confiscated to the State when it goes out of existence, and the Senate has no more right to expropriate that property than it has to expropriate your house. It can only do so on giving the adequate compensation required by the Constitution. But I believe that the people possess, at any time, this right of expropriation whenever its exercise is necessary to the welfare of the State. It is for this purpose that I have inserted the provision in the bill. Without it, this act could never be done but by a convention of the people, and for the use of the sovereign power, the State, in its most sovereign capacity. I have, therefore put this in the bill to avoid such a necessity. I do not imagine that any line which may be useful, will be much inconvenienced by it. If it be beneficial and useful the State will never dream of expropriating its property.

But if it prove to be injurious then the State will have this power, which in such a contingency ought to be exercised, so that we may be enabled promptly to get rid of what may be injurous in itself. I will say in a breath, what are the reasons, which I think, exist, against giving to corporation an existence in perpetuo. The people of one day and generation ought not to bind and fetter those of a thousand ages to come. Human nature is not infallible. It is prone to error. No one can assume that he is indisputably right in any position he may take. We cannot say that our judgment shall be final, that it shall be binding on posterity for all time to come. We therefore have no right to legislate in such a way as to prevent future legislatures from rectifying our errors, or from the power of undoing whatever wrong we may have committed. But I have not the slightest desire to embarrass the progress of those plans of internal improvement, which it is the duty of every servant of the State to aid in consummating. If it can be proved that there is anything unjust in this bill, that it will trammel us in the prosecution of works of public importance, I am perfectly willing to modify it in any way, and to make any concession that may be asked. But you may talk of your grand schemes, your Pacific railroad stretching from the Mississippi to the shores of California, your Opelousas railroad prolonged till it meets the banks of the Rio Grande, you may talk of them I say, and dream of them as long as you please, but while your statute book proclaims that you will only give railroad Companies a corporate existence of 25 years, it is tantamount to a declaration that you are opposed to any such scheme, and that strongly as your words may advocate them, you never intend that they shall be carried out.

But I should like to know something of the sense of the Senate on this subject. I have new an important bill in my pocket, and am yet undecided in what form to present it. I should like to know whether its charter is to be perpetual—whether we shall give up all power over Companies of this kind, or retain some supervising care at the end of 50 years.

Mr. Wickliffe would like to call the attention of the Senator from New Orleans to the provisions of the law in existence relative to incorporations. He was himself opposed to the granting of perpetual charters, and should certainly give his vote against any proposition of that nature. He thought the bill had better be submitted.

Mr. Hodge was desirous of seizing this opportunity of expressing his views in opposition to the opinions put forth by the Senators from New Orleans and West Feliciana, and to show that the reasons which those gentlemen had given why railroad corporations should be limited to an existence of 50 years, were not good. Nevertheless if the bill was to be printed he should not trouble the Senate with and remarks at present. But he wished it to be distinctly understood that he was in favor of carrying out our great plans of internal improvements, and that he was not to be frightened by any cry of monopoly such as many persons were in the habit of indulging in. When any of these bills come up he would oppose any limitation of any railroad corporation, created under either general or special laws. It was absolutely necessary to give to these Companies a longer corporate existence than was allowed to them under the act of 1847. He did not believe that capitalists could be induced to embark their means in these enterprises unless a longer time were granted—they would not run the risk of such speculations when a great proportion of the time allowed might be necessary to show whether the enterprise in which they might have invested would be profitable. So far from acceding to the propriety of putting in the section giving the State power to expropriate the property of railroad Companies at the end of 50 years, he thought it entirely unnecessary because the subject is provided for in the Constitution—(Reads the article referred.) Now if it ever becomes necessary for the State to expropriate the property of railroad Companies, it already has the power, on paying adequate compensation.

Mr. Wickliffe had no objection to the gentleman taking any course he pleased He was glad that the gentleman was not to be frightened by the cry of monopoly,—neither was he to be frightened in any such way If the question, at any time, should come up, he would vote against granting perpetual charters. This objection was not to frighten the gentleman from Caddo, or any other gentleman. He only wished to express his own opinions, and intentions, as that gentleman had.

Mr. Short did not understand why the Senator from New Orleans wished to press the bill at this time. His own object was to give Senators an opportunity to express their opinions on the bill. He should like to hear the opinions of Senators as to the time for which corporations should be allowed to exist, and he supposed that the gentleman who reported the bill would have the same desire. The bill ought not to touch the property of a corporation. It could only determine its corporate existence. That was one thing, and the property accumulated by it during its existence was another. It could never be touched except so far as it existed by the act of incorporation.

As for himself, he should like to know what was to be done in regard to this subject of Internal Improvements. He had heretofore abstained from saying anything on the question, although he felt as much interest in it as any other member of the Senate. He had heard a great deal of what was going to be done; he had heard of various projects set on foot; but he should like to see something real—he should desire to have the railroads built, he wished so see the actual cars in motion, and whistling through the woods bearing to market their freights of cotton and sugar. We had come here to put these things into actual operation—to bring them into existence. What but the desire for this had given birth to the New Constitution? What was it but the question of Internal Improvements, and perhaps the desire for some extension of banking facilities, that had induced a call for a Convention? Every one knows that those were the causes which led to the Convention, and gave birth to the Constitution. He hoped, then, that gentlemen had come here to do something practical for the realization of these projects He hoped that those gentlemen who might be opposed to extending the time of the existence of corporation, would give us something practical, something that would carry out the views of their constituents. An idea existed in some minds that if two or three persons associated together, in the form of a corporation, there is something very dangerous in it—something by which the State might be blown up. Now, he had no such idea, though certainly he had seen the time when the State was almost blown up by banking corporations. But we need not fear that so much capital will ever be concentrated in railroad companies as to make them dangerous. The great fear entertained in his section was that they would never see a real railroad car. They feared that capitalists would be afraid to invest their money in these enterprises, as before they could become profitable, the privilege might be lost. He wished to give confidence to capitalists. He knew that they were generally cautious, and the more capital they had, the more cautious they became. We ought then to give them every inducement to invest their capital, and, not deprive them of its legitimate fruits. The reason that no capitalists had yet come forward to our assistance, was that no foundation had been laid for them, and that they had no confidence in the permanency of any enterprises to which they might be called to contribute. He hoped, then, that these vague and vagabond suspicions would not be suffered to weigh so heavily, as to prevent our laying such a substantial foundation as would induce capitalists to come forward at our invitation, and aid us with the means at their command, so that we might be enabled to see the iron horse snorting through the swamps of Madison, and bona fide railroad cars, laden with cotton bales.

Mr. Wickliffe did not wish to deprive the Senator of the interesting sight of the iron horse, but he could see no reason why the bill should not be printed and made the order of the day for Wednesday next, as it was a subject of great importance, and one which ought not to be hastily acted on.

The bill was then made the order of the day for Wednesday next.

THE ABOLITION OF THE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. King said he had in his hand another resolution of great importance, that which provided for the abolition of the Board of Public Works. He offered it as a test question, and he hoped the consideration of it would not be deferred beyond Monday. He would however now explain the object of the resolution. Up to this time the Committee on Internal Improvements had been enabled to form any bill or devise any general system to be presented to the Senate, because the organization of this Board of Public Works, would take all power out of their hands, and render all their efforts useless. A large majority of the Legislature, he believed, was in favor of abolishing that provision of the Constitution which provides for the organization of the Board, and until this is done the committees can effect nothing practical. No gentleman likes to prepare bills, when he knows they have an inherent vice which must defeat their operation, or to draw bills to carry out a provision of the Constitution, which is almost universally condemned. He had himself almost dispaired of arriving at any practical result under that provision of the Constitution. But if any thing could be done, it would probably be found inappropriate and cumbrous. His own prejudices—his own preconceived opinions—were all against that provision.

Nevertheless, if the sense of the Legislature is in favor of maintaining this Board of Public Works, and of giving it a trial, he was willing to undertake any task that might be imposed on him, much as he might feel its inutility. The Constitution allows the abolition of the Board of Public Works, by a vote of three-fifths. He believed that at least that proportion of the present Legislature was in favor of abolishing it.

Mr. McCay read the articles of the Constitution, under which the Board was to be established.

ARTICLE 130. There shall be a Board of Public Works, to consist of four Commissioners. The State shall be divided by the Legislature into four Districts, containing as nearly as may be an equal number of voters, and one Commissioner shall be elected in each District, by the legal voters thereof, for the term of four years; but, of the first elected, two to be designated by lot, shall remain in office for two years only.

ART. 131. The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of the Constitution, shall provide for the election and compensation of the Commissioners and the organization of the Board. The Commissioners first elected shall assemble on a day to be appointed by law, and decide by lot the order in which their terms of service shall expire.

ART. 132. The Commissioners shall exercise a diligent and faithful supervision over all public works, in which the State may be interested, except those made by joint stock companies. They shall communicate to the General Assembly, from time to time, their views concerning the same, and recommend such measures as they may deem necessary, in order to employ to the best advantage and for the purposes for which they were granted, the swamps and overflowed lands conveyed by the United States to this State. They shall appoint all officers engaged on the public works, and shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

ART. 133. The Commissioners may be removed by the concurrent vote of a majority of all the members elected to each House of the General Assembly; but the causes of the removal shall be entered on the journal of each House.

ART. 134. The General Assembly shall have power by a vote of three-fifths of the members elected to each house, to abolish said Board, whenever in their opinion a Board of Public Works shall no longer be necessary.

The Board is not yet established. Consequently the bill is to abolish what, as yet, has no existence.

The last article gives power to the General Assembly, to abolish the Board; but this certainly means that it may do it after the Board has been created.—The words of the Constitution evidently bear this meaning. Under any other supposition, it seems to me it would be abolishing what has no existence, which is an absurdity. This provision of the Constitution is an order to establish a Board of Public Works, and we are bound to obey the mandate. Until we have tried it, and found by actual experiment that it is no improvement over the old and vicious system which has so long cursed the State, I shall give my vote in accordance with this opinion.

Mr. Short said that he felt a great interest in this subject. He was now engaged on a report concerning the public lands of the State, which would form a foundation, to put in operation some plan by which the swamp land fund could be made available, either by scrip or by means of some other general system.—He felt a deep interest in this Board of Public Works, and he agreed with the Senator from New Orleans, who had last spoken, (Mr. McCay) that we could not abolish what had no existence.

According to Webster's Dictionary, the word abolish means to put an end to, to break down, &c. But if the venerable author of that dictionary had lived in these days, he would, he could, put an end to a thing which never had a beginning. He must say that if this construction be correct, it would be the most remarkable feature of this most remarkable Constitution. He would now say a few words on the constitutional point invoked in this question. The Convention which formed the present Constitution of the State, met as the sovereign power. We were not so high up as that. We in our legislative capacity, are created by the Constitution. We have the same powers as those possessed by an Attorney, with reference to his principal. But to say that we can set ourselves up as principal, abolish our power of Attorney, and refuse to do what we are expressly commanded to perform, is contrary to common sense.

The construction which gentlemen seek to put on the Constitution, is unfounded. He therefore wished to instruct the committee to report a bill not abolishing the Board of Public Works, but organizing it. Then, that interesting swamp land fund, which interests some gentlemen so much that they take $35,000 at a grab, will be settled and rendered available. He did not wish to cast any imputation on the honorable gentleman, (Mr. King) who had introduced the resolution; but he must say that he thought it a kind of a Trojan horse, by which the swamp land fund was to be swallowed up and squandered. As he had said, he felt the greatest interest in this subject, and wished for the adoption of some general system of leveeing, by which Louisiana would be protected from the devastating effects of floods and inundations.

Mr. Lacey. If the arguments presented by the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay) in relation to the constitutional objections to the resolutions be correct, then we ought not to pass it. But I am disposed to believe, that his arguments are not good. In coming to a conclusion on this question, I shall endeavor to apply to it, the same tests that I used in forming my opinion on the constitutional question recently before the Senate, in order to get at the true meaning.

Mr. Wickliffe. To what question does the gentleman allude.

Mr. Lacey. To the question involved in the resolution to go into an election for United States Senator.

Mr. Wickliffe. I understood the gentleman to have denied that there was any constitutional question involved in that resolution.

Mr. Lacey. If the gentleman heard my argument on that question, and read the printed report of it, and did not see that I had argued it as a constitutional point, he endeavored to reply to what he did not comprehend.

The article of the Constitution on which the opponents of the resolution base their arguments, declares that the Board of Public Works may be abolished by a vote of three fifths, whenever, in the opinion of the Legislature, it may be found no longer necessary. It appears, therefore, that we must first bring it into existence before we can abolish it. But, can it be supposed that if three fifths of the Legislature are opposed to the Board, if that proportion consider that it is useless, and in fact injurious, it can have been intended that they are compelled to bring it into existence only in order to strangle it immediately on its birth?

Such certainly could not have been within the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution. Why, sir, if three fifths of the Legislature were opposed to the Board, they have the power to prevent it coming into existence at all. It is proper then to discuss this question on its merits, but I think the resolution itself is injudicious at this time. So far, from the Senate instructing the committee to bring in a bill for the abolition of the Board of Public Works, I think it more proper that the committee should explain to the Senate, the reasons which have influenced in recommending the course of action contemplated by the resolution. That committee, certainly, has reasons; it surely can explain them to the Senate, for it doubtless has bestowed much and careful attention on the subject. It is far easier for them to give the reasons which have influenced them, than for us to give instructions on a subject which we cannot be expected to understand as well as they. In order therefore, to arrive at this point, I will offer a resolution.

(Mr. Lacey then read his resolution.)

I consider the subject of internal improvements the most important that can claim the attention of the Legislature. In it is involved the weal or woe of Louisiana. I am not disposed, therefore, to act hastily on so important a question, or to enter into it without the benefit of the light which the committee can throw upon it. But, so far from thinking that they could be prepared to do so on Monday, I would rather call on them to give their reasons on Tuesday.

Mr. Wickliffe remarked that an important discussion was to take place on that day.

Mr. King moved a dispensation of the rules.

Mr. Martin objected to the dispensation. We ought not to act hastily on such a serious subject, particularly when so few Senators were present. The Convention which inserted the provision in the Constitution, ordering the establishment of a Board of Public Works, was a wise body It was more numerous than this Senate, and consequently ought to have had more collective wisdom. As to the opinion expressed by the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King,) that a large majority of this Legislature was opposed to the existence of the Board, he must say that he had never heard it expressed before. The Senator had asked whether that was not the general opinion, and he answered that he did not know. He had said some of us thought the Board would be useless and injurious. Now he (Mr. Martin) was not one of the persons included in that word "us." He had no such idea. Before this resolution was acted on, he wished to see a full Senate,—he did not like to have it pressed through in such haste.

Mr. Rivers.—The Senator from New Orleans (Mr. King) had said that he introduced the resolution as a test question, to ascertain whether three-fifths of the Senate were opposed to the Board of Public Works, so that he should not be put to the trouble of making a report, unless he thought it could command the support of a constitutional majority. He (Mr. Rivers) had thought from Article 134 of the Constitution, that the Board could be abolished, but how could the Senator get over Articles 130 and 131, which say that "There shall be a Board of Public Works, to consist of four Commissioners. The State shall be divided by the Legislature into four Districts;" and "The General Assembly, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the election and compensation of the Commissioners, and the organization of the Board."

This clearly provided for the creation of the Board, and makes it incumbent on this Legislature, at this session, to take measures to organise it. It is only when we find that the Board does not meet our views, and that it cannot fulfill the objects for which it was established, that we are invested with the power of abolishing it.

Mr. King said that he had wished to attract the serious consideration of every member of the Senate to this subject, and he hoped that they had felt its importance. He had been blamed for introducing this resolution, but he did not think he was justly blameable. He wished the question permanently settled. So far as the constitutional question was concerned not the slightest doubt existed in his mind, and he thought he could convince Senators that his position was the true one. If the Board is in existence, we clearly had the right to abolish it.—but if it is not in existence, we have the right at any time,—now just as much as at any other.

He had much to say in regard to the impracticability of this system for carrying on our Internal Improvements; but if there were no other objection, this one would be fatal. The Board is to consist of four members. Now, it might happen,—in fact the probability is that such would be the case,—that, politically, the Board might be equally divided, containing two whigs and two democrats. In such a case, being animated by different and conflicting views and feelings, how could they ever come to any conclusion? They would be two and two, and there was no umpire to decide between them. This, certainly, was not the proper machinery for those grand projects of Internal Improvement which we expect to carry into execution. He was obliged to gentlemen for the expression of their opinions on this point; for his own part, he had no doubt of the utter impracticability of the system, and of the absolute constitutional power of the Legislature to abolish it.

Mr. Martin should like to enquire what the committee proposed to do.

Mr. Lacey remarked that the Chairman of the Internal Improvement Committee says he cannot arrive at his object in any other way, and if the Committee would not report its reasons for desiring the abolition of the Board of Public Works, he could withdraw his substitute. He was only seeking light, not wishing to vote without having a knowledge of the subject.

Mr. King stated that they simply viewed the Board as an impracticability; but as to all the different reasons which had influenced their minds in coming to that conclusion, he could not pretend to say.

Mr. Lacey then withdrew his substitute, and the consideration of the resolution was deferred to Monday.

MONDAY, Feb. 28th., 1853.

Mr. Kittridge introduced a bill, the object of which was to authorize the people of Terrebonne to tax slaves as well as real estate, for railroad contributions.

Mr. Kittridge moved a dispensation of the rules for the purpose of taking up the bill.

Mr. Martin was opposed to a dispensation of the rules. He represented, in part, the parish of Terrebonne, and he had received from them no power or authority to act on this subject.

Mr. Kittridge read the proceedings of the Police Jury of Terrebonne, in favor of the object of the bill, and explained the nature and provisions of the bill.

Mr. Martin—Mr. President, I am opposed to a dispensation of the rules for the purpose of taking up this bill; but if the question is decided against me I shall be prepared to make a few remarks explaining my position with reference to it.

The motion to dispense with the rules, was lost.

Mr. Kenner presented a bill for the relief of the Surveyor General. He stated that by law the salary of the Surveyor General was fixed at $600 per annum, but through an oversight last year, in the general appropriation bill there was no power to pay him, as by the Constitution no money could be drawn from the Treasury except under a special appropriation. This gentleman has continued to discharge the duties of Surveyor General ever since, but has only received $150, for the first quarter of last year. That sum had been paid under the supposition, entertained by the Auditor that the general appropriation bill had made provisions for the salary of the Surveyor General.

This bill did not fix the salary, it only carries out that provision of the Constitution which says that no money can be paid except under an appropriation. The bill makes application for two years salary, for '52 and '53—so much of '52 as is now due, to be paid immediately.

Mr. Boatner thought the Surveyor general was entitled to only $1050 instead of 1200, which sum the bill called for.

Mr. Kenner replied that the bill asked for $1200 in order to legalize the act of the auditor in paying the first $150.

The bill was passed.

Mr. McCay called up a Bill which had passed the House, the object of which he explained to be to repeal the section of the general appropriation bill which provided that the surplus of the school fund should be paid into the general fund at 6 per cent interest.

Mr. Short understood that under the 16th section of the act concerning the school lands, large sales had been made. He wished to know whether the State was to be relieved from the payment of interest on these sales.

Mr. Kenner explained that the amount now to the credit of the school fund, raised by annual taxation and otherwise, amounts to $280,000. The sum allowed by the Legislature to the school fund is $240,000. The object of the bill was to prevent the excess of $40,000 from being paid out of the school fund into the general fund, and to relieve the State from the payment of interest; at least till some general law could be devised.

Mr. McCay thought no reasonable objection could be urged against the bill. The present state of our finances was such that we ought to prevent the general fund from borrowing from the trust fund. That was the only object of the bill—to prevent this borrowing system, and to keep in the trust fund the money which properly belongs to it.

Mr. Short had no objection to the bill if did not propose to exempt the State from the payment of interest.

Mr. Kenner said it had nothing to do with the funds arising from the sales of lands, but only with those arising from excess of taxation.

ABOLITION OF THE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The resolution instructing the Committee on Internal Improvements to bring in a bill to abolish the Board of Public Works, was taken up.

Mr. Martin moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. Lacey. ——

Mr. Martin withdrew his motion.

Mr. King said that he was surprised to see the manifestation of a disposition to dispose of this question in this summary mode, without discussion.

That in the recent contest both the great political parties of the country had seized upon the subject of internal improvements and had given it a prominent position in their respective platforms. That rival candidates had run a race of competition as to which most strongly favored the internal improvements of the State. We had assembled here with the public eye upon us, and with the highest expectations as to our action upon this subject. That whether the well-founded expectations of the public were to be realized depended in a great measure upon the fate of the resolution now on the Secretary's table. Under these circumstances, he trusted Senators would give the subject that consideration which its importance demanded.

The resolution had been objected to upon the ground that the Legislature could not constitutionally abolish the Board of Public Works, provided for by the Constitution. Before entering on the constitutional question, he would first endeavor to ascertain whether it was desirable that the board should be abolished. If it was not desirable, it would be useless to discuss the constitutional question. If it was desirable that the board should be abolished—if it was detrimental to the public interest—then he expected Senators to go with him, unless the mandates of the Constitution were clear, and their duty to vote against the resolution imperative under the Constitution.

He would proceed to show that it was desirable the board should be abolished.

In the first place he considered the board an impracticable mode of conducting the public improvements of the State.

It consisted of four members, elected from different districts of the State, with an equal voice for each member. They might, and probably often would be equally divided. He considered such a board impracticable to do or construct anything. They might answer as a negative body, but would never answer as an operative one.

Suppose such a board were to undertake to construct a house. Two might prefer one material and two another. Two might prefer one place and two another. Two might prefer one style of architecture and two another. In the meantime the work would stand still. The walls would never rear their heads.

It might be answered that we can create an umpire. If this could be done, it would certainly obviate the objection. But unfortunately under the Constitution no umpire could be created. The duties assigned were all to be performed by the board. Take, for instance, the power of appointing all officers engaged on the public works, given by art. one hundred and thirty-two (132) If the members of the board were equally divided as to an appointment, and an umpire was called in to decide between them, the appointment would in fact be made by the umpire, and not by the board This would be a papable violation of the Constitution. The same would be true with regard to all other duties assigned to the board, which would be determined by an umpire. An umpire was, therefore, unconstitutional and impossible.

As no umpire could be provided the Board was an impracticable machine for carrying on Internal Improvements. To illustrate this, we had a right to suppose, yea even to expect, that as they were to be elected by Districts, the Board would be composed of two Whigs and two Democrats. The first duty they would be called on to perform, would be to appoint the officers to conduct the public works. This would be the entering wedge of discord. Each of the two from opposing parties would insist upon the appointment of their own partisans and adherants. Which should yield, and which should triumph, judging from the general character of party strifes, would never be determined Thus the very first step towards the improvement of the State could never be taken.

The same class of difficulties would be constantly recurring.

But if they were so fortunate as to escape political differences, they might encounter sectional differences of a character equally fatal to the action of the Board.

But if both these dangers were passed, others would be encountered in the natural differences between men from their mental organizations, their educations and their preconceived personal prejudices and partialities.

One man's education might cause him to prefer one system or theory, another might cause him to oppose it.

Preconceived prejudice or partiality might cause a levee to be turned round one man's plantation or to be run through anothers in the most vexatious manner.

But suppose the Board should rise superior to all these sources of error and dissension?

He still contended it was unnecessary and useless.

The duties assigned to the Commissioners by the Constitution were all assigned to them collectively and not individually. They were to act as a Board. How were they to act? They were required by the Constitution to exercise a diligent supervision of the public works. Was it expected they would as a Board, travel round and supervise the public works? For his part he thought he would not be hazarding much by asserting that in the first place this would be impossible, and in the next place, that even if it were possible, the Board would never comply with this part of their duty. The Board would probably meet occasionally, and only occasionally, at Baton Rouge, and around a table with some good cigars and a bottle of wine, would come to the sage conclusion that what the Legislature had ordered, should be done, and thereupon would issue the necessary orders to the subordinate officers. The necessary surveys and the actual construction and superintendence of the public works would be performed by the Engineers and other officers appointed by them. The State had better at once employ the Engineers and dispense with the Board.

Another objection to the Board was that it would exercise an important branch of power in derogation of the supreme legislative power of the Government. However bad the appointments made by them were, there was no mode by which the State could get rid of them except by abolishing the Board itself by a three-fifth vote of both branches of the Legislature. He was unwilling to divest the Legislature of so important a branch of its power.

He considered the Board not only impracticable and unnecessary, but it would prove expensive. The cost of it would not be less than twelve or fifteen thousand dollars per annum, without any corresponding benefit. With these objections to the Board, unless the obligations of the Constitution to preserve it were imperative, he thought Senators should agree with him in endeavoring to get rid of it.

But some Senators had urged that however impracticable it might be, we could not abolish it by a three-fifth vote under Article 134 of the Constitution.

That article reads as follows:

ART. 134. "The General Assembly shall have power by a vote of three-fifths of the members elected to each House, to abolish the said Board, whenever in their opinion a Board of Public Works shall no longer be necessary."

This language appeared to him clear and unequivocal, and sufficiently comprehensive to admit of its immediate abolition by the requisite vote.

It is contended that although three-fifths of the Legislature have the right to abolish the Board, they cannot do so until acts shall have been passed to put it into operation. That we must first try the system before we can abolish it. This argument is not supported by the language of the 134th article of the Constitution. If the members of the convention which framed the article had so intended, it would have been just as easy for them to express that idea, as to have used the language which they did. The fact that they did not so express themselves, is conclusive evidence they did not so intend.

But it is urged that we cannot abolish that which has not yet been created. That the board not being in operation, cannot be abolished.

Mr. King said in reply to these positions; it was clear, under article 134, that if the Board was established by the Constitution, the Legislature could abolish it by a three-fifths vote. He thought it equally certain that if the Board were to be established by the Legislature, it was in the power of the Legislature to abolish it. That the power to enact included the power to abolish—so that Hon. gentleman might take either horn of the dilemma. Upon either, the right of the Legislature to abolish the Board was unquestionable. But he contended the Board was clearly established by the Constitution. The language of the 130th article of the Constitution was to this effect: "There shall be a Board of Public Works." This language is equally as emphatic as that employed in the establishment of the various branches of the government, the legislative, executive and judiciary departments. Because it is the duty of the Legislature to provide for the election and entry into office, of the persons who are to fill those departments, it might with equal propriety be maintained that those departments do not exist until the Legislature establishes them, or in other words, until the Legislature creates them.

He considered the board as one established by the Constitution. The functions to be hereafter performed, to wit: to provide for the election of the persons to fill the Board, were ministerial in their character. The Legislature in discharging those duties under the Constitution would merely put in motion a machinery already built. Under this view of the case the right to abolish it could not be questioned.

[illegible] most extraordinary proposition [illegible] constitution to have declared to the Legislature, that as a prerequisite to abolishing the Board, they must go through the idle ceremony of passing acts to put it into operation. It would impress upon the members a participation in that child's play of raising heaps in the sand for the purpose of demolishing them. He could not bring his mind to believe that the convention which framed the Constitution ever contemplated forcing upon the members any such childish sport.

Mr Martin here interrupted the speaker, and remarked, that the Board could not be abolished before it was put into operation, except by an amendment to the Constitution, adopted in the mode pointed out by the Constitution, for amendments.

Mr. King replied that although the articles of the Constitution, establishing this Board, might be amended in the usual mode, yet that article 134 was adopted with express reference to this board and provided another and more simple mode of abolishing it, viz., by a three-fifths vote of both branches of the Legislature. The framers of the Constitution evidently distrusted the effect of their own work, and, as if frightened at the monster they had created, contrived this simple method of getting rid of it. The history of this Board was well understood. The proposition to establish it had been made in the Legislature which preceded the meeting of the Convention, and had there met with signal defeat.

Mr. Martin said that he had been a member of the Legislature referred to, and that Mr. King was mistaken in supposing that the proposition to establish the Board was defeated by anything like a unanimous vote. That it was defeated by a bare majority.

Mr. King said the journals would show the real history of the fate of the measure, to those who were curious to learn it, and that they would there find a very able report from the Committee on Internal Improvements against the establishment of the Board.

Mr. King concluded that it was clearly within the power of the Legislature to abolish the Board by a three-fifths vote, and said he entertained that opinion with the more confidence from his professional education. He said he had been frequently asked what system he proposed to substitute in the place of the Board, which he wished to abolish. He said that he found great difficulty in answering the question, because he did not know what aid the State intended to give to Internal Improvements. He would illustrate his embarrassment by supposing a case. Suppose an individual were to go to Cincinnati or Pittsburg to a manufacturer of steam engines, and order an engine for a vessel without specifying its power or the dimensions of the vessel. Suppose the manufacturer built an engine large enough to propel the Eclipse and that it should turn out that the boat for which it was ordered was not larger than a ferry-boat, so small in fact that the very weight of the engine would sink it? Would not all mankind exclaim against the folly of the proceeding?

Now, unless he knew what kind of a system of internal improvements the State intended to put into operation he could not undertake to construct, with certainty, a machine to carry it on, lest the weight of the machinery might sink the whole concern. This would certainly be the case if he formed a machinery in anticipation of a vigorous prosecution of our Internal Improvements, and the State only put out a fishing smack or pirogue.

Under existing circumstances he was in favor of such an organization of our machinery, that it might be enlarged or contracted as the public exigencies might require. He would have a machine which we might tie on to, or cut off from, as they do on rail cars, according to the business which had to be done.

If the Senate would indulge him for a few minutes he would briefly refer to the three proposed systems for carrying on our future improvements.

One was called the Arkansas system. This he believed met with more favor at present than any other. It was in substance this:—To build the levees with the land. In other words, to pray for building the levees in land-scrip. This at first blush struck every one as just the thing, but upon a little examination, in his opinion, it would be found to be tantamount to a forced sale of the lands at whatever they would bring.

It was a law of trade that when the supply exceeded the demand the price of the article must fall. This was true with regard to land as well as other articles of trade, in fact, it usually was much aggravated when it occurred in the sale of unproductive lands. The same proposition is sometimes announced in different terms, viz., that, to force the demand lowers the price.

Now the demand for the public lands belonging to the State, judging from the past, may be estimated at about one hundred thousand dollars per annum. But an hundred thousand dollars per annum, spent on our fifteen hundred miles of levees, would be a mere bagatelle, a drop only in the bucket. Whoever might have charge of these works, would certainly expect to expend at least five hundred thousand dollars per year, otherwise their works would produce no visible impression. Well sir, let us suppose a set of commissioners appointed by the State, offering contracts to build levees, worth, at a cash valuation, five hundred thousand dollars. They would advertise for bids, at the lowest rate per cubic yard for embankments, payable in land-scrip valued at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. As there will probably be a demand for one hundred thousand dollars worth of land, it is possible that bids to nearly that extent might be put in at rates something like the cash value, say twenty cents (20) per cubic yard. This would exhaust the demand for land at one dollar and a quarter per acre. People could no longer be found who would build the levees at their cash value, and take pay in lands at one dollar and a quarter per acre. For the next one hundred thousand dollars worth of levee, the bids would probably be at forty cents per cubic yard payable in land-scrip. The next hundred thousand, the bids would probably be (60) sixty cents per cubic yard, the next hundred thousand dollars of levying eighty or an hundred cents per cubic yard, the price of the levying constantly increasing, until all the public lands would be required to pay for the first years work on the levees and yet still comparatively nothing have been accomplished. In this manner, our magnificent domain would be squandered and no permanent benefit realized.

He wished he could be satisfied that this system would answer. His judgment forced him to condemn it.

Another proposition is to continue the system on which we are now acting It is to sell the lands at one dollar and a quarter per acre, and apply the proceeds as they are required to building levees. This system would probably for five or six years give us an annual revenue of seventy-five or an hundred thousand dollars per annum. After that time, the cream of the lands having been skimmed off yearly, there probably would be no saleable lands left, and the revenue from this source would cease. The lands which would be left to the State, would be of no value to any one, except those who had secured, by previous entries, the key to every settlement or plantation.

The small annual revenue which could be relied upon from this source, would not effect any very perceptible change in the state of the levees. The system is accompanied with this further objection, that where lands are reclaimed and their value thereby greatly enhanced, the increased value will enure to the benefit of speculators, instead of enriching the State. He saw nothing in this system which promised to realize the just expectations of the public, in regard to the subject of our internal improvements.

If he might be permitted he would suggest a system which met with his own approval and one which he thought calculated to meet the existing emergencies. It was to borrow upon a pledge of the public lands a sum of money at once sufficient to build the levees necessary for our complete protection, and to pay the money borrowed out of the sale of the lands after the levees were built. To carry out this system, it would be necessary to preserve the lands from sale until after the levees were built and until the public confidence in the protection afforded by them was completely established. If this course be pursued, the State will get the benefit of the enhanced value of the lands; and lands now valueless would be worth five or ten dollars per acre.

He was apprehensive from what he had seen and heard around him that this plan would not meet with the favor it deserved. He knew the repugnance which existed in the minds of many persons to the State going in debt. He had himself often felt and expressed the same repugnance to the contracting of large State obligations. But he considered if there ever was a case which justified a State in incurring a debt, the present crisis demanded it in Louisiana.

The Delta of the Nile was not so large as the Delta of the Mississippi. There had been times within the recorded history of man, when that Delta is supposed to have contained a population of fifteen millions. There has been no time, within the period embraced by history, at which the population of that Delta has not exceeded two millions. Here we have the Delta of the Mississippi, excluding the city of New Orleans, with a population less than two hundred thousand. To reclaim the lands of this Delta, to transform the swamps to fruitful fields and the abodes of a prosperous people, is certainly one of the most magnificent projects ever undertaken by human enterprize. An eminent engineer who has examined the whole line of our levees, has reported that, levees affording complete security can be constructed from the Arkansas line to the Gulf at an expense less than fifteen hundred thousand dollars. This is truly an insignificant sum compared with the grandeur and importance of the objects to be obtained. Does any one doubt the adequacy of the fund to meet the contemplated loan? He had heard no one express his views who did not believe the public lands of the State, when freed from all danger from inundation, would be worth vastly more than the amount required to put them in a state of complete protection. He believed they might safely be relied upon for eight or even ten millions of dollars; an amount sufficient not only to repay the requisite loan, but enough to keep the levees forever after in repair. There are no lands in the world superior to our swamp lands. None more capable of sustaining a dense population, with a natural canal at every man's door. Let us then go to work—make levees broad and high, mountain high, if necessary,—place impregnable barriers against the angry flood so that every man can sleep in peace, unvisited by dreams of inundation and disaster. Then we shall make Louisiana, the richest, the greatest, the most populous State in the Union. He wished he could be able to fully impress Senators with the importance of the subject, and that they would all unite in endeavoring to found a system which would ultimately consummate the glory and prosperity of the State.

As for the resolution to abolish the Board of Public Works, he believed it was necessary in order to remove an obstruction from our path in any system of internal improvement which might be adopted. He therefore trusted Senators would unite with him in endeavoring to get rid of this incubus upon the best interests of the State.

Mr Martin said that he had a few remarks to offer on this subject. He did not possess either the eloquence or the abilities which the gentleman had displayed in his very erratic discourse, in the course of which he seemed to have adverted to every branch of legislation. He (Mr. King) had wandered away from the only point before the Senate, which was the constitutional point. He was as much in favor of digging ditches and building levees, as the gentleman from New Orleans, but he had taken an oath to do a certain thing—to organize the Board of Public Works—and as far as he had any voice, it should be done. He would insist on his motion to refer the subject to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report.

He found that art. 130 of the Constitution said:—"There shall be a Board of Public Works, to consist of four Commissioners." And art. 131: "The General Assembly, at its first session, after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the election and compensation of the Commissioners, and the organization of the Board."

Now, the Senator proposed to abolish by a simple act of the Legislature, a certain constitutional provision. He (Mr. Martin) contended that we had not the right to do so, and art. 141 fully sustains this position. If the gentleman desires to amend the Constitution, he must do it in conformity with the provisions of that Constitution. Art. 130 says: "There shall be a Board of Public Works." The argument refers to that point. This Board is ordained by the Constitution. But the next article provides for the organization of the Board, and it certainly cannot exist before it is organized. The gentleman, however, wishes to abolish what does not exist, and in addition he proposes a shorter way of amending the Constitution than that provided for in it—viz: by legislative enactment.

Mr McCay said that this was purely a question of construction of the Constitution, and under the simple plain rules of construction, we must interpret our duty.

One of the simplest and most ordinary rules of construction is that the various articles and laws on the same subject must be construed together. They must be made to have the same meaning. If possible, all conflict between them must be avoided. He would read the articles and see if, from them, he could interpret the intention of the Constitution The first says that there shall be a Board of Public Works. Does that Board exist? Suppose the Legislature should adjourn without making provision for the election of the Commissioners—without organising the Board—would it be in existence? Does the Senator say that it would? If he does say so, let him say also where it is located—who are its members. The second article is still stronger. It says that the General Assembly, at its first session shall provide for the organization of the Board, and for the election and compensation of four Commissioners. Has this mandate been yet obeyed?—Has provision yet been made for the election and compensation of these Commissioners? If the construction of the gentleman be correct, that the Legislature may, at its first session, abolish the Board of Public Works by a vote of three-fifths, then the Legislature has not complied with its duties as specified in the Constitution. I take it, that this power specified in art. 134, means that the Board shall, at all events, be tried. The speculations of the gentleman as to the effects of the system are out of place.

That is not the question for us. Whether or not, the Convention was right in providing for this Board of Public Works, is not for us to judge. We have only to carry out the plain mandates of the Constitution. The gentleman's illustration of the Eclipse and ferryboat is very good; but I would ask him whether he would have us give up what is proposed by the Constitution—whether we should abandon the residence we have, with the hope of finding one, we know not where!

It is the duty of this Legislature, under the Constitution, to organize the Board of public Works, and give it a fair trial. The construction which the gentleman has placed on art. 132 is incorrect. I see in that article no prohibition to appoint an umpire, or an officer who may decide on questions on which the Board may be equally divided. The great difficulty in the gentleman's mind seems to be that the Board is to be composed of four members—an even number. That the difference of interests, of politics, and sectional feelings, will prevent harmony in the Board, and be productive of continual discord. But I cannot see that there is any obstacle in the way of the appointment of some person who may decide in particular cases. The control of the Internal Improvements is not given exclusively to the Board; By its creation the Legislature neither yields nor loses any of its own rights or powers, and it may legitimately exercise a controlling influence, or appoint some person to do so.

The provision in the Constitution for the establishment of this Board, strikes me in just the same way as Art. 11, which commands the enactment of a registry law. The Legislature is commanded to establish it, but has not yet done so. There is only this difference between them. The registry law may be repealed by the same majority which passed it, but the Convention, in order to throw some protection around the Board of Public Works, and to preserve it from the fluctuation of popular opinion, required that, not less than a majority of 3-5 of the Legislature can abolish it.

Entertaining these views, I consider it my duty to oppose the resolution.

Mr. Lacey said that the resolution involved an inquiry into two questions—not only an investigation into the constitutional power of the Legislature at this session, to abolish the Board of Public works, but likewise a consideration of the merits of the resolution. It is absolutely and imperatively necessary that the Senate should enquire into the constitutional question, and if it should be ascertained that the Legislature can, without violating the Constitution, at the present session, abolish the Board, then the propriety and policy of the proposed measure fairly present themselves for determination. On the Constitutional point I must say that I differ with the gentleman from New Orleans, who has last spoken. We might consider that the framers of the Constitution have already established this Board of Public Works. We find that article 130 says "there shall be a Board of Public Works to be composed of four commissioners." Now it is evident to my mind, and should, I think, be equally clear to the perceptions of others, that had the framers of the Constitution contemplated that the Legislature should bring the Board into existence it would have made use of the word create, instead of using the expression contained in art. 130, an expression similar to that which is used relative to the Executive, Legislative and Judicial departments. It appears therefore, that, instead of giving to the Legislature this power to create, the Constitution itself, by virtue of its own provisions, has created and brought the Board into existence. It has only endowed the Legislature with the power of carrying out this provision, which is simply a ministerial duty. The Constitution, it must be admitted, is a power superior to the Legislature. It is from the Constitution that the Board derives its existence, and not from any future act of the Legislature. It is true that its language might have been more explicit, but it seems to me that the words as they stand are sufficiently positive to justify me in the conclusion that the Constitution established the Board of Public Works the moment art. 130 was adopted, with the Constitution, by the people. But it is argued that it is necessary to create, before we can abolish. But we may refuse to create—we certainly have that power. The Senator from New Orleans (Mr. McCay) thinks that we are bound to establish this Board. But when three-fifths of the Legislature are opposed to it—when three-fifths think that it would be impracticable, and a positive injury, is it reasonable to suppose that they are compelled to establish it only to demolish, that they must give it life only to destroy it?

Mr. Martin here remarked that he had never heard that three-fifths of the Legislature were opposed to the Board. The argument of the gentleman was based on a false assumption of fact.

Mr. Lacey—Has the gentleman never heard so?

Mr. Martin—I have only heard the gentleman say so. He cannot base his argument on the statement of a fact which does not exist.

Mr. Lacey—I shall take great pleasure in showing the gentleman that, even if three-fifths of the Legislature be not opposed to the Board, I am justified in assuming that they are so merely for the sake of illustrating my argument. Has the gentleman never heard of a supposed case? Such is the one I am now imagining. I say, sir, that if three-fifths of the Legislature are opposed to this Board of Public Works they may constitutionally refuse to go through with the idle ceremony of passing laws for its organization, when they intend immediately afterwards to destroy the effect of their own acts, by taking advantage of that provision of the Constitution which authorizes them to abolish it. If the Board be so ill adapted to the consummation of those great works which are so much desired by the people, if it be so unpopular that a large majority in the Legislature is hostile to it, if it be calculated to obstruct the car of Internal Improvements, can it be reasonable to suppose that we are bound to incorperate a Board like that and to keep it in existence a year—for I presume we could not at this session undo the work of our own hands—merely to abolish it when we reassemble? Such a proposition, sir, is not reasonable. It may be the letter of the law, but it is not its spirit or intention.—The meaning of the Constitution evidently is, that if three-fifths of the Legislature consider the Board impracticable, and that it would operate, not beneficially, but injuriously, they may refuse to organize it.—These, sir, are my views on this subject. I am forced to believe that we have the power to abolish the Board, because it is already created by the Constitution itself. But I am not prepared to vote for its abolition without having more light on the question, or until the Internal Improvement Committee may report more fully on the subject.

Mr. Martin. I must continue to differ, with the gentlemen. I repeat that we must first bring that Board into existence, before we undertake to abolish it. I do not doubt the capacity and judgment of the gentlemen, who compose the Internal Improvement Committee, but I have not such unlimited confidence in their judgment, as to abandon my own views, in order to conform to theirs.

Mr. King said, that as the constitutional question appeared to be a stumbling block with some gentlemen, he would like to have the resolution referred back to the Internal Improvement Committee.

Mr. Kenner. I do not intend to enter into an elaborate discussion of this subject, or to make a regular reply to any of the remarks which have been made. I shall endeavor to give my views as briefly as possible. I am satisfied that the Legislature, by a vote of three fifths, possesses the power to repeal that clause of the Constitution which establishes the Board of Public Works. The language is "there shall be a Board of Public Works, &c." This is constitutional language, and is of the same nature as the language used in creating or establishing the office of Governor, or any other office. But, in regard to the expediency of abolishing this Board, I entertain more doubt. What are we about to do? For, what have we met here? We have a great duty to perform, and what is it? Why, sir, we have to organize a department of internal improvements. What have we now? We have a civil engineer, appointed by the Governor, with the consent of the Senate, and to him is entrusted the supervision of our internal improvements. Consequently, the Legislature, in effect, appoints the Board of Public Works. And what kind of a system is this? The members are elected by different constituencies, and of course, represent different and conflicting sectional interests. Each has some bayou to be cleaned out, some levee to be repaired, or some bridge to be built. What do they do? When the Legislature meets, a member rises and moves that the State Engineer be instructed to proceed to bayou this or bayou that, and clear it out Well, I vote for his proposition, if he will vote for mine of the same nature. I take it for granted that it would not be proposed, unless it were needed, and therefore I vote for it. What is the result of this? If gentlemen will refer to the report of the State Engineer, they will find that enough work for 15 years, has been imposed on him. Who, under this system, is the Board of Public Works? Why, sir, the two Houses of the Legislature. They may contain gentlemen of talent and information; but they were not elected because they knew anything of internal improvements. They were elected because they were whigs or democrats.

There is a great cry, sir, about stopping the car of internal improvements. Where is this car? Who has seen it? Take the Engineer's report and examine it, and then say where is this car which you contend we wish to stop. What is this car? It is 106 negroes and three old steamboats. Now, listen to what the report of the State Engineer, says:

"The accompanying report of my predecessor will fully explain the operations of the department up to the 1st of December, at which time I entered upon the duties of my office, and found the available State force to consist of ninety-six negroes, concentrated, and actively employed upon the locks of the Barataria and Lafourche canals at Lockport, where it had become necessary to place them in consequence of the uncertainty of white laborers, and the absolute necessity of finishing the first walls and gates next to the Bayou Lafourche before the rise of the water.

The condition of the boats I found as follows: The Agnes No. 2, moored near the mouth of Bayou Lafourche, with four of the State hands, and the mate, Mr. McHatton, left on board to take charge of her. This boat is very old, indeed the oldest in the service—parts of her hull having been built and in use eleven years. She is now rotten in many places, and requires attention to keep her afloat. She is of little service.

The General Walker, at the same place, under the charge of Capt. Blackstone and three of the State hands. I found her in a very unsafe condition, with her bottom rake planking much decayed both fore and aft.

The Florida, with three of the State hands, at Tigerville, in Bayou Black, has an excellent hull, but from the inefficiency of some of her machinery, she is of little use. She can be made a good boat for service, but at considerable expense.

The whole State force is then composed of one hundred and six negroes; and of this number there are ten at least too old or sickly to be of much use; and then there are about fifteen more who have been in the service many years, and are quite old, bvt yet make passable hands."

Here, you have the system which is established at the present time.

Mr. Lacey—That is not my system.

Mr. Kenner—I will come afterwards to what the gentleman (Mr. King) proposes. Though that gentleman is a lawyer of distinction, I will show him that he knows as little about levees, as I know about law. He has alluded to the Arkansas system of being popular at present, though he admitted its inefficiency himself Why, sir, there is scarcely an intelligent planter in the State who does not know that the Arkansas system, if established here, would be utterly ineffective. But, that by way of parenthesis. I do not address myself to city gentlemen or to lawyers, whose knowledge of internal improvements, however profound they may be on other subjects, is probably confined to the laying of a gas pipe, or the fitting of a curb stone, or the cleaning out of a filthy gutter—but I appeal to the country members to say whether they have ever known any thing of moment to be done by the 106 negroes, and the three old boats which compose the force of the State at present. I do not mean to say that the engineer has not performed his duty, but I contend that so little good has come, or can ever come, from the present system, that an adherence to it cannot be justified. For many years this fact has been appreciated, and in the last Legislature an effort was made to abolish the present system, and establish a Board of Public Works. For some reason the effort failed. The Convention then met. What had it to do? The present system was universally acknowledged to be faulty. Fifteen or twenty years experience had demonstrated its inefficiency. It was evident that we must have something new It was necessary to take the control out of the hands of the Legislature, who were never elected with reference to this subject With this view, the Board of Public Works was established. Gentlemen say that local prejudices and sectional feelings would influence this Board, and prevent harmony in its deliberations. Are they, then, afraid to trust the people? Do they think the people incompetent to elect men to perform a special duty? Is it not done in other departments? Why, sir, we are about to elect our judges, and in the judiciary independence is peculiarly necessary; and can we not trust the people to elect the members of the Board of Public Works? All that we ask is that you do away wth the present system, under which a man comes here and jumps down in the general scramble to get what he can, and leave the whole subject to four men, who shall do nothing else than attend to internal improvement.

No question is so interesting to the people of Lower Louisiana as the disposition of the Levee Fund. If we adopt the Arkansas system, of which the gentleman has spoken, Lower Louisiana will be reduced to an uninhabitable swamp, and Upper Louisiana be made to bloom and flourish like a garden. This will be the effect of pursuing a false system.

I come now to the system proposed by the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. King). I must say that I do not know what it is. Does he know? Do you know, sir? Where is his bill? I certainly shall not vote down a system provided for in the Constitution, on the mere ipse dixit of any member—on the speech of one man, and a lawyer at that. Why, sir, one gentleman has told us that under his system we shold have a canal at every man's door.

Mr King. I did not say so. I said that now our bayous and rivers were like a canal at every man's door.

Mr. Kenner. Then, sir, he advocates an immense system of levees; I cannot perhaps recall the eloquence of the gentleman, but I will state the substance of his remarks: he advocates an immense system of levees mountain high; I am sure he said mountain—by which the devastating floods of the Mississippi would be prevented from desolating the fertile country on its banks. But where are we to get the money to build these levees. A gentleman on my left says, "Borrow it." Borrow, sir, is a word that I detest. If you expect to build your levees by borrowing, you might as well take us, and hand us over as hewers of wood and drawers of water, to European bond holders And even were it done, the expenditure would be futile and useless. Our present levees are good enough; they do not need improvement.—The only danger to them is caused by the water eating through and undermining them, when they cave in, and let the rushing waters through. You might as well try to imitate Joshua in making the sun stand still, as to try to stop this by the use of money. I repeat, sir, that our levee system is little understood by lawyers. The planters who are in the habit of talking on the subject daily, whom it peculiarly interests, and who turn it and twist it in every possible way, know very well that our levees now are as good as they can be made. I say again that I cannot vote to abolish the Board of Public Works, until I know what gentlemen propose to substitute for it. If the gentleman will go to his desk, write down his views, embody them in a bill and have it printed, I will vote with him, if I find his proposition is an improvement. I was originally opposed to this provision of the Constitution, and should have voted against it in Convention, had I had a vote; but as it has been incorporated into the Constitution, and is so evidently superior to the old system, I am disposed to support it, till something manifestly better is proposed.

Mr. Short said that he would not detain the Senate long; he only wished to make a few remarks in reply to the Senator who had last spoken. He agreed that lawyers knew little of internal improvements and levees, unless they had lived in the country and on the banks of rivers. He should suppose, however, that the mere fact of being a lawyer, would not incapacitate a man from forming an opinion on such subjects. He agreed also that the Senator who had erected that "case" was a little ahead of the wagon. He (Mr. Short) had attentively examined the reports which were before the Legislature. He had also searched the committee rooms, and found there a mass of scientific knowledge which had been accumulating for three years. There were measurements, and soundings, and surveys, and everything of the kind that could be imagined, yet out of all this mass of information, he could find nothing in the shape of a practical system. In his section of country, the old planters, who have the experience of years to guide them, and experience is more calculated to impress the mind than any scientific surveys, gain their information by looking at the water marks and the levees. When they find one of these mountains giving way, they look at the marks on the trees, and they know then that some of the tallest kind of wading is to be done.

His only wish, in rising, was to ask the Senate to dispose of the resolution now.

There was a difference of opinion among lawyers, as to the constitutional power of the Legislature to abolish the Board of Public Works. What was the opinion of the Convention he did not know! He only knew that the Constitution, containing this provision, had been submitted to the people, and he had voted for it. The meaning of the clause in question, must be understood from the language of the Constitution itself.

He did not wish to see jealousy and sectional feelings or prejudice introduced into this matter. The effect of an overflow in the distant parishes, is felt in New Orleans and elsewhere, and so the prosperity of the city benefits the country. He should like to see harmony of action, and, if possible, unanimity, instead of dissension and conflict. He thought the Convention intended to put an end to the system of "you vote for my Bayou, and I will vote for yours." The Board was no favorite of his; but as it came from the Convention, and was the result of its deliberations and labors, he was disposed to give it a fair and honest trial.

Mr. King.—I am thankful to the Senator from Ascension for the expression of his views in regard to the power of the Legislature to abolish the Board of Public Works, but I am exceedingly pained by the personal character of his remarks. I have been taunted with having no knowledge of the subject concerning which I had just expressed my views to the Senate. I have been told that I could know nothing of internal improvements, because my profession happens to differ from that of some gentlemen on this floor. Now, sir, if it will be any gratification to the Senator to know the fact, I can inform him that I am a planter as well as a lawyer—although, perhaps, not in so ostentatious a way as some others. In addition to this, even the place which I represent has been attacked, and, as if nothing good could come out of Nazareth, I have been told that a Senator from New Orleans can know nothing of Internal Improvements except such as laying gas pipes or cleaning out the filthy gutters of the city. I have been taunted with ignorance, and twitted about the system, merely the outlines of which I shadowed forth to the Senate—and have been accused of being an advocate of the Arkansas system, while in the same breath he admitted that I had reprobated it. That system, sir, is not my system, nor do I recommend it. I only stated, what I know to be a fact, that it is the most popular of all the systems now under consideration. My language, also, has been perverted, and what I evidently intended as a metaphorical illustration, has been tortured into an absolute statement of fact. I did not say, as the gentleman asserts, that we should build levees mountain high. I simply remarked that under the system which I should propose, we would be enabled to build levees mountain high, if necessary, from the Arkansas line to the Gulf, in order to keep the waters of the Mississippi from the doors of our planters. In conclusion, I think, as there is some difficulty about the constitutional question, that the whole subject had better be referred back to the Internal Improvements Committee, with instructions to report a substitute.

Mr. Lacey should also like to have a report from the Senator from Orleans, on the various reasons which induced him to believe that the Board ought to be abolished. That gentleman had argued the question at some length; and had shown the impolicy of establishing the Board. He had shown that it would create sectional and political feeling; that it would be impracticable and expensive, and would rather impede than develop our Internal Improvements.

He (Mr. Lacey) was not an advocate of the present system, as the Senator from Ascension wished it to be inferred. He did not advocate an adherence to the 106 negroes, and to the rotten Agnes which the gentleman had so pathetically described. He was in no way responsible for that system. He was a new member on this floor; he had not had a seat in the Senate, as the gentleman from Ascension had, during a number of years, and therefore this odious, useless system was attributable to that gentleman rather than to him. He did not advocate that system. He concurred in the one which had been alluded to by the Senator from New Orleans (Mr. King) if he correctly understood it. But whether we might fall into the Arkansas system, or ultimately adopt some other, he wished to remove the obstacles which at present impeded the car of internal improvements. When he referred to that car he did not mean the rotten Agnes, but the car which the political friends of the gentleman from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) had created in the Convention, and turned over to the Democratic party.

As the constitutional question had been under consideration, he would say that on a point of law he had great confidence in the opinions of the Senator (Mr. Kenner), though that gentleman thought that lawyers could know nothing of ditches and levees. He would repeat that he thought this Legislature had power to abolish the Board of Public Works, because that power was expressly given by one of the articles of the Constitution, and the Board was now actually in existence, though the members had not been elected.

Mr. McCay.—I should like the gentleman to answer one question—Suppose this Legislature should adjourn without making any provision for the election of members of the Board, would it be in existence? And if so, where would it be?

Digitized by Google

Mr. Lacey—continued.—But he would go still farther—he would say that even if the Board were not in existence—even if it be not created by the Constitution, there would be no necessity to establish it, if we were determined merely to abolish it afterwards. The Constitution certainly could not require any such idle waste of time. If three-fifths of the Legislature were opposed to the Board, they might constitutionally refuse to organize it.

The existence of the Board depends on the views and wishes of that proportion of the Legislature. He trusted then, that Senators would give up ther constitutional objections, and see that they had the power to abolish the Board of Public Works, and if they came to the conclusion that the Board ought to be abolished, they would do so without delay. In the meantime they could go to the Committee, and ask for a better system—one which would more effectually carry out our great ideas and projects of internal improvements.

Mr. Konner. I wish to say a few words as to a personal question. The gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) said he regretted the personal character which the debate had assumed. I, for one, sir, never intended to give it such a character. On the contrary, I expressed the highest opinion of the gentleman as a lawyer and an advocate. I knew, or supposed that his life had been spent in the study of books, and in the practice of his profession before courts of justice, and I thought that his only knowledge of internal improvements consisted in what he had derived from observing the laying of gas-pipes and curbstones, and the cleaning out of gutters, during his walks, to and from the courts, in the streets of New Orleans.

Now, sir, see how leniently I have treated the gentleman. When he rose and made a set speech, charging me with having made a personal attack on him,—when he assumed the position of a martyr,—and every one knows how such a position is calculated to enlist the sympathies of an audience,—I allowed him to proceed. I did not interrupt him,—on the contrary, I heard him out, and permitted him to get all the advantage which such a position gave him, when I might have arisen myself, at the commencement, and disclaimed any personal allusion. This would have put a stop to the whole matter,—but I preferred to let the gentleman make his speech, and obtain all the benefit he could derive from it. I hope, after this, the gentleman will not say that I intended any personal reflection on him by my remarks.

In reply to the gentleman from Madison, (Mr Short) I will say that I am as much opposed as he can be, to any sectional feelings in this matter I look on the levee system as being of vital importance to the prosperity of the State. But when I see gentlemen who cannot have much experience on the subject, discussing it as if they knew all about it, I must say that I listen with alarm, lest something should be done which will be fatal. I did say that I hoped no such system would be adopted as would convert lower Louisiana into an uninhabitable swamp, and render upper Louisiana as blooming as a garden. This, sir, I repeat. This is what I said. Is there anything sectional in it?

Another gentleman, (Mr. Lacey,) has alluded to me as being responsible for the present rotten boat system. Why, sir, I have sat in this Senate for some years, and, in conjunction with others, have fought and contended against that system, with all the efforts of which I am capable, but without success,—and yet am told by the gentleman that I am responsible for the system,—that I am to blame for it.

Mr. McCay—The gentleman from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) has not answered the question which I put to him. I wish to know whether, if this Legislature should adjourn without organizing the Board of Public Works, that Board would have an existence.

Mr. Lacey—The Board would have a constitutional existence. It would be a legal fiction, separate and distinct from the persons who are to be elected to make that existence effective. Like the infant in the womb, it would possess life, but would have no power to do anything but make the feeble motions of a being with life, but not yet brought forth.

The resolution was finally referred back to the Committee on Internal Improvements.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1853.

Mr. Short introduced a bill relating to the Judiciary.

Mr. Wickliffe wished to know whether this bill was the gentleman's own, or whether it emanated from the Committee. Did the gentleman claim the paternity of it?

Mr. Short knew nothing of its paternity. He did not know that bills were begotten in that manner. He knew that something of this kind had passed the House, and it met his view more directly than any other system that had yet come under his observation. He therefore wished to call the attention of the Senate to it. That was all the paternity he acknowledged.

Mr. Wickliffe withdrew any objection to the introduction of the bill.

Mr. Short introduced several more bills relative to the Judiciary.

Mr. Wickliffe wished to know whether any time for action on the Committee bills had been specified.

Mr. Lacey explained that all the bills would be perfected in a short time.

Mr. Wickliffe was delighted to hear that the Committee intended to report on this subject.

THE CENSUS BILL.

Mr. Derbes moved that the Census bill be taken up.

Mr Griffin moved a reference of the whole subject to a committee composed of the members from New Orleans.

Mr. Rivers said he hoped such a course would not be adopted as had already been taken with reference to this bill.

Mr. Derbes hoped it would. Gentlemen on the other side had themselves made this a party question, and then had accused them (the democrats) of making it so. But they had good reasons for the course they had pursued. Under the bill, as it stands, the city could never have a full representation in the legislature. If gentlemen thought political considerations induced the proposed change, he would state, for their information, that in the four districts there were three democratic recorders and one whig, and three democratic assessors and one whig. What party benefit could be derived from giving the power to the Assessors more than to the Recorders? The Assessors will make a profit out of it if they are appointed, by means of their assistants, but the people know that the recorders cannot pocket the money. These were some of the reasons which induced them to move that the Census taking power should be given to the Recorders instead of the Assessors and their deputies.

Mr. Wickliffe would vote for the motion of the Senator from Avoyelles, if he would amend so as to have the matter referred to a special committee of three; but he objected to a special committee composed entirely of the delegation from New Orleans.

Mr. Griffin accepted the amendment, and the motion was carried.

The President appointed Messrs. King, McCay, and Barthe on the committee.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The bill amending the act of 1846, in relation to corporations, was taken up.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the bill be made the special order for Friday, as no action could be taken on it before it was printed.

Mr. King said it would be useless to have the bill printed, as he intended to move to amend it, so as to strike out a portion, which would leave the law just as it now stands.

Mr. Wickliffe did not see why the bill should not be printed, or why they should be compelled to act on the bill now because the gentleman intended to move an amendment to it. The bill might have something good in it, and they wished to have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. King said that his reasons for intending to make the motion he had alluded to was, that he had found that the general law covered the grounds of the bill, and rendered it unnecessary.

Mr. Wickliffe thought at the time the gentleman had introduced that bill, that it was unnecessary. Nevertheless, he would prefer to have it deferred.

The bill was finally referred.

The bill organizing the department of Secretary of State was taken up.

Mr. Martin said that the same objection existed to these bills as to the others of a similar nature—they were all unnecessary. Laws applicable to the subject already exist, and there was no use to encumber the statute book with more.

Mr. Lacey would make the same explanation in regard to this as to the other bill. They were all introduced through an abundance of caution, in order to remove the doubts which many persons entertained, of the efficacy of those laws under the new Constitution. It was best to be on the safe side, and he was sustained by the Judiciary Committee in forming and reporting these bills. It was generally supposed, that under one of the articles of the Constitution, all the State offices were vacated.

Mr. Wickliffe, should like to know to what article the gentleman alluded. Was it to this one? (Reads the article.)

Mr. Lacey. Yes, sir.

Mr. Wickliffe said he understood the article perfectly, nevertheless he had no doubt that he should vote for the bill.

Mr. Martin did not see a loop on which to hang a doubt. The office of Secretary of State was a Constitutional office. The framer of the bill had already consented to its reference to the Finance Committee, and that committee had reported against it. He (Mr. Martin) did not wish it referred to the committee of which the gentleman (Mr. Lacey) was chairman, as he knew that he had prejudged the case. He could not, therefore, at present, think of a proper committee to which to refer the bill. He was naturally a cautious man himself, but he had found that sometimes over caution was injurious instead of useful.

Mr. King was opposed to the bill as being unnecessary and superfluous.

Mr. Lacey said that they must provide for the returns of elections and counting the votes for these officers. That part of the bill, at least, must be passed.

Mr. Martin could see no reason for it. An election was held last December, and the State officers were elected. He thought that the taking and counting the votes were sufficiently provided for by existing laws.

Mr. Lacey. The gentleman is mistaken. There are no laws providing for it.

Mr. Martin. How was it done then—under what authority?

Mr Lacey. The election was held, and we abided by it; but it was done without authority of law. I now wish to supply the omission.

Mr. Martin. If the gentleman only wishes to pass that section which provides for counting the votes, I withdraw my objections to the bill.

ELECTION FOR STATE PRINTER.

The bill amending the act of 1846, in relation to the election of State Printer, was next taken up.

Mr. Lacey explained the object of the Judiciary Committee in proposing the bill and amendment By the Act of 1846, a State Printer was to be elected at every regular session of the Legislature. By the same act, the Printer was to hold office for two years. In accordance with that act, the present session of the Legislature went into an election and the person elected was to be the Printer for two years. According to the bill introduced by the Senator from Concordia, (Mr. Rivers) he would only hold office for one of the two years to which he was constitutionally and legally entitled. The amendment proposed by the Committee made the next election take place in 1855, and at every alternate session thereafter. As to the policy of electing a Printer for two years, commencing with 1855, the Committee was not pledged, but as it found a law in existence under which the present Printer was elected, and also directing that every regular session should elect, it felt bound to rectify the contradiction, and remove this absurdity from the statute book.

Mr. Martin said it seemed to him that if we should pass this act, we would, in effect, be electing a Printer for the next Legislature. It seemed to him that we ought to treat the next Legislature with as much courtesy and consideration as the last Legislature had manifested for us.

Mr. Rivers said that the object of his bill was to make the law conform to the Constitution. Under the old law, the State Printer was elected for two years—at that time the sessions of the Legislature were biennial. The bill introduced by him makes his term of office expire with the Legislature which elects him—so that each Legislature shall elect its own Printer. If Mr. La Sere, by his election under the act of 1846, had acquired a vested right in the office for two years, so had Mr. Weisse, who was elected last year under the same law. He was happy to hear the admission of the gentleman (Mr. Lacey) that such a vested right could be acquired. If he press the principle he must also make the admission that Mr. Weisse has a vested right for two years. He was elected in the same manner as Mr. La Sere, under the same law, and if Mr. La Sere has a vested right in the office for next year, so has Mr. Weisse for this.

Mr. Lacey.—When the present Legislature, at its commencement, elected a man to serve as State Printer, for two years, it gave him a vested right in the office for that length of time; and he had, consequently, a right to hold it for two years. Any Act to deprive him of that right would be unconstitutional and void. Consequently the Committee thought it their duty to recommend the passage of an act which would confirm the Printer in his right, acquired through the law under which he was elected, to hold office for two years. Under the law, as it stands, the next Legislature might elect another Printer, and we should then have two. The present incumbent has a right to the office for two years, by law, and the one elected next year would hold by virtue of a new election. If the amendment of the Senator from Concordia (Mr. Rivers) should prevail, we would have two State Printers. The bill was not introduced for political purposes, but to do away with the difficulty which now exists. It provides that a new election for State Printer shall be held in 1855, at which time the term of Mr. La Sere will have expired. The Senate may then make the election annual, or biennial, at its discretion. The bill reported by the Committee, however, is necessary in order to prevent confusion—to prevent the possibility of having two State Printers, and to give to the present Printer his legal time of two years.

Mr. Martin.—The present Printer was elected under the same law as the previous one. That law required an election at every regular session of the Legislature. The present Legislature has no more right to impose a printer on the next, than the last Legislature had to impose one on us.

Mr. King.—The question is, whether this is a regular session of the Legislature. If it be so then we were bound to elect a State Printer, by the law of 1846. The question then arises—how long shall the Printer thus elected hold his office? This can be answered by a reference to the law, which says that he shall hold his office for two years.

Mr. Rivers.—Will the next be a regular session of the Legislature.

Mr. King—Yes sir.

Mr. Rivers—Then, on the same principle, we will be obliged to elect another Printer next year.

Mr. King—The very object of the bill is to obviate this difficulty.

Mr. Rivers—The gentleman says that because the law of 1846 fixes the term of office of the State Printer at two years, therefore Mr. La Sere shall hold on during the first session of the next Legislature. Now sir, Mr. Weisse was elected at a regular session of the Legislature and under the same law. He is consequently at this moment the State Printer, if the principle advanced by the gentlemen on the other side be correct. He must have a vested right in the office which could not be overlooked, or set aside by this Legislature.

Mr. King said that he would answer the argument of the gentleman with great pleasure. The error committed by him was in supposing that there was any such thing as a contract between the State and one of its officers. We had seen a new governor and new State officers elected to supersede the old ones—and we had seen old officers, whose terms had not expired, turned out to make place for new ones. If these old officers had a vested right in spite of the new Constitution, there would have been no power to do all this—they would have been protected by the Constitution of the United States, which says that the obligation of contracts cannot be violated. But there was no such thing as a contract between the State and its officers. The new Constitution unhorsed the State Printer, if he might use the expression, by making this a regular session of the Legislature, on the same principle as it vacated the office of Governor Walker.

Mr. Rivers—Does the gentleman think this act would be binding on the next Legislature?

Mr. King—As a law on the statute book, it would be subject to repeal, or modification, like any other law. No harm could be done by it in any way.

Mr. Kenner—If the next Legislature can repeal the law why not let it elect its own printer. Every one knows that this Legislature did not intend to elect a printer for two years. I remember distinctly that when the election was made, the presiding officer announced that Mr. La Sere had been elected State Printer for two years. On being informed of his error he immediately corrected himself, and announced simply that Mr. La Sere had been duly elected State Printer.

Now sir, if the gentlemen admit that, under the present law, they cannot keep Mr. La Sere in office for two years, why do they not acknowledge it? If they could do so there would be no necessity for this bill. But they know very well that they cannot keep him in under the laws, as they exist. If they think that they can, let them move to lay this bill on the table, and they will achieve their object. But what do they want to do? I will tell you, sir. They want to tie up the next legislature—they want to impose their own printer on it—they want to keep Mr. La Sere in office for two years when he was only elected for one.

Mr. King—The gentleman has asked our object.—Why, sir, our object is plain enough. We wish to remove a palpable absurdity from the statute book.—The law of 1846, now in force, says that a state Printer shall be elected at every regular session of the legislature, and at the same time says that he shall hold his office for two years. The gentleman is correct in his statement of what took place when Mr. La Sere was elected at this session. It was first announced that he was elected for two years, and afterwards simply that he was elected. He is therefore elected for the legal and constitutional term. What is the legal term? It is, as clearly as the law can make it, two years. Having thus explained our object, Mr. President, I move the previous question.

Mr. Rivers—that is certainly very amiable in the gentleman.

Mr. Martin—This is exercising mere brute force.

Mr. King—At the request of several gentlemen, sir, I will withdraw my motion for the previous question.

Mr. Rivers—The bill proposed by him had been referred to the Judiciary Committee. That Committee, through its chairman, had once reported in favor of the bill—all at once, however, a new light burst upon the gentleman—a new idea struck him. He suddenly found that the bill did not suit his purposes, and he had it recommitted. The object of the bill was to give to the next Legislature, the power, as it had the right, to elect a State Printer. In the natural course of events the next legislature might differ from the present on the question as to who should be the State Printer. It might prefer to take some one from the country; and he wished to leave to it the power of deciding whether it would do so. The amendment of the committee, however, took away this power, and imposed the Printer of this Legislature on the next one. He would ask gentlemen from the country, on the other side, whether they were willing to submit to this restriction. If they were, they had the power in their own hands, and he should have to submit.

Mr. Martin. The original bill simply proposed that each legislature should have the right to elect its own printer, as was the intention of the law.

Mr. Short. Before the question is put, I should like to say a few words on the subject. When the present State Printer was elected, he must have been elected for some specific term. That term is decided by the law under which he was elected. The law says that the State Printer shall hold his office for two years—consequently, the present State Printer was elected for that length of time. He himself considered that he was elected for two years. He gave his bond to perform his duties in accordance with the provisions, and for the time specified by law, and his rights cannot be interfered with by any act of the General Assembly. I have come to the conclusion that every legislative body has a right to elect its own officers. The legislature being called into existence by the new constitution, necessarily has that right, and the officers of the last legislature must share the fate of all the old officers. They are changed by the intervention of the new constitution. A great many puzzling questions grow out of a change of the fundamental law. A contract is frequently mistaken for law, and a law for a contract. This is simply a question of law. Under the constitution of 1845, the General Assembly met once in two years. A great change, politically and otherwise, might take place in those two years. The next General Assembly might like to have the election of its own officers, and it had the right to elect them.

The legislature, under the constitution of 1845, was one body having a continuous existence. It was annihilated by the adoption of the new constitution. This legislature does not expire this year, though the members of one branch go out of office. Where, therefore, is the reason for displacing Mr. La Sere at the next session? Are there the same reasons in his case, as in that of Mr. Weisse? On the contrary, the position of Mr. Weisse is very different. The body which elected him, went out of existence with the adoption of the new constitution. But here is a new officer who comes in under the constitution of 1852. The members of the House are elected for two years. Of the senators, some are elected for two years, and others for four.

Mr. Wickliffe. The gentleman will remember that he and I go out next November.

Mr. Short. The Senator need not remind that our term of office is so short. I remembered perfectly well, that I drew the short straw.

Having come to the conclusion that this legislature had a right to elect, the question arises—For how long had it a right to elect? For one or two years? Clearly for two years, the time specified in the law.

And is there any thing so wrong in this as to draw forth the observations which have fallen from the other side? If I had found that Mr. Weisse had a right to retain the office, I should not have consented to go into an election. But the present printer has, as I have said, given his bond to execute the duties of his office for the time for which he was elected. If there shall be a change in the next Legislature—though I hope we shall not change as rapidly as the hues of the rainbow—if the next Legislature shall be of a different political complexion from this one, and they should conclude to displace the State Printer, merely because they have the power, they will be committing an act of great injustice.

Mr. Martin. What is the necessity to pass this bill?

Mr. Short. What is the necessity to reject it? If we let the law stand as it is, we shall continually have printers' terms lapping over printers' terms, as the law says that at each regular session a State Printer must be elected, and that he shall hold his office for two years.

Mr. Martin. Is not the next session of the Legislature a regular session?

Mr. Short. Yes, and the law says that an election shall be held at every regular session—so that at the end of two years, we would have two State Printers. It is my desire to erase such an absurdity from the statute book.

Mr. Todd called for the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. Todd. The Senators from New Orleans and Carroll, (Messrs. King and Short) would have us believe that this bill is intended to make affairs conform to the law and the Constitution. I must be permitted to differ with those gentlemen. It is not in conformity with the present Constitution. The act of 1846 was passed when the sessions of the Legislature were biennial—now, they are annual—and, by analogy, we should believe that every year, or, in other words, at every regular session, a new State Printer must be elected. The gentleman from Carroll, (Mr. Short) has also said that Mr Weisse went out of office because the Legislature which elected him had expired; and that Mr. La Sere must be retained, because this Legislature does not expire. But it does expire. Do not all the members of the House, and a portion of the Senators, go out this year? There is no reason that the State Printer should hold his office for two years, any more than any other officer. It would be very unjust, and very discourteous to the next Legislature, to foist a printer of our own choosing on it.—The gentleman admits that the next Legislature may repeal this law, even if it pass here. Will they try and pass an act which it is admitted will be entirely nugatory? I hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Concordia, (Mr. Rivers) will be adopted.

Mr. King. The gentleman seems to suppose that because the next Legislature can repeal the bill, therefore we ought not to pass it. This is very fallacious. On this principle, we might as well shut up shop and go home, because every act that we pass, which does not involve a contract, is susceptible of repeal.

I will now, while I am up, explain the reasons which induced me to move the previous question a short time ago. One gentleman moved to lay the substitute of the Committee on the table. Does not that cut off debate as effectually as the previous question? I therefore thought I might, with equal propriety, move the previous question—and I do not think that, under the circumstances, it was so very unamiable. Gentlemen may present forty amendments, and they may all be voted down, and we come at last to a vote on the original proposition. I intended no discourtesy by my motion. I merely wished to save the time of the Senate. I hope gentlemen will appreciate this, and not attempt to embarrass legislation by offering useless amendments.

Mr. Kenner. In plain English, we, on this side of the house, must make no objection to anything that is done, because we are in a minority.

Mr. King. You used the gag-law first, and I thought that we might apply it also.

Mr. Kenner moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. Martin would call the attention of the Senate to what Jefferson's Manual said concerning the Previous Question.

(Here Mr. Martin read an extract from Jefferson's manual, to the effect that the previous question was intended to cut off debate that might be of a private or personal nature, or injurious to the interests of the State.)

Now, I apprehend, sir, that the interests of the State would not suffer by any amendments we might offer, or any arguments we might use, however much the interests of Mr. La Sere may be affected by it. I think I was right in characterizing the motion as an exercise of brute force.

Mr. Kenner moved to strike out 1855 and insert 1854 as the time for the election of a State printer, so as to leave to the next Legislature the right to choose its own printer. He was opposed to foisting any one on a future Legislature.

The gentleman (Mr. King) had said that the law could be repealed. Of what consequence was it then, to them to pass it? If the whigs have a majority next year the gentleman would surely find that they would repeal the law—when this gentleman's term would expire. But if the democrats were able to keep in power they would have a printer ready made. Were they not willing to trust their own friends? He did not expect any response to his remarks here, but he spoke to an echo out of doors—to a power higher even than that of the distinguished gentleman from New Orleans, who took the lead in this matter.

Mr. Wickliffe rose to a question of order. The point involved in the gentleman's amendment had already been disposed of by a vote of the Senate on a previous amendment to place the election at the next session.

Mr. Rivers. I do not really believe that the gentleman is in earnest. Does he say that he is?

Mr. Wickliffe. I do say so. Has the question not been disposed of? Was not the amendment of the Senator from Assumption to leave the election to the next Legislature? Does not that occur in 1854? I wish to know if the amendment of the gentleman from Ascension does not propose precisely the same thing? I am opposed to consuming the time of the Senate by voting all day on the same propositions, though they may be couched in different language.

The President decided that the amendment was in order.

The yeas and nays were called, and the amendment was rejected, after which the bill passed to its third reading.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr Martin's resolution to adjourn sine die was taken up. On motion of Mr. McCay the consideration of the resolution was deferred till the fourth Monday in March.

THURSDAY, March 3, 1853.

Mr. Rivers remarked that he had called upon the Superintendent of Public Education in order to obtain certain information, but that officer had refused to give it to him. All the Senators had much business with that department, and if the Superintendent refused to give necessary information, he should be compelled to do it. He (Mr. Rivers) therefore offered a resolution instructing the Superintendent of Public Education to furnish the Senate with a statement of the amount of the School Fund to the credit of each school district in the parish of Concordia.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. Theriot, from the Committee on Commerce, introduced a report on the petition of the Louisiana Rice Mills Company

Mr. King, from the Committee on Internal Improvements, introduced a report.

The bill extending the time of payment to settlers on the swamp lands in the parishes of Livingston and East Baton Rouge was taken up. Mr. Short said that for the reasons set forth in the report which had on a previous day been laid before the Senate, he was opposed to the passage of the bill. A bill had passed the Senate—he was unable to say whether it had passed the Lower House also, though he believed it had—which had for its object the closing of the Land Office.

Mr Martin. The gentleman is mistaken. The outside pressure prevented the passage of the bill.

Mr. Short. Whether the bill had passed the House or not, I think I can furnish sufficient reasons why we should not pass this one, now or at any other time.

I take it for granted that the disposition of the swamp lands depends on the purpose for which those lands were granted to the State by Congress. That purpose was for leveeing and draining Now, to give a right of preemption conceding twelve months as the time of payment, is being entirely too liberal. We have already given an extension of twelve months to those who were not able to pay, and now we ought not to be called on to give another extension. I am opposed to the proposed extension for another reason. It will interfere with the plan which I intend to bring forward, to apply the swamp land fund to building levees, and carrying out the purposes for which it was granted. It is very important to adopt some such plan at the present session of the Legislature My object is to have the lands surveyed and classified and then brought into market, and apply the funds received from them to the building of levees. There are now, 9,300,000 acres of these lands remaining unsold. Suppose that 500,000 acres be brought annually into market, and that $500,000 is the amount which can be economically applied every year, this will reclaim and bring into market a large amount more, while at the same time increasing it in value.—Thus we have a way to realize the most from these lands. I appeal to you whether you are going to suffer partial legislation for this parish, or that parish, by which the whole will be squandered. Why, soon, if we pass this bill, we should have an act introduced to extend the time of payment in another parish, and then in another, till we should not know where to stop. It must be remembered also, that these preemption claims are always located on the best lands, for it is well known that preemptors invariably select the best they can get. Thus all possibility of accumulating an available levee fund would be lost.

The great difficulties in this State are caused by overflow. First we must give money to the Grand Levee, then to other levees, and so the money is exhausted. After this we have applications for an extension of preemption rights to preemptors who have taken the best lands, leaving the poorest to the State. This operation is like skimming off the sweet cream, and leaving nothing but the sour milk behind—as a fund for the building of levees. I hope that all Senators have not the desire to consent to such partial legislation as this. I hope that the bill will not pass, for the reasons specified in the report.

Mr. Lacey was surprised that a proposition so equitable and so just as that of the bill before the Senate, should have met such opposition. No argument had been advanced against the propriety of giving the time asked for, to pay for these lands. They were absolutely unable to pay at this time. The only question at issue was whether Louisiana would be an indulgent creditor—whether she would give to these poor people a little time to pay for their homes, or whether she would act the part of Shylock—whether she would exact the last drop of blood, the last condition of the bond, and hand the homes and hearths of these people, over to greedy and grasping speculators. This is the only question, let it be disguised as it may. Whether the State would be so hard a creditor as to refuse this small indulgence, or grant a little time to a class of industrious people, to pay for the homes which they had earned by the sweat of their brows. He would submit the bill without argument, and place it in the hands of a generous and indulgent Senate.

Mr. Hodge said that, as a member of the Committee to which this bill had been referred, and which had reported against it, he would give his reasons for so doing. The bill proposed nothing more than to amend the act of 1852, by which a credit of one year was given to settlers on the public lands who had made their entries prior the 17th of March, of that year, so far as the parishes of Livingston and East Baton Rouge were concerned. Now, from an examination of the 2d section of that act it would be seen that the proposition of the Senator is to exempt from the operations of that act, certain parishes which the gentleman has the honor to represent, and instead of one year, to grant to the settlers on the public lands in those parishes, another extension of a year. In other words, instead of claiming payment for the lands within the year following the 17th of March, 1852, to extend the time of payment to March 17th, 1854.—The only reason advanced is that, otherwise Louisiana would be a heard-hearted and unrelenting creditor; that she would be acting the part of Shylock, exacting the full penalty of the bond. Do we exhibit hard-heartedness when we have already granted a credit of of twelve months, which these people had no right to demand? Why should the parishes of Livingston and East Baton Rouge be excepted, and preferred to any other parishes in the State? Why should the gentleman claim superior advantages for those, over other parishes? Why should they be especially favored?—Perhaps the gentleman would be willing to strike out the names of those two parishes, and extend the proposition over the whole State. The only question, then, is as to the propriety of giving two years credit to the settlers on the swamp lands instead of one. But I (said Mr. Hodge) am opposed to this additional extension. A credit of one year is given by the act of 1852. The act of Congress requires that the proceeds of these lands shall be appropriated to certain specified purposes. And this is the only true policy. It is the only way to carry out our grand plans of internal improvements. But if the gentleman insists on the bill I shall move to strike out the parishes of Livingston and East Baton Rouge, as I think my constituents are just as much entitled to this indulgence as those of the Senator from East Baton Rouge and Livingston.

Mr. Wickliffe had listened with great attention to the objections urged against the bill, and thought that they amounted to very little. He could not learn from anything that had been said in opposition to the bill, that any difficulty could result from granting the indulgence asked for. The amount which would be involved was not important to the State. Its loss for a short time would not prevent the gentlemen from going on with their levee system. This little pittance would increase the land and levee fund very little, while it might be of great importance to these poor people, and might subject them to serious inconvenience were they forced to pay it at once. So far as he was concerned, he should take great pleasure in voting for the bill.

Mr. Hodge would like to explain the reasons which induced him to oppose the bill. He was opposed to it on principle. The bill proposed to extend the time of payment to the settlers of the swamp lands in the parishes of East Baton Rouge and Livingston, from twelve months to two years. Now if we extend the time for one year, why might we not extend it for five years? The argument had been made use of that the proposed extension would be a benefit to certain persons. If it was proper to legislate for the purpose of conferring benefits on particular citizens, where was the system to end? If we were to legislate for the benefit of any portion of our citizens, whenever it was asked, if we were to give an additional credit to them of one year or two, simply because it would be beneficial to them, why not say at once that we ought to give a hundred acres of land to every poor man in the State—or confer any other benefit that might be asked? He repeated that he was opposed to this bill on principle. He could not see by what rule any one portion of our citizens were more entitled to receive favors of this kind, than others. The State was the owner of this property, and a man might as well ask a loan of the State hands, or the State steamboats, as to demand a loan of the State lands, which is the same thing as asking an extension of credit to pay for them. If we should once accede to this principle, if we should once establish so dangerous a precedent, who can tell whither it will lead us?

Mr. Hodge then moved to strike out "in the parishes of Livingston and East Baton Rouge."

Mr Wickliffe should certainly oppose the amendment.

Mr. Rivers remarked that the amendment would only have the effect of extending this additional grant of time, to the settlers on the public lands all over the State.

Mr. Lacey.—Will the gentleman support a general bill.

Several members—Certainly.

After a few remarks from other members,

Mr. Hodge said that if this bill must pass, he desired that the whole State should see the disposition which animates the other side of the House—the majority of the Senators he meant. If the gentleman from East Baton Rouge and Livingston was determined to press the claims of those two parishes, he (Mr. Hodge) should vote against it. He did not wish that the gentleman should secure the benefit of such an act for his parishes alone.

Mr. Wickliffe—If the gentleman had observed accurately, he would have seen that several members on his side of the House had voted for this miracle of wrong, as the gentleman seemed to consider it. He would have seen that the disposition to pass this bill was not confined to this side of the House alone.

Mr. Hodge—The majority of the Senators, I said.

Mr. Wickliffe—On this side of the House.

Mr. Hodge—I said "on the other side" first, but I corrected myself afterwards and said "the majority of the Senators."

Mr. Short would merely state that he had objections to the bill even as amended. The objections to the bill, as first introduced, were exaggerated by the amendment, and consequently its evil features were presented in a still stronger light. The bill first proposed to divert a portion of the levee fund from its legitimate uses, or rather to diminish its amount for some time, while the amendment would effect a vastly greater diversion. He was opposed to any system of legislation which would divert the product of sales of the public lands from the building of levees, and would make them a sort of electioneering capital for politicians to trade upon.

The bill finally passed as amended.

Mr. Martin moved to take up the bill authorising the people of the parish of Terrebonne to tax themselves for the benefit of internal improvements.

Mr. Martin said: I am now and have been opposed to action on this bill, for the reason that I am informed by the member from Terrebonne that he has some days since introduced in the House a memorial from the Police Jury on the subject matter of this bill and had it referred to an appropriate committee. Under these circumstances for the Senators from the District of which the parish of Terrebonne is a component part, to introduce and urge the action of this body on a bill for the same purpose, is in my opinion an act of discourtesy to the immediate representative of the interests and wishes of the people of Terrebonne. The member of the lower House from the parish of Terrebonne should be presumed by us to be the faithful reflector of the interests and wishes of his constituents. I am told by that member that he is not satisfied that the memorial of the Police Jury expresses the wishes of his constituency and that he has decided to visit them and endeavor to ascertain their views. I am satisfied that, that gentleman will not be found derelict to his duty.

I am not satisfied that the people desire thus to tax themselves. On the contrary, I much doubt if a majority of the tax payers of Terrebonne accord with the Police Jury. The Police Jury has not submitted the question of taxation for railroad purposes to the people of the parish of Terrebonne. I am desirous of informing myself if it is the wish of the majority of the tax payers of Terrebonne that this bill should become a law. Until I do so, I cannot give it my support, as I believe the only property—immediately benefited by railroads is—that of real estate, and in my opinion that species of property alone should be taxed for internal improvements.

I flatter myself that I shall continue to display in this body a proper zeal in the promotion of the interests of my constituents; and I believe myself as competent to do so as my colleague; but whilst displaying all proper zeal in their behalf, I shall not lose sight of that courtesy which is due to the members of the lower House representing the parishes of the District which I in part represent. For these reasons, I ask the Senate not to act on this bill at this time, but to let it lie on the table, not subject to be called up until the member of the Lower House representing the parish of Terrebonne may have an opportunity of informing himself what are the wishes of the majority of his constituents, and that I may also have an opportunity of doing so.

Mr. Kittridge said: I will explain the object of this amendment. In the first place, sir, the railroad from New Orleans to Opelousas runs through a portion of this parish of Terrebonne, and they have been authorized by a general law to lay a tax on landed estate alone by a majority vote. Now, sir, this proposed amendment does not change, add to or take away the principle contained in that law, which is to allow a majority to tax the minority as well as themselves.

It does not follow that the people of Terrebonne will lay any tax for the purposes of internal improvement if this amendment is passed by this Legislature; but they think the present law unjust and oppressive, and desire it changed.

I may be asked, who wants this changed? Why, sir, the slaveholders themselves. Among the police jury—men passing the resolutions requesting this amendment—I find four of the largest planters in the parish, as well as some smaller ones.

These planters live in various sections of the parish, so that it cannot be said that it is a partial expression of public opinion.

In confirmation of the opinion expressed by the people of Terrebonne, that the present law would operate unjustly and oppressively, I will cite the parish of Lafourche Interior, that put this question of taxation, to the vote last November; and it resulted in a vote of less than fifty in the whole parish in its favor: for the reason that they thought it unjust to tax the small land owners—leaving the immense amount of property, consisting of negroes, owned by the larger planters untaxed.

Now, Mr. President, I, for one, think they were right. But I am told again, that the land is principally benefited and enhanced in value by the making of railroads Sir, here again I beg to differ with you. The land, to be sure, is increased in value, but the greatest benefit is derived when the land is fully cultivated by large forces of negroes It is in transporting to market the products of negro labor that people will derive the largest increase of value and revenue from their property.

I myself, Mr. President, have had some experience on this point in this very parish of Terrebonne. I was the part owner of a sugar plantation there, and the cost of transporting a hogshead of sugar to New Orleans was from $3¼ to $3½ per hogshead.

Now, suppose the people of that parish should conclude to subscribe for a railroad, and get their sugar freighted to New Orleans for $1½ per hogshead.—Then, sir, on a crop of 500 hogsheads of sugar alone, there will be a saving of a thousand dollars.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I for one am in favor of granting the people of Terrebonne the privilege of assessing all taxable property for railroads, or other internal improvements, if in their wisdom they choose to lay such a tax.

Mr. King remarked that the bill was not drawn up in a constitutional form, as it does not recite at length the section of the previous act which it proposed to amend.

Mr. Wickliffe did not understand that the bill was before the Senate for discussion, and, consequently, debate on it was irrelevant.

Mr. Martin said that his only object in calling up the bill was to have it deferred. He wished to be present when it should be called up, and as he intended to absent himself for some days, he wished a distinct understanding that the bill should not be acted on during his absence. His colleague pretended to represent the interests of the parish of Terrebonne, in opposition to the immediate representative of that parish. Now he (Mr. Martin) represented that parish as much as his colleague did. He was just as well acquainted with the interests of the people of Terrebonne, and he should do all in his power to protect them.

Mr. Kittridge: The gentleman seems to think that I have no right to speak for the people of Terrebonne. He ought to be aware that they voted for me, and largely too.

Mr. Martin: I said no such thing.

THE COURTS IN THE PARISH OF ORLEANS.

The bill providing for the establishment of District Courts was taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by striking out 6 and inserting 5 as the number of courts to be established.

Mr. McCay said that under the constitution of 1845 five courts had been established in the parish of Orleans, and that number had not been found too large to transact the immense amount of business which was continually before them. Since that time the city of Lafayette had been annexed, bringing with it the increased litigation and legal business consequent on the addition of 15,000 inhabitants. If gentlemen could only be in New-Orleans and see the immense amount of business which is transacted in those courts—if they could see them in the midst of summer, after the conclusion of a long and laborious term, they would concede that they had enough to do, and would be unwilling to impose any additional labor upon a set of judges already overtaxed and wearied by their arduous duties.

The city of Lafayette was now annexed to New Orleans. The average number of cases originating there was nearly one thousand, and all these would be thrown on the city courts. It would be seen, then, that a Sixth Court was absolutely necessary to provide for this large increase of business.

Mr. Wickliffe said, that under these circumstances, and in consideration of the explanations made by the gentleman from New Orleans, he had no disposition to press his amendment. Nevertheless, he should continue to think that the business of the parish of Orleans could be done by five judges. He did not see why six should be provided for. Our great object should be to reduce our expenditure; and it was known to all that the expenses of the Judiciary were already enormously heavy. He wished to diminish the expenses of the State, and therefore he had made the motion for five judges instead of six.

Mr. King said the parish of Orleans did not ask any increase of courts; she only sought what the law had always granted. Gentlemen well knew, that previous to this time, the courts there were compelled to sit almost continuously. Two remained in session during the entire year, and the three others could take only a short recess in the summer. If you add to their already heavy business, the increased litigation resulting from the annexation of a town of 15,000 inhabitants, and throw upon the five courts now existing, the causes originating there—amounting, as the gentleman more immediately representing the Fourth District, had informed the Senate, to nearly a thousand cases annually, it would surely have the effect of clogging the wheels of justice. Certainly gentlemen did not wish to trammel the courts so as to prevent the speedy administration of justice. He hoped that gentlemen would give to the parish of Orleans what they, who lived there, knew was indispensable to their interests and to a speedy and sure administration of justice.

Mr. McCay had a few words to say. He would inform the Senate, that nineteen-twentieths of the business transacted by the court of the Third Judicial District, would be thrown upon the courts of Orleans by the annexation of Lafayette A sixth court was therefore absolutely necessary to transact this business; and, in asking it, the parish of Orleans asked nothing exorbitant; she asked for nothing that did not exist before; she only asked for what the consolidation act had rendered indispensable. He trusted that, as the members from the city proposed to acquiesce in anything that the senators from the country might suggest in relation to the organization of the the judiciary in the country parishes, as they would accede to anything in reason that might be proposed by those members, they would allow to the city the same privilege, particularly when she claimed nothing unreasonable or exorbitant.

Mr. Burthe would inform the senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe,) that three hundred criminal cases, alone, came from Jefferson. The number of civil cases was, of course, much larger. How could this additional labor be performed, unless by an additional judge? He really did not think that the business of the parish of Orleans could be done by less than six courts.

Mr. Wickliffe said that he would withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Hodge. Well, sir, I renew the amendment. I wish it distinctly understood, that I entertain no prejudices against the city of New Orleans. On the contrary, I am sincerely desirous of promoting her welfare and prosperity. But, at the present time, I see a manifest disposition in the people of Louisiana to have justice administered in a cheaper manner—to introduce economy into the direction of our affairs. When senators, therefore, ask me to support a measure which will have a tendency to increase the expenditure of the State, I ask that it be shown to be absolutely necessary, before I will give such a proposition my support. You already have five courts in the parish of Orleans, and now you come to us and ask for six, while, at the same, according to a project before the Senate, there are to be only six in all the rest of the State. The expenses of the district courts of the parish of Orleans already amount to $21,009, and those of the entire judiciary system of the rest of the State will, under the plan I have alluded to, reach only about the same sum. So, the parish of Orleans must be of as much importance as all the rest of the State of Louisiana. It may be true that a large number of cases from Lafayette have been transferred to the courts of New Orleans; but there is no reason, in my mind, to believe that this increase of business cannot be transacted by the five courts already in existence. I, certainly, shall never vote for the establishment of a Sixth Court till I am absolutely convinced that the interests of the people of New Orleans imperatively demand it. But show me the facts to prove that a sixth court is necessary—show me evidence sufficient to carry conviction, and I will cheerfully support the measure. Why has no evidence been offered on this point? So far, we have only the opinion of gentlemen that the judges of New Orleans have more business before them than they can transact. Now, sir, my own opinion is, that they have not more than they can do. I venture to say, that in my judicial district (the seventeenth,) the judge has more labor to perform than is done in any of the courts of New Orleans, except, perhaps, the First District Court, presided over by Judge Larue.

Now, sir, do not gentlemen know the disposition among the people of the State to reduce our expenses? Do they not know that this wish was one of the main causes which led to the call of a convention to remodel the fundamental law? Do they not know that there has been a long and loud cry from all sections of the State for retrenchment and reform? Do they not know that the judicial system, as it exists at present, is an eye-sore, and that the people demand a reduction of its expenses? And, knowing these facts, knowing the necessity and the desire for retrenchment which exists, why do they not show us the reasons which induce them to ask our support for a measure whose only effect can be increased expenditure, and, consequently, increased taxation? Why do they not show us the record? Why do they not show us the list of cases on the dockets of the various courts in New Orleans? I repeat, sir, that I do not believe the judges there have more than they can do. Why, sir, I was in the city recently, and, while there, I made it my business to make particular inquiries into this subject, in order to prepare myself beforehand for any demand of this kind that might be made. The result was, that I ascertained that recently the law business of the city had much decreased, and that the fees received during the last year would not have been more than half of the amount they were a few years ago, had it not been for the cases growing out of the establishment of railroad companies. I say, sir, that I want the proof that a necessity exists for this sixth court—I want to see the number of cases in each court But if gentlemen let the matter stand till correct information be obtained on this subject, I venture to say, it will be found that more business is done in the Seventeenth Judicial District than in any of the city courts, except one.

Mr. McCay. How many cases has the judge of that court had in one year?

Mr. Hodge. I cannot say, positively, how many; but I do know, that there were 750 in the parish of Caddo, alone, and he has four other parishes in his district. He has to ride over these parishes and hold court in each one, so that the whole of his time is occupied. But, in New Orleans, the court meets at ten o'clock and adjourns at three.

I again venture the assertion, that in many districts of the country, the judges have more business than is done in any one of the New Orleans courts.

I say again, that I want proof of its necessity before I support this measure. Is it not true, that courts in New Orleans meet at ten o'clock and adjourn at three? In the country, on the contrary, they meet earlier, and frequently remain in session till late at night. I say, once more, it is incumbent on gentlemen from New Orleans, when they advocate a measure which is to increase our expenses, that they show it absolutely necessary before they can reasonably expect the support of the country members.

Mr. King. I hope I shall be able to satisfy the gentleman on the points on which he requires information, if he will give credit to the universal testimony of the city members. Perhaps, however, this will not satisfy him—perhaps he will demand the solemnity of an oath before he will consent to receive our evidence.

For my part, Sir, I should never be guilty of so much discourtesy towards the Senator from Caddo, as demand from him an oath when he tells us that there were 750 new cases in Caddo parish during the last year, though I certainly think it a very large number. However, let that pass.—We have said to the country gentlemen, arrange your Courts as you like, and we will sustain you. For her part, New Orleans only asks what she has always had—she only asks that the number of her Courts be not decreased. When this is all that she asks, when she does not propose to interfere with you in any manner, I certainly think that her request might be granted without hesitation. The impression seems to prevail with some gentlemen that we are asking an increase of our Courts. This is an error. We ask only for the same number we have always had. The Sixth Court will have a different name, but it will only replace the Court which existed in Lafayette, before the act of consolidation. Nineteen twentieths of the cases from that Court come to New Orleans, and if the gentlemen will not insist on a certificate.

Mr. Hodge. The gentleman has greatly mistaken my meaning—I did not wish to be understood as doubting the assertions of gentlemen from the city.—I only remarked that no specific statement of the number of cases in the Courts of New Orleans had been presented.—I certainly intended no such discourtesy as the gentleman seems to imagine.

Mr. King I am happy to hear the gentleman make this explanation.

Mr. Hodge. I understood the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay) to say, that 19|20 of the cases from the old Court of Jefferson, would go to New Orleans, and that the number of new cases in that Court, reached 1000 a year. But I did not understand how many cases there were in the five Courts of New Orleans. This is what I meant.

Mr. King. The gentleman could not have applied for information on the subject to two persons more competent to give it, than General Lewis, for some years Sheriff of the Parish, and myself. I think that gentleman will concur with me when I say that in one of these Courts there are 1200 cases, and in none of the others much less than 1000 per annum. All of them have concurrent jurisdiction, but in some certain classes of cases have preference on the docket. Thus, the business of the Courts is pretty equally divided, except that, in the First, there is less civil business than in the others, though even in that there is considerable. The person who informed the gentleman from Caddo, that the legal business had decreased, must have meant that the emoluments of the profession had diminished, not that the number of cases was less. They are certainly less in amount, though not less in number, than they have been. This is consequent on the fact, that owing to the revulsions of '37 and '38, much litigation was produced, and many large cases in bankruptcy, and some of these have been coming up until recently: now however, this class of cases is almost at an end. I think, from my own observation, that the number of cases has increased, though they are certainly smaller in amount. These consume just as much time as larger cases, and require as much of the attention of the Court.

Mr. Hodge. I would ask the gentleman how long the Courts in New Orleans are in the habit of sitting.

Mr. King They sit from 10 till 3, except when they have jury cases before them. Then, they sit till late at night. Judge Reynolds very frequently sits all the afternoon. In summer, they meet at 9 and adjourn at 3.

Now, Sir, when we show that in the city of New Orleans, there are more than twice as many cases as in all the rest of the State—when we show that the judges there have already as much business as they can attend to, and that they are to be overburthened with the addition of nearly a thousand new cases from Lafayette, we think we prove a necessity for the establishment of this Sixth Court. Gentlemen know the proportion of taxes paid by the city of New Orleans—it is not quite, though it is nearly half of the whole amount—40 per cent. the Senator from Concordia, says—gentlemen I say know this, and yet they wish to refuse us what is absolutely necessary, and what will only make our judiciary expenses reach $21,000 per annum.

Mr. Wickliffe. According to Pike's arithmetic, 4 times 6 are 24—and the salaries of 6 judges at $4000 each, would be $24,000.

Mr. King. The bill proposes a salary of $3,500.

Mr. Wickliffe read from a bill which proposed $4000. He remarked that, according to this bill, there would only be eight districts in the State besides Orleans.

Mr. King. The gentleman has read from the wrong bill—that is not the one which I support. He says the proposition is to give only 8 district judges to the country—If such be the proposition, the delegation from New Orleans, is not responsible for it. We have always said to the country members "do as you please with reference to the country judiciary—we will ratify anything reasonable that you may do." We only know that we pay the largest proportion of the salaries. There has been one proposition for 27 district judges. It is even proposed to give a probate judge to each parish.—Now, Sir, we ask for no probate judge—we want no other judge than those we already have. If we should found a demand on the amount of business in the city, we might ask a much larger proportion, but we do not. Or, if we ask any increase at all, it is only a small increase for the salary of the judge of the Sixth Court. Under these circumstances, it seems to me, that we are very moderate in our expectations—particularly as the bill was reported on by the committee in the absence of any members of the delegation from New Orleans.

Mr. Hodge. The Judiciary Committee never reported in favor of six Courts in the parish of Orleans.

Mr. King. Will the gentleman from East Baton Rouge state the facts?

Mr. Lacey. The report of the Judiciary Committee is on the Secretary's table. It was in favor of the 6th Court.

Mr. King. I suppose that the printed bill was the one which had been reported by the Committee. This bill was drawn up by the bar of New Orleans, who acceded to it with entire unanimity. As an expression of public opinion, and as the embodiment of the wishes of a portion of the community who are certainly peculiarly interested, it is entitled to some respect from country members. If they exhibit equal unanimity in favor of any particular plan it must contain something extremely injurious to the interests of New Orleans before we would think of opposing it. I hope there will be no disposition to trent New Orleans as a stranger in the land, or to deny to her what is necessary for her interests. This measure is absolutely indispensable to her, and I hope it will not be defeated. When gentlemen from the country, come forward with any plan in favor of which they manifest equal unanimity. I shall be the last to oppose it.

Mr. Wickliffe. Before the gentleman takes his seat I should like to ask him a question. He says that the parish of Orleans pays 40 per cent. of the taxes.

Mr. King. I stated so on the authority of the Senator from Concordia, (Mr. Rivers.)

Mr. Wickliffe. The proposition is really a little less, but I wish the gentleman to couple together with a statement of what the city pays, a statement of what it receives.

Mr. King. I am not prepared at this time to answer that question.

Mr. McCay. I imagine that the Senator, (Mr Hodge) does not wish to find evidence in favor of this measure. I, Sir, am induced to believe that in the country, the judges do not sit eight months in the year. They certainly have not so much to do as the city judges The population is not large in the country districts, and the litigation cannot be so extensive as in the city. So far as the number of cases is concerned,—so far as population is concerned,—I am perfectly willing to meet that redoubtable seventeenth district. The number of cases in the Commercial Court, though I am not so fortunate as to have a certificate for the satisfaction of the gentleman, I can state, on information derived from the clerk, to be nearly 1300.

In the second court, probate cases have preference, and in ordinary cases it has concurrent jurisdiction. I do not know the number of cases in this court, but I can say that as in the course of my business, I am frequently there, I have scarcely ever found Judge Lea off the bench. The fifth is presided over by Judge Buchanan, who determines more cases, and decides more cases correctly, than any other Judge in New Orleans. Hence, sir, we see the New Orleans courts busy for eight months in the year against four months in the country. Add to this the interlocutory orders, the received cases, &c, during the four summer months, and then consider the three hundred additional criminal and one thousand civil cases from Lafayette, and you may form some idea of what one Judge will have to do. Now, sir, we have no certificate for all this, but we know that the whole of the New Orleans bar, led by Mr. J. P. Benjamin, acknowledge the necessity for six courts, and ask that the legislature grant them.

This thing is a matter of interest, not to the city alone, but to the whole State. Let any gentleman go to the city to find a case in insolvency or a case of any other kind, and where will he find it? If it is a probate case, he will go to the court in which that class of cases has preference, if an insolvency case to another—if a criminal case to the first, if a commercial case to the fourth. So it will be seen that all people who have business relations with New Orleans, are interested in the arrangement of her judiciary system. I do not say that the Judges there sit on the bench from day-break till dark, but I say that they sit for a reasonable length of time—from ten till three, and for a third of the year for a longer period.

Now, sir, if this be a matter of convenience to the whole State, if the entire bar of the city says that it should be done,—that it is indispensably necessary—I say that the gentleman should not demand a petty certificate, which we cannot be expected to have at all times in our pockets, to convince him of its propriety.

I do contend, sir, that six courts are now necessary in the parish of Orleans, because out of seventeen hundred cases which were formerly tried in the court of Jefferson parish, onlyabout six hundred remain—the rest have gone to the courts of Orleans. In addition to this nineteen-twentieths of three hundred criminal cases have been added to the list of the First District Court. Hence the necessity for a sixth court.

This reminds me, sir, of what took place in the convention this summer. The parish of Jefferson was separated from the Senatorial District to which it formerly belonged, and added to the city of New Orleans—but strange to say, no addition to the Senatorial representation of New Orleans was made, on account of this addition to its population. The district which was diminished in population, experienced no diminution in its representation, and the district which was increased received no accession, though the portion which was taken away from one district, contained a larger population than all the remainder of the district Gentlemen seem to think that in asking for this sixth court, we wish to add one to the Judiciary. Why, sir, according to the act before me, there were seventeen courts, of which that of Jefferson was the third, New Orleans was the first district, with five courts. Now, sir, this is no increase, for most of Jefferson has been thrown in with New Orleans, by the act of consolidation.

I am as much for retrenchment and economy in our public affairs, as any other man; but it will be seen that a very simple calculation developes this strong fact. The Senator from Concordia has said that the city pays 40 per cent of the taxes. He is right in his information.

Now, sir, one of the bills proposes a number of couutry Judges exactly in proportion. I have no disposition to cut down the salaries of the country Judges, or to give more to a city Judge, simply because he is a city Judge. If the country Judges have more duties to perform, give them higher salaries, give them $3,500, give them $4,000. But gentlemen ask much more than we do. They wish to have a Judge in each parish.

Mr. Hodge—Not I.

Mr. McCay—I am speaking of a bill which does propose this. But without it the expenses of the whole Judiciary would be $55,000, of which $21,000 would be for the city, and the remainder for the country. Now if we proceed on the basis of the amount of money paid, a better proposition could not have been thought of.

I hope that on this question gentlemen from the country will not speak as country members, or gentlemen from the city as city members. I hope they will discuss the question as Senators for the State of Louisiana, and that they will not demand a certificate to substantiate every assertion that may be made. I for one am not in the habit of travelling with a certificate in my pocket. No, sir, let us receive their suggestions, and let them receive ours. I am ready to co-operate with the gentleman from the seventeenth district in anything he may advance, but let us not hear how much this parish pays, or how much that.

Mr. Wickliffe. I was not the first to cast the stone. The gentleman says, the proposition is fairly based on the amount of taxes paid by each section. Why, sir, last year the appropriations to the city reached $69,000. Yet the cry from the city is, "we pay a large proportion of the taxes, and consequently we must have what we ask."

Mr. King. We do not ask this on that ground, but on the ground of necessity.

Mr. Wickliffe I am glad to hear the retraxit of the gentleman.

Mr. Hodge. I am sorry that the gentleman (Mr. McCay) can find nothing more satisfactory to advance than animadversions on a little remark which I happened to make in the course of debate. When that gentleman knows me better he will discover that I would never knowingly say anything discourteous towards a brother Senator. He has evidently entirely misconceived and misinterpreted my remarks on this occasion. I only wanted to know the amount of business done in the courts. I have listened attentively to the remarks of gentlemen on the other side, and have not yet gained the desired information. If gentlemen had also listened attentively they would have discovered that the point of economy which I chiefly urged has not been touched at all. Gentlemen may sneer as much as they please at a fancied slight, but when I have explained that I intended no discourtesy, I have done all that I consider necessary, and I shall do no more. If that is not satisfactory the matter must stand as it is, and gentlemen may make the most of it.

I repeat now what I said before—I see no reason for the establishment of a Sixth Court in the parish of Orleans. I have nothing to convince me that the judges there have more to do they can attend to. On the contrary I believe they can readily transact all the business before them. In the face of this fact I cannot consent to support any measure which contemplate an increase of our expenses, when a reduction of them is absolutely demanded by the people of the State. Show me, however, that the measure is necessary and I will support it. But I know that the judges do not sit the entire day in New Orleans. In my own district I know that they sit frequently till late in the night, and that during four months of the year, I might say five—but put it at the lowest figure and say four. In that time he has to travel over the parishes of Bossier and Claiborne, and the others composing the district; and that he is required to do four times a year, having to travel on horseback over bad roads and through a wild and unsettled country, crossing swamps, bayous and prairies. Now, sir, I challange investigation on this point, when I assert that the judges in the city have not as much labor to perform as those in the country. I challenge the record, and if gentlemen like they may get the certificate of the clerk as evidence. Now, how many hours are the judges in New Orleans on the bench?

That is the way to test the question. We all know that there are some small cases, of which a judge may decide thirty or forty in a day—and there are others which may detain him a week. Therefore, it will be seen that the number of cases decided is not a true test of labor performed. The proper test is the number of hours that the judge remains on the bench. I am not opposed to your Courts. I intended no discourtesy by my remarks to-day. I have now made this disclaimer often enough, and I have made it for the last time. You come here as representatives from the city of New Orleans. You come here to represent the interests of your constituents, and you do it well. But you seem to think that when that is done, you have nothing more to do—that the interests of the country, have nothing to do with those of the city. I think with the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay) that we should act as Senators for Louisiana, and not for any particular section; and I flatter myself that I am as free from sectional prejudice as any gentleman here. When I was in the city I made inquiries on the subject, and framed my opinions accordingly. I wanted to know how much business was done in the New Orleans Courts, because I did hope that it would not be said, "Let us have what we want, and we will let you have what you want." No! We all need the assistance of each other. Try five judges for a year, and see if you cannot get along with that number. Then, if you come back at the next session, and say that your business cannot be transacted by these Courts, we will willingly give you another.

Mr. Lacey. I think, Mr. President, that this question should be decided without any reference to sectional considerations. I cannot think it necessary to calculate the amount of taxes paid by any particular section or parish That has nothing at all to do with the question. For my part, I am disposed to give to the city of New Orleans as many judges as her interests require, and to increase their salaries to that amount which will secure the highest talent for her bench. My views on this subject differ from those of the Senator from Caddo, (Mr. Hodge). I do not think it our first and chief desire to decrease the expenses of the Judiciary, and to place it on the most economical basis. Our first wish should be to secure a prompt decision of cases litigated before our Courts. Here I disagree with the gentleman. I believe that the interests of New Orleans require six judges. It is proved to me by the resolutions passed with entire unanimity by the Bar of New Orleans—those standing highest on the list of the profession, and those of an opposite character. When I perceived this disposition on the part of people who pay a large proportion of our taxes, and are themselves to feel the increased expense consequent on the establishment of another Court, how can I believe otherwise than that it is necessary? How can I come to any other conclusion? When the whole bar of the city unanimously says that it is necessary, how can I refuse to believe it? They speak what they do know, and they know what they do speak. I am, therefore, in favor of giving to the Parish of Orleans all that is proposed by the bill before the Senate. I have been told by the Senators from New Orleans that it is necessary. I have been told so by the Bar of that city—and I am therefore compelled to believe that six Courts are required for the discharge of the legal business of the city. To my mind this is as good evidence as the certificate which the gentleman from Caddo, (Mr. Hodge) demanded.

Mr. Hodge. That is not true.

Mr. Lacey. I mean the thing which the gentleman has asked for. As he seems to be so particular, I shall designate it as the thing which the gentleman has asked for. When the bill was before the committee, there was some difference of opinion expressed. One gentleman thought that five Courts were enough; I and others were of an opposite opinion. I therefore sustained the proposition to establish six. In order to be prepared on the subject, I sent a dispatch to Messrs. Benjamin and Micou. I have not yet received an answer to that dispatch, but I have received such information from Judge Hiestand, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, as satisfies my mind. When in the city he examined the subject, and found that in one year 1276 cases were brought before the 1st District Court. Is it possible that any Court can attend properly to its business—except that in which the Senator from Caddo had the honor to practise—when 1276 new cases are filed in a year? In the Second, there are 849 cases in a year; in the Third, 1004; in the Fourth, 890; in the Fifth, 1014. Now, I find that if the Courts meet every day except Sunday, they must decide three cases a day, to reach the smallest number in any of these Courts. I ask gentlemen whether the simple investigation of a case on its merits, is all that a Court has to do? When you take into consideration the exceptions, dilatory as well as peremptory, that may be taken, and the various other collateral issues—when, I say, all these are disposed of by the Court, and it tries three a day, I ask whether it has not done all that could be expected? It is a very high average for any Court to dispose of three cases a day. What do gentlemen propose to do, if they refuse to pass the bill as reported? What do they propose to do in view of the additional labor imposed on the Courts of New Orleans by the annexation of Lafayette? We have been told that this brings an additional population of 16,000, throwing upon the Courts of New Orleans the litigation of that number of people—and you propose to put all this on the already overburthened judges of the city, without giving them any additional facilities. It may be possible that the Courts sometimes adjourn at 3 o'clock, but I imagine that they more than make it up at other times. But the truth-telling docket tells a tale which cannot be disputed.

I, sir, am bound down by no sectional feelings. I look upon New Orleans with the same regard as I do on any other part of the State, and I will not suffer myself to be swayed by sectional prejudice.

Mr. Wickliffe. Does the gentleman mean that I am?

Mr. Lacey. My language is plain. I say that I am not. If the gentleman thinks that he is, he can apply it to himself. I am not responsible for its application.

Mr. Wickliffe. Then, sir, I have only to say, that when I hear a Senator say this emphatically, I generally suspect him.

Mr. Lacey. Like the thousand other suspicions of the gentleman, this also is erroneous. But, I must say that I do not think so either of the Senator from Caddo, or of the Senator from West Feliciana. I believe they are really animated by a patriotic desire for the welfare of the State.

Mr. Hodge. I am glad to have received the information which I sought. It turns out that the average number of cases per annum in each Court in New Orleans, is not quite 1,000. I knew it is said that they have very little time on their hands, but the number of cases per day decided by them is, on an average, only three. Some cases I know occupy a week—but I have seen forty decided in a day. So, I believe the additional cases from Lafayette might, without inconvenience, be distributed among the New Orleans Courts.

Mr. Burthe. What are you going to do with the criminal cases?

Mr. Hodge. Give them to the Criminal Court. The gentleman (Mr. Lacey) has spoken of Mr. Micou. Now, sir, I was in that gentleman's office recently, and a young lawyer whom I met there—a Mr. Levy, I believe—told me that the fees had diminished nearly one-half. I have also recently seen the circumstance alluded to in the newspapers, as an evidence of a more healthy state of feeling in the city. Gentlemen must have seen it and remarked it themselves. I still insist on my amendment, sir.

Mr. McCay. Did the gentleman say he had conversed on this subject with a distinguished member of the bar?

Mr. Hodge. I did not say so. I said that I had conversed with Mr. Levy. His information is probably as good as that of any attorney.

After some further unimportant discussion, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 4, 1853.

Mr. Derbes, from the special committee to which was referred the communication of Newton Richards and others, made a report which was read. He thought it was too late to act on the subject at the present session, but that an amendment of the Constitution submitting the question of removal of the seat of Government to the people would be expedient. The Committee had prepared a bill to that effect, which was appended to the Report.

Mr. Lacey made a minority report.

Mr. King presented the memorial of Mr. Jacob Barker, on the subject of the bill prohibiting the circulation of small notes. He moved the reference of the report to the Committee on Banks and Banking.

Mr. Wickliffe objected to the reference.

Mr. Palfrey said that the committee was already in possession of all the information on the subject that could possibly be derived from the memorial, and he did not see the necessity to embarrass the committee by the reference. He moved to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. King—I do not wish to be considered as endorsing everything contained in the memorial, but I think some respect should be paid to it. It is the petition of an individual who thinks that a certain act before the Legislature is calculated to injure his business, and as the Committee on Banking has charge of such subjects, I do not see the objection to referring it to them. I think it our duty to consider the petitions of all those whom our legislation may affect. The petition presents some sound views, and I hope the gentleman from St. Mary will withdraw his motion to lay it on the table.

Mr. Palfrey—The committee is already in possession of all this information, and a bill has been passed on the subject. The committee will also soon offer a general law which will provide for the extinction of that kind of circulation which is looked on now as a nuisance. Nevertheless, I will withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. Wickliffe—I will renew the motion. The gentleman says that the memorial presents some sound views. But the committee know all that the memorial can tell them. They have now before them a general law on the subject of free banking which will soon be presented. Mr. Jacob Barker will not come in under that law, because he will not be able to do so. He must have something more than that spotless reputation for a number of years which Mr. Barker says is all that is required to undertake a banking business. There is no disrespect manifested towards Mr. Barker, in laying his memorial on the table—it is simply as much as to say that the committee is in need of no more information on the subject.

The memorial was laid on the table.

THE JUDICIARY.

The report from the Judiciary Committee, organizing the judiciary system for the State, the Parish of Orleans excepted, was read.

Mr. Hodge. I shall take this opportunity of explaining my views on this subject. I think, sir, that the people of the State, at this time, desire the establishment of Probate Courts. The proper way to comply with this desire, is to extend the judicial Districts so that there shall be only seven or nine in the State. In this manner a Probate Court can be established in every Parish. The Judges of those Courts, I think, should be paid from the Parish Treasuries—and in this way the salaries paid could be made proportionate to the business done. In many parishes, where the business is extensive, the Police Jury ought to fix the salary accordingly. It would not be equitable or just that the salaries should be the same in all the parishes, because in some the duties are light, and in others very onerous. In some parishes the number of cases would reach 1000 or 1200 per annum, and the whole time of the Judge would be occupied—in others, not a tenth or a twentieth of that amount. It would not be fair, therefore, that the salaries of these Judges should be the same throughout the State. I think, sir, I am correct in saying that this system is adopted in our sister State, Mississippi, and that it has given general satisfaction there. The County Judges are paid out of the County Treasuries, and it is left to the people of each county to decide what the salary shall be. If they think it should be reduced or diminished, they can do so, and a special tax is levied in each county to pay the amount necessary. In this way the expenses of each Court fall on its own Parish; and an additional advantage is, that the State Treasury is relieved from a large portion of the expenses of the Judiciary. With seven Districts, exclusive of New Orleans, the whole expenses of the Judiciary would only amount to about $45,000 or $50,000.

In addition to this, sir, we might make the clerks of courts in the country act as parish recorders, thus making their office a very desirable one, and giving to them a good salary. In this way a great saving could be effected, as being recorder in addition to clerk he could afford to take half the fees that are now paid to clerks of the District courts. A great reason for the establishment of Probate Courts is, that the people demand it. One thing in view at the adoption of the Constitution was, to remedy the present system, which it was conceded, did not work well. It was seen to be absolutely necessary that some plan should be adopted for the more speedy settlement and administration of successions, which, under the present system, is almost impossible; in fact, it is worse than the old parish judge system, which had become so justly odious. In fact, it is nearly impossible for a court to discharge its duties well, when it has jurisdiction over all civil subjects. But when a Probate Court exists in each parish, the task is comparatively easy. The interests of the State demand a court of this kind. If we have 28 districts as proposed by our bill, we would have to give the judges $2,500 or $3,000 each, which would involve entirely too large an expenditure. In addition to this we must provide for the District Attorneys, and we could not induce any respectable lawyer to take the office at such a salary as we could offer. I believe, sir, that 99-100 of the people of Louisiana are in favor of Probate Courts, and therefore I advocate the system.

ORDER OF THE DAY—THE JUDICIARY.

The bill organizing the District Courts in the Parish of Orleans, was taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend by striking out $3,500 and inserting $3000, as the salary of the Judges.

Mr. Wickliffe. My reason for offering this amendment is, that I desire to decrease the expenses of the Judiciary Who will say that $3000 a year is not enough when there are six judges? I say, Sir, that the best legal talent can be procured for $3000.

Mr. King. I beg Senators to do justice on this subject—that is all we ask. If we do not make out a fair case, then we do not expect to get what we seek. The salaries to be paid in the city, have been made the occasion of many legislative contests; but I find that larger salaries have always been paid in the city than in the country.

At first the lowest salary paid to a judge in the city was $5000 per annum, and Judge Maurian, I believe, received $7500. Then they were brought down to $4000, and ever since have been gradually yielding, not so much to the force of arguments as of votes, till at last, they were fixed at $3500. We do not, therefore ask any increase, though I must say that $3500 is a very small salary for a Judge in the city of New Orleans. I thought that this would be given because it is just. I thought it was understood that we ask no increase either in the number of judges or the amount of their salaries; that we only ask them to be left where they are now found. The gentleman says no Senator can say that $3000 will not secure the best talent. I am surprised to hear the assertion. I did not think that one Senator could be found to make it. It is known that lawyers in good practice will not give it up for such a sum, and it cannot be expected that they should. We from the city, have not expressed any opinion as to what is best for the country; we leave that for the country members to regulate according to their own fancy. If they wish to give $3000, so be it; if $3500, so be it. But when you come to the city, where we know that $3500 is too low, where we know the subject as well as it can be known, pay some respect to the expression of our opinions.

Do you wish to place the salary so low as to destroy the character of our Judiciary? I hope you do not wish to force us to that. We know that $3500 in this city yields a bare support; we know that any man with a family, living in an economical manner, is compelled to spend as much as that. What can you expect under such circumstances? Take a gentleman of talent and information, who is an ornament to his profession and will adorn the bench—make him a judge, and what is the result? He works during nearly the whole year, taking a vacation of seldom more than two or three weeks; he is required to be constantly deciding cases, writing judgments, and granting orders; he labors from month to month almost like a beast of burden—gives up all idea of wealth or political advancement; has no hope of fortune—no hope for the future, and at last receives only a bare pittance as a recompense for his services. Such is a faithful picture of the life of a judge in New Orleans. I sincerely hope, that gentlemen will take these things into consideration, and grant the small salary asked for. Even now the salary in so small that two of our judges have refused to run for re-election.

Mr. Wickliffe. Who?

Mr. King. Judge Kennedy and Judge Buchanan who are now candidates for the Supreme Court. The salaries are now reduced to the lowest point at which competent men can be found.

Mr. Mouton. How much is now paid?

Mr. King. Thirty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. Wickliffe. From the manner of the gentleman and the appearance of distress which he exhibited, I supposed that I had been perpetrating a great hardship in moving to strike out $3500 and insert $3000. The gentleman says that no increase is asked for. I insist that there is. They ask for six judges instead of five, while some of us ask for only nine judges in the country. But the gentleman has not answered my statement that $3000 is enough. He says that the judges labor hard—that they work from day to day. Has he not heard it said that they meet at ten and adjourn at three? Does he not know that under this bill they will not be confined for more than six months in the year? If the New Orleans judges will work as the country judges do, they can get through in six months.

The gentleman says that $3,000 is not enough. I understood the gentleman to say that the best talent was now on the bench.

Mr King. No, Sir.

Mr. Wickliffe. At all events, that the Judges are an ornament to the bench. Now, what is proposed? $3,000 a year for three cases a day. Let the gentleman make his own calculation. The gentleman says this sum is not enough to pay expenses. Is living, then, so very dear in New Orleans? Is there any gentleman in the country who cannot live on that?—There, we find Judges who work from morning till night, travel over various parishes, and perform the hardest kind of labor. How is it in New Orleans? I venture the assertion that the Judges there do not average two hours a day on the bench throughout the year. I, sir, can see no reason why they should receive $3,500.

Mr. Derbes. The gentleman, sir, seems to lose sight of one important fact—that the Judges are now elected by the people. Popular elections are always expensive to candidates in cities. They must advertise—they must get printing done—they must subscribe to every thing—for if they refuse, they are ruined. These things are incidental to all elections by the people. I do not mean that the candidates purchase votes—none of them would descend to that—but there are many expenses to which their position subjects them, and which they must pay.

Mr. Wickliffe. I had no idea, before, sir, that we were legislating in order to help gentlemen to a re-election. I thought we were legislating for an independent Judiciary; and I moved my amendment because I considered $3,000 to be enough. In reply to the gentleman's arguments, I will state my belief that if a Judge attend properly to his business, he needs no other reliance. This opinion is based on the fact that in Mississippi, a radically Democratic State, Judge Sharkey, a Whig, has always been elected.—Now, sir, has it come to this—that we are to pay salaries not only for judicial services, but for electioneering purposes?

I repeat, sir, that I thought we are legislating for an independent Judiciary. I thought it was a democratic principle, that an elective Judiciary would be as independent as an appointed one. After the explanation of the Senator from New Orleans, I am still more wedded to my amendment.

Mr. Mouton. I have no intention of making a speech on this subject, but I claim the indulgence of the Senate while I make a few remarks. I think, with the Senator who has last taken his seat, that our object should be to establish an independent Judiciary. It is for that very reason that I am disposed to vote at least $3500 as the salary of the city judges. To secure an independent Judiciary, it is necessary to pay a salary adebuate to the performance of the duties imposed. I am little acquainted with the duties of New Orleans Judges, but I have a knowledge of those of the country Judges—and if they are the same, I can safely say that $3500 is not too much.

It cannot be expected that good lawyers—men who are an ornament to their profession—would give up their practice for so small a sum as $2,000. The expenses of the city judges must necessarily be heavier than those of the country judges. They are compelled to pay higher rents, and to purchase their supplies daily; whilst in the country the judges are not subjected to such expenses. I coincide with the opinion expressed by the gentleman who first spoke on this subject, (Mr. King,) that if we diminish the salaries, we shall not be enabled to procure the best talent—which must be our first and most desirable object. I do not think $3500 will be too much—and I shall vote for it.

Mr. Hodge. Before the vote is taken, I should like to explain the reasons which influence me in the vote I am about to give. I am compelled to vote against the amendment, because I believe, that if the duties are properly performed, $3500 is not too large a salary. The object of the senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe,) in his desire to reduce the expenses, would, however, be gained by having five courts instead of six in New Orleans; and I hope that some gentleman who voted for six will move a reconsideration of the vote.

The motion to strike out $3500 and insert $3800. was lost.

Mr. Palfrey moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the second section of the bill was adopted. Lost.

Mr. King moved an amendment.

Mr. Hodge offered a proviso, that the salary of the judge of the Second District Court be paid out of the City Treasury. He said:

My reasons for offering this proviso are in accordance with the opinions expressed by me this morning.

I find that the second court answers to a court of probates, and, therefore, in consonance with that opinion, I think the judge should be paid out of the city treasury. I am willing, if gentlemen from Orleans desire it, that a special probate court should be established there, and his salary should be paid by the city. If that system is adopted, it is just and proper that New Orleans should pay her own probate judge. I believe it to be the only feasable and just plan, and therefore I offer the proviso.

Mr. King. The proposal of the gentlemen would place us in this anomalous position. New Orleans will have to pay the salary of her own judge, and then if this bill should not pass, all the other judges in the State would be paid out of the State Treasury, a proposition which, I imagine, the gentleman would not for a moment urge.

Mr. Hodge. If the Senate do not adopt the system, the proviso can afterwards be stricken out.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to postpone the consideration of the bill.

Mr. King. I can see no reason why a bill of this kind should not prevail. There is no reason why business should be staved off in this manner. If the bill is postponed there will be but little time left till the election.

Mr. Wickliffe. I can state, sir, that no gentleman here is more disposed than that gentleman, to stave off business when it suits him. I am opposed to going it blind. I want to know what system is to be adopted for the country. I believe that the people demand reform, and a cheaper judiciary; and, until some system is provided for the country, I am opposed to doing anything by which we will be left at the mercy of the city delegation.

Mr McCay. I shall vote for postponement, for the reasons given by the gentleman. I want a general system to be adopted, and I have every confidence in the gentlemen from the country. I believe they will give me everything that is just.

After some further discussion, the bill was postponed.

TUESDAY, March 1, 1853.

The bill incorporating the Association of Colored Veterans of New Orleans was taken up.

Mr. Short said he hoped the bill would be deferred. He wished time to consider it more attentively. He had the greatest respect for those old men, colored or otherwise, who had perilled their lives in defence of their country; but before creating a corporation of this sort, which might have a dangerous tendency, we ought to hesitate and be perfectly sure that no evil would result from it. He thought it ought to be referred again.

Mr. Martin did not see what objection could be made to the bill. It simply proposes to permit the association of these colored veterans for benevolent purposes. To what committee did the Senator suggest that the bill should be referred?

Mr. Short. To the Committee on Corporations

Mr. Martin. The bill has already been referred to the Militia Committee, which has reported favorably, and I think that committee is quite as competent to form a correct judgment as any other. As a slaveholder myself, I can see no danger in the proposition to incorporate these colored veterans, and I consider it a pleasure, as well as duty, to assent to their prayer.

Mr. Short did not doubt the perfect competency of the Militia Committee, or of the Senator from Assumption, to form a correct judgment on this or any other subject, however grave in its character. His opinion as that of a slaveholder, he regarded highly—and it had great weight with him—because it was to be supposed that he (Mr. Martin) would watch carefully that nothing injurious might be done. His only wish was that the bill be laid over for a short time, that members might have time to reflect on it. If it then be considered legitimate to allow associations of this kind, there is a way already provided. They can come in under the general law which now exists. But this was, he believed, the first time that a corporation of this kind had been asked from a Southern State.

Mr. Lewis said that the names signed to the petition were those of persons, all of whom were known to him. They were all old men who had served the country well. There was now only a handful remaining, and they simply ask of the Legislature that they may be permitted to associate themselves together for the purpose of mutual intercourse and benefit, during the short period which is yet allotted to them. If gentlemen desired more information on the subject, he had no objection that the bill lie over for a short time; but he could see no reason for refusing to grant the prayer of the petitioners. They are highly respected in the community in which they reside—they have always been treated well by the people of New Orleans, have been taken out on public occasions, &c., and are objects of veneration rather than suspicion.

Mr. Hodge hoped the Senator from New Orleans (Mr. Lewis) would explain the objects of the bill. He had heard something said about charitable purposes, but he did not see the necessity for incorporating a company, with this object, for these antiquated soldiers—war-worn veterans, he believed, was the popular term.

Mr. King remarked that he had more than once had occasion to call the attention of the Senate to the impropriety of granting special charters, when a general law exists which provides for the case. The general law shows the manner of forming a corporation just as well as we can, and it was passed with the object of preventing just such applications as this. We should avoid passing such bills, if only to save expense. Each bill would probably cost $500 before it passes through all its various stages; when the parties applying could go before a Notary Public and get the whole thing done for two dollars and a half.

The bill for the relief of ——— was taken up.

Mr. Hodge opposed the bill. If we admit such a system as this into our Legislature, we would never know where to stop. In his opinion, the Legislature had no constitutional power to grant this appropriation. But it might be said that there was a precedent for it—that things of the same kind had been done before. With him, that argument had no weight. Precedent was nothing, except when it is the evidence of a case having been examined and decided by a competent tribunal. But who can say that, when the precedent presented to us is violative of the law, violative of the Constitution, we ought to follow it? Such a precedent was no precedent for us. It ought to be condemned and discarded, instead of held up for imitation. He would warn Senators seriously against this kind of legislation, which has for some time been finding its way into our statute books.

He would warn them not to suffer themselves to be carried away, and induced to make appropriations of this nature, in violation of the Constitution of the State. He was opposed to making the appropriation asked for in this case, because he believed the Legislature had no power to grant it, and he gave notice now that he would not vote for any appropriation which he did not think was sanctioned by the Constitution. He would not regard a precedent set by the Legislature of 1840 as necessarily a fit precedent to be followed by the Legislature of 1853. Because that Legislature did wrong, is no reason that we should do wrong likewise. The wrong of that time does not, by repetition, resolve itself into right. If we should do this thing for one, we should have a host of applicants equally deserving and equally entitled to consideration. He did not feel inclined to favor the pretensions of every petitioner that might come here to solicit the charity of the State. But it would be said indignantly by some, that this person did not ask charity. Then there was no reason why it should be given at all.—The State was not legally or morally bound for it, and if it was not asked as a charitable donation, then there could be no ground for asking it at all. He would, therefore, oppose the bill, and move to lay it on the table indefinitely.

The motion prevailed.

ORDER OF THE DAY—THE CENSUS BILL.

The House bill, providing for the manner in which the State Census is to be taken, then came up.

An amendment was proposed, to except the parish of Orleans from the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. Derbes remarked that the reason for desiring this was that the assessors in New Orleans had too much to do, and therefore would not be able to do the work properly, and, moreover, they claimed that the compensation allowed was entirely too small.

Mr. Kenner said that on account of the great number of persons to be enumerated in the city, the compensation would be quite large enough. So far from its being too small, this was a good reason why it should be reduced in the city of New Orleans, where a person may start out for a morning walk and see more persons than in a morning's ride in the country; yes, probably more than in a week's ride.

After some further discussion, the section authorizing the assessors throughout the State to take the census, was adopted.

Mr. McCay moved a reconsideration.

Mr. Kenner said that if there was anything in the bill beyond what appeared on the surface, he hoped gentlemen would state it candidly. One thing was certain—the assessors have an important duty to perform. It was also of great interest to the city of New Orleans to have the census taken early in the spring, when there is a full population. He hoped, therefore, that the gentlemen from the city would see the impolicy of obstructing the speedy passage of the bill.—The assessors were elected by the people for the purpose of going from house to house, and assessing every man's property, and for this reason they must possess a more intimate acquaintance with the people than any other officer. Why then were gentlemen unwilling to trust these assessors? Why take away from them the duty of taking the census and give it to justices of the peace, to petty judges, for the recorders were nothing but petty judges. One of the gentlemen from New Orleans has said that there are only three assessors, and that that is not a large enough number to do the work. Does he not know that by the bill they have power to appoint assistants? If either of them is old, and incompetent to perform the labor imposed on him by the bill, as he understood one of them now here had represented himself to be, he can appoint deputies, and let them do the work for him. He can have as many as he likes, provided the compensation does not exceed the rate of two cents per capita. He repeated there must be something behind this unlooked for opposition to the bill.

Mr. McCay did not see what objection there could be to giving the power to the recorders. They were well acquainted all over New Orleans, and had been selected by the people as competent and faithful persons, just as well as the assessors. It did not follow that because either were elected by the people, they were more competent to take the census. He, for instance, might appoint just as good a door-keeper as the Senate could elect. Neither does it follow that the recorders are incompetent because they are petty judges. They are men of respectability and intelligence, and inferior to no other gentleman, though they may be sneered at as petty judges, and no injury can come to the people by permitting them to take the census.

Mr. Hodge was informed that, under the Constitution of 1845, the Assessors took the census of the city of New Orleans. There were at that time but three Assessors, and they managed to perform the work alone—without even the assistance of the deputies whom this bill authorizes the present Assessors to appoint. There were good reasons why these officers should be the ones to take the census—they must have a larger acquaintance among the people than any one else. They see almost every person in the city—at least every person over twenty-one years of age—in order to assess the poll-tax, and also every property-holder. They must, therefore, be peculiarly well qualified to perform the duties of census-takers. The bill proposed to impose no more on the present Assessors than the same class of officers were required to do in 1847. He had shown that, under the act of '47, the assessors performed the work required of them to the satisfaction of the State. Why, then, did gentlemen wish to change this system? Why did they wish to take this power of taking the census out of the hands of the Assessors, and place it in those of the Recorders? They cannot say that the Recorders are more intelligent than the Assessors—that they have more information—that they are better qualified in any respect. There were four Recorders, and three Assessors—but the bill says that the latter may appoint deputies to assist them in performing their duties. There was no reason, therefore, for the change proposed, and he hoped the amendment would not be adopted.

Mr. McCay said he had already conversed with two Assessors on the subject, and they had told him that it was impossible for them to perform the work.

Mr. Kenner said that if the motion to reconsider should be carried, he would propose an amendment to leave the election of census-takers to the people. We would see the object with which gentlemen on the other side press this matter. When they are before the people, they call them "the dear people;" and now, they wish to take out of the hands of the Assessors, who have been elected by the dear people, the privilege of taking the census, and confer it on a set of criminal judges. He said, in all confidence, that the election of the Assessors by the people, justified the Legislature in placing sufficient faith in them to allow them to take the census. If the object be to give office to the special favorites of four or five judges, he wanted to know it. The object was to give these few favorites an opportunity of putting some money in their pockets—that was the whole of it. For one, he would say that he would not, and could not, consent to such a proceeding.

The motion was reconsidered.

Mr. McCay offered a substitute, empowering the Recorder of each district to appoint two competent persons to take the census.

Mr. Lacey moved to refer the section, and substitute "to a committee composed of the delegation from New Orleans."

Mr. Kenner moved that they be referred to a committee of the whole Senate. What was it, he repeated, that gentlemen wished?

Mr. Lacey made a few remarks in favor of leaving the decision of the question to the delegation from New Orlean-.

Mr. Palfrey thought the subject had better be referred to a committee of the people of New Orleans, to be decided at the ballot-box.

Mr. Kenner wished the Senator from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) to say whether he desired that the power to take the census be taken from the Assessors, and given to the Recorders. Would it be right to do so, when the Assessors are elected by the people, who have thus expressed the highest confidence in them?

Mr. Derbes said that this would not be the first time that the Legislature had referred to the Recorders certain powers out of the usual line of their duty. For instance, they were authorized to correct errors in the assessment rolls. The Recorders, as well as Assessors, were elected by the people, who had thus shown confidence in them also. It was true, that they might be nothing but petty justices, but more votes were probably requisite to elect one of them, than the whole number by which the gentleman from Ascension was sent to the Senate.

Mr. Hodge. I do not intend, sir, by my vote, to recognise any such distinction between the city and the country as would be involved in the substitute proposed by the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay.) I do not see that any necessity for this distinction exists. I find by the act of 1847, that the census, under the old Constitution was taked by the Assessors It was not said then that they were not proper persons; it was not said that they were unable to perform the duty. On the contrary, they did perform it. Gentlemen have not given any good reason why the system should be changed now; they have not convinced me that the power of taking the census ought to be removed from the Assessors and vested in the Recorders. We have no Recorders in the country, but we have Assessors. They take our census, why cannot they take yours? Why are they not as competent in one place as another. Why should the bill make a special exception in favor of the city of New Orleans? Why should this special legislation for the parish of Orleans be continued? I entertain no sentiment of envy towards the city; on the contrary, I regard its progress and prosperity with pleasurable feelings, but I cannot see what circumstances exist through the operation of which the legislation, which suits the country will not suit the city. Why, sir, you may search the statute book from one end to the other, and examine every page with an attentive eye, and you can find no instance, in a case like this, of such an exception as is proposed. The gentlemen on the other side, in discussing this question, have not ventured to say thht the Assessors are not competent. They have not dared to cast that slur on the constituency which elected them. The Assessors did the work in 1847; but gentlemen say that they cannot do it now. They do not answer when we say that the bill confers on them the power to appoint assistants.

There must be something behind all this, Mr. President. If gentlemen are actuated in their course by political motives, let us know it. Let the country members know that they must submit to special legislation, for political purposes. Let us know it, I say, if it be so.

It is time, sir, that this system should be done away with; that the city should be contented to place herself on an equality with the country, and accept the same legislation. I am willing to anything to advance the prosperity of the city, but I am not willing to submit longer to this eternal exception in favor of the parish of Orleans

Mr Short dld not know the reasons which had induced the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay) to offer the substitute. He had voted for the reconsideration, believing that the Senators from New Orleans, knowing the opinions and wishes of the city people, and the necessities of the case, might offer something better. He had voted thus to hear the reasons which influenced the gentleman from N, Or-leans. If Senators thought there was anything behind this he could assure them, that so far as he was concerned, they were mistaken. He knew nothing beyond what he had stated. Motives of a party character had been also imputed. Of this likewise he knew nothing. He was not acquainted with party movements. He had never but once been in a party convention. All those who knew him, knew that under no circumstances could he be induced to give a vote without being able to advance good reasons for it. He should also vote for the reference; but unless the committee, in its report, could give good reasons for any substitute it might offer, he must vote against it.

Mr. Hodge explained the reasons which had induced him to speak of the affair as a party movement. He saw that on the vote which had been taken, the members were divided with reference to their politics. He also found that the party to which he belonged, was in favor of the original section as it came from the House, and had voted almost unanimously against making an exception in favor of the parish of Orleans. On the motion to reconsider, the two parties were arrayed against each other. These circumstances justified his allusion. Look at the votes—look at the record, and see whether the movement was not of a party character.

Mr. Martin did not see what political purpose was to be subserved by all this. The Recorders were all democrats—the Assessors were all democrats—consequently nothing was to be gained by giving this power to one more than the other. The consolidation bill passed at the last session of the legislature, gave the election of Assessors to the people. No party issue was made on that. He agreed with the Senator from East Baton Rouge that there ought to be no conflict between the city and country—that they ought to go hand in hand.

Mr. Rivers. If the Senator from 'East Baton Rouge insisted on his motion to refer, he should move to refer the matter to a committee of the whole Senate. He would say, frankly, what he thought of this proceeding. He heartily approved the remarks of the Senator from Caddo. He thought that an alarming distinction was made between the city and the country. That gentleman (Mr. Hodge) had shown, that in 1847, this work of taking the census was performed by the assessors. Why were they not equally competent now? There must be a political purpose in this. Senators from the country ought to watch such things with a jealous eye. If the city now succeeds in making them legislate for political interests, when she gets the capital there, she will make them vote for local interests.

Mr. Kenner. Will that committee (the delegation from New Orleans) be prepared to report to-morrow?

Mr. McCay said, he for one, would not report till he had had sufficient time to procure the statistics, and the requisite information from New Orleans, to enable him to report accurately.

Mr. Kenner was sorry that gentlemen had made a motion without having the requisite information.

Mr. Rivers insisted on his motion to refer the subject to a committee of the whole Senate, and called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were taken, and the motion was lost.

Mr. Rivers. Now, sir, gentlemen have done this; they have decided that the whole Senate, including the delegation from New Orleans, is not as competent to decide this question, as the delegation from New Orleans alone.

Mr. Derbes said this was not so. It was the general custom, as the gentleman knew, to refer subjects to the committees which, it was thought, were better prepared to examine them. The gentleman has also said that we made this thing a party question. This again was an error. It was the gentlemen on the other side who were in the habit of making everything a party question, by voting as a unit, and then accusing democrats of being responsible for it. This was not the first time that such a thing had happened. It had been done several times before when there were doubts among democrats, but no doubts among the whigs.

Mr. Burthe offered a substitute, providing that the people of New Orleans should elect the officers to take the census.

Mr. McCay was ready to discuss the question now.

Mr. Kenner thought the gentleman had to send to New Orleans for papers and persons.

Mr. Hodge. I should like to know the reason why the Senators from New Orleans think the assessors are not competent to take the census?

Mr. Derbes would tell the reason why. It is because they cannot attend to the work. His colleague had said that some of them actually refused to do it.

Mr. Hodge did not understand that the gentleman said so.

Mr. Derbes thought he (Mr. McCay) had said so. If he was mistaken, then he would assert it himself.

Mr. Martin said the gentlemen seemed to forget that part of the bill which compelled the assessors to do the work, under a heavy penalty.

Mr. Derbes said there was another reason for not giving this power to the assessors. They complain that the sum allowed as compensation is entirely too small. They care nothing about the office; but if they are to appoint assistants, they are certainly going to secure a portion of the profits for themselves. They would pay one cent per capita to the assistants, and pocket the rest themselves. This difficulty did not exist with the Recorders.

Mr. McCay moved to lay Mr. Burthe's substitute on the table.

He said that if he were on the Committee, he should endeavor in the report to present such reasons as would induce the whole Senate to vote for the substitute. He had been convinced that it was better to have this power of appointment vested somewhere else. At first he had thought of the Common Council; then it had been suggested to him that the Recorders would be the proper persons. He had adopted this suggestion because he believed that the Recorders had a larger acquaintance in the city, and could do the work better. If he had time, he could get good reasons from the assessors in regard to their inability to do the work.

Mr. Hodge had a few more remarks to make on this subject. If the Senate decided to take this power from the assessors, and give it to the Recorders, he should never again raise his voice in this Senate Chamber against any thing the City of New Orleans might ask, unless it involved a flagrant outrage on the rights of his constituents, because he would be satisfied that she could obtain anything she might demand, and that opposition would be fruitless. In 1847, as he said before, the assessors took the census and that without assistance. Has the city grown so much in the mean time, has the population increased so largely, that the same officers cannot now do what they did then? The gentlemen on the other side had assigned no good reasons for their course, and they could not expect country gentlemen to sacrifice a principle for the sake of pleasing them.

Mr. Short moved to lay the substitute and all the amendments on the table.

The motion was carried, after which the original section was adopted, when Mr. Griffin gave notice that to-morrow he should move a reconsideration.

Mr. Lacey moved to adjourn.

Mr. Martin desired that the Secretary should enter on the Journals that at 20 minutes to 3 o'clock a motion was made to adjourn.

After some few remarks, the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 11, 1853.

The bill amending the act of 1847, in relation to corporations, was taken up.

Mr. King. The principal change in the bill as reported by the Committee, is that telegraph companies are invested with the same rights of expropriation as other incorporated companies.

M. Mouton. I should like to have the bill so amended as to give to proprietors who may suffer by the action of a company, the right to sue the company in their own parish, and not force him to go out of it.

The bill passed with this amendment.

The bill reducing the rates of pay for certain judicial advertisements, &c., was taken up.

Mr. Martin. The object of this bill, sir, is to place all advertisements on a footing of equality, by reducing the rates paid for advertising Succession sales, to the same as are paid for advertisements of Sheriffs' sales.

Mr. King. I hope this bill will not be passed at this time. It involves a great change in the laws, and I am unwilling to rush into it without such examination as will convince me of its necessity. I cannot, at this time, say whether I approve of the bill or not. The subject of judicial advertisements is very important, and I hope it will not be acted on without due consideration. I hope the bill will be printed and laid before members for their inspection.

Mr. Martin. I know very well, sir, the secret motives which actuated the gentleman in his opposition to the bill. I know very well that an officer of the Senate, who might be better engaged in attending to his duties, has taken a very great interest in this bill, and has endeavored to defeat it. Now, sir, I do not see of what interest it can be to that gentleman. It is not intended as an attack on the Courier, nor can it affect the interests of Mr. La Sere.

Mr. King. I am astonished at the remarks of the gentleman. I hope the gentleman does not suppose, every time he sees a Senator on the floor, that some act of treason towards his side of the house is contemplated. For my part, I do not know of any secret influences; my motion to have the bill printed, was based on a conviction of its great importance.

Mr. Martin. As I said before, I do not level any shaft at the State Printer. I do not wish to take any advantage of Mr. La Sere. I only wish to abate an evil, the existence of which every one feels and acknowledges.

Mr. Lacey. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Assumption had no such motive as he has thought necessary to disclaim, but that he only wishes to correct an error which he thinks exists. Nevertheless, as the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. King) has said, there is scarcely any subject more important than that of the judicial advertising. I hope therefore that the bill will be printed and laid on the desks of members for their examination. I hold in my hand a bill in relation to the same subject, which I hope will also be printed and submitted to members for their inspection. I attribute no secret motive to the gentleman from Assumption, and I hope that he will see none in our effort to have a bill of this kind printed before taking action on it.

Mr. Martin. A motive has been attributed to me which was entirely foreign to my mind. I only intended to reflect on the conduct of an officer of this House in interfering with legislation instead of attending to his duties.

THE PREEMPTION BILL.

The bill to extend to preemptors the time of payment for their lands was returned from the House with a notice of disagreement.

Mr. Lacey moved to appoint a committee of conference.

Mr. Hodge. It is my opinion that the bill already extends more time to preemptors than they deserve. We have done what we can in the matter, and more important affairs now demand our consideration. I think we had better abandon this subject entirely. I think that the Senate will never agree to anything more than extension to settlers of the time of payment. Sooner than agree to anything further, I will move to lay the bill on the table. I have not heard anything to convince me that the subject is of any importance even to the parties most directly interested. I think likewise that I can suggest a consideration of some importance. The House, it is evident to my mind, will insist on providing for a new class of preemptors. What will be the effect of this if we consent? Under the act of 1852, warrants for a million of acres of land were issued and disposed of. I ask whether, if we create this new class of preemptors those who hold warrants under the act of 1852, will not have the right to locate lands which have been entered by the new preemptors. Can we say that we will exempt a large class of lands from location under these warrants? In my opinion they have the right to locate on part of the swamp lands. Those lands have been guaranteed by the State and no legislation now can deprive warrant holders under the act of 1852, from locating them.

I repeat that matters of much greater importance than this are pressing on the attention of the Legislature, and I therefore insist on my motion to take up and lay on the table

The motion to lay on the table was lost.

On motion of Mr. Boatner, the House bill to provide for the organization of the public schools in the parish of Jefferson, was taken up.

Mr. King moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education.

Mr. Wickliffe—I am opposed to referring the bill. The gentleman has repeatedly expressed himself opposed to special legislation, but he now seems to be in favor of it himself, particularly when the parish and city of Jefferson are to be exempted from the operation of the general school law. If the gentleman from Jefferson (Mr. Burthe) were here, he might be able to give some good reasons in favor of the bill, but I do not see why we should manifest such haste in relation to it during his absence.

Mr. Boatner—I had no idea of the magnitude of the principle which might be involved in the bill when I called it up. I did so at the request of the representative from Jefferson who came to me and told me that the bill was entirely of a local nature and intended solely for the convenience of the people of his parish. But I have heard enough of the bill to see that it involves a principle of great importance, and I shall therefore not insist on its passage.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Education.

The bill prohibiting the issue of small notes was returned from the House with an amendment.

Mr. Wickliffe—the amendment of the House renders it nugatory. Our object in passing it was to prevent the circulation of small notes whither issued in or out of the State. Under that amendment a man may circulate as many as he pleases provided he issues them beyond the limits of the State. In my opinion it defeats the whole object of the bill.

Mr. King—I do not so understand the amendment.

Mr. Wickliffe—I do not know what was the intention of the House in making this amendment, but, as I have said, it will operate so as to defeat the whole object of the bill. The object was to prevent the circulation of small notes in the State of Louisiana; but under this bill, as it now stands, Mr. Jacob Barker, or any one else, can go into another State, establish an agency, and flood this State with a small paper currency.

Mr. Short. The amendment consists of a mere transposition of words in one section of the bill, but I look at its effect, and not at its form, which is a minor consideration. The object of the Senate bill was to rid the State of the annoyance resulting from the circulation of small notes, and with that view the bill was passed by this House. Since that time a memorial has been sent here to entertain us with the views of the writer on banking and finance. It was sent by a distinguished individual of the city of New Orleans, who undertook to enlighten the Senate from a distance on those important subjects. We were informed, however, that the committee was already in possession of all the information conveyed to us by that distinguished gentleman, and consequently there was no necessity for acting on his memorial. Now comes this amendment from the House, which has the effect of defeating the very object of the bill. It absolutely destroys the Senate bill, emasculates it, and deprives it of its virility. The effect is that if one B. circulates notes, while another, over the river, or any where else out of the State, issues them, he can not be reached, and thus the object of the bill is defeated. Now unless we reach the source of the evil we cannot possibly put a stop to it If we let it go on we shall probably soon hear it said that there is an absolute necessity the evil should continue to exist. Our small change, and the gold dollars which now abound, will be driven off by these notes, and then it will be said that unless we retain the small notes we will have no change. This will be the argument unless we destroy the evil at once.

Mr. Hodge. If Senators will examine the amendment they will find that it does not have the effect supposed. I think it carries out the intention of the Senate.

Mr. Wickliffe. I will read the original section and the amendment. (Reads.)

After some further unimportant discussion the bill was referred to the Committee on Banks and Banking.

Mr. Wickliffe then rose and said: I rise, sir, to a question of privilege. I find in the printed reports of the debates of the Senate, on the 26th of March, the following:

"Mr. Wickliffe. To what question does the gentleman allude?

Mr. Lacey. To the question involved in the resolution to go into an election for United States Senator.

Mr. Wickliffe. I understood the gentleman to have denied that there was any constitutional question involved in that resolution."

The remark I made use of was that the Senator, during the discussion on the question of referring to the Judiciary Committee the resolution to go into an election for United States Senator, had denied that any legal point was involved in the resolution.

To this, as I observe by the report, the gentleman replied:

"Mr. Lacey. If the gentleman heard my argument on that question, and read the printed report of it, and did not see that I had argued it as a constitutional point, he endeavored to reply to what he did not comprehend."

Now, sir, I wish what I say to be placed on the record. I presume the gentleman, in that remark, alluded to this speech, a copy of which I hold in my hand. I say, sir, that this speech never was delivered here—Senators know that it was not delivered here—it was not reported by the Reporter. I wish to be distinctly understood when I say that this speech never was made by the Senator, and I desire that what I have said be placed on the record.

Mr. Lacey. I certainly cannot object that the Senator should have his speech spread upon the journals of this House. It was an able speech, and added another to the many laurels which adorn his brow, and I certainly can have no objection that it be entered on the record. As to the statement of the gentleman, I can say that what I remarked, on the occasion to which he has reference, was that the question involved in the resolution to go into an election for United States Senator was rather of a political than of a legal or constitutional nature.

Mr. Wickliffe. The gentleman is mistaken. It is not my speech that I wish spread upon the journal.—I desire only that what I say now be placed on record. I do recollect having asked him whether there was not a constitutional question involved in the resolution, and he replied by saying that he viewed it as a political question. I repeat again that the speech to which the Senator referred was not made by him, and was not reported by the Reporter, and I wish this fact to be placed on record. I wish to put a stop to this system of reporting by Senators.

Mr. Lacey. The gentleman may place on the record what he pleases—I have no objection.

MONDAY, March 14, 1853.

Mr. Wickliffe presented a petition signed by several citizens of the parish of Vermillion, remonstrating against the bill providing for a new election to change the seat of justice in said parish; and he moved that the Secretary of the Senate be instructed to procure from the House of Representatives the act ordering a new election in said parish, for the purpose of reconsidering the same.

Mr. Mouton. I was told, Mr. President, that the memorial just presented to the Senate, by the Senator from West Feliciana, is a strong document. I have not read this petition. The act providing for a new election in the parish of Vermillion, for the purpose of fixing the seat of justice in said parish, is local in its nature, and like all measures of this kind, it must meet with opposition from those whose interests are to be affected by its passage. This bill was passed by the Senate several days ago. I am not aware, Mr. President, that it is customary to send to the House of Representatives for bills which have finally passed this house. But inasmuch as I do not want to have it said that I have caused this act to pass the Senate, without giving an opportunity to those who are opposed to its passage, of being heard, I am willing, if it can be done, that the bill be sent for, to be reconsidered by the Senate. I am not afraid of the opposition to this bill In asking for a new election in the parish of Vermillion, to allow the people of said parish to remove their seat of justice from the point where it is now established, and to locate it elsewhere, I have asked for nothing unreasonable. I am perfectly willing to open this matter to discussion. The Secretary may therefore go and get the bill from the House of Representatives, in order to give an opportunity of being heard, to those who are opposed to the passage of this bill.

Mr. Griffin. I think this course unusual, and without precedent. It is the first time since I have had the honor of a seat on this floor, that I have heard a proposition of this kind made and insisted on. This bill is now in the lower house, and entirely out of the control of this body. Now, sir, the only instances in which I have ever known a bill asked to be returned to the house in which it originated and passed, were in cases where an omission of a word was overlooked, or an error of some kind, which rendered a return of the bill essentially necessary in order that the correction should be made. In cases of this kind, it has been usual to ask that the bill be returned for the purpose of making the correction. But never have I known an instance of the return of a bill being asked, when it has passed one body, and is entirely out of its possession, and the time for reconsideration expired. I say never before have I heard of an instance where a bill is asked to be brought back with a view that it may again be acted on. The proper place now, sir, it appears to me, to oppose or amend this bill, will be in the other house—it being out of the possession of this.

Mr. Mouton. I wish, Mr. President, to have it well understood that, so far from opposing the motion made by the honorable Senator from West Feliciana, it is my desire, on the contrary, and I am anxious, to have the bill brought back in the Senate, to be reconsidered.

The President said that more than three days having elapsed since the passage of the bill by the Senate, the same could not be reconsidered, even if it was brought back in the Senate; that, therefore, the motion made by the Senator from West Feliciana was out of order.

THE PREEMPTION BILL.

The report of the committee of conference on the preemption bill was taken up, and the bill passed as it came from the House.

Mr. Mouton introduced a bill to provide for the collection, keeping and disbursement of the public moneys, and to prevent the embezzlement of the same.

Mr. Mouton explained that the object of the bill was to change the law of 1844, which repealed a section of the law of 1805, on the same subject.

The bill passed.

Mr. Lacey introduced a bill for the relief of the branch of the Louisiana State Bank at Baton Rouge.

Mr. Lacey. I will briefly explain the object of this bill. Some time since the Legislature of this State directed Hiram Powers to model a statue of Washington for Louisiana, and made an appropriation for that object. This appropriation was soon exhausted, and Mr. Powers made an application for more funds to enable him to go on with the work. The Governor, anticipating the action of the Legislature, gave a note for $3000, which was cashed by the branch bank here. The object of this bill is to refund to the bank, the $3000 with interest.

The bill passed.

A bill compelling litigants to pay in advance the sum allowed by law to witnesses for expenses, was taken up.

Mr. Nicholls. I think, Sir, that this bill ought to pass. The law as it now exists admits of the greatest and most annoying evils. In many cases suits are brought by irresponsible persons, and witnesses are summoned from a distance and forced to attend Court without regard to the fact whether they have the means to pay their expenses or not. This is not made a question at all. An excuse from a witness, for non attendance, that he has not the means of transportation, and cannot pay the expenses to which he is necessarily subjected, is not received. Now, Sir, it seems to me, that when a person goes into Court, in order to secure what he considers his rights, he should advance something to the witnesses on whom he relies to substantiate his claim. It is not enough that the witnesses be paid—they should receive the money in advance. They are often compelled to go from home, and are forced to pay their necessary expenses at the place of trial. If they cannot do so they are thrown upon the charity of the town. Is this right? Is it just? Now, Sir, I ask what harm can possibly result from the passage of this bill. It only asks that witnesses be entitled to demand in advance of the person summoning them, the per diem allowed by law. This is not only an act of justice which should be extended to witnesses, but it will operate as a check to useless litigation; it will prevent the bringing of many suits which have no proper foundation, and will reduce the number of witnesses summoned and thus save much of the time of the Courts. These are certainly desirable objects, and if there are any reason of equal weight existing on the other side, I should like to hear them. I should like to hear it stated why witnesses should not have the right to demand in advance, the sum to which they are entitled for their services, and which otherwise they may never receive. It may be said that it is the duty of the clerks of Courts to exact security in these cases, from the person bringing suit. But of what avail is it to a witness who cannot pay his board that security has been given? Indeed, in many cases, the security itself proves to be worthless. I know of some cases in my own parish which have lasted for three years, and the witnesses forced to attend at every term during that time, many of them, laboring men having been compelled to travel twenty miles from home. In that section sometimes witnesses are forced to go thirty miles to attend Court, and have to make the journey in skiffs or across prairies when they have either to walk or to hire a conveyance.

In these cases, to which I have alluded, the witnesses have been subjected to all this expense and have not yet received a single cent. If the law had been then as proposed now by this Committee this evil and injustice—an evil and injustice which must be acknowledged by every one—would have been entirely obviated.

Mr. Wickliffe.—The gentleman says he should like to hear what objections any one can have to this bill. I, sir, have some objections which I think are good ones. As the gentleman has stated, the law at present demands that security be exacted from persons bringing suit. This where I live is sufficient for the protection of witnesses. The bill before the Senate proposes that money enough to pay expenses must be deposited before an attachment can issue for a witness. Now, sir, can such a provision be found to exist in any other State? Here if a witness be absent from the State, his testimony can be taken by commission. If he be within the State his presence at Court can be secured by attachment. What is the object of the bill? The gentleman says it is intended for the protection of witnesses. But it does not protect them any more than they are now protected by the security which must be given. What would be the effect of the bill: A person might have a claim of a thousand dollars, and if he had not money enough of his own to deposite, he would be forced to borrow it, and this he might find difficult or even impossible. I ask whether this would not tend to defeat the ends of justice, and to prevent an individual from securing his just rights. I do not believe that the present law can operate as a hardship on witnesses, and I shall therefore certainly vote against this bill.

Mr. Nicholls. A law similar to the one proposed exists in New York, and, I believe, in New Hampshire. The gentleman says that if a claimant have not the means to deposite, as provided by this bill, he will be put to the necessity of borrowing. This will certainly operate as a hardship on him, but the question is whether the hardship should be borne by one or by many. I think that when a citizen goes into Court he should be compelled to pay the necessary expenses of his witnesses.

The bill passed.

ORDER OF THE DAY—THE JUDICIARY BILL.

The Judiciary bill was taken up.

Mr. Lacoste desired that the bill lie over, as several Senators were absent.

Mr. Short. I am opposed to laying this bill over.—We have frequently laid over important bills for the accommodation of absent Senators, and if we go on in this way we will never be able to pass anything through.

It is evident that we must have a judiciary system of some sort. If we cannot have large districts, let us have small ones, but at least let us do something.—First let us try the sense of the Senate on the bill from the Lower House, and if that suit us, nothing farther will be needed. If it do not suit us, then the substitute of the gentleman from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) may be taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe. I have no idea that the bill which has passed the House can ever pass the Senate. My notion is to take up the bill introduced as a substitute and discuss it. That will be a full test.

The bill and substitute were read by the Secretary.

Mr. McCay thought that the bill ought to be printed.

Mr. Short. I will take this occasion to explain my position with reference to the subject now before the Senate. A bill has already passed the House, by which the State is divided into eight districts outside of the city of New Orleans. This is what is called the large district system. It is contemplated that if this system is adopted then a Probate Court will be established in each parish. The question for us to decide is whether we will adopt the large district system with Probate Courts in each parish, or that by which the whole State will be cut up into small districts without Probate Courts. In addition to these, there is still another system proposed; that is to retain the districts as they are at present. This is the system proposed by the substitute which was offerred this morning. I had supposed that Senators had made up their minds on this subject, and that they had come to a definite conclusion as to whether they would adopt the large or the small district system. The Senators have not decided—we had better adjourn and let things rest as they are.

The question is whether we will vote for large districts, and diminished expenses, so far as the District Courts are concerned. However, if we establish this system we must do so with a view of also establishing, Probate Courts in each parish. Although, this system would nominally increase the expenses of the judiciary, yet when we reflect that the fees now paid to Clerks of Courts would be transferred to the Probate Judges, we will at once see that it would, in fact, be cheaper. When, at the same time we, count on the time lost at present, by having all the testimony taken in writing, which can be avoided by having the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court confined to questions of law only, when I say, we reflect on the time which would thus be saved to the District Courts, and to what an extent their labors would be reduced, we will see the propriety of establishing the large district system. When we consider the fact that the expenses of our judiciary, not to travel beyond the expenses of the Supreme Court, and of the five District Courts of the city of New Orleans, exceed the whole salaries paid to the Judges in Mississippi, the mind is forced inevitably to a contemplation of the awful expense of our present machinery. The question is what system can we adopt to reduce the expenses of the judiciary to the people of the State. The great complaint now is not in regard to the manner in which justice is administered, except so far as the probate system is concerned. Except this, the present system operates very well. Two complaints are made, but no manner has yet been specified in which they can be remedied.—The first complaint is that the judiciary is too expensive. This is rather a vague expression. The assertion has not been reduced to figures. No plan has been proposed by which the evil is to be remedied. But unless this be accomplished, and also the more speedy administration and settlement of estates be provided for, nothing will be gained by legislative action.

Let us come now to the point. How will the large district system operate? It will not, as I have said, nominally reduce our expenses. On the contrary, it will ostensibly increase them. But, I repeat, when we take into consideration that much of the business done by clerks of courts, for which fees are paid, will be transferred to the Probate Judges, we will see that, although nominally the expenses will be increased, yet, in fact, they will be diminished. Thus one evil may be reached, if we establish this system. The next question is in regard to the administration of estates. We all know that a party in possession finds it difficult to give up to any one else It is important, therefore, that some system should be adopted by which courts shall have power to compel the speedy settling up and administration of estates. For this reason, sir, I shall vote for the bill from the Lower House.

Mr. Wickliffe—The House bill, in my opinion, is liable to many objections. In the first place, under the system established by it, the districts are entirely too large. It would be almost impossible for the judges to travel over such an extent of country, particularly as at many seasons communication is interrupted by bad roads, low water, and other causes of a similar nature. In addition to this, there is the objection that the large district system would prove much more expensive than the present. The salaries of the eight District Judges, at $3,500 each would amount to nearly $30,000, and then we have the additional expense of the Probate Courts. The 16 judges at $3,000 each would cost only $48,000. The system adopted by the House would cost about $62,000—adding the expenses of the District Judges, to the salaries of the Probate Judges. But let the substitute be passed, and the districts will be of a convenient size—small enough for the judges to reach the court houses without difficulty, and there would be no obstacle to the passage of a bill defining and limiting the powers of clerks, I do not understand that there is any complaint against the operation of the present system, although some do complain that the courts are not held often enough. This evil is remedied by an express provision of the bill. I oppose that system which contemplates 28 districts out of New Orleans, thinking, as I do, that it would be calculated to bring the Judiciary system of Louisiana into just contempt. But 16 districts will be amply sufficient, and when we define and limit the powers of clerks everything will be right. I hope that the substitute will pass.

Mr. Lacoste—I have always endeavored, Mr. President, to act justly towards my colleagues of the Senate, and I hope that the same conduct will be observed towards myself. The bill as it stands involves a grievous wrong on my constituents by placing the parishes of San Bernard and Plaquemines in the same district with Jefferson, which has no connection with them either commercially or geographically, and would make the district too large for a single judge. I hope the bill will not be permitted to pass in this shape.

Mr. Wickliffe—In placing the gentleman's parish in the connection to which he has alluded, there was no intention or disposition to impose additional labors on the judge. Under present circumstances, however, it was almost impossible to avoid this collocation of parishes, and, moreover, the gentleman should consider that Jefferson is placed in very good company. I hope he will withdraw his objections and take the bill as it is.

Mr. Lacoste—The gentleman justifies the bill by saying that Jefferson is placed in good company. He should remember that when good company is not needed, it can very readily be dispensed with.

Mr. Lacey—I suppose that in discussing the merits of the bill before the Senate, I should confine my remarks strictly to that bill. Nevertheless, in giving my views, I shall take the liberty of showing the advantages of the bill which I have placed before the Senate, and shall endeavor to defeat the bill before the Senate, in order to reach a direct vote on my own.

In the first place, I shall premise, by saying that I prefer the bill of the Senate to that of the House. The House bill proposes a few large districts, and a Probate Judge in each parish. This system seems to me to be highly objectionable. Rather than adopt it I would take the substitute of the gentleman from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe.) But it seems to me, and I think it must be evident to every one who has bestowed the slightest consideration the subject, that the people of the State desire a change in our Judiciary system. The substitute involves no change except an increase in the size of one or two districts But is it not evident that the people absolutely desire a change? Has not this been decided by our elections? Is it not made manifest in the public prints? Is it not one of the grand objects of the present Legislature? Why these appeals, these imperious demands for a more speedy and certain administration of justice, if we are to close the doors of Legislation and turn a deaf ear to the wants of the people? I say it is manifest that the people absolutely desire a change, and therefore I am opposed to the substitute, inasmuch as it does not propose any departure from or improvement on the present system.

If I rightly interpret the popular will, if I know any thing of the wants and wishes of the people, a change is absolutely necessary. The question is, what system shall we adopt in order to secure such a change as will operate in a beneficial manner. What system presents these considerations in the organization of the judiciary department? With the exception of the substitute now before the Senate, but two systems have been brought forward—the one offered by myself making twenty-eight District Courts, with probate jurisdiction, and the one forming eight districts, with a Probate Court in each parish,

I shall briefly but as well as I am able, endeavor to convince the Senate that the House bill is impracticable in its nature. Now, sir, what does this bill propose? It contemplates the formation of eight judicial districts, seven of which are to be out of the city of New Orleans. The first objection to this system which occurs to my mind is that in many of the districts the topography of the country would render it absolutely impossible for the district judge to hold regular terms of court. Is it not evident that if the districts be framed in this manner it will be impossible for some of the judges to perform the duties which are thrown upon them by law? The Senator from San Bernard tells us that it would be almost impossible for a judge to travel over the district in which his parishes are placed. Thus it will be seen that it would be absolutely impossible for the judges to perform, in a satisfactory manner, the duties assigned to them. Here, then, is an insurmountable obstacle. There is also another objection. If the districts be so large, it will be impracticable for a person to obtain those necessary orders of court which must sometimes be granted. A person would have to travel many miles, or wait several months before he could procure an order for the sale of mortgaged property. Besides this, the system might operate unjustly upon persons accused of criminal offences. They may be innocent of the offence of which they are accused, yet they may languish months in a dreary prison before the judge can give an order for their release. Do you not all see that, under these circumstances, the bill is impracticable? Do you not see that all interlocutory orders, orders of sale, &c., would be absolutely stayed unless the person desiring to procure them should travel over a widely extended district in order to find a judge?—Another plausible position is that we should not be able to obtain proper judges, on account of the length of time they will be compelled to be absent from their families. They will be taken away from the domestic hearth, and separated for a great portion of the year from their families, and compelled to go through the hardships attendant on travelling through large districts, and the performance of their judicial duties. Do you suppose that in spite of this great obstacle you will be able to bring the best talent to the bench?—The result of the large district system will be not only to produce hardship and injustice, but will prevent the acquisition of the best legal talent, because a man who could forget his duties to his home and his family would forget the proper discharge of his duties as judge. If he could neglect and forget his home and family, he would not be fit for a high judicial station. But these are not the only objections. Under this system it will be necessary to provide probate courts. If we have large districts then will come in that old probate system which forms part of the system adopted by the House The first objection to the probate system is in regard to the salaries paid. The salaries must either be low, and thus poor judges be the result, or they must be high, and so produce over-taxation. I believe it is in contemplation to pay the probate judges $500. I know that amount is specified in one bill. I, sir, will never vote for a bill which contains such a provision. Just think of it. You know I am correct when I say that the probate interests are the most important in the State, and yet you wish to confide them to a man who is willing to receive a salary of $300. Will that secure the best legal talent? Can any one for a moment imagine such a thing?—But, it is said, the bill contains a provision that the judge may practice law. This I look upon as an objectionable feature rather than as a recommendation. Again, it is said the parishes may have the power of increasing the salaries of their judges. This, also, I regard as extremely objectionable. It will give the rich parishes an opportunity to secure good judges by paying them large salaries, while the poorer ones will not be able to do so. I insist that the power given to the parishes to increase the salaries is no recommendation. It is legislating for the richer and against the poorer parishes.

Mr. Rivers. I do no not know of any such proposition.

Mr. Wickliffe. It was a proposition made by the Senator from Caddo (Mr. Hodge.)

Mr. Short. By the bill which I introduced the probate judges are to receive $700 or $750, and are permitted to practise law.

Mr. Lacey. I shall endeavor to express my views in relation to the proposition which I have laid before the Senate. If that is agreed to, the Senate will vote down these bills till it comes to mine. I may be a little out of order, but I trust I shall be permitted to express my views on all the systems which have been brought forward.

As I have said, I consider the low rate of $500, as a salary to probate judges, as objectionable. The bill from the House fixes the salary at $1000, but that is almost as bad. For $1000 you cannot obtain better judges than for $500. Both sums are badly calculated to secure the best talent. But the House bill contemplates that the judge may practise law. Do you think that a judge ought to be permitted one day to adjudge a case, and the next appear as an advocate before another court? Will he not naturally be influenced in his opinions and decisions? We may talk as much as we please about the impartiality of an attorney in examining a case, but we know that it is human nature to espouse the side of a case on which one's interests lie. The mind of a man is naturally biased and his opinions take a shade from the case in which he may happen to be employed. Thus he would be prevented from deciding impartially as a judge. If you permit him to practice law, will he not endeavor to procure popularity with the litigious community? Imperceptibly, of course,—for the sacredness of his oath would prevent an open attempt of this kind, though, indeed, poor human nature might be driven to that sad extremity. Owing, then, to the poor salaries, to the permission to practise law, to the feature which permits the parishes to increase the pay of judges, I consider the system extremely objectionable. But are these the only objections? No, sir, they are not. The difference in the jurisdiction of the different courts is, to my mind, a serious obstacle in the way of the adoption of the probate system. The question of jurisdiction has always been an important element of litigation. Sometimes for months parties in litigation are endeavoring to test the question of jurisdiction, in order to ascertain the proper court in which to try the case on its merits.

I would ask why the bar of New Orleans, with all the wisdom and experience which it embodies—with all the desire to perfect the judiciary system of the the State that must animate it—requests the Legislature to adopt such a system as will make no distinction between the jurisdiction of the Probate and other Courts. It is true that now certain cases have preference in particular Courts, but all the Courts have concurrent jurisdiction; and therefore, there is no obstacle of this kind to the speedy administration of justice. I appeal to the resolutions of the New Orleans bar—I appeal to the judgment of Senators—whether they will adopt that system which will have the effect of keeping the Courts open year after year,—and for what purpose? To settle questions on their merits? No; but that after protracted litigation. the plaintiff may turn away disgusted, on finding that the Court to which he has appealed for justice has no jurisdiction over the case.

Under the bill which I have had the honor to lay before the Senate, I believe the result would be very different. I think it fully developes the idea of carrying justice to every man's door. If I cannot secure the twenty-eight districts for which my bill provides, I am willing to have the number reduced; but I can never vote for the principle of drawing a distinction between the ordinary and the Probate Courts. That principle is in itself abhorrent to my feelings, and is rendered still more abhorrent by the features engrafted on it by the lower House. I go for that system which compels the judges to hold Court in every parish the people desire, because it would produce a more speedy and certain administration of justice. I have therefore introduced my bill in order to respond to the demands of the popular will, which requires that in each parish Courts shall be held twice a year for the trial of criminal cases, and twice a year for the decision of civil cases. What objection can be urged against this system? As far as I have heard, there is but one. It is said it will make the judges contemptible, on account of the small size of the districts. If a judge administer justice impartially and ably, he will always command respect; he will always take a place among the highest dignitaries of the land, however circumscribed the circuit of his jurisdiction. But, if judges are to receive the insignificant salary of $500 a year—if one day they are to act the advocate before a court, and the next sit in judgment on the bench—if, from time to time, they are to beseech the police juries to increase their salaries—do you not think that then the judiciary would sink into an abject contempt?

I hope, then, that the Senate will concur in my bill. Let it be amended, if necessary—let the imperfections which it may contain be stricken out; but I do contend that, as a system, it stands higher than any yet proposed. I hope that the other bill will be voted down, in order to reach this one. I mean no disrespect towards Senators who entertain different views, but I think it evident that their systems are impracticable, or fail to meet the wishes of the people.

Mr. Wickliffe. I would ask the Senator whether his bill does not contemplate an expenditure of over $70,000. There are to be twenty-eight judges, at $3,000 each.

Mr. Lacey. The salary is fixed at $3,500.

Mr. Wickliffe. That would make the cost exceed $80.000.

Mr. King. Our great object, Mr. President, should be to act advisedly on this subject, and after such full and mature consideration, that we may be certain to adopt a system which will be satisfactory to the public, and which is best adapted to the ends of justice. After reflection, I have come to the conclusion that the substitute offered by the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe) is the only bill that can pass—the only one sustained by the opinions of the Senate.

I understand that this bill contemplates the same number of districts that exist under the present system. It provides for four terms a year, at two of which probate business exclusively shall be transacted, while the other two may be devoted to all kinds of business, including probate. I think this would suit the public, and bring justice as near as possible to every man's door. I will now briefly explain the reasons which have influenced me in forming these views. In the first place I consider the economical view of the subject as of great importance. I have looked at the effect in dollars and cents of the various systems proposed, and I find that with large districts having Judges at a salary of $3,500, and a Probate Judge in each parish at not less than $1,000, for it would be almost impossible to have justice well administered under a system of miserable cheap Judges—I find, I say, that under this system, instead of an expenditure of $40,000, we shall have to pay the handsome little sum of $75,000.

Under the system proposed by the Senator from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey,) the cost would amount to $84,000. It is true that the number of districts and Judges may be reduced, but still there will be a large increase of expenses over the present system. The gentleman from East Baton Rouge has informed us that public opinion imperiously demands a change in our Judiciary. For my part, after the most careful observation, I have not been able to perceive any indication that the public demand a material change in the present system, much less such a change as will almost double our expenses.

The present system is undoubtedly much better than the Probate Court system. I reprobate that system as much as the gentleman who has just spoken. But there is one position in which, I think, he will agree with me—that the Clerks of Courts are, as a general rule, much better acquainted with the Probate business than even professional gentlemen. We rarely take a step in Probate proceedings without consulting the Clerk and obtaining his opinion. I think in this class of cases the Clerks will be found superior to any Probate Judges. They will be found more competent, more honest, and better qualified to do the business than a lawyer picked up from the fag end of the profession, at $500 a year.

With regard to the system proposed by the Senator from East Baton Rouge, I think the Districts are entirely too small. There would be some districts in the State in which it would be almost impossible to find competent Judges, and even if found they would have very little to do. To give the same salaries to Judges who have little to do, as to those whose whole time is occupied, would be a manifest injustice. There might be some Judges who might not be engaged more than four months during the year, while others might be compelled to work nearly the whole time.

Now, sir, I am at a loss to know the cause of that revolution in public opinion by which it is said that this probate system has grown into such high favor. Once there was a universal feeling among the people of the State against the old rotten system which was extinguished by the Constitution of 1845.

Mr. Short.—Does the gentleman think that the probate system contemplated to be established now is any thing like the old system?

Mr. King.—It must be something like it or it would not be called by the same name.

Mr. Short.—I wish it to be distinctly understood that I have no desire to open that Pandora's box again. The system which I wish to establish is not at all similar to the old parish Judge system.

Mr. King.—I am happy to hear that the gentleman does not contemplate re-opening that Pandora's box, which was replete with so many evils and which has been so happily closed. It may be true that the gentleman does not advocate a system similar to the old one, but when I see it I shall be better able to form a judgment on that point. He proposes to give the Probate Judges $750 a year. Now, sir, I ask whether there is a respectable overseer in the country, or even a cook in the city of New Orleans who would be willing to give his services for such a paltry sum as that. Are we to suppose that for the miserable sum of $750 we can procure a man competent to fulfil the duties of the office, a man who must study a profession and be well versed in its principles—a man who holds in his hands the fortunes of the living and the dead? Can we, I ask, find such a man for such a sum? The Clerks of Courts now act well as conservative officers. They have not the power to decide but they have the power to conserve. This, with the power to the Judges—who under the system proposed by the Senator from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe)—to try probate cases four times a year, is the best system yet proposed. It is more convenient, more economical, better adapted to the wants of the public, and does not involve a violent departure from established systems. For these reasons I hope it will receive the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. Short—I have a few words to say in reply to the gentleman who last addressed the Senate. Three Judicial systems have been brought forward. Out of these we are to choose the one which we suppose to be adapted to secure the sure and speedy administration of justice. Of course the advantages and disadvantages which attach to either system must be taken into consideration. The large districts will relieve the Judiciary from that contemptible character which, as some gentlemen think, would be given to it by judges who receive small salaries. It would be relieved from that burthen of contempt which has been thrown on it on that account. It has been said that, reduced salaries will reduce the respectability of the judges. According to this doctrine a man who holds office is respectable in proportion to the amount of money he receives. Now, sir, I had supposed that the test of respectability was the character of the man—that his fitness for the office he fills, and the ability with which he discharges its duties make him a respectable officer. But I shall use the gentleman's own argument in favor of the Eight District system. Under that system the judges will receive large salaries and will consequently, according to his idea, be infinitely more respectable than under a system of smaller districts and lower salaries. It is true that the districts will comprise a large extent of territory, and that the judges will have much labor to perform. One gentleman has made use of this fact as a pretext for appealing to the kindness of the Senate, and to all those tender feelings with which humanity is so deeply imbued. "Is there," he asked, "a man worthy to be called a man, who could so far forget his duties to his family as to absent himself from them for several months every year, while engaged in performing the duties of his office? Is there a man who would be willing to do this and to travel from point to point over bad roads and along swollen water-courses? So sir, it seems that dangers by land and dangers by sea, and the tender feeling of humanity stand in the way of the gentleman. But he should remember that if we adopt large districts we shall have respectable judges. It has been said that if you give large salaries you will have very respectable judges indeed. This will be the case under the Eight-District system, and consequently the gentleman's own argument is turned against himself.

But there is another reason in favor of this system. It will be found, practically, more economical than any other. Say that the Probate Judges, at the estimate of the gentleman from New Orleans, will receive $1,000 a year. This will amount to $47,000 for the whole State. Adding $28,000 for the salaries of the District Judges, you have a total of $75,000, for which you have a system of District Courts and a Probate Judge in each parish. But under the system proposed by the gentleman from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey,) you will have a series of districts in which the respectability of the Judges will be destroyed, if the argument of the gentleman be correct, and this at an expense of $80,000. His system will have all the disadvantages of one of those proposed without the respectability of the other.

I come now to the Parish Judge system which has received so much reprobation. If gentlemen will look at the debates of the Convention of 1845 they will see the character of that system fully discussed. From those discussions gentlemen will see that they are greatly mistaken in their estimate of the character of the Probate system as proposed in one of the bills before the Senate. What does that system propose? It proposes nothing more than to give to certain Courts a distinct jurisdiction over a particular subject, imposing specific duties on the Judges, and to pay them salaries for fulfilling those duties. The great objection to the old Parish Judge system was that the Judges had so many opportunities of extortion by means of the manner of payment in fees. Does the gentleman understand that under the present Constitution Judges can receive nothing but their salaries? that they cannot go and get an order of sale as suggested by the gentleman? Does he think that can be done under the Constitution? The other objections to the Probate system are more imaginary than real. It has been said that there will be a conflict of jurisdiction. Whence will this be? What will be its duties? Why they will be so plain and simple that any lawyer will be able to tell whether his case comes within the jurisdiction of the Probate Court or not. But it is said that the Bar of New Orleans, with that concentrated wisdom which characterizes it, has determined against the Probate system. Well, what if it did? Are we to be governed entirely by the decision of the New Orleans bar?

They have put another provision in their bill to which I am entirely opposed. A citizen of Carroll may be sued in New Orleans, and yet not be able to plead against the jurisdiction of the Court. The only satisfaction they can get will be in not being compelled to pay costs.

Mr. King explained that such was not the object of the bill.

Mr. Short. I am not disposed to take for gospel everything that may be said even by the New Orleans bar, even though it be the centre of legal light and intelligence. I am in favor of the bill from the House. The districts formed by it are respectable—the salaries given by it are respectable—and consequently, on the theory advanced by some gentlemen, we shall have very respectable Judges. This would certainly obviate one of the great objections which have been advanced.

Again, sir, when there is a Judge in each parish exercising a continual supervision over persons acting in a trust capacity—having a constant eye upon them, always ready to grant rules and orders of Court—the great object of obtaining a speedy settlement of estates, is obtained. The gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of this question seem to have a great contempt for a salary of $1000 a year.

It appears from the remarks of one of them (Mr. King) that a cook or a scullion in the city of New Orleans may easily be elevated in the scale of respectability over a Probate Judge A steward on board a steamboat, receiving $1500 a year, would be more respectable by 50 per cent. Now, sir, I say that a suitable person to fill the office of Probate Judge, can be obtained for a thousand dollars a year. Even for $700 a competent man can be found—because at the same time he may practise in the District Courts. Is this liable to the objection made by the Senator from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey)? As long as no question of jurisdiction can arise, there can be no danger. What are the duties of a Probate Judge? He is simply to decide on the relations of others as administrators, curators, &c Is there any one so obtuse as not to be able to understand when a person is acting for himself, or for others? The objection on account of the difference of jurisdiction is entirely obviated when the powers of the Probate Court are confined entirely to persons acting in a trust capacity.

With these remarks I leave the subject.

TUESDAY, March 15, 1853.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The majority and minority reports of the committee on Charitable Institutions, were read.

The bill to permit the pledging of growing crops, was taken up.

Mr. Mouton. I object to the bill if the planter by pledging his crop, will have the right to place it beyond the reach of certain judgment creditors, and prevent its seizure after it is gathered.

Mr. Kittridge. If a judgment already exists, of course it will take precedence.

Mr. Short. I do not wish to enter into a discussion on this bill, but I desire to render it as harmless as it can be made, and capable of effecting as much good as possible. I shall therefore offer an amendment to secure the rights of previous judgment creditors, mortgages, and vendors.

Mr Kittridge accepted the amendment.

Mr. Mouton. The amendment seems to obviate the difficulty, although in fact it does not. There are many planters in the State whose whole property is covered by mortgages, and there is nothing left to the judgment creditor to seize, but the crops. The bill allows the planter to pledge this to the merchant and thus takes it entirely out of the hands of the judgment creditors. I shall vote against the bill.

On motion of Mr. King, the bill was recommitted.

ORDER OF THE DAY—THE JUDICIARY.

The substitute for the House bill was taken up.

Mr. Kenner. There is much to be said on each side of this question. For myself, I consider the objections urged against the probate system by the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, [Mr. Lacey] to be valid. They certainly had great weight in my mind. Nevertheless, I think the bill proposed by him, divides the State into too many districts. As a compromise therefore, I move to strike out from the substitute of the Senator from West Feliciana, [Mr Wickliffe,] the number 16 and insert 20. If this be agreed to, I shall move to refer the bill to a committee with instructions to district the State.

Mr. Rivers. I have no intention of discussing this subject, but I must say that in spite of the elaborate arguments which have been adduced against the large district system, I am not prepared to oppose it. I think it the best system yet proposed. From the action of the other House, from the opinions of persons from all parts of the State who know more of what is wanted than the Senate does, I have reason to believe it is decidedly the most popular. Taking these things into consideration, gentlemen from the city should pay some attention to these things as expressions of the popular will. In order to obtain a test vote, I move to lay the substitute on the table

Mr. Wickliffe. I do not believe the large district system can pass, nor do I believe that the one which proposes twenty-eight districts can be successful. I am clearly of opinion, that nothing but the present system can be adopted. If we adopt the twenty districts, as proposed by the gentleman from Ascension, [Mr. Kenner,] I feel constrained to believe that it will meet with a severe and obstinate resistance in the other House. The question has been thoroughly tested there, and argument exhausted on it. Nothing else than the bill which passed, came near meeting the sense of the House, except something similar to the substitute. The fight is now between the large district and the present system. If we adopt the 20 districts, what will be the result?

The bill will go back to the House, and there it will meet with a determined resistance. A contest will be excited which may be continued for 20 days, and thus the business of legislation, already protracted quite long enough, be again delayed for the length of time. I know that there are innumerable objections to the twenty-eight, and also the large districts—such objections as cannot be overcome.

The motion to lay the substitute on the table was lost.

The motion of Mr. Kenner to strike out 16 and insert 20, was then in order.

Mr. Wickliffe. I object, as I have before stated, to this motion. The only effect of it, if adopted, will be to renew in the other House, a fruitless strife on a question which has already been thoroughly discussed, and decided in favor of the large districts. In my section there is no complaint against the present system. Some gentlemen say that the people want probate courts. There is no such desire entertained in my section. I believe that sixteen judges are enough to do all the legal business of Louisiana with ease.

The motion to strike out 16 and insert 20, was carried. The bill was then referred to select committee with instructions to report a bill districting the State.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

The Internal Improvement bill was taken up.

Mr. Short. I rise for the purpose of making an explanation. The Committee on Lands and Levees did not agree on any particular plan. There were two propositions before the Committee—one was the bill from the lower House; and the other, the same bill corrected in accordance with the suggestions of two members of the Committee. Both were submitted and made the special order for to-day. The bill from the lower House will be first in order. If the Senate cannot agree on that, I shall move to take up the bill which I reported on behalf of two members of the committee.

Mr. Kenner As I am a member of the Committee on Lands and Levees; and, as there may be some misapprehension in regard to my course, I think it incumbent on me to say something by way of explanation. When the subject was under consideration in committee, I deemed it necessary to make a motion which I thought met with unanimous consent, though it appears that it was not approved by two of the members. The bill before the Senate is the more important one of the two, because if, in adopting it, we commit an error, we shall never be able to retrace our steps.

The grant which has been made to the State by Congress is of the most beneficent character, and, if rightly administered, will contribute to our prosperity in an eminent degree. A young man left in possession of an immense estate which he squanders in a prodigal manner, may, after passing through many trials, and learning the bitter lessons of experience, recover his lost fortunes. But, if we lose this domain, which has been conferred upon us by the munificence of Congress, we can never regain it. We should, therefore, act with extreme care in the administration of it.

There are two prominent features in this bill—leveeing and draining. My motion was to strike out the word 'draining.' I will briefly express my reasons for doing so:

To enable gentlemen to form some idea of the expense of the system, it is only necessary to make a short and easy calculation. To planters it is a very important subject, and demands the most careful attention. It has been my lot, in the course of my life, to have something to do with draining. I will premise that planters are in the habit of making ditches, either by means of employing their own slaves, or hired labor. The contracts for ditching last year, averaged a dollar per cubic foot, for ditches an acre long. This is the basis of all contracts of that kind. A ditch a foot wide and five feet deep, costs $5 an acre, and the labor is generally performed by Irishmen who are hired for the purpose. Now take this statement as a basis of calculation—and it is reasonable to suppose it is a fair one, since it is important to make the contracts as low as possible—reflect that every ditch a foot wide and five feet deep costs five dollars an acre; then consider how many it would take to drain an acre of swamp land, and you may be able to form an estimate of the cost of draining the whole of them. If you want to obtain information on the subject, you must ask practical men—men who have experience—not those who tell you that the swamp lands can be drained for less than ten dollars an acre. Those who say so, would be considered insane by any one possessing a practical knowledge of the subject. But suppose ten dollars per acre to be the cost. Well, you have ten million acres of swamp lands, which, at ten dollars an acre, would amount to the handsome sum of one hundred millions of dollars! I ask, in all seriousness, are you prepared to vote for a provision which will entail upon the State an expense of at least one hundred million of dollars.

Gentlemen stand here and draw elegant fancy sketches for us—tell us how fine it would be to drain the swamp lands—what immense advantages would be derived from it—but that is not the question. We want to know what will be the cost, before we enter into any such magnificent scheme, however grand it may sound to the ear.

My experience, and that of others here, convince me that it is impossible to drain the swamp lands without the aid of machinery. One class have a natural slope, and may perhaps be drained at an expense of ten dollars per acre. Others, which may be denominated the swamps proper, present a dead level, and cannot be drained without having recourse to machinery. All the swamps proper are at least as low as the level of tide water. When a strong easterly wind prevails, all on this side of the river are inundated. In order to drain them effectively, you must have steam engines—engineers to direct, mechanics to attend, and fuel to supply them. You must have men to cut wood and to transport it to the place where it is to be used. Can you imagine whither you would be led—into what an abyss of expense you would be precipitated—by adopting such a system as this?—Are you prepared to vote for a bill which goes to such an extent as this?

Can you wonder that in the committee I moved to strike out drainage whenever it occurs in the bill?

But it may be said that the words of the grant make it imperative on us to do this, since the law of Congress says that the lands are donated to the State for the purposes of leveeing and draining. No gentleman, however, will say that because these lands are granted to us for leveeing and draining therefore we are bound to go to work and drain. But we will no doubt be told that unless we do so we will incur a great expense for nothing, and that our labors will be useless. If that position be taken I will refer to the words of the law itself. The law says "leveeing and draining." We must therefore make our levees first. If we levee the Mississippi, and keep the water out, we will have accomplished enough to entitle us to the donation. Then, if there be anything left, we can go to work and drain. What we want is to keep the river out. If we succeed in doing that, we will have effected wonders.

There is still another objection to this bill. In my opinion it has a surplus of machinery. It not only provides for three engineers, but it also makes room for various other officers, so that it will be nothing but a jail for a swarm of office seekers, and a resting place for a multitude of office holders. First you have three engineers, whose combined salaries will amount to $4,500 per annum; three engineers at $3,000 per annum each, and a Secretary at $500 per annum. Thus you have $14,000 a year as the expenses for the principal officers of the Board. Another section of the bill—the 13th—makes it the duty of the Commissioners to appoint an Inspector in each levee ward. I am opposed to this, sir. The law at present places the protection of all the Parishes along the river in the hands of those to whom it ought to be confided—it places the safety of the river Parishes in the keeping of those living immediately in the rear of the levees, and who are most directly interested in attending to them. But, as I have said, this bill provides for an Inspector in each levee ward, to be appointed by the Commissioner of the District. According to this there would be 120 levee Inspectors. What are you going to allow them for their services? You know how liberal we are when we draw upon the public treasury—you know how carelessly we pay out money that does not belong to us. You know how we pay all our officers here. Is it too much then to say that each Inspector will receive $100 per annum? If so you have $12,000 more to be added to the $14,000. Thus you have your machinery stated at an expense of $26,000. Now all these things hang together, and are dependent, the one on the other. If you get rid of drainage you get rid of many of the office holders. If you confine yourselves to levees, you avoid much of the expense which otherwise you would have to encounter.

There are some other serious defects, which I shall not advert to at present. I intend to point them out when other sections of the bill come under consideration. In making these remarks I have endeavored to be plain and practical. I have not tried to be eloquent. I have made use of facts and figures instead of flowers of rhetoric. I have shown what will be the effect of this bill as it now stands, and I think I can show that, under its operation, every dollar which would arise from the sale of swamp lands in thirty years will be pledged in six months from the date of the passage of the bill.

There is still another feature of this bill to which I shall refer. The bill provides that contracts shall be made for carrying its provisions into effect. That warrants shall be issued for the payment of the contractors, and when these warrants are presented to the Auditor, if he cannot pay them, he is to write across the face, "payment refused for want of funds," and from that time they are to draw eight per cent. interest per annum.

This is the best investment that can be made. No Shylock, no sharper in the city of New Orleans could ask better security. Therefore, look well before you leap, for if you leap without knowing where you are going, you will go to the bottom forever.

Mr. Rivers—As the gentleman has referred to what took place in the committee when this bill was under consideration, I will state the facts of the case in order to set myself right. I concurred in striking out drainage from the bill because I thought it would be absurd to try to drain the low swamps and inundated lands. I did not then see the extent of money which would necessarily be expended, nor did I regard the machinery offices and office-holders provided for. As District No. 3, in which I reside, is so situated as not to require drainage, I did not think it ought to be incorporated, though I was willing to accede to it if my district be protected, and receive her portion. If this provision be adopted, and my district, where no drains are necessary, permitted to have her share, I am perfectly willing to let gentlemen make what experiment they please, provided they do not do anything to startle us all from our propriety

Mr. Short—I agree with the gentleman from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner,) that the subject of draining is one of the most important that can come before the Legislature. I am, however, sorry to see an evident indisposition evinced, to use these lands for the purposes for which they were granted to the State by the Federal Government. If the gentleman will send me from his desk a copy of the law I will show him that the language of the grant corresponds exactly with the ideas of the bill. I am sorry to hear opinions expressed which are similar to those avowed a few years ago in regard to the swamp lands. I have myself heard gentlemen of intelligence say that, if the State were to take the lands and pay the expense of surveying them she would be rendered bankrupt by it.

Mr. Kenner—Does the gentleman suppose that I entertain such an opinion?

Mr. Short—No, sir, even he does not pretend to think so now, though he tells us that they could not be reclaimed except at an expense of sixty million dollars. I do not suppose that even the gentleman who attempted to beat Mr. Harmanson for Congress, by the avowal of that doctrine, would stick to it now.—What are the terms of the grant by which the swamp lands are donated to the State? When the terms of the grant make it a trust fund, do not its directions furnish a rule by which the fund is to be administered? For what purpose then, I repeat, were these lands donated to the State? Evidently, if the words of the law are to have any authority, in order to aid in the construction of the necessary drains and levees. What is the first step towards effecting this object? Why, after we have constructed a levee in order to exclude the waters, we must next see where we can cut a ditch for the purpose of relieving the lands in the rear from the water which would otherwise remain upon them. Does the gentleman suppose that any engineer who might be worthy of the name would think of making a ditch under water? Why the operation of draining would never be commenced till the water has been excluded from without. In addition to this, imaginary objections to the bill have been presented. At the last session of the Legislature a bill was brought forward contemplating a most magnificent enterprise. Unfortunately, the term engine was used in the bill, and consequently it blew up. From the fact that this term was used, thousands of bales of cotton have been destroyed this year by overflow. Even now while we are here discussing the subject, a levee may give way and let the devastating waters through upon the unfortunate planters.

Gentlemen are alarmed at imaginary difficulties. The Senator from Ascension says it would cost sixty million dollars to cut these drains. Has it been ascertained that the amount would be so great if the river be first kept out by building levees? That must be tried first; but are you therefore going to exclude the ultimate operations of the system?—Why, suppose a man commences to build a house. Of course it is necessary to put a roof on it.

But the roof would cost a great deal, and consequently he refuses to finish the house because it would cost too much to cover it. What would you think of a man who should act in such a manner as that? Now, sir, what is the position of the Senator? He must admit that no ditch can be available unless the water is first kept out by means of a levee. The gentleman has said that all Lower Louisiana is on a level with the ocean.

Mr. Kenner. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not say so.

Mr. Short. Why, sir, he said that the winds blow the waters upon the low lands and keep them in a state of inundation. But without going farther I will say that for the reasons I have stated, I am opposed to striking out "drainage," because it would defeat the object of the bill. In regard to the Commissioners I suppose sensible men will be appointed by the Governor—men who can tell whether the land is covered with water or not, and who will keep the water out before they attempt to wade in and cut the ditch.

The object of the bill before the Senate is to carry out the purposes of the grant made to the State by Congress.

Another objection has been made to the bill. The Senator says there is no limit to the amount of warrants which will be issued under the bill. Is there no limit? The warrants never can be issued till the work for which they are issued has been performed according to contract. Suppose a large amount of work be done before the expiration of a year. Can any Senator object to that? Now, while we pay so much attention to foreign affairs, while every dispatch from abroad is listened to with breathless interest, do you think the people are going to pay any attention to the imaginary objections to this bill which may be presented here? No sir.

Mr. McCay moved to lay the motion of Mr. Kenner, to strike out drainage, on the table —The motion was lost.

Mr. Short. I repeat that I am in favor of religiously carrying out the objects of the grant, and the duty of doing so is imposed on us by the Constitution. I am in favor of passing such a bill as will come within the terms of the grant. Let it be a sensible bill and it will be relieved from all the imaginary difficulties which have been presented.

Mr. Boatner. I think the Legislature will be transcending its powers in passing this bill. We find in the Constitution certain provisions which we are bound to observe. One article says there shall be a Board of Public Works, and that it shall be composed of four members. That is far above anything that we can do here. The framers of the act before the Senate disregard the mandates of the constitution, since they provide for only three Commissioners. The Constitution says that the districts shall be constructed with references to an equality of voters in them. This also has been disregarded by the act. The Constitution says that the Commissioners shall be elected. The bill gives the appointment to the Governor, and takes away the right of election from the people. Here is another conflict. I ask whether we have the right to give those appointments to the Governor, with the Constitution staring us directly in the face. I consider the bill plainly unconstitutional. Until we repeal those articles of the Constitution we have no right to do what we propose to do. It do esappear to me that till those articles are disposed of by a vote of three fifths of the Legislature, we cannnot establish a distinct Board of Public Works. I may be wrong, but until the conviction be forced from my mind, shall vote against the bill from the title to the last word.

Mr. Kenner.—There is certainly much force in the objection of the gentleman. But he should consider that the Committee agreed, that when the Board contemplated by the Constitution is organised, it shall succeed to all the powers and duties of the Board to be established by this bill. It was known that the season of high water was upon us, that the levees were in danger, and it was absolutely necessary to do something.

I wish to say a word about the construction which the gentleman from Madison (Mr. Short) has placed on the law of Congress. Not a word was said in committee about this construction of the law. The law was read but no such suggestion was made When the motion to strike out was made not a word about the construction placed on the law by the gentleman, was said.

Mr. Short.—I shall say but a few words more. I have urged action on this subject. Various projects have been submitted. Mr. Ranney's bill was subject to the objection of containing a provision for engines which so much alarm some gentlemen. I wish to have definite views on any system that I advocate, but do not consider myself particularly wedded to any particular system. I am willing to adopt any improvement that may be suggested. I do not wish to erect any Procustean bed in order to stretch out or cut off other systems. Nevertheless, the fact strikes me that the proposition of the Senator from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) would be a departure from the intention of the grant.

I am sorry that the gentleman from Caldwell (Mr. Boatner) has constitutional objections to this bill. There were, in my own mind, insuperable objections to the abolition of the Board of Public Works at this time. But they do not apply to this bill. Levees have never been considered public works—they have always been made by private enterprise, and the burthen of constructing them thrown on the front proprietors. The object of the bill is to construct levees immediately where private capital is inadequate.

I think that will relieve the bill from the constitutional objections urged against it. I think the gentleman will come in and stand side by side with us in supporting it. He is much interested in its success. He represents the rear which will be inundated if those in front give way.

I would say this to relieve the Senator from his awkward predicament—You wish to cut off from us the power of doing what every planter does when he builds a levee. When he does so he digs a ditch to let off the accumulated water. Yet, so anxious is the gentleman to get rid of drainage that he absolutely wishes to prevent those who build levees from cutting the necessary draining ditches.

Mr. King.—We have an important duty to perform in this matter. As a pure question of law we are bound to carry out the intention of the grant, which was made for two purposes—leveeing and draining. The Constitution says that the fund shall not be diverted from these purposes. Suppose we appropriate the whole fund to the building of levees, would not that be a violation of the law and the Constitution?

After a few more remarks the vote was taken, and the motion to strike out the words "and drainage," was carried.

WEDNESDAY, March 16, 1853.

Mr. King offered the report of the special committee to which had been referred the subject of dividing the State into judicial districts.

THE SWAMP LAND BILL.

A reconsideration of the vote by which the words, "and drainage," were yesterday stricken out of the swamp land bill, was moved.

Mr. Short. I shall endeavor, Mr. President, to give a statement of the reasons which influence me in seconding the motion to reconsider. They are found in the acts of Congress donating the swamp lands to the State, and necessarily arise from a correct construction of those acts. The acts of Congress are one of the grounds of reconsideration, if we intend to carry out the intention of Congress.

I understand the real construction to be placed on all grants. Where they are made for certain specific purposes, and where the grantee is clothed with powers to carry out the purpose, a law should be passed to carry out the grant in accordance with its plain meaning. The first question that arises is: What was the intention of Congress in making this grant.

The first section of the law of Congress reads thus:

"Be it enacted, &c., That to aid the State of Louisiana in constructing the necessary levees and drains, to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein, the whole of those swamp and overflowed lands which may be or are fund unfit for cultivation, shall be, and the same are hereby, granted to that State."

That is plain and easily to be understood. But in order to make the point still more apparent and emphatic, I will read the following provision contained in the second section of the same act:

"Provided, however, That the proceeds of said lands shall be applied exclusively, as far as necessary, to the construction of the levees and drains aforesaid."

The next point is this: whether the State would be carrying into effect the terms of the grant—and in the terms we must seek the intention—by passing an act confining the proceeds of the swamp lands to the building of levees. Every one that knows the nature of the swamp lands knows that the object of building levees is to keep out the water and prevent the land from being overflowed. This is the experience of every man acquainted with the country. It has been required as far back as the times of O'Reilly and other Spanish Governors The very terms of the grants to the early settlers of the country were that the front proprietors should construct a mound or levee of sufficient height to exclude the water. After the levees are built, and the outer waters excluded, if the owner discover that by digging a ditch, other lands could be relieved fromthe superincumbent waters, as a sensible man and a planter, knowing his own interests, he would naturally have the ditch made for the purpose of bringing land into cultivation which would otherwise remain unproductive. That is the meaning of drainage, and I do not see that there is anything so appalling in it. But some gentlemen have imagined that it includes a large engine and an expensive machinery, and they have been terrified by the thought.—But appeal to those Senators who have the interests of the State at heart, to those who live in the alluvial districts, and are, consequently, directly interested in this subject. I appeal to them to turn their attention to this measure, to examine it carefully to ascertain what is the intention of the grant, to observe what duties devolve upon them in order to carry out faithfully the spirit of the act of Congress. It is admitted on both sides that this is a most important bill I call on the democrats to say whether they are going to take the responsibility of its defeat? Are the whigs going to do it? I hope not. I hope that both are animated by too strong a sense of duty and too high a conviction of right, to permit the interests of the State to be sacrificed. I expect to see them joining forces and putting their shoulders to the wheel together. I hope they will bury all ideas of political advantage in a common grave, that all partisan feelings will be discarded at once, so that it cannot be said that either party made use of so delicate and important a subject, for the purpose of gaining electioneering capital. They should be animated by higher and nobler motives than this. Does the country demand a bill of this kind? It certainly does. There is no doubt in the mind of any reasonable man that a levee system of some kind is necessary to meet our wants — For more than half century, or since 1770, levees have been built in this State. In 1807, the territorial legislature, for the first time, required the building of levees. To this day, levees have never been a State work: they have never even been considered a part of our internal improvements. Yet, what is so obviously the very first towards making the country inhabitable—what comes more decidedly within the meaning of "internal improvements?" Why, Louisiana has never taken the first step towards reclaiming the 18,000 square miles of alluvial lands which exist within her limits, while, at the same time, the whole burthen is thrown on the front proprietors, and only 1500 miles are in a state of cultivation. To what is this owing? It is owing to our imperfect levee system, under which the whole burthen of constructing and maintaining the levees is thrown on the front proprietors. As to those cases where the onus is thrown on the front proprietors, by the terms of the grant under which they hold their lands, there may be justice in the State requiring the terms of the grant to be carried out when other parties would be affected by non-compliance. But in North Louisiana there are no grants, where the burthen is thrown on the front proprietors. The titles are generally derived from the General Government, and are free from any kind of servitude. The acts of the Legislature, alone, have created such an obligation, and been enforced in such a manner, that men have actually been sold out of house and home; while others, raising a bale of cotton to the acre, have been untaxed, and not compelled to pay a cent. All that we now ask, is the sympathy of you gentlemen who live in high places, and are exempt from the perils of inundation.

All that we ask is, that although nature has placed you in an elevated position, you will give your assistance in enabling us to carry out the terms of this grant. This is all that we seek from those over whom the turbid waves of the Mississippi never rise. Is it an exorbitant demand, or an unreasonable expectation? I think we cannot ask less. If it is not unreasonable, we have a right to expect that those who are never troubled by these awful crevasses, will stand side by side with us in the adoption of such a system as will meet our wants. What is it that we seek? It is only to put into practical operation, the system recommended by the Committee on Lands and Levees, who say, that the building of levees is the first step towards carrying out the objects of the grant. There would be no necessity—in fact, it would be absolutely impossible to dig a ditch to carry off water, when it is not ascertained that the exterior waters have first been excluded.

But after levees have been constructed at important points, under the direction of skilful engineers, these ditches ought to be cut to relieve the rear lands from the water which would otherwise rest upon them. Thus, it will be seen, that our object is to make the bill correspond with the terms of the grant. In the next place, we wish to present such a bill as will meet the wants of the State. If we only go half way—if we only build levees, we will violate the very terms of the grant, and tie the hands of every person employed in doing the very thing contemplated by the act of Congress. Many persons who are not acquainted with the subject, may be startled by the terrific statements of the immense expense which it is said will be involved in the carrying into effect of this system.

It appears, by some process of calculation made yesterday, that the cost of draining 6,000,000 acres of land would be $60,000,000, or $10 per acre. When the water from without is excluded, and 10 and 20 acres relieved, there are some points where the building of a levee—to say nothing of the digging a ditch—will operate so as to bring thirty or forty or even a hundred additional acres into a cultivable state. But say, that by expending two, three, or even four bitts per foot in ditching, you can reclaim thirty or forty, or even a hundred acres more, are you going to refuse to ditch, on the hypothesis of the awful expense which might grow out of machinery, steam works and engineers?

One section of the bill says emphatically, that nothing but the swamp land fund shall be pledged for the expenses of the system. I hope that will relieve gentlemen of all apprehensions of running the State into debt. Many gentlemen are startled at the possibility of a large debt being contracted. Does not the bill provide, that no debt shall be contracted till work to an equivalent amount is done? Are gentlemen alarmed at this? It is supposed, that private capital to the amount of $5,000,000 has already been expended in works of this kind. Does not this operate as a tax? Here you have seven million acres to be reclaimed, which will be made infinitely more valuable, and, in that ratio, add to the wealth of the State, and stimulate its productive industry.

You are now about starting on a new system. This bill is the first step. Do you hesitate—do you falter—do you doubt at the very threshold? You have a giant work before you. This bill, though it may be imperfect, provides, in a measure, for effecting it. If it be a giant work, it renders the energy of a giant necessary. But, at the outset, do you want to shackle us, and prevent us from completing the labor before us. I hope that there will be no disposition of this sort. The country proclaims that we must commence this work—that we must use the fund for the purpose for which it is given. Let us, as in the play, screw our courage to the sticking point, and we shall not fail.

Mr. Lacey. I shall beg the permission of the Senate to explain my reasons for voting for the reconsideration of the vote by which the words "and drainage" were yesterday stricken out from the bill. The section provides for dividing the State into leveeing and draining districts; and I can see no reason why this should not be done, having reserved to myself, when I voted, the right of changing my views.

Mr. Kenner. I do not understand the gentleman from East Baton Rouge. I thought he voted to strike out, because he was opposed to incorporating drainage in the bill. If he has changed his mind on that point, he is perfectly right in advocating the reconsideration; but if he has not, I do not comprehend his position.

Mr. Lacey. No change has taken place in my mind on the subject. I am opposed to entering on a system of artificial drainage, though I am in favor of national drainage. But I am not opposed to dividing the State into levee and draining districts, as provided by the bill. I am, therefore, willing to go, with others, for the reconsideration.

Mr. Kenner. The gentleman from Madison (Mr. Short) has taken a very ingenious position. He wishes to present us as being opposed to leveeing as well as draining. He appeals to democrats to stand by him in support of his favorite measure, hoping to carry it through by rallying them to his assistance; and he asks if the whigs are willing to take the responsibility of defeating the bill. We are not opposed to leveeing, sir. The gentleman shall not place us in that position. We are in favor of leveeing, but we are not in favor of leveeing and draining. I moved to strike drainage from the bill, so as to confine its operations to leveeing alone.

The remarks of the gentleman apply to leveeing exclusively, yet he says he is in favor of draining also. I beg the gentleman therefore, when he addresses the Senate, not to represent us in a false light. I hope other gentlemen will not yield with the facility which characterizes the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey,) but that they will stand to the position they have assumed.

Mr. King. I do not understand the first section of the bill to make separate levee and separate draining districts. I suppose that the levee and draining districts will be identical, so that there need be no extraordinary apprehensions about draining districts. I endeavored, yesterday, to point out how plain this question is.

The act of Congress says that the swamp lands are donated to the State for two purposes—for leveeing and draining. The moment we devote the fund to only one of those purposes, we violate the intention of the grant. If, in ordinary transactions between man and man, such an agreement should be entered into, any lawyer will tell you that both agreements must be executed. The Constitution says that the swamp land fund shall not be diverted from the purposes for which it was granted. How could language be plainer or simpler? Suppose we should strike out leveeing, and appropriate the whole fund to drainage. Would not this be a plain and direct violation of the law and the Constitution? Now, if we strike out drainage will it not be an equal violation? Will it not be an infraction of the Constitution? The opposition seems to arise from an idea that drainage is unnecessary, and that it will consume the whole fund. If gentlemen wish to indulge their fancy, and imagine the immense expense that is going to accrue from drainage, they may as well suppose that those who are to build the levees will squander the whole fund. They ought to offer a bill restricting the size of the levees, for fear that the Commissioners will abuse their trust. There would not be any sense in attempting to drain before we build levees. We might as well attempt to drain the Mississippi.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

Mr. Lacey offered a substitute for the bill. He said:

Mr. President:—When the bill before the Senate, relative to the leveeing and reclaiming of the swamp and overflowed lands, was first called up for consideration, I had intended to have introduced a substitute for such bill; circumstances, however, prevented me from bringing the substitute before the Senate at that time, and I now embrace the first opportunity which has presented itself for placing before your honorable body, not only the substitute, but the reasons which have influenced my mind to give it my support in preference to the original bill, coming, I think, from the lower House.

I desire, Mr. President, to state, in the outset of my argument, that I am not wedded to the bill which I have had the honor of bringing before the Senate, nor do I entertain such feelings of hostility to the bill from the house as to prevent me from lending it my support, should the Senate refuse to adopt the plan proposed by me. It has its objections, great, almost insurmountable objections; and if these objections cannot apply to my bill, entitled "An act to create an internal improvement department of the State," would it not be well to adopt the latter?

I am aware, Mr. President, that the act to which I have referred contemplates the abolition of the Board of Public Works, created by the Constitution; but under the views which I entertain relative to the power of the Legislature upon that subject, the effect of my bill upon the Board of Public Works presents no difficulty to me. I have heretofore expressed my opinion to this honorable body relative to the Constitutional right of the Legislature to abolish the Board of Public Works, and I intend on the present occasion to do nothing more than refer to the views upon that subject as then expressed by me.

Upon referring to article 130 of the Constitution, it will be apparent that the Board of Public Works, (which it is contended must be established before it can be destroyed,) is created by the organic law. The words, "there shall be a Board of Public Works," brings it into existence; life is given to it by the organic law, and it needs but to look to legislative action as the source of its vitality. Are not the Legislative Department, the Executive Department, the Judiciary Department, and the Superintendent of Public Education, all creatures of the Constitution? Most clearly they are; and yet they are created by provisions, or rather by words, almost identical with those applied in article 130 of the Constitution, to the Board of Public Works.

This view is greatly strengthened by the subsequent article of the Constitution; for in that article the framers of the organic law, clearly supposing that they had themselves created the Board—that its paternity was clearly fixed—proceed to provide the manner in which it was to be nurtured and cared for. They draw a distinction between the Board and the persons filling the Board; between the soul, if I may so express myself, and the body—and having themselves made the Board of Public Works, they direct the Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of the Constitution, to provide for the election and compensation of the Commissioners, and the organization of the Board. Who will contend that the creation and organization of the Board are the same? I trust no one in this honorable body.

It seems to me, then, Mr. President, that the Board of Public Works is already in existence, that it has been created by the Constitution; and being created, the General Assembly has the power, by a vote of three-fifths of the members elected to each House, to abolish said Board whenever, in their opinion, a Board of Public Works shall no longer be necessary. Such are the plain and unambiguous terms of article 134 of the Constitution.

Let us then consider the Constitutional question which has been raised in this honorable body, as forming no obstacle towards adopting the bill which I have had the honor to submit; and let us pass on to ascertain, as far as we can ascertain, the relative merits of the two plans now before the Senate.

The first objection which I have to offer against the bill from the House, is that it is not proposed as a substitute for the Board of Public Works created by the Constitution. If I have understood aright the feeling of the Senate, it has expressed itself adverse to the Constitutional Board; it has acknowledged the impracticability of such Board, and has called for a substitute. I refer now to the action which was had upon the motion of the honorable Senator from New Orleans, (King,) who is Chairman of the Committee on Internal Improvements. The wish of the Senate, as I have already stated, has been for a substitute. The bill from the House does not offer itself as such, and consequently I must, for that reason, as well as others, object to its passage.

But I proceed to notice a more formidable obstacle which presents itself against the bill from the House. I allude to its impracticable nature. The entire control of the District is placed under the eye of a single Commissioner, and that Commissioner will look alone after the interests of his own District, regardless of the wants of the other Districts, or the interests of the State at large. The works of the several Districts will not in all probability combine, and we will find that when the waters of the upper District are thrown by its levees upon the lower District, the latter will not be prepared with its drains and canals to carry them off. The consequences will be serious, and can only be prevented by having the entire works carried on under one head.

Again, sir, the Engineer, whose supervisory eye is intended to stretch itself over the entire District committed to his charge, is to be chosen by the Commissioner of that District. He will consequently be under the influence and direction of such Commissioner, and, being under such influence and control, his knowledge and labor, instead of being bestowed upon the District at large, will be confined to that portion of it in which the Commissioner, who will himself be subjected to certain local influences, has a particular interest. And should the Engineer acquire a supremacy over the Commissioner, this fact will place matters in no better situation, and will only have the effect of throwing the interests of the State out of the gridiron into the fire; for in that event the Commissioner will be under the influence of his subordinate, and a system equally local and partial will be adopted.

It seems to me, Mr President, that the bill from the House is wholly impractica le in its nature; and not only impracticable, but it requires a heavy outlay to carry it into effect over the expenses attendant upon the act to create an Internal Department, which I have submitted to the Senate. It requires three Commissioners, at $1,500 each, - - $4,500
Three Engineers, whose salary, owing to the responsibility of the position, will exceed the salary given by U. S., - - - - 1,500
Secretary to the Board - - - - - 500
Contingent expenses of the Board, traveling, meeting, &c., - - - - - - - 1,000

An increased expense per annum, - $7,500

But, Sir, this is not the only data upon which I can rely, in order to establish the increased expense attending the House Bill, with its Board of Public Works, over the system now advocated by me.

"The amount expended by the Board of Public works for eight years, working on an average of 77 428-1000 negroes, and 2 714-1000 boats, was $364,917; or an annual average of $45,614 62. While the expense of the Engineer Department for 11 years, from 1842 to 1853, working on an average 91 545-1000 negroes, and 3 545-1000 boats, was $347,830 41—or a yearly expense of $31,620 94. The annual expense of the Board of Public Works, with 1 boat and 11 negroes less than the Engineer Department, exceeded the expense of the latter in the snug sum of $13,-993 68.

These figures show most clearly that the position which I have assumed is correct.

But I am not done with the bill from the House. There are other objections, which I wish, briefly, to lay before the Senate. It permits the appointment of an unlimited number of levee inspectors; an army of officers to eat up, with their salaries, the rich legacy bequeathed to the State by the exertions of the lamented Harmanson. The levee inspectors are invested with an unlimited power to prescribe the size and manner in which the levees are to be made; and thereby are enabled to tyrannize over the planter, and so to arrange their works, in the different portions of tee District, that the work may not combine. They are also permitted, at any time, to call out the slaves, regardless of the distance of the planter's residence from the place where those slaves are wanted—and this, too, without any compensation being allowed to the owner of the slaves, for the services of their property. The bill also provides thae the works allowed by such bill, should be given out to the lowest bidder, regardless of the capacity to perform the work—and leaves no discretion with those acting on the part of the State, to reject the proposal, or rather the bill, if the interests of the State could be advanced by such rejection. And, finally, it authorizes by its general terms any character or quantity of drainage, or miles of canal, may be made under the bill.

So much, Mr. President, for the bill which is so strenuously advocated by many of the Senators, and which brings to its support an outside pressure, which I have never seen exceeded in this or any other assembly.

But, I may be asked, in what respect is the act introduced by me superior to the one, the defects of which I have exhibited to the Senate? I reply, its advantages are numerous—and are not only numerous, but are susceptible of an easy demonstration. In the first place, it is not satisfied with the reclamation of the swamp and overflowed lands; but it makes provision for the selection and survey of these lands; and evinces a care and solicitude over the other, nay, over all, the public works of the State. These are not suffered to be forgotten. The Engineer Department is so to be arranged that all the public works—the cutting out of the Falls of Red River—the improvement of the Barataria and Lafourche Canal—the deepening of Red River at its mouth and other places—the improvement of the falls of Ouachita, and other improvements—will be cared for; and the interests of the State in any of the contemplated Railroad Companies, will be placed under the eye of a Department, ready to direct action, should action, in that respect, become necessary.

Another advantage of my bill is, that it places the reclamation of the swamp and overflowed lands in the hands of proper persons. Instead of committing these important works to the care and supervision of men who are liable to be acted upon by local or sectional feelings, it places them under the protection and oversight of an officer acting for the State at large—one who operates directly under the eye of the Executive; who can have the advice of the present Governor, who, by his eminent abilities as an engineer, is well qualified to suggest steps deeply important for the interests of the State; one who is educated for the duty; who possesses no feeling but to advance the general interests and the prosperity of Louisiana, and who is brought in direct connection with the Legislature, and as an unit, or head, is subjected to all the responsibility flowing from a bad or defective manner of carrying out the system of reclamation confided to his hands.

In addition to these advantages, section 25 of my substitute contains a very important provision, not found in the bill from the House, and without which no act, for the protection of lands liable to inundation, would be perfect. I allude to the provision for steam pile-boats, and their attendants. Sad experience has taught the people of Louisiana the foolishness of that policy which compels us to lie quietly upon our oars, until the threatened crevasse comes, with all its power and serious consequences, upon us. In the time of peace, we ought to be prepared for war; in the moment of security, wisdom teaches us to hold ourselves ready fo danger.

But, Mr. President, I would do great injustice to my bill did I not direct the attention of Senators to that feature of it relating to slave labor—a feature entirely wanting in the bill which has reached us from the lower House. My mind has arrived at the conclusion, at least with its present lights, that it would be better for the State to abandon, as far as it can be done, the system of white labor, and to resort to the purchase of slaves. We all know the uncertainty of the former, and the high prices which it often commands, and the fact, with a comparative estimate of the prices of each, clearly sustain me in the position which I have assumed, that the interest of the State lies in the employment of slave labor in preference to white labor.

I submit to the Senate an estimate of the cost of negroes as compared with free labor. 300 slaves will cost say $300,000.

Interest on $300,000 at 5 per cent	$15,000 00
6 Superintendents, at 1,000 each	6,000 00
Clothing and feeding 300 negroes for each year	16,300 00
Extra feeding superintendents	300 00
Loss of negroes by death, &c	15,000 00
Cost of one year's labor of 300 negroes	$52,860 00
300 White men at $30 per month	$108,000 00
Provisions	18,000 00
Six superintendents at $1000 each	6,000 00
	$132,000 00
The same number of negroes will perform 25 per cent. more labor than white men. Making a difference in this respect of $27,000 00.
Difference in expense as above shown	$79 140 00
Difference in labor	27,000 00
Total difference	$106,140 00

It seems to me that I have clearly shown that the interest of the State lies in the purchase of slaves, and that the treasury of the State would be greatly benefitted by a loan in order to make such purchase.—If such be the case, who can fail to see the force and advantage of my bill in making provision for a loan, and its complete details relative to the work, clothing, subsistence, camping, &c., of the slaves? I much dislike the word "loan," but in this case, owing to the peculiar advantages flowing therefrom, and considering that the money to be borrowed is chargeable to the "swamp land fund," I do not hesitate to declare that it strengthens, not weakens, my bill. Let the swamp and overflowed lands be sold to an amount sufficient to pay the interest and to discharge ultimately the sum borrowed; let the amount be expended in the purchase of slaves, and let the labor of these slaves, under the control of the Engineer Department, be directed to the reclamation of the swamp and overflowed lands, and the day is not far distant when the low lands of Louisiana will spring forth and blossom as the rose.

One word more and I am done. I wish fully to impress upon the Senate the harmony which must take place under my bill. There will be but one head: sectional interest cannot exist; the works will combine; the several districts will move on together, and the great end which we all have in view, in advocating the several bills brought before the Senate, will soon be accomplished.

I have considered the matter before the Senate as one of deep and significant importance, upon which hangs the future prosperity of Louisiana, and this impression is my apology for consuming so much of the time of the Senate. Whatever may be done by your honorable body, I trust it may be well done, and that our action will bring to us no regrets in the future.

Mr. King then rose and said:

Mr. President: I rise to communicate to the Senate the melancholy intelligence of the decease of Isaac Johnson, formerly Governor of Louisiana, and late Attorney General of the State. The following telegraphic dispatch has just been received:

"Gov. Johnson died to-day."

The emotions produced in my breast by this sad and unexpected intelligence, are too profound for expression. In testimony of our regard for the eminent public services, and the ardent patriotism of the deceased, as well as our affectionate remembrance of his social virtues, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

SATURDAY, March 5th.

Mr. Wickliffe introduced a bill to fix the number of Judges in the parish of Orleans at 5, and the salaries at $4000 per annum.

Mr. King—I think, sir, the bill is out of order. We have already adopted the 2d section of a bill which provides for six Courts. This bill is in manifest contravention of that section. If we go on in this way, we will never come to the end of the session. Gentlemen have tried all parliamentary methods to defeat the establishment of six Courts, but could not succeed in their object. They now draw up a bill by which they propose to gain the same object. I ask, sir, whether this proceeding is not out of order.

Mr. Wickliffe—My object, sir, in introducing this bill is to make the Judiciary more efficient—I did not offer it for the purpose of defeating the gentleman's bill.

After a few more remarks, the motion to suspend the rules was put and lost.

Mr. Short laid before the Senate, a memorial from citizens of Catahoula and and Carroll parishes, asking for a repeal of the law of 1852 on the subject of levee districts.

The objects of the petitioners were set forth in the memorial, and he did not want to consume the time of the Senate by stating them more fully. But as the doctrines and opinions of the memorialists were in conflict with his own, although his views had been fully endorsed by the people of that section—he wished to give all due respect and consideration to their statements and wishes. He therefore wished to have the memorial put on record in order to give him an opportunity of replying in such a manner as not to disturb the Senate.

Mr. Wickliffe moved that the Report be referred to a special committee composed of the delegations from the parishes named.

Mr. Boatner said that the citizens of Catahoula unanimously concurred with the citizens of Carroll in desiring a repeal of the law of 1852. A petition to that effect, signed by almost all the citizens of Catahoula, was in circulation, and one of the same kind was being circulated in Carroll parish. When these petitions should be presented there would be no difference of opinion as to the course to be pursued. He agreed with the Senator from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) as to the reference.

Mr. Short said that the citizens of Carroll were in favor of the law.

The petition alluded to by the gentleman was signed by only a small proportion of them—Catahoula is protected by law, and if it is now to be said that because we in front, are bound to protect ourselves, therefore you in the rear would refuse to contribute anything, he supposed we should have to submit.

Mr. Boatner replied that the citizens of Catahoula did not take any such view of the subject. They opposed the law because they thought it unjust and unequal in its operations.—Other parishes were more benefited than Catahoula by this law, and yet they were left out—The parishes of Concordia and Tensas, which were more liable to overflow, intervened, and yet they were not taxed at all.

The citizens of Catahoula were willing to pay a fair proportion, but they were not willing to pay more than was fair, particularly when Concordia and Tensas which were more protected, were not made to pay anything.

Mr. Rivers had listened with surprise to the statement of the gentleman, that Concordia and Tensas were more benefited than Catahoula, and yet were not taxed.—Why, those parishes had a levee fund of their own. They contribute largely to protect the parishes which the gentleman represents. It was but right then that the latter should pay a portion of the expenses.—Concordia is leveed all round, and its lands are taxed, on an average, 25 cents per acre. This was the reason that those parishes were not included in the levee district with Catahoula—otherwise they would like to be in it.

Mr. Boatner said that Catahoula also had a levee system of her own, and in a short time would be able to protect herself from inundation. He had said that she was willing to pay a fair proportion and he repeated it. But it could be seen by the map, that parishes which were as much injured as Catahoula, were left out of the district.

The memorial was finally referred to a special committee.

Mr. King called up the House bill authorizing the St. Charles Hotel Company to mortgage its property, for the purpose of raising money.

The bill was passed.

The bill to provide for the establishment of a Seminary of Learning in the parish of Rapides.

Mr. Burtho desired to have the bill postponed.

Mr Griffin was opposed to postponing the bill.

Mr. Hodge said that if gentlemen had read the official report of the debates on this bill in the other House, as published in the official journal—which report was very long—they would have discovered that great interest was taken in the subject there, and the reasons which actuated the House in its course. He had seen that a proposition was even made in the House, to establish this Seminary in the parish of Jefferson. He presumed that the object of the gentleman, [Mr. Burthe,] was to get this amendment before the Committee.

Mr. Burthe said that he had no such idea; but he must confess that he would prefer almost any location to that specified in the bill.

Mr. Wickliffe knew that the Senator from Jefferson, [Mr. McCay,] did not look with a favorable eye on this bill. He had said that he was willing to vote for locating the Seminary in his [Mr. Wickliffe's] parish, or in almost any other. He could see no reason why the bill should be postponed.

Mr. Burthe remarked that to carry out the provisions of the bill might involve a heavy expense.

Mr. Griffin denied that there would be any expense—Congress had already made an appropriation for it.

MONDAY, March 7, 1853.

Mr. Hodge introduced a bill to make judgments prescriptible at the end of ten years.

Mr. Hodge said:—The object of the bill is to make judgments prescriptible at the end of ten years, if not renewed by having them recorded again. All contracts are subject to prescription, and there is no good reason why judgments should not be subject to prescription, like any other evidence of debt. At all events, it is seldom that a judgment is executed after more than ten or fifteen years.

The object of this bill is to introduce into our law a provision similar to that of the common law, under which, unless revived by a writ of scire facias, judgment is prescribed. Under that law the defendant, at the end of a specified term of years, is summoned to show cause why the judgment should not be continued. If he do not show cause, the judgment is continued. If he neglect to do so, it is prescribed. The bill will not affect mortgages in the same manner as judgments—as had been suggested by gentlemen in the committee room. It is frequently the case that judgments are inscribed so as to operate as a general mortgage, and they are never erased. The mortgagors have them inscribed in such a manner, with a view that they may encumber their property so that their creditors cannot reach it. Under the bill, also, defendants will be made so cautious, that if they can possibly avoid it, they will not permit judgments to be renewed and run against them for ten years more.

It had been suggested, in opposition to the bill, that there would be great expense attendant on the revival of judgments in the manner contemplated. But this was fallacious. The only formality requisite, was a summons to the defendant to show cause why the judgment should not be continued. The judge then gives an order to revive the judgment, unless good cause is shown why he should not do so.

The last section of the bill is very necessary. It is to provide against such cases where our citizens may be harrassed by judgments from other States, which might follow them for fifty years.

Mr. McCay. How could the contemplated notice be served, when the defendant is removed from the jurisdiction of the Court. The citation, in such a case, could not be served, and there would then be no possibility of reviving the judgment.

Mr. Hodge. I have no objection to amending the bill so as to make it more effective. If the party to be summoned is in the State, a personal notice can be served—if out of the State, a notice on the property. But I apprehend there would be little interest in receiving a judgment here if the party had left the State, as it would be better to follow him to the place whither he had gone.

The bill was passed.

Mr. Martin called up the bill reducing the prices of advertising succession sales to the same rate as allowed for Sheriff's sales, and providing that in parishes where more than one newspaper is published, the advertising shall be given to the lowest bidder.

Mr. Martin explained the object of the bill to be to place all advertisements on the same footing. At present, sales ordered by Courts are paid for more than double the rates paid for Sheriff's sales. He wished also, in parishes where more than one newspaper was published, to compel the Sheriff to advertise for proposals, and let out the judicial advertisements to the lowest bidder. He was satisfied that competition would be to the advantage of all parties.

At present, printers were paid entirely too much for their services.

The bill was laid over under the rule.

UESDAY, March 8, 1853.

Mr. Martin remarked that some days since he had introduced a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to frame a bill to carry into effect that article of the Constitution which prohibits the holding of more than one State office by one person. The Committee had preferred that he should draw up the bill himself, which he had done, and submitted it to several members of the committee, by whom it had been approved. He accordingly introduced the bill.

Mr. Wickliffe—I should like to have some information on this subject. I wish to know whether auctioneers are considered as State officers.

Mr. Martin—they clearly are State officers; they are authorized to be licensed by law, and hold commissions from the Governor. For them to hold any other office, is a cumulation in the hands of one person, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. Wickliffe—There are many parishes in the State where the profits of auctioneers do not amount to more than $100 a year. It is therefore a great convenience to permit clerks of courts to act as auctioneers. This, sir, is a subject of great importance, and before I vote for the bill, I should like to have more information in regard to it.

Mr. Martin—I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objections to the bill. Its object is simply to carry out the provisions of the constitution, and to prevent that cumulation of offices in the hands of one person, which is so distinctly prohibited. I wish to prevent clerks of courts from acting as auctioneers, thus being enabled to control judicial sales.

Mr. Short—I understand the object of the bill to be to prevent clerks of court from entering an order of sale, and the stepping in and acting as auctioneer.

Mr. Wickliffe—Well, sir, I can say that we never had occasion to complain of such a proceeding in my parish. Perhaps, it may be owing to the fact that we have one of the best clerks in the State; but certainly we have no reason to find any such cause of complaint as is indicated by the gentleman from Assumption.

Mr. Field—I would vote for the bill with great pleasure if that clause be left out which affects auctioneers. There are many country parishes where the auctioneer, whose emoluments in some cases are very small, are in the habit of holding some little office by the aid of which they are enabled to support themselves. I do not wish to take this privilege from them. I am under the impression that licensed auctioneers cannot be considered State officers.

The substitute for the bill authorising courts to issue writs of mandamus against police juries, was taken up.

Mr. Hodge said, when the original bill, for which the bill before the Senate is a substitute, was before the committee, I had thought that the principle by which debtors were compelled to disclose their liabilities was true of corporations, as well as of individuals. On reflection, however, since the report of the committee was made, I have come to the conclusion that such a course would not be politic at this time.

The bill provides that the creditors of parishes may obtain judgment against them, when a special tax shall be levied to pay the judgment in a year. Now, sir, it is well known that many parishes in this State are largely indebted, and have issued script to a considerable amount. This was done when money was at a very high rate, and some parishes have thus become indebted to the amount of some twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars. The effect of the bill would be to distress these parishes very much. These circumstances did not occur to my mind at the time the bill passed the committee, and consequently I was induced to give it my assent without much reflection.

It might happen that an individual having claims against a parish, would enter suit and be enabled by the power which the bill gives, to stop the wheels of government in our municipal corporations. It may be said that there is no difference in effect between these, and ordinary cases of debt. They have contracted an obligation and have a duty to perform—all this I acknowledge. But, look for a moment, at the history of the circumstances under which these debts were contracted. The scrip was issued at a time when the parishes were largely in debt, and in an almost desperate financial condition, so that they had to issue scrip to a much greater amount than their real indebtedness. Such I acknowledge was the case in my own parish, and I have no doubt it was so in others. It would, in my opinion, be highly dangerous and inexpedient to grant to creditors of parishes the powers and privileges contemplated in the bill.

Mr. Wickliffe. I am glad to hear the expression of such opinions from the Senator from Caddo. For one Sir, under no circumstances, can I be induced to vote for the bill. I agree with the gentleman as to its inexpediency, and I know parishes on which its effect would be ruinous. I shall certainly vote against it whenever I have an opportunity.

Mr. Short. The Senator might easily have the bill amended in such a way as to relieve it of the objectionable features to which he has referred. He should consider how much easier it is to pull down than to set up. The objection of the Senator from Caddo is, that if a judgment is obtained against a parish, it would then be compelled to levy a tax and would be put to serious inconvenience if the amount could not be raised; and moreover it would be unjust since on account of the depreciation of their scrip they would have to pay more than had been received for it. Now, the very object of the bill is to remedy this, and prevent parishes from getting so deep in debt that they cannot get out. It seems to me that when a parish is so imprudent as to involve itself in debt to such a great extent that it cannot provide any means of paying, it must be a very imprudent parish indeed. A parish which would do that ought to have a curator appointed. A man who should act in such a way would render himself liable to serious imputations on his understanding.

Mr. Hodge. When the State at the commencement of the session went in debt a hundred thousand dollars, you did not say that a curator ought to be appointed for her.

Mr. Short. I have no objection to a person running in debt when he has property sufficient to meet his indebtedness, when his property is not below par, and is redeemable in specie. But the object of the bill is similar to compelling an imprudent to do what a prudent man ought to do.

At present, when police juries find that a large debt is to be provided for, when the bills are presented, when they see that taxation must be resorted to—and taxation is generally impopular, whether in large or small districts, they manage to avoid the responsibility and go out leaving the debt to be provided for by their successors. Now, if the gentleman is in favor of compelling parishes to pay their debts, let him bring forward some plan to effect the object. If he is against it, I do not think that he acts the part of a wise and prudent Senator.

Simply to say that this bill is not good, and to oppose it without providing some other machinery to effect the object, is not a proper way to proceed. But what other way is there? The machinery provided by the bill is the lowest known to the law. When all steps have been taken by the creditor, without avail, what is to be done? Why, merely a mandamus is to be issued and a tax levied by the parishes to meet their liabilities. Here is a simple remedy. When the parishes know that, on a writ, nulla bona is returned, that then a tax must be levied, they will be very cautious about running in debt. They will be prevented from being so improvident that they run in debt till their scrip is worth only four bitts on the dollar, and they are then afraid of any measure being taken to make their paper worth par.

Mr. Hodge. The argument of the gentleman is very good so far as it affects transactions which may hereafter be made by corporations, but it would be unwise to make the bill operate on those already consumated. It would be as unwise to tell an individual when a judgment is served on him, that he should not eat until it was paid. My parish owes a larger amount than it can pay in twelve months by taxation. The consequence, under this bill, would be to stop all the wheels of local government. It would be extremely unjust to give the bill a retroactive effect, because the liabilities of the parishes were not contracted under a state of things giving any such power to creditors. The argument of the gentleman concerning the improvidence of the parishes, does not prove that it would be just to empower speculators to bind them down, and subject them to all the evils which would result from stopping their corporate proceedings. I know that in my own parish speculators could get judgments and embarrass the authorities to a serious extent by demanding payment of twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars in twelve months. The liabilities were not contracted with a view to payment in so short a time, and it would not be just to give such a great privilege to this class of creditors. It is a greater privilege than is enjoyed by the creditors of the State or any others, and we might just as well say the State should pay in twelve months, or the wheels of government be stopped. These parties became creditors with reference to the laws as they existed at the time, and we ought not to give them any greater powers.

The bill was finally deferred.

The bill authorizing the Pontchartrain Railroad Company to extend its road to Mobile, was then taken up and passed.

The bill granting payment to Mr. Hord for certain implements procured by him when making Raccourci Cut-Off, was taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe explained the object of the bill, and said the claim was a just one, and would have passed the last Legislature had the session been long enough.

Mr. Kenner remarked that Mr. Hord had already received an extra appropriation of ten or twelve thousand dollars, which was to be taken in lieu of all claims against the State.

Mr. Kenner, I am certain that at least $8000 was given, for I contended against it myself, though without success.

Mr. McCay read from the journals of last year showing that an appropriation of $6000 had been made.

Mr. Wickliffe. That was only what he was entitled to by his contract. Mr. Hord had told him that he had never received a cent more than his contract entitled him to. However, he was willing that the subject should lie over for information.

Mr. Mouton wished the bill to lie over. If he found that the claimant had already received $8000, he was not disposed to vote him a single cent more.

Mr. Wickliffe remarked that the only question was whether Mr. Hord had actually furnished these implements to the State.

Mr. Millard said that the Committee on Claims had been assured that this sum had never been included in any previous bill.

Mr. Kenner. I do not wish, sir, to be placed in the position of voting against a just claim, but I think this is the state of the case—if the articles were really furnished, the State Engineer has power to pay for them out of the contingent fund. The gentleman says that the State Engineer, Col. Williams, has died. But his successor is liable just as much. Why, then, did gentlemen not go to the proper authority? Instead of this he waits five or six years, and then he comes to the Legislature and annoys it with a claim for a debt which it never incurred.

I remember now distinctly, that Mr. Hord did receive extra compensation from the last Legislature. The bill was taken in charge by Maunsel White, who said that the contractor was entitled to extra compensation because the work had been so rapidly and well done.

After some further debate, the bill was deferred.

Mr. Rivers introduced a resolution appropriating $300 to the purchase of miscellaneous books, papers and tracts for the convicts in the Penitentiary.

Mr. Martin. This suggestion, Mr. President, was made by Col. Fluker and the Board of Administrators of the Penitentiary. The same suggestion, especially in regard to newspapers, was made by one of the committee. As to tracts, I must say that when young I read a great many of them, and I don't think morals were at all improved in consequence. I cannot believe that lies ought to be propagated under the color of religion, any more than in any other way.

Mr. Mouton moved to lay the resolution on the table. He had visited the Penitentiary and made careful observrtions of the manner in which it was conducted. He had found a bible in every cell, and he thought that was enough. The financial condition of the State was such as not to justify the expense contemplated by the resolution.

Mr. Kenner said that in all other States objects of this kind were effected by private contribution. If the association which had pressed this matter is anxious to carry the thing through, it ought to follow the plan adopted at the North. The object was a good and laudable one, and he had no objection to it; all he objected to was, that the gentleman named in the resolution—with whom he was personally acquainted, and for whom he entertained high respect—should come here and ask that aid which he ought to seek elsewhere.

Mr. Rivers. The Senator is mistaken. This gentleman does not ask the appropriation. It was recommended by a joint committee of both Houses.

Mr. Kenner. I thought the request was made by him, from the fact that his name is mentioned.

Mr. Rivers. His name is mentioned because he is Chaplain of the Penitentiary, and has to be present when the books and papers are distributed.

Mr. Kenner. Well, I shall vote against the bill. I do not think the State ought to pay everybody for the dissemination of sectional views.

Mr. Mouton. I think it hardly right that when we are so kind as to pay for the board and lodging of these people, we should be called on to pay for their reading also.

Mr. Rivers. Would the gentleman like to take board and lodging on the same terms?

Mr. Mouton. I will answer the gentleman's question in the Yankee fashion—by asking another:—Would he like to be bored in the same way, if this reading were furnished to him?

Mr. McCay. Gentlemen seem to be mistaken in regard to this matter. There is nothing of a sectarian nature in the bill. Its object is simply to purchase miscellaneous works and newspapers, for the use of the prisoners The appropriation ought to be made. It is very small—a mere trifle—and its loss would scarcely be felt by us. To give it for this object, would manifest a proper spirit on the part of the State. It would show a desire to alleviate the condition of these people. I repeat, there is nothing sectarian in the bill. I can find nothing of that kind in it.

Now, sir, we all know that the mere physical restraint to which a prisoner is subjected, is no punishment. It is the confinement of the mind that is intolerable—and we might, without inconsistency, do something to relieve them in this way.

Mr. Todd. I am entirely opposed to the bill, and I disagree with the Senator who has last spoken. One of the objects of punishment is the reformation of the criminal; and that is to be obtained through the medium of religious instruction. But the religious information ought to be furnished by associations, and not by the State. Another object is the punishment of the criminal, so as to deter others from the commission of crime. The Senator has justly observed that the most intolerable confinement is that of the mind; and the punishment, in order to be efficacious, ought to be as severe as possible. It would be wrong to moderate it, because thereby the effect would be diminished. Therefore we ought not to furnish the prisoners with miscellaneous reading, because that would lighten the punishment.

Mr. Short.—It is generally agreed by philanthropists, that in the treatment of criminals, punishment and reformation ought to go together. At the same time I do not wish to interfere with the objects of those charitable and humane institutions which have been established all over the country, and which send tracks and religious works to the heathen in all parts of the world. I therefore wish to act on the principle that charity begins at home, though I do not by any means say that it ought to end there. Nevertheless, as I said before, I do not wish to interfere with the operations of those charitable institutions to which I have alluded.

Mr. Rivers.—I am surprised at the opposition which has been manifested to this bill. Its object is to purchase and furnish books to the prisoners for the purpose of improving their minds, and preparing them for the time when they shall be again thrown on society. I am astonished at the doctrine of the Senator from Morehouse, (Mr. Todd) that because we punish a man we should not do any thing to lighten the punishment. They are prisoners of the State, they receive no sympathy from their countrymen, nor aught they to have any, but we subject them to a very severe discipline; we take their labor, and ought we to refuse this little kindness which will only involve an expenditure of $300? The object of punishment is the reformation of the criminal and our duty to the State demands that we should prepare our prisoners for a better course of life when they are released. We should therefore do everything in our power to remove the deleterious effects of the influence to which they have previously been exposed.

Mr. Mouton offered a resolution to the effect that every Senator should appropriate two days' pay to the objects specified in the bill.

Mr. Griffin should like to vote for the resolution, but he thought it would be unconstitutional.

Mr. Mouton.—The gentleman seems to think that it is constitutional to vote away the money of the State, though unconstitutional to vote away his own. I would willingly give two day's pay of my own, but I cannot be willing to give away the money of the State. If we wish to be charitable, let us be so with our own money, and not with that of the State.

Mr. Rivers.—I am not of a parsimonious disposition, but I do think there is so much of Buncombe in the resolution as to make it unworthy of the Senator who offered it. If he is disposed to give two days' pay let him do it; but the resolution was evidently offered to defeat the objects of the bill.

After a few more remarks from other Senators the bill was laid on the table.

MONDAY, March 31st.

Mr. Mouton rose to a question of privilege. He said:

I rise, Mr. President, to a question of privilege. A resolution, coming from the House of Representatives, passed the Senate a few days since, authorizing the two Committees on Contingent Expenses to pay Mr. Theodore Moise for his services as special messenger during the sickness of Gov. Hebert—leaving it to said committees to fix the amount he was to receive.

At the time, Mr. President, I thought—and I think now—that we were adopting a wrong mode of legislation. In my opinion, no committee ought to be permitted to decide on the amount to be paid to any one for services rendered to the State. A bill making the appropriation ought to be presented, in order that those who pay the taxes might know what disposition is made of the public money. And I regret very much, that when this resolution came up, I did not then make my objections to it; but if I have not done so, it was owing to my want of experience in such matters. I did not know but what this was the customary way of doing similar things.

Pursuant to the resolution above referred to, the Committee on Contingent Expenses met with the committee of the other House, and it was then agreed, by a majority of said committees, that the sum of $500 should be allowed Mr. Theodore Moise, for his services as special messenger during the sickness of Gov. Hebert. I thought, Mr. President, that this sum was a liberal remuneration for the 88 days that Mr. Moise had been employed as special messenger. Subsequently, however, the committees met again—and after having reconsidered their action on this matter, they allowed Mr. Moise an additional sum of $250! Although I had been informed that it was the intention of the committees to reconsider their action on this claim, not having been notified of the time when they met for that purpose, I was not present at its deliberations. I will therefore ask the Senate to permit me to state, in a few words, my reasons for not concurring with the committees, in order to place myself right on record.

Mr. Theodore Moise held the appointment of special messenger during 38 days. I think that the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, allowed to him, is more than a reasonable remuneration for his services We are dealing too liberally with the public moneys—and I intend to protest against all legislation of this kind; and as long as I shall have the honor of being a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, I do not want my silence to be construed as an approbation of any such legislation. I think that the principle is wrong, and thinking so, I deem it my duty to say so.

It is certainly not my intention to attach the least blame to the other members of the committee. It is a mere difference of opinion between us as to the value of the services rendered by Mr. Moise They thought them worth $750; I think it entirely too much. And when we know that the District Attorney of the 15th Judicial District—who has to travel over that extensive District to discharge the duties of his office—gets only $600 per year, we cannot, it seems to me, but admit that we have rather been very liberal towards Mr. Moise. Now, so far as I am acquainted with Mr. Molee, I can say that he is a gentleman for whom I entertain the best wishes; and I am persuaded that nothing in relation to my course on this occasion, will be understood as made in a spirit of opposition to him. I was informed that he has already received his $750—I therefore know that it is now beyond the power of the Senate to do any thing further with this matter; but as I do not approve of the mode by which the sum was appropriated out of the contingent funds, I owe it to myself to place my reasons on record, in order to disconnect me with any legislatiotion of the kind.

Mr. Wickliffe--I regret that the gentleman has tho't proper to bring forward this subject to-day, inasmuch as the members of the Committee on Contingent Expenses who had agreed to the sum stated by the gentleman, are both absent, and consequently have no opportunity of defending themselves from the charges brought against them. As President, pro tem. of the Senate, a warrant was presented to me which I signed cheerfully, because I thought it no more than a just and proper compensation for the services rendered. I can see no impropriety in the course which has been taken in this case. If we can give $750 by a bill, we can give it by a joint resolution. I do not look upon the matter in so abhorrent a light as the gentleman does. We should remember that the gentlemen of the committee are not here to defend their action, or to state the reasons which influenced them. He says that he does not wish to cast any censure upon them, but certainly such is the import of his remarks. However the gentleman may have intended his remarks, they have the effect of a direct censure on the committee.

When a special messenger is appointed, it is not the custom to restrict his compensation to the mere expenses which he has paid out of his pocket. When the people look on the list of taxes imposed upon them, and the expenses incurred by this Legislature, they will not feel unwilling to pay this sum particularly when they are made acquainted with the fact that the expenses of inaugurating Governor Hebert were $1000 less than those incurred at the inauguration of any previous Executive.

Mr. Mouton—I shall only say a few words more. If I had been notified of the meeting of the committee, I should have presented a minority report. But as I have not had an opportunity of doing so, I consider it my duty to present my views to the Senate now. As I have said, gentlemen may differ in regard to the services performed, and the amount of compensation which may reasonably be demanded and given. But what I complain of, is the manner in which the thing was done. It is this novel, and as I consider it, this reprehensible method of legislation which I attack. The way to make appropriations is by bill, so that the matter may be fully and fairly discussed by the Senate. The committees ought not to be permitted to make any appropriation out of the contingent fund. These are my reasons for bringing up the subject today. I do so because I think the system wrong in itself, and productive of evil effects, and when I think anything is wrong I will say so.

Mr. Lacoste—When the whigs were in power we said that they were guilty of outrageous extravagance. Now we are going even farther than they did. I hope gentlemen will try and put some water in their wine.

THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. Hodge—I consider it due to my constituents, sir, that I express my views on the subject of the organization of the Judiciary. As I was not present when this question was up before, I will state that after reflection bestowed on the question, and in accordance with what I believe to be the views of the people of North Louisiana, I shall support the large district system. I have been in favor of the establishment of Probate Courts, which system naturally infers large districts. I have not heard the reasons urged in the Senate pro or con. but I have read the debates in the other House, and I think they warrant the conclusion to which I have come, that the country wants Probate Courts. After an examination of the debates in the Convention of 1845, a period at which the Parish Judge system had become so odious that its abolition was the result, I find the only sound objection urged against that system was that the Judges, in many instances, were in the habit of exacting more fees than they were entitled to. If they did not do so a strong suspicion existed in the public mind that such was the case. From an examination of the debates, I have been unable to find any valid reasons given against the Probate Courts. So far as the despatch of business was concerned, I saw enough to prove to my mind that under that system business was dispatched with more facility than under the present. The fact is evident that the people of the State desire a change. No one pretends to say that the present system gives satisfaction. Every body knows that the people imperiously demand a change. What, sir, is the case in my section of country? In most parishes only two courts a year are held; consequently the judicial business cannot be fully dispatched. I knew before I came here, and since being here I have received letters from reliable sources to the same effect, that in the city also there is a necessity and a desire for the establishment of a Probate Court. In the country where, under the present system, the Courts sit only two or three times a year, where they have to attend to all kinds of business—criminal, commercial and probate—it is almost impossible to settle succession cases with that certainty and dispatch which the public interests require. It is known that sometimes successions languish for years because the Courts have no time to compel curators and administrators to render an account of the trusts confided to them.

The expense entailed by the various systems is a subject for our consideration. We must give to each District Judge a salary of at least $2000. With nine Judges we can have Probate Courts, and it will cost nothing more. I say again that from an examination of the debates of 1845 the only cause for abolishing the Parish Judge system, was that some of the Judges were in the habit of taking more fees than they were entitled to. But the present Constitution says that no fees shall be taken by Judges. This is a clear expression that the people desire Probate Courts, for who ever heard of paying fees to a District Judge? I did not come here so much for the purpose of representing my own opinions as those of my constituents. Do you not see in the Constitution an evident desire and intention to guard against the evils which proved the downfall of the Parish Judge system?

In regard to this subject, the experience of other States ought to have some weight with us. In almost all of them they have Probate Courts in order to attend to succession business. In Mississippi, the Probate Courts sit every month. They discharge their business satisfactorily to the people and the District Courts operate with equal success.

I agree with the framers of the Constitution in opposition to the payment of fees to judges. The proper course is to give moderate salaries, yet sufficiently large to command the requisite talent and capacity for the bench. Thus we would keep at an equal distance between niggardly economy and prodigal extravagance. We ought of course to offer such salaries as will make competent men willing to accept the ermine. But I am opposed to the system of making give the probate judges $2000 each per annum. I beoffices a desideratum on account of the salaries alone. I will answer the objection made in the other House, that probate judges must be learned in the law. If we take the right course the objection will be found to be groundless. I would modify our laws in regard to successions in such a manner that the parish judge should be an administrative officer Then there will be no necessity for selecting a lawyer. A planter, without any knowledge of the law, but having an average amount of intellectual capacity, will be perfectly competent to perform the duties of a probate judge.—It has been said, in the other House, that we must lieve that the requisite talent and ability can be procured for $1000. But to give $2000 would be a fatal act. Immense salaries like these would make the offices objects for the scheming of unprincipled men, who would look not so much to the honor as to the profit of the place. When pecuniary profit, instead of honorable position, becomes the object of ambition, the dignity of office is gone forever. In the wealthiest counties of Mississippi the probate judges do not receive more than $600 per annum. They are elected, not only because they are gentlemen of talent and integrity, but because they have the good fortune to be at the head of a numerous family. We see, then, that in the wealthiest counties of a neighboring State, not sixty miles from this capital, the probate judges can live on $600 a year. Are we to be told that only those who go to the bench from our court rooms and cities are capable of understanding the laws, and that the country people cannot comprehend them? If this be so, the laws need reform. I believe that in my own parish I could find at least fifty men competent to perform the duties of probate judge, who would be willing to accept the office for $1000. They may not be able to tell the meaning of all the technical terms, but they will understand the point of any case presented. I think we should expel from our law books the jargon which now defaces them, and have them written in good plain English. In my parish $1500 per annum are expended for clerk's fees, taking inventories, &c. All this would be saved by probate judges. You know the expense of taking inventories and other acts of a similar nature. When a notary takes an inventory he generally trumpsup a bill of a hundred dollars. Why cannot the probate judge perform the service just as well?—Why cannot he give an order of sale which is now done by the clerk, who makes out a bill as long as the moral law? In my own parish enough would be saved in this way to pay the salary of the probate judge

In the bill which I introduced, it was left to the parishes—that is to say, to the police juries—to fix the salaries of the probate judges. But it has been said that many of the police juries would not give enough, and they have been talked about till one might begin to believe them a parcel of Hottentots.—Now, sir, although I do not belong to that party whose peculiar vocation it is to boast of their love for the dear people, I nevertheless think that the people of Louisiana are competent to manage their own affairs. Let us leave to the people, or to the police juries, which are the representatives of the people, the compensation of the probate judges, and they will give ample salaries, because they will not be willing to see their servants labor without reward. I suggested also that the clerks of the probate courts might act as parish recorders, in which case their fees could be reduced to one-half or one-fourth of what is now paid to clerks of the district courts.

I believe that the principal objection to parish judges was that they were paid by fees, and were sometimes incompetent to discharge the duties of their office. But, in the progress of the age, acting upon our more advanced ideas, we have given the election of judges to the people. If this be a correct system, we have no reason to fear incompetency on the part of a judge, because we have no right to distrust the capacity of the people to select their own judicial officers.

In examining this subject we shall find that where one Court combines jurisdiction in criminal, succession, and commercial cases, its action can scarcely be equable and harmonious. We cannot reasonably expect to find one gentleman who concentrates in himself pre-eminent or equal ability in all these various branches of the law. It may be said of one, that he is a good commercial lawyer, of another that he is extremely successful in succession cases, of a third that he stands high as a civilian. Why is this? Simply because it is the interests of a lawyer to study carefully one particular branch of his profession. If we create the office of Probate Judge, it will excite a desire for legal knowledge among our planting community, to such an extent that they will be enabled to discharge the duties of that important station.

Mr. Wickliffe I do not intend to say much, but I desire to say a few words about the calculation of the gentleman in reference to the relative expenses of the various systems. He has said that the probate system will be cheaper. Let us see if this be correct. With nine districts, giving the judges $3000 each, the amount will be $27,000; add to this, the salaries of the 47 probate judges at $1000, and you have a larger sum than is required under any other system.

Mr. Hodge. I should have said that, under the system proposed by me, the probate judges will be paid out of the Parish Treasuries.

Mr. Wickliffe. It makes no difference whether the salaries be paid out of the parish treasuries or not—the expense will be the same to the people wherever the salaries come from. The gentleman complains of the small number of terms of court a year, under the present system. What can be easier than for us to pass a law compelling judges to hold six or eight terms a year. The gentleman refers to Mississippi as a conclusive example of the successful results of his system. That is not an analogous case. In Mississippi, they have not the intricate and complex system which prevails in Louisiana, and consequently it is easier ot procure competent men at small salaries. For my part, I have not seen any evidence of that desire in the public mind for a change in the present judiciary system which some gentlemen say exists. The present system is cheaper than any other yet proposed. The sense of the Senate—and the Senate represents the voice of the people—is in favor of economy. If we apply this test we find that the House system involves an expense of $78,000, and the present system of only $51,000, making a difference of $27,000.

Mr. Short—When this question came up before I endeavored to show that with a Probate Judge in each parish, although nominally the expenses. Would be greater, yet in fact, it would be less than under the present system where the clerks receive such enormous fees I am still in favor of the large districts. All the news that I receive from my constituents in Madison and Carroll confirm me in that opinion. So far from not being able to find candidates for the Probate Court, I can say that already three have presented their names in Carroll parish. What was the cost of the old parish judge system? It was $160,000 at the lowest estimate. It was not only expensive but there were other objections. Where a judge combined various different duties, where he was the head of the Police Jury, and had almost everything in the parish under his control, abuses were naturally to be expected. These were the objections to the parish judge system. It was expensive and badly administered. Yet we make no call on the Senate to bolster up even that system. The simple change making the judges elective instead of appointive would rectify many of the abuses of the system. My wish is to place a probate Court in every parish, and to have large districts for the transaction of general business.

Mr. Todd—I concur in much that has been said in regard to the inconvenience of the present system for the transaction of succession business. I came here prepared to vote for the probate system, but when I took the increased expense into consideration I changed my views. I shall vote to retain the present system. I believe that we can make alterations and modifications that will rid us of many of its evils.—We have already made a great improvement by giving clerks the power to issue orders, &c., in case of the absence of the Judge in another parish. I anticipate great difficulty from that clause of the Constitution which the gentleman from Caddo approves so highly, that by which judges are prevented from receiving fees. I disagree with him in regard to the necessity of making all payments by means of fixed salaries.—Were it not for this we could establish a cheaper and more efficacious Probate system than is possible now, because we might make the Probrte Judge act as his own clerk and as recorder of mortgages. The gentleman says that the salaries may be paid from the parish treasuries. This seems to me to be a very objectionable proposition. The Judiciary is a co-ordinate branch of the State Government, and I do not wish to place it under the power of the parish authorities, which it would be were the police jury to have control of the salaries of the judges. In many parishes competent men could not be found to fill the place.—Other parishes are largely in debt and could not pay adequate salaries. If the Probate system is to be established I shall go for the largest number of districts that has been proposed in order to decrease the expenses; and a law should be passed compelling the judges to hold four terms a year.

Mr. Short. The only objection to that is, that four terms have been tried and abandoned.

Mr. Hodge said a few words in reply.

The motion to reconsider was lost, and the bill finally passed.

Mr. King moved to take up the City Judiciary Bill.

Mr King. I move to amend by providing that all Succession cases be opened to the Second Court.

Perhaps one of the most difficult questions known to the law, is a Succession case. Under the old Probate system, many inconveniences arose from the separate jurisdiction of the Courts. It was frequently difficult for the best lawyers to decide whether a suit should be brought in the Probate Court, or in one of ordinary jurisdiction. If they happened to make an error, it was fatal to the cause. This was productive of delay and confusion in the administration of justice. I wish to avoid this breaker, on which so many suits have been wrecked, and so many rights destroyed. I think my amendment will secure the object.

The amendment was adopted.

After some further discussion, the bill passed.

TUESDAY, March 22d, 1853.

After the reading of the Journal Mr. King rose and said—

Mr. President:

In presenting the report of the committee appointed to attend the funeral ceremonies of the late Isaac Johnson, it is perhaps expected that I should accompany it with some remarks upon the life, character and public services of the deceased.

Isaac Johnson was born in the parish of West Feliciana, in the year 1805. His father, John H. Johnson, was one of the leaders in the revolution which overthrew the Spanish dominion in what are now called the Florida Parishes.

His education, though limited to such rudiments of the classics and other branches as were taught at that early day in the parish in which he lived, was by no means circumscribed. His mind was well stored with the ideas and sentiments of the fathers of English literature.

He was admitted to the bar shortly after his majority. His success in his profession was instantaneous—and perhaps has had no parallel in the history of the Louisiana Bar. At the time of his elevation to the bench of the District Court, which occurred a few years after his admission to the bar, he had a docket of two hundred and twenty cases.

He continued to preside over the District Court, and over the Court of Appeals in criminal cases—with the exception of a short intermission when appointed Secretary of State by Gov. Mouton—until his elevation to the Chief Magistracy of the State.

On the expiration of his term of office as Governor, he was appointed Attorney General of the State by Governor Walker—which position he filled until the going into effect of the new Constitution; at which time, and until his decease, he was a prominent candidate before the people for a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of the State.

As a Judge, though not particularly distinguished for the profundity of his legal learning, no man, perhaps, ever sat upon the bench, whose decisions gave more universal satisfaction. With a moral sensibility keenly susceptible, he knew well how to "temper justice with mercy."

As a Chief Magistrate he exhibited, in a remarkable degree, the high qualities of the patriot and the statesman. To him was assigned the difficult task of organizing the State Government under the Constitution of 1845. This he performed with signal ability, and greatly distinguished himself by his patriotic and efficient services during the Mexican war.

The greater portion of his life was devoted to the public service; and although cut off at that period when men ordinarily begin to mount the ladder of ambition, he had already filled many exalted stations. From his wide-spread popularity, it is not unreasonable to infer that he would have been called to other and higher honors, had health and length of years been allotted to him.

But it is not alone in the public services of Isaac Johnson, distinguished as they were, that we are to look for the sources of the devotion of his countrymen. They must be sought in the natural elements of his character; in the sincerity of his patriotism; in the purity and benevolence of his heart; and in the fervency of his domestic and social attachments.

As a public man, the ends at which he aimed were emphatically his country's, his God's, and Truth.

Endowed by nature with a poetic sensibility and sympathy for all the sufferings to which humanity is heir, he bestowed his favors with so lavish a hand as to keep him, through life, involved in pecuniary embarrassments.

Those alone who knew him intimately, can speak of the strength and kindness of his social attachments. In their hearts will his memory be ever enshrined.

Friendships he had many—enmities none. His life was a beautiful example of the truth, that "To err, is human; to forgive, divine."

When stung—as oft he was—by the sense of ingratitude—that sting "how sharper than a serpent's tooth"—the patience and meekness with which he forbore and forgave, were of no earthly origin.

Could his revilers thus have looked into his heart, how pointedly would their malevolence have been rebuked, their hostility disarmed!

Blessed by nature with a singularly graceful and commanding person, united to a chivalrous bearing, his form was a fit mansion for his many noble qualities:—

> "A combination and a form indeed.
> Where every god did seem to set his seal,
> To give the world assurance of a man!"

That god-like form, and that noble heart, now lie buried in the bosom of his native Louisiana—that Louisiana he so dearly loved. Never will her sod cover a more devoted breast!

That tongue whose accents were ever blessings—that ear which was never deaf to the voice of distress, or the supplications of mercy—that hand ever open to the calls of charity—are now no more forever!

His fame, and the memory of his many virtues, are all that is left to us. May we long preserve the one, and ever cherish the other!

To his widowed wife and afflicted family, May God give strength to bear up under this their heavy calamity; and may they find, in a Nation's sympathy, a solace for their grief!

Mr. Kenner. I beg leave, sir, without previous notice, to introduce a bill which, the Senate will agree with me, is of some importance. It is well known that during the early part of the session $50,000 were appropriated to pay the expenses of the General Assembly. It is now my painful duty to announce the demise of this $50,000. With the most profound regret I announce that it is all gone. The fact was yesterday communicated to me by a member of the lower House, who seemed to be laboring under great excitement in consequence. He asked me to have the bill taken up yesterday, but I was unable to do it then for want of a quorum. It appears that many members and officers are waiting for their per diem, and they seem to be laboring under much distress, as visions of an exhausted treasury appear to their mind. I have now a bill to appropriate $75,000 more, and I wish to have it taken up immediately, in order to alleviate the deep distress which exists.

The bill was taken up and passed.

ORDER OF THE DAY—THE INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT BILL.

Mr. Lacey's substitute for the bill establishing a Board of Internal Improvements was taken up.

Mr. Nicholls. I move to postpone the bill on account of the absence of the gentleman by whom it was introduced. Moreover, I see around me a beggarly account of empty benches. But a bare majority of the Senate is present. If we take a vote now, we come to a result in direct opposition to the will of the people. The dictum of ten Senators might fasten upon the State a system ruinous to its interests and prosperity. When no injury can result from the postponement, when by delaying action a short time we may come to a better decision, our duty to the people and courtesy to a brother Senator, demand that we should do it.

Mr. Wickliffe. I am as much disposed to act with courtesy as any member on this floor; but I am not, therefore, in favor of a postponement. We have now been in session almost two months, and have not yet nearly concluded our important business. It was the duty of the gentleman who offered the substitute to be in his place to-day, as he was present when the motion to lay on the table was made. The democratic party is in a majority and must bear the responsibility of any action of the Legislature. The bill, for which this is a substitute, has been before the Senate for two or three weeks, and it is time for us to do something in reference it. I confess that I am in favor of the bill from the lower House, and shall do what I can to assist it in passing. The exigencies of the times demand it. I hope, Mr. President, that the substitute will not be postponed.

Mr. Derbes. I cannot see any good reason for postponement, inasmuch as I hold in my hand a note from the gentleman alluded to, which states that, owing to illness in his family, he will not be here for two or three days. I think, also, that we should act on this subject immediately. We have been here two months, and yet have done nothing on this most important subject. We ought to act to-day, as the Senator from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) will not be here either to-day or to-morrow.

The motion to postpone was withdrawn and the substitute taken up, and then laid on the table.

The original bill was then taken up section by section.

Mr. Hodge. I shall state my objections to adopting the first section of this bill. However necessary the other sections may be, this one is certainly unnecessary, as its object is fully provided for by the Constitution itself. I am unwilling by any vote of mine, directly or indirectly, to contravene the Constitution of the State, and I believe we would be violating not only its spirit but its letter, by doing what the Constitution has already provided for. The people intended to legislate in the Constitution itself, and have pointed out how the Board—a Board the same as that contemplated by the bill—shall be formed. The Constitution provides that the State shall be divided into certain districts, and that a commissioner shall be elected by each—three commissioners to compose the Board of Internal Improvements. Their duties are precisely the same as the duties of the commissioners under this bill, and the character of the Board is to be same.—Now, if the people, expressing their will through the Constitution, have already provided for a Board, I ask gentlemen to show me the necessity for establishing another. Have you determined to abolish the Constitutional Board of Public Works? By no means—because a few days since you determined that you would not do so until you should be satisfied by the report of the Committee on Internal Improvements that some other plan more feasible and satisfactory would be suggested. In fact some members had serious doubts whether we had the Constitutional power to abolish the Board before its organization. I was one of those who believed that we could do it. I believe that all those articles in the Constitution could be repealed by a Constitutional majority. But I do not believe that the Legislature has the power to establish another Board till it has, by the requisite majority, decided that the Board provided for by the Constitution shall not be organized. I feel it my duty to oppose this section, because its provisions do not coincide with those of the Constitution. What is the difference between the Board contemplated by the bill, and that provided for in the Constitution? There may, it is true, be some difference in the manner of forming the districts.—This bill makes three Districts—the Constitution says there shall be four. The only difference, then, is the difference between three and four. But beyond this there is a very serious distinction. The bill gives to the Governor the power of appointing the Commissioners. Under the Constitution the people have decidedly expressed themselves in favor of the election of the Commissioners by the qualified voters of the respective districts. I am compelled to believe that this departure from the principle enunciated in the Constitution is produced by a desire to heap additional patronage on the Executive, and to wrest from the people the right of choosing their own officers. A few days ago, when the subject of abolishing the Board of Public Works was under consideration, I listened with great attention to the argument of the Senator from New Orleans (Mr. King) in favor of that measure. I heard no good reason for abolishing the Board advanced by him, except that the Board being composed of an even number, might comprise two whigs and two democrats, and thus a conflict of opinion and interests be produced which might prove injurious to the harmonious action of the Board. For this reason he thought an odd number preferable. I consider that if a work be not of sufficient importance to command the approbation of three of the Commissioners it ought not to be done. I do not believe that the work of the Board will be better performed by three democrats appointed by the Governor than by two whigs and two democrats elected by the people. I repeat that no good reason for abolishing the Board has been advanced unless there be some force in the objection of the Senator from New Orleans which I have just alluded to. I shall detain the Senate with no further remarks on this section, though I shall have something to say on others. I say again that I consider the section in plain violation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and I shall therefore oppose it.

Mr. King said:

He wished briefly to state his objections to the bill. He was opposed to the machinery provided by it, for the construction and management of our Internal Improvements; and also to the limited assistance proposed to be given by the State to such works.

The bill provides for a Board of three Commissioners, authorized to appoint three Engineers, who are to plan and construct the works. He did not see any use, under such circumstances, for the Board of Commissioners, and thought they might as well be dispensed with, as wholly useless.

He was opposed to placing our internal improvements under the charge of three persons. He would as soon think of placing three generals at the head of our army, or three overseers on the same plantation. Our public improvements should be conducted with unity of purpose and unity of action. There should be an undivided energy devoted to them. This was necessary to insure a harmonious and homogeneous action in the prosecution of works of public improvement.

This bill only contemplated organizing one branch of the internal improvements of the State. It provided for the building of levees and drainage, leaving the other branches of internal improvements unprovided for. He was opposed to having two separate organizations—one to make levees, and the other to take charge of all other public works. They would prove expensive and unnecessary.

The bill, in its present form, was a flagrant violation of the Constitution. This objection, however, might be obviated by an amendment, making the Board established by this bill temporary only, to be superseded by the Board provided by the Constitution, whenever that Board should be organized. An amendment of this description was indispensable.

He confessed he did not at all like the bill. He did not believe it was the best provision that could be made for the prosecution of the public works. If he gave the bill his support, it would be only after considerable modifications, and then only because it was thought to be the only bill which could be passed this session.

His views as to the manner in which the Swamp Land fund should be used for the levecing and drainage of the State, had already been laid before the Senate. He thought two millions of dollars should be raised by the State on a pledge of the swamp lands—and that the levees should be at once built, so as to exempt the State from all danger of inundation. The alluvial lands should be districted according to their topography. The levees, after being completed by the States should be turned over to those districts.—Laws should be passed compelling the districts over after to keep the levees in order.

But, unfortunately, he had no hope of seeing his views adopted this session.

Mr. Short moved to reinsert the words "and draining" in the bill.

Mr Kenner—I feel convinced that the Senate is determined to reinsert that provision in the bill. Nevertheless, I continue to think that it is a grave error. I have done all that I could to prevent the Senate from falling into it and I am therefore relieved from any responsibility. It rests on those who insist on incorporating this feature in the bill. Without again going into a discussion on the subject I will say that not one gentleman has met any argument concerning the tremendous expense to which this system will subject the State or has replied to the fact that it will be out of the power of the State to consummate the work. Gentlemen may draw beautiful pictures of this magnificent enterprise—pictures never to be realized—they may build castles in the air—castles which are destined to fade like insubstantial visions—but they have not and cannot reply to these facts. I therefore do not consider it necessary to repeat my argument. I will however notice one argument which has been brought forward on the other side. It is said the law states that the swamp lands were given to us for leveeing and draining I ask whether when a grant is encumbered with an onerous and impossible condition, the grantor would be justified in attempting to wrest the gift from the grantee if the condition be not fulfilled. Clearly not. When we have constructed our levees we have done all that is contemplated by the law, and we are not compelled to comply with a burthensome provision—one which if carried into effect would be disastrous to the interests of the State. Now, sir, I can say with all certainty that I am not opposed to this bill, though some gentlemen think I am, and listen to the whispers, out of doors, of those who would not venture to make such an assertion openly. On the contrary I feel a deep interest in the bill, but if gentlemen choose to prefer the operations of others to mine, I can have nothing more to say.

In the Committee I moved to strike out the words "and drainage," from the House bill, and this met with unanimous concurrence.

Mr. Short—I never concurred in that motion.

Mr. Kenner—Then I must admit that I have been mistaken, still I am forced to say that the gentleman did not mention his disapproval to me. I state unequivocally, though I cannot say the gentleman was in favor of the motion, that he did not object at the time, did not discuss the point with us, and did not make any objection when the vote was taken.

Mr. Short—No vote was taken.

Mr. Kenner—Then I have forgotten all about it.

Mr. Rivers stated what took place in the Committee, and said that he should now vote to strike out drainage

Mr. Palfrey—I shall vote against this section, and every section of every bill till one is presented which I believe to be constitutional. I do not believe that this step can be taken till the Board of Public Works is abolished.

The section defining the Districts then came up.

Mr. King—I think it wrong to cut a parish in two. On examining the map I find that the line of 31° runs directly through the parish of Rapides.

Mr. Rivers—It is only an imaginary line, and its adoption will be no hardship to the people of Rapides. The upper District is too large already and we ought not to add anything to it.

Mr. Hodge—Let us make four Districts. That will suit the Constitution exactly. As constituted by the bill, in one District there is a large quantity of swamp land, and in another very little. The Districts ought to be formed with reference to the amount of swamp land in each respectively. I think there ought to be two Districts north of Red River, one to be called the Red River District, and the other the Mississippi District.

On motion of Mr. Griffin, the parishes of Rapides and Avoyelles were placed in the Third District.

The third section, giving to the Governor the power of appointing the Commissioners, was then taken up.

Mr. Todd moved to amend, by giving the election to the people.

Mr. Wickliffe. I move to lay the amendment on the table, it seems to me that whig professions in power and out of power are very different.

The name of Mr. Rivers being called, he said:

As this Board will have only a temporary existence, and as I have every confidence in the ability of Gov. Hebert to make good appointments, I shall vote to lay on the table.

The amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. King offered an amendment providing that the Commissioners should hold office for two years, unless superseded; and that the functions of the Board should cease as soon as the Board contemplated by the Constitution is organized.

Mr. Kenner. That is provided for by section 25th of the bill.

Mr. King. That does not meet the objection. If we can extend the existence of the Board for six months we can do it for six years, or in perpetuo.

Mr. Short. The State of Louisiana never yet made levees public works.

Mr. Hodge. I will state my objection to the amendment. If I understand the object of the amendment, it is to provide that this Board shall be superseded by the Board to be organized under the Constitution. It is the evident duty of this Legislature, if it has any regard for the Constitution, to provide for the election and compensation of the Commissioners, as directed by art. 131. If we intend to provide for the organization of the Board as provided for by the Constitution, how long will this Board, contemplated by the bill, be in existence? Will it exist for six months? By no means. Unless the Constitutional provision is to remain a dead letter, your Board cannot remain in existence for six months. I believe that we cannot, and ought not to provide for the existence of a thing which we know cannot exist if the Legislature do its duty. The amendment, I suppose is offered to make the bitter pill palatable to those who have constitutional objections.

Mr. King. Does the gentleman object to having the bill made palatable.

Mr. Hodge. I object to the whole thing. I wish to show that I cannot be misled by such an amendment as that.

Mr. Kenner moved to amend by providing that one Engineer, instead of three, be appointed. The present system is conducted by one Engineer, who has duties to perform just as arduous as those of the Engineers under this bill.

It is proposed to pay the Engineers $3500 each, which amounts to $10,500 per annum, and also $4500 to the four Commissioners.

Mr. King. I second the motion for the one Engineer.

Mr Short. I am opposed to the motion, as it will render the bill entirely inefficient. It will destroy its capacity for good, and increase its capacity for evil. I am surprised that the one engineer system which has met with such fierce denunciation from gentlemen on the other side of the House, should now be brought forward. I have listened with attention to the argument of the gentleman from New Orleans. (Mr. King.) I have heard him say that no one would think of placing three generals at the head of one army, or of having three overseers on one plantation. Though I am no planter, I profess to have some ideas on that subject. The gentleman himself knows that if a person have three plantations he must have three overseers to attend to them. By this means he will certainly realize a larger per centum on his capital invested than if he were to employ only one overseer. I ask the gentleman how one Engineer could go to various sections of the State which might require his presence; how could he be at one moment on Red River, and another at the Balize? If it were not for the earnest manner of the gentleman, I should suppose that he is not serious in offering such an amendment. Its only effect would be to destroy the system which the bill proposes to establish. How, I ask again, could one Engineer pass from the Arkansas line to the Gulf, let out contracts, and perform the multifarious duties of his office. Why sir, the bill would be totally ineffective were but one Engineer provided for. I am willing to take the responsibility of increased expenditures under such circumstances as may soon arise—when whole parishes are liable to be overflowed—when inundation threatens us on every side, and when I consider the beneficial effects which I have seen result from the system proposed, and which I have witnessed in operation. When I see these things I am not going to be startled by the assertion that it will be expensive. One tenth of the amount of property annually destroyed by inundation would pay all the expenses under this bill.

Mr. King. The Senator from Madison (Mr. Short) entirely misapprehended my idea in advocating only one Engineer. I do not wish to destroy its efficiency—on the contrary, I desire to make it more efficient.—Although the bill does not meet with my approbation, I wish to make it as perfect as I can. If we intend to build levees from the Arkansas line to the Balize, it might be necessary to have three Engineers; but with the little money we have on hand, are we going to attempt such a thing? Why, the amount we have would scarcely last more than two or three weeks, and in addition the Engineer will not be overburthened with labor. The bill provides for the appointment of inspectors who will do the practical portion of the work. The Engineer will have little to do except to give out contracts. These are my views. I do not wish to defeat the bill, and I trust gentlemen will not accuse me of such an intention.

Mr. Kenner. When I think it necessary to offer amendments to this bill I shall do it. The gentleman thinks I am endeavoring to defeat the bill, but I can again assure him that he is mistaken. I am now doing what the gentleman ought to do; I am making amendments to the bill in conformity with the opinions of the Committee.

Mr. Short. I say again that the gentleman is mistaken. No bill was agreed on by the Committee. If he wishes again to make use of the argument that I did not oppose the motion which he says he made in Committee, he is welcome to do so.

Mr. Kenner. I shall not insist on doing so after the disclaimer of the gentleman, and but for the fact that he has imputed improper motives to me, I should never have made use of it all. But I appeal to the Senator from Concordia (Mr. Rivers) that the gentleman did not say a word in opposition to my motion to strike out drainage, when I made it in the Committee.

Mr. Short—The gentleman will recollect that no vote was taken on the proposition. I think I did not transcend the rules of debate when I deny the allegations of the gentleman, and endeavor to place myself right. I always endeavor to use such language towards others as I wish others to use towards me.

Mr. Rivers again explained—He should vote for amendments without regard to the action of the committee.

Mr. Kenner—The only reason for my remarks is, that, as I was not accused of wishing to defeat the bill in Committee, I do not like to be accused of it in open Senate. I think, sir, that a saving of $6000 would be worth something. I think that one engineer is ample to perform the duties. What has he to do? He has to make contracts, and need not stay on the ground one moment after the contract is made. He will not be employed more than three months in a year. Why then pay $9000 when $3000 will be sufficient.

Mr. Wickliffe—It will be a moral impossibility for one engineer to do a third of the work. I think we will effect an actual saving by having three. I therefore move to lay the motion to strike out and insert on the table.

Mr. Rivers—The Committee voted for the motion to strike out, thinking one engineer enough. But it seems to me that from the nature of the duties to be performed, the engineer having to pass between distant points, and from the danger of crevasses at different places, more than one will be needed. I think three will be necessary even though each will not be employed more than three months.

Mr. Hodge—On examination I find that the engineer will not have enough to do to justify us in giving him a salary of $3500, and that the commissioners will not be employed a tenth part of their time I therefore move to amend by providing that the commissioners be competent engineers. I think the desired object will be achieved by this.

Mr Wickliffe—We might not perhaps be able to find a suitable person in each District. Practical engineers are scarce in Louisiana.

Mr. Hodge—If that is the case, I do not see why it will not apply in the other case also.

Mr. Wickliffe—The bill says that the commissioner must reside in the District.

Mr. Hodge—The Constitution contains the same provision, but that has been construed to mean that the commissioners shall be residents of their respective districts, after their election. I presume the terms of the bill were intended to be understood in the same way. I do not see any reason for having this host of officers. There is not the slighest use in appointing commissioners when the duties can be just as well performed by the engineers, and at a saving of $6000.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the motion to lay on the table was carried.

Mr. Hodge's substitue was then laid on the table.

Mr. Lacoste moved to strike out $3000 and insert $2500 as the salary of the engineers.

Mr. Rivers moved to insert $2000.

Mr. Short—$2000 is entirely too small. Whenever the question is raised concerning the Judiciary gentlemen argue that the respectability of the position of a judge demands a high salary. But when we propose a measure which is to make the country inhabitable, when we wish to make place for a population over which the Judiciary is to exercise jurisdiction, we hear nothing of such an argument. Now, why do you wish to reduce the salaries so low as to render the bill inoperative? When we have a practical plan submitted to us, let us have it tried.

Mr Derbes advanced some remarks in opposition to the amendment.

Mr Kenner—When the subject was under consideration in the Committee I moved to give the engineers $3500 a year, thinking there would be only one, who would have much to do, and be compelled to travel in different sections of the State. But as the Senate in its wisdom has decided to have three engineers, and as I believe they will not be employed more than twelve weeks in the year, I shall vote for the lower sum. I shall now call attention to the salaries of the various State officers. Your Governor receives $4000 a year; your Secretary of State, who has to remain here all the year, and perform duties of an arduous character, receives $1500—the Treasurer $2500—the Adjutant General $500. The arguments made under the oft-repeated plea of the necessity of establishing some system, are only made for the purpose of preparing a list of fat offices for the Executive to fill. Why, the present State Engineer, who has three times as much as the engineers under this bill will have to do, who has to travel from the Gulf to the Arkansas line, and to superintend the execution of all our State works, receives only $2000 a year. Why is this? If these enormous salaries were to be paid by taxation gentlemen would be careful how they peril their popularity by advocating them, but as it is to come out of the swamp land fund they do not seem to have the slightest compunctions. I am glad it is provided that no member of the Legislature shall hold any other office, elsewe might expect a general rush for them.

Mr. Short—That interesting Engineer of whom the gentleman speaks, has never been seen in my section of country.

Mr. Wickliffe—If I remember aright, the gentleman last year voted against reducing salaries.

Mr. Kenner—I will set the gentleman right, I voted against reducing the salary of the Superintendent of Public Education because I thought the duties of the station required the salary. I voted against reducing the salaries of the other officers, simply because I thought the measure unconstitutional, while officers then serving remained in office. These were my reasons, and I think the Senate will acknowledge that they are good. If not I have not as much sense as I thought I had.

Mr. Wickliffe—I don't intend to blame the gentleman for the votes which he gave, but he bears me out in the assertion which I made, that he voted against an immediate reduction of salaries. Now sir, I know that the Treasurer last year received $8000.

The amendment giving $2900 was adoped.

The section giving the engineer power to determine the locality of levees was taken up.

Mr. Kenner. I am opposed to this section of the bill. I will endeavor to illustrate my position. When the levee syndic finds a levee on a caving bank and wishes to remove it, he determines where a new one shall be placed. If the planter objects, he must call in two neighbors, and the three decide. The only restriction is, that he must not place the levee behind a dwelling. If the interests of the public and of the neighbors demand the work, it must be done. But, I am opposed to giving this power to one man. It is an extensive power and should not lightly be wrested from the hands which hold it at present. We need the protection which we, at present, have from the opinions of our neighbors. I appeal to the gentleman from St. Bernard, [Mr. Lacoste] where the people are in the habit of getting their feet wet, whether he would like to give up this protection. We do not want to be placed at the mercy of one man. We want this thing to be decided by the people of the neighborhood. There is no risk in it—no hardship—it is only preserving to us some of our rights.

An amendment was carried giving to the Engineer and three freeholders, the power of deciding the location and size of levees.

Mr. Short. I think this power of freeholders ought to be restricted to the location of levees, as the Engineer is the only proper judge of their size and form.

Mr. Kenner. Suppose the Engineer in a fit of ill-will, or of anger should order an individual to build a levee 30 feet high and of a hundred base, what is he to do? It would ruin a man to build it.

Mr. Wickliffe. No man would build it.

Mr. Kenner. Under this bill what resource would he have?

Mr. Wickliffe. Why the Governor would turn the Engineer out.

Mr. Kenner. I would rather protect the rights of the citizen than leave their protection to any one person, even though that person happens to be the Governor.

Mr. Wickliffe. After all, what difference would it make to a man of what size his levees are when they are paid for by the State.

Mr. Kenner. Is it contemplated that the State shall pay for these levees?

Mr. Wickliffe. Yes, out of the swamp land fund.

Mr Kenner. Now, a new light breaks in upon me. However, I want to protect the swamp land fund, as well as the rights of our citizens

Mr. Short. I am in favor of leaving to the engineers the power of fixing the dimensions of the levees, but I would let three planters decide on the location. The strength of a levee depends, to a great extent, on the manner of its construction. It has been ascertained, that stronger levees can be built than if they are constructed under the law of 1829. With three-fourths the quantity of embankment, you can build a stronger levee Why, then, do you wish to go back to the old system?

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. Kenner. I am sorry to see the gentleman going against what we consider a saving clause This is not a trifling subject; on the contrary, it is of a momentous character. The gentleman probably thinks it a subject of little importance, because he resides upon the high lands, where the overflowing waters do not disturb his repose, or peril his security. I will tell you what I think, sir In the first place I will ask, whether we who live behind the levees,—who are interested in their preservation—who would be overwhelmed by their destruction—are we their proper guardians? Or is a man who comes from another State, and has no interest in having our levees built or preserved,—is he, I ask, to be entrusted with their care? I wish, sir, to strike out everything in this section that is in conflict with our local laws. I shall ask this—though I scarcely dare do it, for fear of being accused of wishing to defeat the bill. I cannot go home and tell my constituents—three hundred of whom were, last year, expelled from their homes by the effects of a crevasse,—I cannot go home and tell them that I have voted for this section. How, when they ask me to whom the care of the levees has been confided, can I tell them that they are placed under control of a man who does not reside near them, and has no interest in their safety? When they ask me who is to attend to them, I must reply—a government official. When they ask where he is to be found, I must say, at Baton Rouge, or New Orleans. Can I then assure them that they are safe? Would they be justified in maintaining any sense of security. No, sir, I cannot go back to my constituents, and tell them they are safe under such a system as this.

Mr. Short. I do not think that the gentleman draws any fancy sketch, when he presents to us a picture of his ruined and homeless neighbors, seeking the charity of the world in their hour of need. I have seen something of the kind in my own section of the State. But I do say, that I do neither draw upon my imagination when I speak of the practical benefits which would result from the adoption of this system. I have seen it in operation in those parishes, and I view it, not through the medium of theory, but of actual experiment.

WEDNESDAY, March 9th, 1853.

The House substitute for the Senate bill, to extend the time of payment of pre-emptors to twelve months, was taken up.

Mr. Short. As my position, and that of the Senate, in regard to this bill, appears to have been misunderstood in the other House, I desire to say a few words in explanation. The bill which I offered here, some time ago, did not interfere at all with pre-emption rights acquired under the act of 1852. Indeed I went farther. The bill closing the land office, which passed this body, appears to have been entirely misinterpreted in the House. It was there looked upon as being intended for the benefit of speculators. Here a totally different view was entertained, and a very different object was proposed by the Senate in passing the bill. The object was to prevent speculators from seising on the best lands, and entering it before a general levee system could be adopted, thus depriving the State of the benefits of the swamp lands. The plan before the Committee was to have the lands graduated in price, and to bring only so much into market in any one year as would suffice for the operations of the levee system during that year.

We were of opinion that if we permitted these lands to be taken up by speculators we should not be enabled to realize as much from the levee fund as we ought. When a levee is built, of course the lands in the rear become more valuable, and speculators, with that sharp, keen eye for the main chance, which generally characterizes them, would go and enter these lands, and thus reap the benefit of the labors of the State to its own injury. The object of the Senate bill was to preclude the possibility of such a result by preventing the sale of the public lands till they were so graduated as to bring the highest price.

I was opposed to the bill brought in by the Senator from Livingston and East Baton Rouge on two grounds. In the first place it proposed to grant to pre-emptors, in the two parishes only which the gentleman represents, an extension of time for payment, when all others in the State had an equal right to claim the same privilege. Now from the foundation of the government to the present time, pre-emption has been used by ambitious politicians as an electioneering fund, and I do not feel disposed to encourage the system any longer. I am opposed to interfering with the swamp land fund for any other purpose than that for which it was donated to the State—for draining and building levees. I am willing to grant all proper aid and encouragement to the industrious settlers who improve the lands and render them cultivable, but I am not willing that the swamp land fund should be used as an electioneering capital.

Mr. King. The language of the House bill is vague and inexplicit. The Senator from Avoyelles desires to know if, under it, he can enter several tracts of land. It is my impression, that, under the bill, land to the amount of three hundred and twenty acres can be entered, and in different sections. Another objection to the bill is that it ties up the three hundred and twenty acres. Unless the person comes forward and designates the particular tracts which he wishes to enter, he will have a sort of floating right. This is granting an extraordinary privilege to pre-emptors They may go on the public lands, cut timber and erect a little shanty, and then have the right of selecting 320 acres of valuable land. This is entirely too great a power, and it seems to me that if it be granted, all the swamp lands in the State will be tied up. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Lands and Levees.

Mr. Wickliffe was opposed to the reference. The Legislature had refused to close the land office, and was evidently disposed to give every advantage to pre-emptors.

Mr. Short. There is no necessity for the reference. The bill is very simple and brief.

Mr. Griffin. I should like to have the bill referred, as it makes no provision for conflicting entries. I am anxious to have the bill pass, but I should like to see the omission supplied.

Mr. Wickliffe. The act of 1852, gives the decision in such case to the Register of the Land office, which I think wrong, as it allows no right of appeal.

Mr. Hodge remarked, that the only change made by the House was by extending the time of application as well as of payment. He believed that the sense of the Senate was not to extend the time of application, but only the time of payment, when application had been made under the act of 1852. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. Rivers. This bill simply extends the time of payment to those who in good faith make entries of land as settlers, and not as speculators. In some cases, the time expires this month, and many persons are ignorant of the law, which only gives them a year from the 17th of March last. Unless the time be extended, speculators will be down on them, and wrest the lands from them. I hope that the bill will pass.

Mr. Hodge. I should like to explain my views on this question. The bill of last year grants twelve months for payment to all those who entered lands prior to March 17th, 1852. In addition to this, a further extension of twelve months was asked for and granted; but should any new class be brought in—in other words, were the time of application to be extended—it would be a restriction on the Swamp Land fund, and be injurious to any general system we may adopt.

I do not believe that the State is bound to give unlimited credit; it is not bound to extend the time of payment ad infinitum. If we extend the time twelve months more, it will be almost impossible to adopt any general system.

It will be discovered, from reading the bill, that it not only extends the time twelve months, but likewise brings in a new class of settlers. The act of 1852 gives a privilege to all settlers previous to the passage of that act. This brings in a new class, composed of all settlers previous to the passage of this act. I believe the Senate has already decided not to extend the time of application, though we are willing to give an extension of credit for twelve months to those who were affected by the act of 1852. As we have sent a bill of that kind to the House, we should insist upon it, and leave these new parties to take care of themselves. It would not be just to the State to extend the time of applications and I shall not vote for it.

Mr. Rivers. The gentleman can obtain his object by striking out the objectionable parts.

Mr. Hodge. That would leave the bill the same as it went from the Senate. It is perfectly clear that the intention of that bill was to extend the time to settlers previous to the act of 1852.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Lands and Levees.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The bill making decisions of Justices of the Peace final in cases under a certain sum, was taken up.

Mr. Hodge. I move to reject the bill, and will state my reasons for so doing. In the city of New Orleans I have heard these officers attacked by many persons who accuse them of dishonest conduct. It is urged that if you permit their judgment to be final, they might make a combination with the plaintiff, to give a judgment in his favor. Others say that the Justices will become directly interested in the suits before them, and that they even combine with steamboat hands, and that it is almost impossible for a steamboat owner to obtain justice in one of these Courts, because if he give judgment against the plaintiff he may not get his fees.

I do not know whether these accusations are founded on truth, but the purity of the law ought to be so well guarded as to prevent the possibility of suspicion. There is as much reason why a small case should be determined correctly, as one involving interests to the amount of thousands of dollars. Why not then give the right of appeal to parties who are dragged into these Courts? In the country frivolous appeals are prevented by the District Judges decreeing damages in such a case. If I understand the thing correctly there is but a very short time between the appeal and the trial of the cause in the District Court, so that it would not be at all hard on the plaintiff. On the whole, in view of the charges which are made against Justices of the Peace in the country, I think we ought to allow the right of appeal, but give to the District Court the power of decreeing heavy damages in cases of frivolous appeals.

Mr. Derbes. The gentleman says that officers, whose position certainly entitles them to respect, might enter into combination with sailors and steamboat hands and others, in order to secure the small sum of one dollar. If the gentlemen thinks his argument, which he is in the habit of using, to be correct, why does he not offer an amendment making the system which he proposes general throughout the State. I have heard the Senator condemn the habit of legislating for the city of New Orleans, in a different manner from that in which we legislate for the rest of the State. I have heard him proclaim that he was tired of eternally making the parish of Orleans an exception to our general legislation—and now he proposes to do that very thing which heretofore he has so much condemned.—He knows that in the country cases under ten dollars cannot be appealed, and as he has himself said, what is good for the country is likewise good for the city.

If the gentleman carry his point what will be the consequence? Why, for an egg or a fowl, of the value of a dollar, an appeal may be carried to the District Court, and thus the time of the judges, who have already enough hard labor to perform, will be consumed. It will encourage litigation, which, as wise legislators, we ought rather to endeavor to discourage.—The gentleman says that the District Court will soon decide the case. He is mistaken. Judge Reynolds has been sitting for six or seven months, and is now sitting to decide cases of appeals from Justices Courts which have been standing for more than a year. In reply to what the gentleman has said about fees, I can inform him that, by law, the fees must be paid in advance.

Mr. Short—There is an old legal maxim which says de minimis lex non curat. I think myself that we might as well allow to Justices the luxury of a final decision in cases under ten dollars.

Mr. Hodge—In regard to what I have stated before, it is well known that the charges to which I have alluded are made against Justices of the Peace in the city. I do not say that they are not made in the country because justices there are any purer, but I simply say that I have never heard them.

The gentleman (Mr. Derbes) must have very crude notions of what should be the final jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace. In his first bill he made $50 the sum, under which no appeal could be made. The committee reduced it to $2, and finally by an amendment offered here it was brought down to ten dollars—and now it is proposed to whittle it down to nothing. Now I want to make no distinction between city and country in this matter, but I should like to do away with the grounds for the charges which have been made against Justices. I should be willing to make all cases appealable throughout the State. When the Senator states that by law the fees must be paid in advance, I can state for the information of the gentleman who speaks from the record, that the law compelling the payment of fees in advance, is not complied with, and when an exception is taken on the ground that the fees are not paid, the exception is overruled. I say again that I shall vote against the bill.

The bill finally passed.

THURSDAY, March 10th, 1853.

Mr. Boatner introduced a bill to pay to a Mr. Moore $650, being the $350 for his services, and $300 for expenses incurred by him in arresting a murderer.

Mr. Boatner said that Mr. Moore had arrested a man named Simmons, who was charged with the murder of two persons by whom he was employed.

It appears that these persons were engaged selling merchandize from a flatboat when they were murdered by Simmons. The murderer immediately fled. Subsequently Mr. Moore saw him in Louisville. He returned here, procured a warrant and went back and arrested him and brought him down. As the Governor had offered no reward, he thinks he has no authority to pay Mr. Moore anything without a special appropriation.

The bill passed.

The act incorporating the colored veterans of New Orleans, was passed.

Mr. Short made the following report on the bill committed yesterday to the Committee on Lands and Levees, with instructions to report to-day:—

To the President and Members of the Senate of the State of Louisiana.

The Committee to which was referred the act concerning the sale of the swamp and overflowed lands, being the House Bill No. 279, which passed as a substitute to the Senate Bill No. 8, respectfully report,

That on the 3d of this month an act passed the Senate, (No. 8,) granting an extension of twelve months to such persons as were entitled to the right of pre-emption, under the second section of the act of March 17th, 1852, within which to make payment, but required the application and proof to be made within the time specified in the second section of said act—to wit: by the 17th of March, 1853. The ground of the complaint being, not that they had not time to make the application and proof by the 17th of March, 1853, but want of money to pay for their lands; hence an extension of twelve months within which to make payments.

When this bill was sent to the House it was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Levees. That committee upon consideration of the act, as appears from their report, came to the conclusion that it "authorized the payment for all the unsold lands remaining from the one million of acres say (800,000) to be made on a credit of twelve months, at the same time preventing the actual settler from perfecting his title unless application has been made previous to the 17th of this month," and the Committee of the House reported the substitute, which is now before the Senate, by which it is proposed not only to give those who had made a settlement on the swamp and overflowed lands, prior to the 17th of March, 1852, the right of pre-emption as specified in the said act, but to all those who had made a settlement previous to this time, and to extend the time, both for application and payment, for twelve months, from the passage of the substitute to this act.

The Committee of the House appeared to have been laboring under an entire misapprehension of the Senate bill. The Senate, so far from wishing to withhold from sale, the swamp and overflowed lands, so far as that bill is concerned, thereby intended to prevent any increase of these pre-emption rights, which might withhold from sale any of the swamp and overflowed lands, except as to that class which had been provided for in the second section of the act of 1852. And by requiring them to file their proof by the 17th of March 1853—the Register of the Land Office would then know what lands were not subject to pre-emption rights.

The House Bill opens these lands to a new class of pre-emptors. This will embarrass the Board of Swamp Land Commissioners, as they will thereby be deprived of the use of the funds which might have been paid in by that class of pre-emptors provided for in the second section of the act of 1852, and which would have been paid in by the 17th of this month, and at the same time, this new class of pre-emptors will keep out of market a large portion of the best lands.

This will seriously affect the operations of the Levee system, as it has been determined not to raise a fund for this purpose by direct loan; but to depend upon the sales of the swamp lands, to carry on the system. Early in the session the Senate passed a bill to close the land office for the time being, until the survey of the land was complete, and until they had been classified, and the price graduated, thereby to realise the largest amount to be applied to the purposes for which they were granted to the State; that is, for leveeing and drainage.

In this bill the Senate did not intend to interfere with pre-emption rights. It was not passed for the benefit of speculators, as was supposed by some: it was for a direct contrary effect, and the bill, as first introduced, provided for the actual setler, and gave him a right to enter any quantity, less than 320 acres, at $1 25 per acre, this was against speculators, not for them. But a substitute was offered, which destroyed this feature of the bill. But the bill itself was only intended for a temporary effect Propositions were then being discussed, as to the propriety of withholding the lands from sale and building the levees, and executing the other works necessary for their reclamation, based upon a loan, on the hypothecation of these lands, as it was believed by some, that in this way four or five times the amount could be realised for the purposes of leveeing and drainage, that will be realised, under the present system. A majority appear to have been staggered under the loan system, and the other House have not passed the bill closing the land office

The loan policy being thus abandoned, as we presume, and the land office, still kept open, there is nothing remaining against the policy of granting pre-emption rights, except so far as it may embarrass the operations of the Levee system, extending the time for the payment of money, the immediate use of which is now demanded. For the Legislature to assume a substantive power of ownership over these lands, and divert them by special appropriations and the granting of rights in conflict with the trust capacity in which she holds them for the purposes of the grant, is a violation of the trust. So far as the granting of pre-emption rights may have a tendency to bring these lands into market, or enhance their value, by opening the road to settlement upon them, is concerned, it may be a good policy, but it may be held secondary to carrying out the purposes for which the lands were granted.

We therefore submit to the Senate, the question, as to whether any farther rights of pre-emption shall be granted, until they decide the important question, as to how far it may affect the operations, of the Levee system; and if any pre-emption bill shall pass, we suggest that the lands shall be selected in one body, and the list of the loss, sent to the land office, within six months from the passage of the act a large portion of the most valuable timbered lands belonging to the State, is now being depredated upon, by a class of persons, who never intend to settle, upon any part of it, by pre-emption or otherwise, who are not only, not enhancing its value, but are taking away all that which renders it of any value, by a class of persons who have not only no interest in keeping up levees, but a direct interest in breaking them. And we suggest the passage of a law, to prevent these depredations; if any can be passed more stringent than those now existing.

(Signed,) H. SHORT, Chairman,

Mr. Lacey. If the intention be to extend any benefit to settlers, immediate action is required. I therefore move to suspend the rules, in order to take up the bill and pass it.

Mr. Rivers. I am willing to vote to extend the time of payment, but I do not wish to embarrass the levee fund. I will vote to extend the time of payment 6 months, but not to extend the time of application. I wish to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr Lacey. If amendments are offered, the bill will have to be sent to the other House, and it will thus be delayed still longer.

Mr. Rivers. I am informed that Maj. Rainey states that the effect of this bill will be to open the Land Office, and give six months credit to all purchasers.

Mr. Palfrey. When the subject was under consideration, I understood from the Senator from East Baton Rouge, that the only object of the bill was to afford relief to pre-emptors who were not now in a condition to pay for their lands. The object was not, if I understood it correctly, to open the Land Office again for new applications. The bill from the House permits new applications and proof to be made for another year. If applications have ceased since the 17th it is evidence that pre-emptors have abandoned their claims.

Mr. Nicholls. I feel disposed, Mr. President, to vote for a year's extension of the time of payment.—According to the act of 1857, persons who settled on the public lands previous to March 17th, of that year, were entitled to a year's credit on their pre-emption claims. If the doors are now opened to a new class of applicants, this fund which was given to the State for the purpose of building levees to protect it from inundation, will be so trammeled as to render it almost impossible to carry out the objects for which it was designed. No one is opposed to extending the time of payment, but we are not in favor of opening the way to a new class of applicants. If we go on in this way we will never be able to realize anything from the swamp lands. Perhaps next year there will be an application for another extension, and the next year another and so on, ad infinitum. I hope that the substitute will not pass without amendment.

Mr. King. I shall certainly vote against the bill if it is pressed in its present form The effect of it will be to prevent any proceeds from the sale of swamp lands, and thus retard the execution of the design for which those lands were donated to the State.

Mr. Short. The question can easily be settled by reference to the discussion on the bill as first introduced by the Senator from East Baton Rouge (Mr Lacey). That bill proposed an extension merely for the settlers on the swamp lands in East Baton Rouge and Livingston. The Judiciary Committee, to which the bill was referred, reported against the policy of granting an extension to two parishes, when others, placed in exactly the same position, claim the same right. It was suggested at the time the bill in relation to the disposal of the public lands, was under consideration in committee, that the class of persons referred to in the act of 1852, might be provided for in a general law.

When the bill of the Senator from East Baton Rouge came up, it was amended so that the right was extended to all the parishes in the State, with this feature, that it should not increase the class of pre-emptors beyond those provided for in the act of 1852 — Thus the Land Office would know exactly what lands had been applied for, and would be enabled to sell the rest. In this manner the operations of the Land Office would be very much simplified. The amendment offered was not to extend the time of application, but only the time of payment to those who want money to pay for their lands. Not that they had not had time to apply, but they had not been able to raise the wind.

We then were asked to extend the time of payment, which we did. Now, the Senate is asked to recede from the position which it has taken. The committee of the lower House certainly mistook our intention. It is true that the bill is not as explicit as it might be, on account of the numerous amendments with which it was encumbered, but still its true object, I thought, was sufficiently plain to avoid danger of misconstruction. The question now is, shall the Senate recede from its position or adopt the bill which came from the other house.

Mr. Hodge. Did the gentleman say that the Senate had passed a bill to extend for a year, the time of application and payment?

Mr. Short. No Sir. If the Senate did so, the bill was couched in language not at all expressive of any such intention. It extended twelve months, the time of payment for persons provided for by the act of 1852, but it made no provision for any new class The bill from the House, which is now before the Senate, proposes to extend the time of application so as to include an entirely new class of preemptors. The question is, whether we shall do this, and thereby recede from our position or refuse to do it, and so maintain the stand which we have taken.

Mr. Lacey. The object desired by the gentlemen can probably be reached in another way. Instead of insisting on the motion to concur, let a motion to reject be made, and then refer the subject to a joint committee of conference of both houses.

Mr. Rivers moved to amend by giving six months more time to preemptors under the act of 1852.

Mr. Hodge. Can we reasonably expect such a bill to meet with the concurrence of the other House when they have just passed one of the character of that now before the Senate ?

Mr. Rivers. The Chairman of the house committee has explained his object to be this: that as we, in the opinion of the committee, wished to open the Land Office to speculators, they desired to realize the cash for public lands, and at the same time extend a great relief to actual settlers and preemptors.

Mr. Lacey. The only objection to the amendment of the gentleman is that the time contemplated is entirely too short. An extension of six months is no extension at all.

Mr. King. I apprehend that if the extension asked for be granted, it will be a bad precedent. Another legislature will meet before the time expires, and then they will undoubtedly be as anxious to serve the poor agriculturalists as we are—and so it may go on to the end of time. I wish to treat these people leniently. No one can have a greater desire than I have to remove obstacles from their path, and to grant all the facilities that they can reasonably ask. But I wish to put a stop to this extensive system at some time. I wish to designate some time at which it is to come to an end, and then if payment is not made, let the State again take possession of the lands. I think this is sound policy, and I desire to relieve the next legislature of the importunities to which we have been subjected

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was lost.

After some further discussion, the bill was so amended as to bring it back to the original Senate bill.

ORDER OF THE DAY—REMOVAL OF THE CAPITAL.

On motion of Mr. Derbes the bill proposing to submit to the people an amendment to the Constitution, removing the seat of government to New Orleans, was taken up.

Mr. Palfrey I would suggest that the sense of the people of the State and of the city of New Orleans itself has already been tested in regard to this measure by the vote given on the ratification of the new constitution.

Mr. Derbes. If that was a final decision of the question why was the faculty of deciding the question left to the Legislature?

Mr. Hodge. I should like to say a few words on this subject, to explain why I am opposed to submitting the proposed amendment to the people of the State; that is to giving the majority the power of doing a thing which will be injurious to the minority. There is no doubt that on this subject there is a unanimity of opinion among the people of New Orleans; that on it they move as in a solid phalanx. But, Sir, I am opposed to the expense which would be entailed upon the State by the erection of another State House.

I am not opposed to entrusting power to the people, but I am opposed to acceding to the wishes of the people of New Orleans, and building another State House, when we already have one which has been erected at an expense of three hundred thousand dollars. I am told here, on good authority, that the city of Baton Rouge donated to the State the ground on which the State House is built, on condition that the seat of Government should remain here. Whenever it may be taken away, the State gives up all interest in the land. If this had not been done—if a State House had not been built—the case would have been very different. But at this late day, when $300,000 have been expended in the erection of a suitable building—when the State Treasury is almost bankrupt, and the people bound down by an almost insupportable weight of taxation. I cannot, and will not, give my consent to any measure which will have a tendency to increase taxation, and to add still more to the burthens under which the people labor.

Mr. Lacey. When the question of removing the seat of Government is pressed before the Senate, I feel that I should be committing a wrong upon the constituents whom I represent on this floor, were I not to express my views on the subject.

If there had been a clear expression of the popular will in favor of removing the seat of Government—such an expression as would be an unmistakable indication of a desire to change the capital, and by which legislative action on the subject would be justified and demanded—I should be willing to submit this amendment of the organic law to the people, for their ratification or rejection at the ballot-box.

The Constitution of 1845 was an emphatic expression of the opinion of the people of the State against the location of the capital in the city of New Orleans. By that Constitution, New Orleans was not only precluded from being the capital, but black lines were drawn around it, so that the capital could not come within a circuit of sixty miles. The people of New Orleans agitated the question with all the power they could bring to bear—and even when aided by the weight given to their cause by the existence of those odious black lines, they could not succeed in bringing the capital to their city. Again in, 1852, the question came before the people, and they again decided that the seat of Government should not be in New Orleans.

Now, sir, where can you detect any indication that the popular will is in favor of changing the seat of Government? It does not exist. It would be absurdly trifling with the opinions of the people, to act on the supposition that it does exist. I have the utmost respect for the wishes of the people, but shall I therefore submit to them something which they do not wish to be submitted? Is it necessary that every day—whenever an unconstitutional measure may be brought forward—it shall be submitted to the people? Such a course would be fraught with danger. Would it be politic, year after year, to submit amendments to the Constitution to the people, till the organic law itself might become no more than a mere legislative act?

But independently of the fact that the people of the State desire no change in the seat of Government; independently of the fact that there has been no expression of the popular will directed towards such a change; will the Legislature uselessly submit to the people a question which, if carried in the affirmative, will involve a loss of millions of dollars? If this be done, and if, contrary to what we have reason to expect, the seat of Government should be removed,—what are we to do with the public buildings which have been erected here, at so great an expense?—Shall they be converted into a seminary of learning? They cannot be used for such a purpose, because we have already made an appropriation for an institution of that kind, in another part of the State. If the capital be removed from Baton Rouge, the expense incurred in the erection of these buildings will fall upon us as a dead weight, and we will have expended an immense sum of money, without receiving any equivalent benefit in return. By doing so, we would certainly incur a clear loss of between three and four hundred thousand dollars, the amount expended here. But in addition to this, there is another consideration: we must inquire whether the removal of the seat of Government would not involve an additional expense there. Now, sir, I would inquire whether the people of New Orleans will build a new State House?

It will be remembered that this very question was recently submitted to the Common Council of that city and they resolved to donate a lot of ground to the State, on which a building could be erected. Even this the Mayor vetoed, saying that it would be trifling with the credit of the city. How much more would it be trifling with the credit of the city to assume an additional debt of $400,000?

Now, sir, the city of New Orleans has no power to give a title even though she were willing, and she is not willing even though she had the power. If she should do so, three years would not elapse before she would be coming to the Legislature and supplicating for a return of the money which she had expended. See, then, the expense to the State which would be incurred by removing the seat of government. You would have to recompense the city of Baton Rouge, and expend a large sum in New Orleans for the erection of legislative halls. Are you willing, then, to impose this additional tax on the people? Are you willing, when you have here a commodious and appropriate building, erected at great cost, to subject the State to the heavy expenses I have alluded to, merely to gratify a portion of the citizens of New Orleans? Then, as there has been no expression of the popular will in favor of removing the seat of government,—as, in the wake of such a movement, would inevitably follow increased taxation, I hope that the question will be at once disposed of by the Legislature. There is no necessity of calling it up from time to time, and thus fostering a perpetual agitation on the subject. At least let such a disposition be made of it, as will decide the question till the popular will calls unmistakably for a change. It will then be time enough to pass a bill at the call of New Orleans—it will then be time enough to think of legislating for her interests instead of having a careful eye to the interests of the whole State.

Mr. Short—I have no disposition to argue this question. I merely rise to state my opinion that a large majority of my constituents are in favor of having the capital in New Orleans. Baton Rouge is so far out of the way that letters cannot pass between a representative and his constituents in time to be of any service As to the bad accommodations, however, of which some complain here, that might be to the interest of the State, as it might prevent the Legislature from remaining too long in session.

Mr. King—I do not wish to enter into an elaborate discussion of this question. I only wish to say that that it appears to me that the gentleman who has opposed this bill, fears the verdict of the people. Why, sir, the gentleman must indeed have walked with closed eyes, and ears, if he has not seen an indication of the popular will in favor of removing the seat of government, or heard the complaints both loud and deep against the present location. No, sir. The gentleman is not unwilling to submit this question to the people because there has been no expression of the popular will; he is unwilling because he fears that the verdict will be against him. The capital, in the first place, was removed from New Orleans through the efforts of politicians, pandering to a feeling of sectional jealousy which unhappily exists in the country against the city. Those were politicians who supposed they would have a better chance for the preferment if the capital were not at New Orleans. Ask any gentleman here how differently he would be situated in New Orleans. There he could have frequent, almost daily intercourse with his constituents, and would have that opportunity of learning their wants and wishes which is essential to good legislation. Here he is isolated—cut off from communication with the people, with no chance of echoing his sentiments and opinions. In New Orleans, there is a concentration of population and intelligence which must have, not a deleterious, but a beneficial effect on legislation, and as a matter of convenience alone the advantages offered by it are obvious to every candid person. It is a place of large business facilities, a place where much of the capital and most of the commerce of the State is concentrated, and consequently where there is most to attract the attention of the Legislature. There, we would not be immured as we are in Baton Rouge, and cut off from all opportunity of communicating with our constituents. There are other reasons why the seat of government should be at New Orleans, but these alone are sufficient.

It is with a view of obtaining these advantages, and not in order to subserve the local interests of New Orleans that we desire the capital to be located there. There is scarcely a gentleman here that would not be willing to go to New Orleans. Indeed their business almost always calls them there before they come here. Then, let the people decide the question. Let them say whether they desire the change. Put it in their power to give palpable and convincing expressions of their will in the only way in which a satisfactory expression can be obtained. Why were these barriers placed in the way of removing the seat of government? The Constitution has not, as the Senator from St. Mary thinks it has, settled the question for all futurity. In adopting that Constitution the people did not express themselves in favor of keeping the capital from New Orleans. They were compelled, if I may use the expression, to make a lumping business of it. They had to take the whole or none, and they adopted the Constitution, not on account of that provision, but in spite of it. The very constitutional restrictions thrown around the subject manifest a fear of the popular will. What right had the Convention to bind the people for all time to come, and to decide for all futurity, that the capital should not be in New Orleans. I can conceive that it may be the wish of the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, and perhaps of the people of some other parishes, that the seat of government should remain here. But I have no idea that such is the sense of the whole people, or even of a majority. Give them a chance to express their opinions on the subject, and they will certainly place the capital where it ought to be—in the centre of trade, of business, of intelligence—where the course of trade runs current with the course of legislation. If it were there the Legislature would be better able to legislate for the city, while here it cannot legislate any better for the country.

Mr. Nicholls. I rise, sir, merely for placing myself right on the record in relation to this subject. If this were a question of removing the seat of government, I should conceive it to be my duty to state the reasons which might influence me in voting for or against it. But the question being simply to submit to the people whether New Orleans or Baton Rouge shall be the capital, no discussion is necessary to decide it. Although I do not belong to the great Democratic party, and am, perhaps, not entitled to speak with the fondness and tenderness of the dear people, which it seems to be the peculiar right of that party to display, yet when a question of taxation is involved, I conceive that we ought to let the people decide it. It is much better to leave them to decide it than for us to settle it here.

Mr. Lacey. The gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) seems to me to be advocating a very dangerous course of policy. When a question of constitutionality is involved in doubt, we may be right in submitting it to the people for their decision. But when we have a policy settled as this is by the Constitution of 1845, where it is a question on which the city will act as a unit, I think the Senator is hasty in insisting on submitting it to the people. Suppose two hundred bills were introduced, and to avoid the responsibility of passing them we should submit them all to the people, would the gentleman say this would be right? Suppose a thousand bills should be thus submitted, would he say this would be right? It seems to me that this would be a dangerous meddling with the fundamental law, particularly when not warranted by any expression of the popular will. There would be little of conservatism in such a course unless there were an indication that the will of the people is in favor of it.—The Senator says that I fear to trust the people. I ask the Senator if a proposition to restrict the city of New Orleans were introduced, would he be willing to submit that to the people? Would he rise in his seat and express indignation at those who might oppose such a course, and accuse them of fearing the verdict of the people? I should like to see what his course would be in such a case. I do not pretend to understand the wishes of the people of New Orleans as well as the Senator, but I have been told in the city, that it is only the politicians there who desire the seat of government to be removed I am told that the desire is only entertained by a few shop-keepers and traders who expect their profits to be increased by the presence of the Legislature in the city. The gentleman may find that a majority of the people of New Orleans will not act as a unit on this subject. But if they should, I would not be disposed to let that unity of action operate so as to deprive the country of its constitutional rights.

There is no reason why this question should be submitted to the people. If the majority of the people desire a change in the location of the seat of government, let them send representatives here to express their views, which would be a more just and proper way of taking the sense of the people. Let the question be agitated in the country; let it be discussed and argued, and if members are then sent here in favor of the measure, I will be perfectly willing to submit. That would be just and legitimate. It seems to me that the evident intention of the framers of the Constitution was not to remove the capital by a change in the Constitution itself. I would not, then, consent to a removal, or to any steps tending to it until the people shall send here the constitutional majority in favor of it. I hope then, that the question will be disposed of promptly.

I am not opposed to the city of New Orleans. I would do nothing to impede her in her career. I am as much attached to her interests, and as desirous of promoting her prosperity as any one can be, and I would do everything to advance her, if the interests of the country would not thereby be violated. But I am not disposed to hand the country over to the tender mercies of the city. I feel it my duty to warn the Senate against this step, for if it be taken, and the object consummated, the rights of the country will be as a thing of air, and nothing will be done except by the will of the city of New Orleans.

Mr. Monton. It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether the seat of government be here or in New Orleans; but as the people of the parishes which I represent have never expressed any opinion on the subject, I consider it my duty to vote against the resolution. Before I could vote for it I would have to wait for some expression of opinion from them.

Mr. King. The gentleman from Lafayette (Mr. Mouton) does his people injustice in refusing to give his people a chance to express their opinions. If he has such a tender regard for his people he ought to go with us. As to what the gentleman from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) has said about politicians only, in New Orleans, desiring the removal of the capital, I can inform him that he is not right. The mere fact of having the capital in New Orleans would be entirely too small a consideration to induce the desire. The poorest person that walks the streets could not find in the presence of the Legislature a sufficient inducement to influence his opinion. It is not for the interests of the city that we desire the change, but for the prosperity of the whole State. I must say that I do not understand the Senator when he first says that the people of New Orleans will stand in a solid phalanx on this subject, and then says that the agitation is only produced by certain politicians in the city of New Orleans. I cannot see why the gentleman should put forth such manifest contradictions.

Mr. Hodge moved to lay the bill on the table.

When Mr. Rivers' name was called he said:

I vote yea—because I have no information that the change is desired by the people, and because said change, if made would involve an expense for which the State is unprepared—the people being already heavily burthened with taxation, and yet the Treasury is in a hopeless state of bankruptcy.

The bill was laid on the table by a vote of 15 to 12.

WEDNESDAY, March 23, 1853.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Clifton, from the Committee on Banks and Banking, submitted the following report:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer,
President of the Senate:

The Standing Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives on Banks and Banking, who were directed by joint resolution to make an examination of the incorporated banks of the city of New Orleans, have performed the duty assigned to them, and ask leave to make the following report:

It would require a more intimate knowledge of the resources and credit of the customers of these banks than is proposed by the committee, to enable them to express positive opinions upon the value of the large mass of discounted notes and bills receivable, which constitute the investments of these institutions. But the statements derived from their books, confirmed by such examinations as we are able to give, leaves a very favorable impression of the solidity of their position, and the security they offer to their creditors and the public.

The specie on hand was carefully counted by the committees, and found to correspond with the sworn statements as furnished, and to be in the line prescribed by the law of 1842.

These general statements of the banks, furnished at the request of the committees, will be found appended to this report, or so condensed under its separate heads, as to give what is material. Besides these general statements, particular information was asked for, the results of which are herein stated, in relation to Bank management and Bank profits, which it was thought might be useful, pending the question of a general banking law, which is expected to engage the attention of the Legislature during the present session. Among these special statements from the active banks, are returns of the amount of the stock of each, held by resident and non-resident stockholders; of the liabilities of the Directors in every bank to the institution in which they are Directors, and the liabilities to each bank of the directors of all the other banks, and an account of the profits divided and reserved from the commencement of their business to date, by the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, the Canal and Banking Company, and the Bank of Louisiana. This last-named account was not obtained from the State Bank.

MECHANICS' AND TRADERS' BANK.

The general statement of this Bank, shows it to be well prepared to abide by the decision of the Legislature, should it be adverse to the application which has been already made at the present session for a renewal of its charter, which expires by limitation on the second Tuesday in April next. Its means for meeting its liabilities for circulation, deposits, and other claims payable on demand, are ample. A glance at the table (letter C) will show that the bank has (to speak in round numbers) more than five millions of dollras in cash, or short paper, equivaledt to cash; while all the demands against it, immediate and ultimate, exclusive of the capital stock, are but little over four millions. It is obvious that the bank could wind up, pay off its obligations, and distribute nearly the whole of its capital, within a few months. The act of 1850, which was passed in anticipation, to provide for its liquidation, allows the commissioners who may be appointed under the law, five years beyond the termination of the charter, within which to close its affairs finally.

The profits of this bank, from its commencement in 1833, to Feb. 16th, 1853, have been, according to the statements furnished, $2,077,598 68. No dividends were made in June 1837, January 1839, January or July 1840, January or July 1842, January or July 1843.

The capital stock of the Bank consists of 33,797 shares, ($1,689,850) held as follows:

13.767 shares ($688.350) by residents;
20,030 " ($1,001,500) by non-residents.

The liabilities of the directors are stated thus:

Of the directors	Payers.	Endorsers.	Total.
of this Bank,	99,783 27	33,425 08	133,208 35

THE CANAL AND BANKING COMPANY

The business of the Canal Bank has also been profitable, notwithstanding the heavy losses which suspended its dividends for half the duration of its charter. It has ascertained and declared profits as follows:

Div'ds as per statem't furnished,	$2,882,207 50
Profit & Loss Ac., as per gen. sta't.,	800,666 86
New Profit and Loss Account,	253,803 54
Total,	$3,936,677 40

No dividends were declared in June or December, 1834, June 1837, or December 1839, nor at any time during the years 1840, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45 or '46, nor for June, 1847, nor December 1849.

The capital stock of the Bank (3,164,000) is held as follows:

16,741 shares (1,674,100) by non-residents.
14,899 " (1,489,900) by residents.

The liabilities of bank directors to this bank are stated thus:

	Payers.	Endorsers.	Total.
Directors of this bank,	184,965 03	182,846 72	367,811 75
Do. other b'ks to this,	256,067 78	147,404 01	403,491 70

THE BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The Bank of Louisiana shows even a more favorable exhibit of its operations Its capital stock is nominally $3,992,600, but of this, 1,200,000 is owned by the bank itself, so that the real capital is $2,792,600, which is held as follows:

15,119 shares (1,511,900) by non residents.
12,000 " (1,200,000) by the bank.

This bank seems to have been managed with more uniform prudence and success, than any other in the city. It shows upon a capital of $3,992,600, a clear dividend and ascertained profit of $8,729,858 81, besides having purchased in $1.200,000 of its own stock, which swells the profits to $9,929,858 81, being about 250 per cent. in 23 years, and sparing from their capital the means of erecting their magnificent banking buildings. The bank declared no dividends in July, 1837, July 1842, and January 1843; but it made extra dividends in January 1847, January 1850, and January 1853. The regular and extra dividends for the last six months have amounted to fifteen per cent., a proof of the enormous profits attainable under the present close system of incorporated banking, and a powerful argument for the throwing open of this business to general competition.

The liabilities of the directors to this Bank are stated thus

	Payers.	Endorsers.	Total.
Directors of this Bank,	$91,012 89	47,797 62	138,810 51

LOUISIANA STATE BANK.

No statement was obtained by the committees of the amount of profits made by this bank, nor of the distribution of the capital stock, ($1,987,960) among residents and non-residents. The bank has no agency out of the State for the transfer of its stock.

The liabilities of directors at the Bank and its branches are thus stated:

	Payers.	Endorsers.	Total.

Aggregate liabilities of bank directors to this bank and its branches as payers, $687,551. Endorsers, $335,082. Total amount, $1,022,633.

For a better understanding of the affairs of this institution, the committee obtained separate statements of the affairs of the parent bank, and of the two branches, made up to the same day. These are appended to this report, condensed into a form to show at a glance the dead weight and the movement of the bank, and of each of its branches on the 12th of February.

It will be perceived that a very large and profitable part of the business of the bank in New Orleans is transacted through the branch in the Second Municipality, and that its loans, made through its branches, and particularly through that in the Second Municipality, are much beyond the line prescribed in the charter of the bank, for the proportion of business to capital, and also exhibit a large excess of the joint business of the parent bank and branches beyond the charter limitation. It is worth a particular remark that the branch in the Second Municipality has, upon an assigned capital of $100,- 000, loaned to its own directors, and those of the parent bank, the sum of $255,055, or two and a half time its capital.

The committee cannot leave this subject without at least alluding to grave questions appertaining to this institution, which have been much debated from time to time, but never judicially examined, and authoritatively settled. Has the bank a right to erect, in the place where its own business is conducted, another bank under the name of branch, with powers as comprehensive as its own; "and with this, the consequent right of multiplying itself indefinitely in the same city?" Are the privileges which have been exercised under the act of 1850, in relation to the establishment of a branch at Baton Rouge, where y the bank claims an exemption from the limitations imposed by its charter, upon the loans made through its branches, lawfully claimed and exercised? Upon points of so much intricacy, the committees are indisposed to express positive opinions, but they have no hesitation in saying that there ought to be a judicial determination of these points. In what form it should be sought, it is not their province to point out, but they insist that the construction of law ought to be rigidly made against powers so dangerous, and license so unlimited.

CITIZENS' BANK.

The examination of the affairs of the Citizens' Bank shows that the institution has no circulation or deposits, and no liabilities except for the State Bonds and Bank Bonds held abroad. The committees had only to look into the security which the State has in the assets of the institution, and the mortgage securities given to the bank by its stockholders, for the punctual payment of the State obligations as they become due. Such an examination as the committees have been able to make, consulting the local knowledge of the different members of the committees as to the value of mortgages in their respective localities, induces the belief that the security is ample for the protection of the State. The mortgages remain binding for their original amount, although sixteen instalments of one dollar on each share have been called in, and paid with remarkable punctuality. The bank has considerable assets, and is collecting from the stockholders the contributions authorized under the act of 1847. These will, for a number of years, produce a considerable surplus of receipts over payments. The State is, in the judgment of the committees, well protected against loss for her liabilities for this bank, if her interests are prudently guarded hereafter.

There has been no movement in this bank since the report of the Bank Managers, which is already in the possession of the Legislature; the committees have, therefore, not thought it necessary to attach another general statement to this report.

THE CONSOLIDATED ASSOCIATION.

The same general remarks apply to this bank,—it has no circulation or movement. The State's interest lies in superintending the liquidation, in order to protect itself against loss, on account of bonds issued for the use of the bank. The winding up of this bank will show a heavy loss to the stockholders. The apparent deficiency is now about $300,000, which will doubtless be considerably increased on the closing of unsettled accounts; but the mortgages which the bank holds, and its good assets, afford in her present aspect of affairs, an apparently abundant security against loss to the State on account of the bank.

The successful negotiation of the Citizens' Bank with the foreign bondholders, by which that institution is permitted and expected to revert shortly to the control of its stockholders, will, on the consummation of those arrangements, make necessary a change in the State management of this institution. The Board of Bank Managers, now established by law, will have only in charge the Consolidated Association; and the machinery is too expensive, and unsuited to the administration of a single bank.

The subject will require the action of the Legislature.

THE UNION BANK.

The only remaining bank to be noticed is the Union Bank, which is also in liquidation, and has nearly closed its affairs. Its liabilities are merely nominal, or have been adequately provided for, and it has collected and divided among its shareholders nearly the whole of its capital. In the division of its surplus profits, the State, as stockholder to the amount of one-sixth, has received in two dividends the following sums!

1st dividend, June 1st, 1852, $207,170.
2d do Jan., 1853, 137,396.

The whole of the first dividend, and a further sum of $22,866 73 of the second dividend was retained by agreement with the State, on account of the liabilities of the bank for the Clinton and Port Hudson Railroad bonds Another sum of $3000 was credited on account of a sight draft on the Treasury, paid by the bank; and $6000 to refund a deposit made with the State Treasurer, to represent six state bonds, which the bank is ready to deliver.

The balance, amounting to 105,529 67 the committees found placed to the credit of the State, on the books of the bank, where it has been subject to draft since the 1st of January last.

The State has still an interest of one-sixth in profits of the bank which are yet undivided. A proposition has been made by the bank to purchase this interest. The Treasurer of the State was authorized, by an act passed last March, to negotiate with the bank, but was unable to come to any agreement. The bank offered eighteen dollars per share, which the Treasurer declined accepting. The bank has since made a dividend of fifteen dollars a share, on which the State has received $137,396. There is still a considerable amount undivided, of unascertained value. In view of this subject, the committees deemed it expedient to ask for a very detailed statement of all the remaining assets and liabilities of the bank, in order to enable them to form an opinion upon the course which it is expedient for the State to take.—The papers were promptly furnished, and on an examination thereof, the committees came to the conclusion that the interests of the State do not require any sale to the bank of its prospective share of the profits, but would be at least as well promoted by permitting the bank to proceed in its regular course of liquidation, and receiving her rateable proportion of the profits, as they may be realized.

The Committees have selected from the great mass of papers which they have examined and condensed, and attached to this report the following:

A. Statement and recapitulation of the profits of three of the active banks.

B. Statement and recapitulation of the liabilities of the directors of the city banks, to the institutions in which they are directors, and to the other city banks.

Mr. Palfrey called up the following bill:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the Treasurer of the State be, and he is hereby, required to pay to the order of Theodule Labauve, a resident of the Parish of St. Mary, on the warrant of the Auditor of Public Accounts, the sum of five hundred dollars.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That the sum of five hundred dollars be, and it is hereby, especially appropriated for the purposes aforesaid.

Mr. Wickliffe. This seems to me to be a very irregular proceeding. The proposition is that because an individual is wounded by buck-shot, therefore the State must be made to pay the damages resulting.—There are hundreds of persons in Louisiana who have been wounded by buck-shot, and some of them while in pursuit of criminals. The consequence is that we ought to pay all of these, who certainly have equally as just claims on the public Treasury. I, for one, am not disposed to pay any person who may happen to be wounded when in pursuit of a runaway slave. I say again that it is a novel doctrine. If we once commence this system, where is it to end?

Many persons could present as just claims as this one. There are some persons in my own Parish who would be just as much entitled to compensation. If the gentleman from St Mary obtain $500 for his constituent, I shall demand an equal amount for such of mine as are in the same position. I ask where is the warrant on which this claim is based? Was the individual wounded in the service of the State? Was he wounded from the act or the fault of the State? Why was he wounded? What were the circumstances of the case? These things are not mentioned. Might he not have been animated by the hope of reward in case he recaptured the negro? If so he can have no possible claim on the State. He has no right to come to the Legislature and ask for compensation for an accident or a misfortune which befel him while he was engaged, not in the service of the State, but in an enterprise from which, even though he incurred danger, he expected to derive profit.

Mr. Mouton. If I had the report of the committee I could show, I think, that the law compels the State to compensate persons for wounds received, under just such circumstances as these. I am not disposed to pay the claim if the law does not allow it; but if the contrary is the case, I do not see how we can avoid it. If the gentleman examines the report he will see the law quoted. As far as my recollection serves me, it is very clear on the point.

[The report of the Committee was read.]

Mr. Palfrey. Thus it will be seen from the report that the slaves were not only runaways, but fugitives from justice likewise. They were in fact murderers. They had been guilty of a heinous crime. In order to make the case clear I will detail the circumstances. After these slaves had run away they were arrested by a man named Wilcox. He compelled them to embark with him in a skiff. Before they had proceeded far the negroes, taking advantage of an unguarded moment, threw him overboard. He had had a gun in the boat, with which they shot and killed him while he was swimming, and endeavoring to effect his escape. They then landed and abandoned the boat.—This individual, whose claim for compensation is now before you, without the inducement or hope of reward, voluntarily pursued the negroes, and succeeded in capturing them. He shot one, and was himself wounded. It seems to me that we could scarcely imagine a case in which a person would be better entitled to remuneration.

Mr. Wickliffe. I should like to know whether this person was not an officer of the State, engaged in the performance of his duties?

Mr. Palfrey. No, sir.

Mr. Wickliffe. Then it was his privilege as a citizen, and also his duty, to arrest these negroes. There are generally Parish rewards given in such cases, and I do not see why the State should be made to bear the burthen. It is so in my Parish, and I have no doubt the case is the same in most of the others. I intend to vote against this bill, and I wish to place my vote on the record.

Mr. Millard. The committee took this case into especial consideration, and found that the law compels the State to grant remuneration. [Reads the law.] It was on this law that the report was based. The committee could not go behind it—they could not inquire into its expediency. They found it on the statute book, and they felt themselves bound to obey its requirements.

Mr. Nichols. The Senator from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) has said that this is a novel and irregular proceeding. I do not agree with him. It is certainly not new, because this very Legislature has itself sanctioned a claim of a similar kind, by passing a bill for the relief of Mr. Moore, who succeeded in effecting the capture of a fugitive from justice.—This person was severely wounded—so severely indeed that he was maimed for life, and almost deprived of the power of earning a subsistence. The general law grants remuneration in cases of this kind, and we have no right to overlook its provisions.

Mr. Derbes. If the law be a bad law it ought to be repealed, but as long as its presence on the statute book is tolerated, we cannot refuse to acknowledge its existence, or set aside its solemn provisions. We cannot withhold this remuneration in the face of a law which commands us to give it. The person who comes here to press this claim exposed his life without even the hope of reward, as we are told, but in accordance with his convictions of his duties as a good citizen. He was wounded and maimed for life. He avoided asking the assistance of the State as long as possible, and has only consented to do it when he finds that his necessities compel him to accept the compensation which the law allows. As the gentleman (Mr. Nichols) well says, this is not a solitary case. We have before passed acts of the same kind, and we cannot now, with justice, refuse to pass this one.

Mr. Wickliffe. The gentleman is mistaken. No such act has passed this Legislature. The case of Mr. Moore was very different. He was subjected to great expense in the capture of a fugitive from justice, who had committed murder, and the Legislature allowed him compensation for his services, and refunded his expenses.

Mr. Millard—I have a few words more to say. As far as this case is concerned, it was in evidence before the Committee, through the testimony of the physician, that the man was very severely wounded, so much so that he still feels the effects of the injury. This was as long ago as 1842. But so far from the length of time which has elapsed being an argument against the claim, it only shows that Mr. Labauve was unwilling to make application to the Legislature for relief till he was absolutely compelled to do it. Had the bill originated in the Senate, I should have been in favor of giving $1000; but as it came from the House, the Committee could do no less than report in favor of $500—the amount allowed there.

Mr. Hodge—I would ask whether the claimant has already received anything from the owner of the slave. If so, the State has a right to institute suit against the owner.

Mr Palfrey—I would remark that it is hardly probable such is the case as the negroes were given up to the State.

The bill passed by the following vote:

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Dupré, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Nichols, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Slack and Taylor—17 yeas;

And Messrs. Burthe, Evans, Lacoste, Neal and Wickliffe—5 nays.

On motion of Mr. Derbes, the bill to repeal the homestead law was taken up and passed.

THE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. King—I move to take up the bill to abolish the Board of Public Works. It is some time since that bill was introduced. It has been thoroughly discussed, and farther argument would be useless. It is time that we should take a test vote on the subject, and set it at rest.

Mr. Wickliffe—I am opposed to taking up that bill now. Let us proceed with the regular order of the day.

Mr. Todd—I think the question ought to be disposed of as soon as possible. The reason I voted as I did yesterday was because I did not like to go in opposition to a provision of the Constitution.

The bill, which was in the following words, was taken up:

An act to abolish the Board of Public Works.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, That the Board of Public Works established by articles one hundred and thirty, one hundred and thirty-one, one hundred and thirty-two, one hundred and thirty-three and one hundred and thirty-four, be, and the same is hereby abolished.

Mr. King moved the adoption of the first section.

Mr. Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays:

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, King, Lewis, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, Rivers, Theriot, Todd and Wickliffe—15 yeas;

And Messrs. Burthe, Dupre, Hodge, Kittridge, Kenner, Lacoste, McCay, Nichols, Palfrey, Short, Slack, and Taylor—11 nays.

Consequently, the constitutional number of three-fifths of the members not voting for the adoption of the first section, the bill was lost.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

An Act to Reclaim and Drain the Swamp and Overflowed Lands donated to the State of Louisiana, &c.

Digitized by Google

The consideration of the following bill, which was under discussion yesterday, was resumed:

An act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands donated to the State of Louisiana by act of Congress entitled an act to aid the State of Louisiana in draining the swamp lands therein—approved March the second, one thousand eight hundred and forty-nine.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the State shall be divided into three levee and draining districts.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c, That all the part of the State south of the thirty-first degree of North latitude, and east of the Mississippi river, shall constitute the First District; all that part part south of the thirty-first degree of North latitude, and west of the Mississippi river, shall constitute the Second District, and all that part of the State north of the thirty-first degree of North latitude and west of the Mississippi river, including the parish of Avoyelles, shall constitute the Third District.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Governor shall appoint a commissioner for each district; each commissioner shall be a resident of the district for which he is appointed. The three commissioners shall constitute and be called by the name of the "Swamp Land Commissioners." The commissioners shall hold their office for the term of two years, and until their successors shall be qualified.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Governor shall have power to fill any vacancy in said Board of Commissioners, caused by death, resignation or otherwise.

SEC 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That each of said commissioners before entering upon the duties of his office, shall give a bond to the State of Louisiana in the sum of five thousand dollars, with two securities, said bond to be approved of by the Secretary of State conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty, and the Secretary of State shall administer to him the oath of office prescribed in the Constitution.

SEC 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said Board of Commissioners shall meet at the town of Baton Rouge, on the first Monday in May next, and every three months thereafter, and oftener, if by them deemed necessary.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That said commissioners be, and they are hereby authorized to make all by-laws and regulations that may be necessary for proper organization; they shall select one of their number as President, and shall have a Secretary, who shall keep a journal of their proceedings, and they shall fix the compensation of their Secretary, provided he shall not receive more than five hundred dollars per annum.

Sec. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of said commissioners at their first meeting, and every two years thereafter, to appoint a competent engineer for each of said districts, who shall hold his office for two years, subject, however, to be removed by a majority of said commissioners, at any time, for neglect of duty.

Sec. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That each of said engineers shall receive a compensation for his services at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum.

Sec. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of said engineers in their respective districts, to determine the locality, extent and dimensions of the necessary levees and drains to protect and reclaim swamp lands of the State.

Sec. 11. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of each of said engineers to lay off his district into Levee Wards and Draining Districts, to prescribe the size of the levees to be built, the repairs to be made, the distances from the river or bayous, and the canals for draining, to make an estimate of the cost of all said works, and to make a full and detailed report thereof to the commissioners, at such time as they may require.

Sec. 12. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners to appoint an inspector for each levee ward, to prescribe his duties and fix his compensation.

Sec. 13. Be it further enacted, &c, That it shall be the duty of each of said engineers, after the formation of the levee wards and draining districts, to let out the making or repairing of such levees, or drains, or canals, as the said commissioners may order, to the lowest bidder, after thirty days' notice thereof in some newspaper published in the parish in which the work is to be done; if no newspaper is published therein, then by notices posted up at three public places in said parish, said works to be let out at a stipulated price per cubic yard; provided, that the engineers be authorized to reject all bids when they consider them unreasonable or the parties incompetent, or the securities insufficient.

Sec. 14. Be it further enacted, &c, That it shall be the duty of each of said engineers to require of every person or persons who may undertake any work contemplated by this act, a bond with adequate security, conditioned for the faithful performance of said work undertaken, said bond to be in a sum equal to the supposed value of the services to be rendered, and made payable to the commissioners, and recoverable before any competent court of the State, and when recovered to constitute a part of the swamp land fund.

Sec. 15. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of said engineers to require all levees and repairs thereto, to be completed by the first Monday in December of each year.

Sec. 16. Be it further enacted, &c., That the engineers, and in the event of their absence, the inspectors, are hereby empowered within the several levee wards, to call out, to work on the levees therein during high water, all the male slaves above the age of fifteen years and under sixty, or so many thereof as may be deemed necessary; and whenever the owner of said slave or slaves, or his agent or overseer, shall refuse or neglect to furnish the slaves required by the Engineer or Inspector, then, in that event, the said owner shall pay five dollars per day for each slave not sent under said requisition, said amount to be due to said commissioners, and recoverable in their name before any competent court, and to be paid into the Treasury of the State, and constitute a part of the swamp land fund.

Sec. 17. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the engineers, as far as practicable, to superintend the making and repairing of all levees and drains within their respective districts, to make out the cost of the same when completed, to whom due, the items thereof, and to certify the same to the commissioners.

Sec. 18. Be it further enacted, &c., That all work done and expenses incurred under this act shall be paid for by the commissioners out of any moneys in the Treasury of the State arising from the sales of swamp lands.

Sec. 19. Be it further enacted, &c. That the commissioners upon the certificate of an engineer that a certain sum is due an individual, specifying therein, the work done, shall draw their warrant on the Auditor of Public Accounts in favor of such person or persons, for the amount due, payable out of the swamp land fund, and upon the presentation of said warrant to the Auditor he shall give his warrant on the Treasurer for the amount of the same, if there be any funds subject to the payment thereof, but if there be no funds in the Treasury subject to the payment of warrants drawn by the commissioners, then, it is hereby made the duty of the Auditor to endorse each of said warrants not paid for want of funds, and sign his name to said endorsement.

Sec. 20. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said warrants when endorsed by the Auditor as prescribed in the preceding section, shall bear eight per cent. interest from date until paid.

Sec. 21. Be it further enacted, &c., That all expenses incurred under this act shall be paid by the Auditor upon the warrant of the commissioners, provided that no warrant shall be paid unless signed by a majority of the commissioners.

Sec. 22. Be it further enacted, &c., That each of said commissioners shall receive a compensation for his services at the rate of fifteen hundred dollars per annum.

Sec. 23. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of each of said commissioners to supervise the acts of the engineers of his district, and to examine all the works made or to be made under the supervision of this act.

Sec. 24. Be it further enacted, &c., That the commissioners shall, on the first day of January of each year, report to the Governor of the State all their official transactions, and recommend the adoption of such means as to them may seem necessary for the protection of the alluvial lands from inundation, and the draining and reclamation of the same.

The Governor shall transmit their report, with his message, to the General Assembly, at each session thereof.

Sec. 25. Be it further enacted, &c., That all debts contracted, and salaries for services rendered, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall be paid out of the sales of the swamp lands, and no debt contracted under the provisions of this act shall ever become a charge on any other funds in the State Treasury than those arising from the sale of swamp lands.

Sec 26. Be it further enacted, &c., That neither of said commissioners, nor any of the engineers or other agents appointed by them, shall, in any manner whatever, have any interest in the contracts made under the authority of this act under the penalty of removal from office and the forfeiture of the amount due to them respectively.

Sec. 27. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the commissioners, at their several meetings, to order the most important works under this act to be done in preference to others of less importance, and each commissioner, in the event of any great public emergency or imminent danger from overflow, to any portion of his district, shall be, and he is hereby authorized to use, upon the recommendation of the engineer of his district, such means as may be required to avert such danger, and to protect the interest and safety of the alluvial lands

Mr. Griffin moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Lands and Levees, with instructions to amend the first section so as to divide the third District into two, making the Red River valley and all west of that valley, and north of the thirty-first degree of north latitude, including the parishes of Rapides and Avoyelles, one district, to be called the Third District—and all east of the Red River valley, and north of thirty-first degree of north latitude to make one district, to be called the Fourth District.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the motion indefinitely on the table, and called for the yeas and nays:

Mr. Kenner—I shall move to strike out ——

Mr. Wickliffe (interrupting)—The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. Kenner—If the object of the gentleman in moving to lay on the table was to cut off debate, I have nothing more to say. I am satisfied I am not in order; but I shall vote against laying on the table, though otherwise I should have voted for it.

Mr. Wickliffe—My reason for making the motion was that I desire to get through the business.

Mr. Kenner—Our main object should be to legislate well and not in a hurry.

The motion to lay on the table was lost.

The yeas and nays being taken on the motion to recommit, resulted as follows:

Messrs. Barthe, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Patterson, Rivers, Short and Wickliffe—14 yeas;

And Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kitteridge, Neal, Nichols, Palfrey, Slack, Taylor, Theriot and Todd—13 nays.

Consequently the motion to recommit was lost.

Mr. Hodge—I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Internal Improvements. My reasons for making the motion are these: The Senate has, this morning, by a direct vote refused to abolish the Board of Public Works. It would therefore be vain to pass this bill in its present shape, as it is now impossible to reconsider the first section, which is in conflict with the Constitution. That section provides for three Commissioners, whereas the Constitution directs that there shall be four. The duties imposed on the Commissioners under this bill are the same as those of the Commissioners under the Constitution would be. They are therefore the same officers, provided for by legislative enactment. It would be superfluous to pass this bill to-day, when to-morrow we might have to pass another bill organizing the Board of Public Works.

I can say, however, that I have no objection to the details of this bill. At least there is one on my desk which I am willing to support. But I am not willing to do a vain thing—I am not willing to violate the Constitution, or disobey its injunctions—I am not willing to do to-day what we may have to undo to-morrow.

Mr. Short—I am opposed to committing this bill to any other committee than that through whose hands it has passed. I am opposed to it for various reasons, among which is that it will delay action on this subject—and it is one of immense importance,—to an indefinite period. It has been stated by a gentleman here—one whom I have deemed a friend to this measure—that this is an imperfect bill. In the Lower House, where the whole State is represented, and where the popular will is reflected to the greatest extent, the bill passed with only three dissenting votes. In the Senate, on the contrary, it is opposed from the first section to the last. The constitutional objection is that the Commissioners ought to be made to conform to the Board of Public Works, provided for by the Constitution. To relieve the bill from this objection it has been already provided that the Board established by it shall be superseded by that to be organized under the Constitution, thereby relieving the swamp land fund from the expense of two Boards. Not that I concede levees to be a part of our public works within the meaning of the Constitution. Where is the statute to show that they are so? Have they not always been constructed by means of private capital? Most certainly they have. What does the Constitution say? Does it enjoin that levees shall be included in our public works? No, sir! that is not found in any part of the Constitution.

Mr. Kenner—I would direct the attention of the gentleman to article 137 of the Constitution.

Mr. Short—When did Lands and Levees ever form a part of our system of Internal Improvements? I contend that they never have. Suppose these Commissioners to be appointed. Their only duty will be to devise the best means of applying the swamp land fund to the purposes for which it was designed. Their powers and duties are confined to that.

But to relieve the bill from any constitutional objection, on whatever slight grounds it may have been based, we have, as I before remarked, provided that the powers of this Board be transferred to the other so soon as it may be organized. This certainly ought to quiet the fears, and dissipate the objections of those gentlemen who are afflicted with constitutional doubts and scruples. But when are you going to elect the Board for which the Constitution provides? Are you going to elect it next November? You cannot well do it before that time. And let me ask whether the Committee on Internal Improvements has reported a bill for the organization of the Board. We all know it has not. So far from taking any step towards such a consummation as that, after sixty-five days of the session have passed away, we have at last taken a vote not to organize a Board, but to destroy it, and the proposition actually obtained a majority, though not the requisite constitutional proportion. When there is such a large vote to destroy, where are you going to obtain material to organize? Let gentlemen answer this question. And again: will you consent to let the $200,000 which you have on hand be idle, drawing no interest—producing no benefit to the State? This certainly is not the part of wise legislators.

Even now, while we are here debating this question in our legislative halls, the waters are rising, and the country is subjected to the perils and terrors of overflow. Will you suffer that? Will you fold your arms and look calmly at such a spectacle, without taking the measures which are within your power to avert the calamity? Is that what we came here for? Sir, our position now reminds me of that renowned general who marched up the hill with twenty thousand men, and then marched down again. We have marched up the hill—we have surveyed the prospect from the summit, and now it seems we are on our way down, with a chance of getting a little farther into the swamp than when we started. To my mind nothing that has been said has so much force as what has been done. I speak of the acts of senators, not of their motives. These are patent to the world—those are hidden with the recesses of their bosoms. It is my privilege to descant upon the one, though I may have no right to impugn the other. From the acts of Senators I can come to no other conclusion than that their desire is to defer action. For three weeks we have been engaged on this subject, and yet have made no progress! Not being myself an old member, and having little experience in legislation, I shall follow the example of the gentleman who first made the motion to recommit. This bill has been under consideration in the committee room for two or three weeks. Yet, notwithstanding the importance of the subject, with the exception of two or three members, none of the committee ever attended the meetings, or participated in the discussions on the bill. The gentleman who made the motion, is the one through whose instrumentality two members were added to the committee. Did he ever come into the committee room to offer any valuable suggestions, or to give us the benefit of his experience. Let the gentleman speak for himself--has he ever done it?

Mr. Griffin. Does the gentleman allude to me?

Mr. Short. I allude to the gentleman who made the motion to recommit, thus arresting an important measure in its progress through this body. Whence I ask, comes the new born zeal which is manifested for this bill? On the other hand, why has it been thus arrested by a motion from a quarter whence I expected the offer of a friendly hand—not one which would be put forth only in order to destroy? Gentlemen who act thus may take the responsibility of defeating the measure—it shall not rest on me.

I know that this is a dry subject. I know that it is uninteresting; that the garlands of rhetoric and eloquence cannot be woven around it. But it is not the less important on that account. I have noticed indeed, with regret, that whenever the word levee is mentioned, it falls on the ear like a thrice told tale. If you are fatigued with its repetition go to work and pass the bill, you will then get rid of the subject in an effectual and creditable manner.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the motion indefinitely on the table and called for the yeas and nays:

Messrs. Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Griffin, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Theriot and Wickliffe—16 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Burthe, Dupre, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Nichols, Slack, Taylor and Todd—10 nays.

Consequently the motion to lay on the table prevailed

The bill was then taken up and the first eleven sections passed. The 12th section was then taken up.

Mr. King. I have some remarks to offer on this section. I do not think its effect would be beneficial. It would have the effect of placing all the levees in Louisiana in the hands and under the control of the State. I am not in favor of any such legislation. There are now fifteen hundred or two thousand miles of levee in Louisiana. Ought we to place this enormous extent of levee under the control of the State, when we have only $200,000 on hand? Such a course as this would not be to protect us, but to take away the protection we now have. My idea—and I think it is in accordance with good sense and sound policy—is, that we should expend what money we have judiciously, or in such a manner as to produce the greatest possible benefit. But we should not undertake the guardianship of all the syndics and all the levees in the State. We have already a great extent of levee made. With that we have nothing to do. Let us do what we can in addition, and leave the local authorities to exercise the same powers and privileges as they have hitherto enjoyed. We ought not to deceive the people by impressing them with the fallacious idea that they are necessarily safe because they are under the control of the State. The waters of the Mississippi would have no more respect for a weak levee though it might be removed from the dominion of the local authorities, and placed under the authority of a State Engineer or Inspector. I do not wish the people to become possessed of the idea that they may cease their efforts for their own protection. If they do, the bill instead of proving beneficial, will, in fact, be ruinous in its effects.

On motion of Mr. Kenner the words "a resident of the ward," were inserted in the 12th section and second line, between the words "Inspector for," and on motion of Mr. King the words "when they deem it necessary," were inserted in the same section and the same line between the words "commissioners to."

Mr. Rivers offered the following proviso:

"That nothing in this section shall be construed to interfere with the appointing powers and compenpensation of inspectors as made by the police juries of the different parishes in conformity with existing laws."

Mr. Kenner. I think the whole section wrong in principle; but I dare not move to strike it out for fear I should be accused of wishing to embarrass the bill. I coincide perfectly with the gentleman from New Orleans, [Mr. King,] in the remarks which he has made. I think with him that we are about to extend our supervision too far—that we are taking too much under our charge I shall vote with pleasure for the proviso of the gentleman from Concordia, [Mr. Rivers] as I think it amounts to a virtual repeal of the section.

Mr. Martin—It seems to me that the proviso does not meet the objection. When it is understood that the State Commissioners have the power of appointing and regulating the compensation of the levee inspectors, they will be sure to neglect it themselves. This will throw the whole charge of the levees on the State, thus bringing us back to the very objection urged by the Senator from New Orleans, [Mr. King.] I have no doubt that the parish would neglect to appoint syndics, and therefore the proviso would become superfluous.

Mr. Rivers. Of course the Commissioners would not wish to appoint Inspectors where those officers had been already appointed by the parish authorities. In my parish we have twelve Inspectors, and we do not need any more. What we desire is that this power be left within the discretion of the local authorities, and that the Inspectors come in under the general law, and be made subservient to it.

Mr. Mouton. The section gives the power of appointing Inspectors, to the Commissioners. The amendment of the Senator from Concordia (Mr. Rivers) provides that the parish authorities may still retain that power if they choose to exercise it. Now, I contend, as the gentleman from Assumption, (Mr. Martin) does, that they will not exercise it, if they know that the Commissioners may do so in default of their action. They will neglect the whole matter, and throw the burthen oattending to it on the State.—Thus the proviso does not relieve the section from the objections which have been raised by the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King) and, which, in my opinion, are well founded.

Mr. Hodge. I understand that what we have to do is to appoint proper persons to take charge of and apply the swamp land fund. In that fund no one portion of the State is more interested than another.—Its proper disposition affects all sections. In adopting a general system I do not think that the State should interfere with the Parishes and deprive them of their ancient rights, any more than I think that the State authorities ought to be placed under the control of the Parishes. But can you compel the Parishes to appoint Inspectors? Certainly not. If they should neglect or refuse to do it you have no way of forcing them. I am therefore opposed to interference where the duty has already been performed by the inhabitants or authorities of a Parish. I do not wish to force on the people of any part of the State a system which is repugnant to them. But where they refuse or neglect to appoint Inspectors it may be necessary for the Commissioners to assume the task. This is a subject entirely appertaining to the State The fund is a State fund, accruing from lands donated to the State. The disposal of it should not be placed in the hands of the Parishes. I live in a highland Parish—one little liable to overflow—but we have as much interest in this fund as the lowland Parishes The Parish of Concordia has no right to claim exclusive control over any part of the fund, unless it co-operate in the general system we are about to adopt. I have no objection to the Parishes subscribing their own money for their own purposes; but I do not wish to put the fund under their control when the State has officers competent for the task.

Mr. Clifton submitted the following as a substitute for the 12th section and its amendments:

SECTION 12. (Substitute.) Be it enacted, &c., That the levee inspectors appointed by the respective Parishes, shall be subject to the direction of the engineer of the District, provided that nothing contained in this section shall be so construed as to repeal any of the levee or police jury ordinances in force.

The substitute was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Kenner the words "or canals," in the 13th section, 4th line, were stricken out, and the section was adopted as amended.

Section 14 was then taken up.

Mr. King. I think the bond required under this section is too large. I think it should only amount to a sum sufficient to secure the execution of the work.

Mr. Kenner. I think the section should be suffered to remain as it is. Should a crevasse occur by the fault or neglect of an officer, multitudes of families might be rendered homeless.

On motion of Mr. King the words "or sufficient to ensure the execution of the work," was inserted in the 14th section, 7th line, after the words "value of the services rendered," and the section was adopted as amended.

Mr. King moved to insert in the 15th section, 2d line, after the words "engineers to require all," "all contracts for the building of," which was adopted.

The section as amended was then adopted.

Mr. Kenner moved to strike out the word "December," and insert "November," in the same section and third line.

Mr. Kenner. The river is generally up by December, and if the levees be not finished some time before that period they are very apt to be swept away. The police juries require the levees to be finished by November. Some think that even October would be preferable. It is necessary that the levees should acquire a certain consistency, after being built in order to withstand the force of the water. When some time has elapsed between the period of their construction and that of the rising of the river, they can bear a much greater pressure than they could withstand soon after they are built.

Mr. King. I should prefer December, in order to give time to the contractors to finish the work.

Mr. Kenner. This is not a question of preference—it is a question of precaution. We wish to make a good bill, and it will unquestionably be improved by the amendment. I do not offer it for the convenience of the men who build levees, but for the safety of the public. It is their interests that we have to consult, and not the interests of contractors and speculators.

The amendment was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Kenner, the words in the 16th section, 4th and 5th lines, "during high water," were stricken out, and the words "in case of a crevasse or threatened crevasse," were inserted

Mr. Kenner offered the following amendment: after the words "may be deemed necessary," to insert "within five miles of the threatened danger."

Mr. Taylor moved to amend the amendment by inserting "seven miles"—which was adopted.

Mr. Barthe moved to amend by inserting in Mr. Kenner's amendment, "on the same side of the river or bayou," which was adopted.

Mr. Kenner's amendment as amended was adopted, and reads as follows:

"In case of a crevasse or threatened crevasse, all the male slaves above the age of fifteen years and under sixty, or so many thereof as may be deemed necessary, whose owner resides on the same side of the river or bayou, within seven miles of the threatened danger."

Mr. Kenner offered the following amendment to the 16th section:

"That whenever any slave or slaves may be furnished upon the requisition referred to in this section, the owner of the slave or slaves shall be entitled to demand and receive, as compensation for his or their services, at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents per day for each and every slave, payable out of the swamp land fund—except the owner of the land upon which the crevasse occurs or threatens to occur—who is not to be considered as entitled to the compensation allowed by this section; and provided further, that in all cases where slaves are thus called out, the engineer or inspector shall call upon all owners of slaves within the above-mentioned distance, in proportion to the number owned by such proprietor."

Mr. Kenner. I think the amount ($1 50 per day) allowed by the amendment for the services of slaves employed on levees is not too high. Crevasses occur generally in the spring. It is a maxim among planters that one day's work in the spring, is worth five days in the fall. By the law the planters are compelled, under a heavy penalty in case of failure, to send all their negroes to work on the levees whenever they may be called, within a certain distance. All this time is lost, and is the most valuable period of the year. The planting of the crop is delayed, and the consequent loss may be very great. I ask whether the sum proposed as compensation can, under the circumstances, be considered too large?

Mr. King. It is an extraordinary thing to ask compensation for work of this kind. For what is it done? Why is the planter asked to furnish his negroes? Why, to prevent himself being drowned out—to prevent a total loss of his crop. The labor performed is for his benefit, and yet we are asked to compensate him for it.

Mr. Short. I agree in opinion with the gentleman who has last spoken.

Mr. Hodge moved to insert the following proviso at the end of Mr. Kenner's amendment:

"And provided further, That the same hands shall not be called out more than ten days in the same month."

Mr. Lacoste. I am opposed to the proviso. I have had two crevasses on my plantation, and I know that it takes more than two or three weeks to stop them. If the hands are to be withdrawn within so short a time, we will never be able to close crevasses.

Mr. King offered the following:

"Provided, That the provisions of this section shall apply only where the work has been authorized by the engineer."

Mr. King. I do not want to let planters come here and get a dollar and a half a day for their negroes, whom they have employed in stopping a crevasse on their own plantation. I wish to have the payment restricted to cases in which the hands are called out by our own State officers. I predict that if we pass this section in its present shape, not a pound of earth will be thrown up in the State, that we shall not have to pay for out of the swamp land fund. This will subject the fund to an enormous expense, which it ought not to be called on to pay. We can scarcely predict the dangerous consequences that may result from such a system. Instead of expending our money usefully and beneficially, we will squander it in a manner never contemplated. We should not proceed thus blindly. We should not adopt a measure which may—which must—involve us to such a ruinous extent.

Mr. Wickliffe—I contend that the proviso of the gentleman is not in order, as it conflicts with the general principle of the bill. The bill says that the Inspectors shall have the power of calling out hands to work on the levees whenever they consider it necessary. It appears from this that it is the evident intention of the State to take the whole subject under its own control. When the gentleman speaks of going blindly to work, he is only going it blind himself.

Mr. King—I will explain in a few words and show that none are so blind as those who will not see. Whenever a crevasse occurs, and a planter employs his negroes to stop it, or whenever a levee is to be built or enlarged or strengthened, the planters will come to the State and demand a dollar and a half for each negro out of the swamp land fund. This will happen in every instance, and we can scarcely imagine the sums that will thus be drawn from the fund. I am totally opposed to such a system.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, both provisos were laid on the table.

The sixteenth section was then adopted as amended.

The seventeenth section was adopted.

Mr. Kenner offered the following proviso, to come in at the end of the 18th section:

"Provided, That the funds arising from the sale of the swamp and overflowed lands, shall be divided among the several Districts in the following proportions, viz:

Digitized by Google

To the First District, two-eighths.
To the Second District, three-eighths.
To the Third District, three-eighths."

Mr. Kenner—We ought to give to the Commissioner for each District, a claim on the swamp land fund for his own proportion. We would thus show the people that it is not the intention of the Commissioners to spend all this money to the benefit of one particular District. I think the division proposed is as equitable a one as could be made.

Mr. Short—The Third District is very large. Since it was formed in Committee, portions of the parishes of Avoyelles and Rapides have been added, so that the District now includes the whole of both those large parishes. I think, therefore, the division proposed by the Senator from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner,) would be a very unequal distribution indeed. Reflect on it; consult your sense of justice, and see if this be not the fact. I know that the Senator from Concordia, (Mr. Rivers,) is willing to take this on the principle that a half a loaf is better than no bread. But I appeal to him, and I appeal to all of you to say whether you consider it a fair division when you reflect that all the lands lying along Red River are subject to overflow, and that a large proportion of those north of Red River are in the same condition. The division ought not to be made with reference to the geographical extent of the Districts, but with a view to the topography of the country, the amount of leveeing to be done in each District, and the general convenience of the inhabitants. In my District, the amount of leveeing needed is double what it is in all the rest of the State, yet you, in the First District, take two-eighths, and give three-eighths to us. I I again appeal to your sense of justice to say whether this is fair and equitable. I am confident that when you have reflected on the subject you will answer in the negative.

Mr. Kenner—I do not admit what the gentleman has stated to be a fact. I do not agree with him that the amount of leveeing in his district is so large in proportion to the rest of the State. When he makes the assertion that the Third District has twice as much leveeing as all the rest of the State he is simply mistaken. If he supposes because it is double the extent of the other districts—because it contains such parishes as Claiborne and Bienville and others, that therefore it has levees in proportion, he is greatly in error. In my opinion the Second District is the largest in the State in amount of leveeing. It includes not only the right bank of the river, but also the Lafourche country. A fair distribution would be 2-8 to the district on this side, 2-8 to the gentleman's district, and 4-8 the district on the other side of the river.

Mr. Short—I take into my calculation both sides of Red River, and all of the State north of Red River. Consider for a moment and you will find that this makes a very large levee district. We ask nothing but what is fair; we want nothing but what is just. We have not in the Legislature, a numerical force sufficiently large to enable us to lay hold of the fund; we cannot obtain justice, except through that sense of justice which ought to animate members from all sections of the State. But we make this appeal hoping that it will not be suffered to pass unnoticed. I ask the gentleman from Concordia, (Mr. Rivers,) what he thinks would be an equitable division.

Mr. Rivers moved that the division be as follows:

To the First District four-sixteenths.
To the Second District five-sixteenths.
To the Third District seven sixteenths.

Mr. Kenner—I will state, in round numbers, from the reports which have been made on the subject, that the First District has 200 miles of levees, the Second 570, and the Third about 400. In making a division we should estimate, not the geographical extent of the districts, but the length of their levees.

Mr. Short—I do not base my calculation on the territorial extent of the districts.

Mr. Hodge—The gentleman from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner,) must be mistaken in the statement which he has made. There are more than 400 miles of levee on Red River alone. From the high lands to the mouth of the river is 500 miles. Then we have the west side of the Mississippi above Red River, both sides of the Ouachita and all the Bayous, of which there are so many in that part of the country. The Senator is certainly not correct so far as the amount of leveeing is concerned. But there are other considerations which ought to be taken into view. The donation of these lands was not made to the State for the benefit of the people along the Mississippi alone, or for those having lands already under cultivation. If that had been the object we would have to vote every cent of the fund for the country on the banks of the Mississippi. But I do not believe that such was the intention of the government in making the donation. It was intended to be applied to the construction of new levees, and to the reclaiming of lands now unfit for cultivation. I hope gentlemen will not be actuated by any sectional views, or by a partiality for the particular district in which they may happen to live. Let them look at the law and the intention of Congress in making the grant, and be influenced only by those considerations.

The amendment of Mr. Rivers was laid on the table.

The section was then adopted as amended.

Section 19 was then taken up.

Mr. Kenner. If we intend to confine our attention simply to the spending of money, we need not go beyond this section. I am entirely opposed to it in principle and detail. We have now $220,000 on hand in the swamp land fund, which amount will, it is calculated, be increased to $400,000 in the course of the next year. When the Board has spent $400,000, that will be sufficient to test the benefit of the system we are about to adopt. Then it will be time enough to think about going on credit. Until this be done—till we find that the expenditure of money in this way is going to work well, $400,000 will be sufficient for our purposes. It will be ample for all the necessary work we will have to do. I think the bill would be materially improved by striking out the whole of this section—in other words, by doing away with the credit part of it.

Mr. Short. I am opposed to striking out the section, for the reason that the very object of the bill will be defeated by it. Are gentlemen now afraid that too much leveeing will be done? Are they fearful that too much land will be reclaimed?—that our resources will be too greatly increased? If so, I must at least give them the credit of consistency, in wishing to destroy the efficiency of the bill, by attempting to strike out this section, which gives it all its vitality.

Gentlemen need not be so timid—they need not fear that the State is going to run into debt without a consideration. There is a provision in the bill which prevents the issuing of any warrant until the work is actually done. If then any deficiency be found, there is a method pointed out by which that deficiency is to be provided for. It was thought necessary to insert this provision on account of the great objections which have been made to the loan system. A plan was proposed by which two millions of dollars were to be borrowed, and the swamp lands pledged for the payment of the debt. Gentlemen startled at the proposition. They expressed as much surprise as if they had never heard of a loan before. They did not seem to comprehend so grand a scheme. The plan was then narrowed down to the fund on hand—and if that be not sufficient, the lands themselves are pledged for the work done. This provision is the method by which the State is relieved from going in debt.

Let me beg those gentlemen who live in the high lands, not to be alarmed at this warrant system. It amounts to nothing more than this: When a crevasse is stopped, or a levee built—that is when the work has been actually done—the contractor goes to the Auditor to get his account approved. If there be no money, the Auditor simply endorses on the bill, "not paid for want of funds." This means not funds of the State, but money belonging to the swamp land fund. From that moment the bill becomes a warrant, and draws interest at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. Is there anything so alarming in this? Is there anything in it to frighten Senators from their propriety? Why then cripple the bill? Why deprive the Board of the sinews of war? If the gentleman insists that warrants shall not be issued to the amount of more than $500,000 over and above the funds on hand, I would accept it as a compromise with persons who become alarmed. If the warrants were to be issued before the work is done, I should be opposed to it myself. But when the work is to be done first, there can be nothing to fear. The object of the bill is to protect the country from inundation. This must be accomplished, and the work must be paid for one way or another. You have undertaken a task, and you must not let the plough rest in the furrow till it is completed, when you have the means at your disposal to consummate it.

Mr. Mouton. I am opposed to the credit system, but I know that to secure success in this matter we must adopt it to a certain extent.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Secretary requested the concurrence of the House in a bill entitled

An act to change the name of Solomon Zuckar.

And he requested the signature of the Speaker to the following enrolled bills entitled

An act for the relief of the branch of the Louisiana State Bank at Baton Rouge.

An act to create an additional Justice of the Peace and Constable in and for the Parish of Rapides.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported as correctly enrolled.

A resolution relative to the establishment of a certain mail coach by Congress.

And the Secretary requested the signature of the Speaker to the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Easten, special messenger from the House, requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills, entitled

An act to punish any attempt to make a cut-off of any navigable river in this State.

An act to punish any attempt to injure any levee or embankment on any of the navigable rivers or waters of the State.

An act to punish injuries to levees or embankments on any of the navigable rivers or waters of this State.

An act to appeal an act entitled an act to prevent the making of cut-offs by individuals.

An act to authorize Rufus D. Killgore and his wife, Sarah C. Killgore, to adopt Robert Bliss Read, and to change his name to that of Robert Read Killgore.

An act to provide for the collection of taxes on trades, professions and occupations.

An act concerning the city of New Orleans.

Joint resolution to Congress concerning the erection of a Marine Hospital in the Teche District of Louisiana.

And he informed the Senate that the House had concurred with amendments to the following bill, entitled

An act to amend an act for the uniform regulation of elections in the State of Louisiana, excepting the Parishes of Orleans and Jefferson—approved June 1st, 1846.

And he requested the signature of the President to the following enrolled bills:

An act establishing a seminary of learning.

An act to incorporate Longwood Institute in the Parish of Caddo.

An act to incorporate the St. Joseph Plank Road Company.

An act to incorporate the Mount Lebanon University.

An act to authorize Antoine B. Dauterive and Marie Celestine Darby, his wife, to dispose of by deed of sale or otherwise a certain tract of land in the Parish of St. Martin.

And he informed the Senate that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill, entitled

An act to emancipate William T. Glasscock.

The Senate then adjourned.

THURSDAY, MARCH 24.

The Senate met pursuant to adjournment.

REPORTS ON MEMORIALS OF CITIZENS OF CARROLL.

Mr. Short from the majority of the special committee to which was referred the memorial from certain citizens of Carroll, made the following report:

To the Hon. the President and Members of the Senate of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, members of the Special Committee, to which was referred the memorial of certain citizens of the Parish of Carroll, asking for a repeal of an act entitled "An act to constitute a 'Levee District composed of the Parishes of Madison, Carroll and Catahoula," approved on the 15th of March, 1852, respectfully report,

That they have taken the grounds of the said memorial into consideration, and can find no good reason for the repeal of the said act, and will as briefly as possible state the reasons against granting the prayer of the memorial.

The first ground taken in the memorial for the repeal of the said act, is that it contravenes the 127th article of the Constitution of 1845, because it attempts to tax a part of the State, and not the whole, said article of the Constitution, declaring that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State.

In reply to this position, we only deem it necessary to state that it will appear from the reading of the act, that the object of the tax is local and not general; not a State tax for State purposes, but a local tax for local purposes, the work to be done on the raising of said tax, is for the common protection of the persons taxed, and the tax is uniform on the species of property on which it is levied, and for the common benefit of those who pay it; and it being decided by the Supreme Court that the tax, in such a case, is not a State tax, and therefore not contravening the 127th article of the Constitution. This first ground taken in the memorial is untenable. 2d section Annual Reports, page 673. 5th Annual Reports, page 103, and 2d Annual Reports, page 887.

The second ground taken in the memorial is, that the said act is unconstitutional, "Because it impairs the obligation of contracts in this: When the lands in the district were purchased it was the law of Louisiana that the riparian proprietors should make and keep in repair good and sufficient Levees to secure the country from inundation; in consequence of this servitude the riparian proprietors were permitted to purchase their lands at $1 25 per acre, which, under the present law, would be worth $15 or $20. Moreover in consequence of this servitude they were permitted by the General Government to purchase as much land in the rear as they had in front, at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre; therefore the Legislature has no right, now, to save those front proprietors from the obligations which they had voluntarily undertaken, much less to place them on the shoulders of others, who were not a party to the contract, and who have received no consideration for its performance"

In reply to this position we are compelled to say, it is unfounded both in law and in point of fact.

It is true that as early as 1770 under the laws of Spain or the regulations of O'Reilly, Gayoso and Morales, the grants of lands of the bank of the Mississippi river, and other navigable streams, now embraced in the State of Louisiana, were made on the condition that the grantee or riparian proprietor should keep up a sufficient mound or levee to protect the land from the inundations of the river, and also a road, forty feet wide, on the front. White's Recopolacion, vol. 2d, p. 229. These regulations remained the same, we believe, under the laws of France and up to the date of the treaty of the 30th April, 1803, by which the territory of Orleans was ceded to the United States.

By the terms of the treaty the complete Spanish and French grants were in nowise changed; and those who held inchoate grants were permitted to complete them under the laws of the United States.—The back concession right granted to these front proprietors by acts of Congress passed at various times from 1811 up to the 15th of June, 1832, limited this preference right of entry by which the front proprietor was permitted to enter at $1 25 per acre, as much land back as was contained in his front tract to those who held lands by virtue of a Spanish or French grant

And we have no doubt the inducement for the passage of these back concession laws by Congress was the fact that the front proprietor had the burden thrown upon him in the terms of the grant, of keeping up a levee and a road on his front. This pre-emption privilege was some consideration for the burthen which had thus been thrown upon him.

In 1807, when the first levee law was passed by the Territorial Government, the Legislature undertook to enforce the building of levees, and the repair of roads by the front proprietors, taking it for granted that there was an obligation resting upon them to do this work. This was the starting point of that State legislation which continued either directly or indirectly through the instrumentality of the police juries, to force the riparian proprietor to keep up a levee or road on his front, and if he failed to do it to sell him out, for the benefit of the public.

This legislation was based on the assumption that there was an obligation existing on the part of the riparian proprietors to keep up a levee and a road.—Hence the Legislature assumed the control as to the manner in which it should be done. When this was the governing principle in the action of the Legislature, in the early settlement of Louisiana, there were but few if any inhabitants in the inundated district, except on the banks of the Mississippi river, and some of the larger bayous, and they generally had selected the highest points, and the levees were usually small and erected at very little cost.

Under such circumstances there was some show of justice in the action of the Legislature, when it compelled those to build levees, who held titles under French or Spanish grants, when they had taken the grants with the burthen annexed; but there are no French or Spanish grants on the Mississippi river in the Parishes North of Red River, having in them the conditions that the grantee is to keep up a levee and road, at least there are none in the Parishes of Madison and Carroll.

No one we presume will contend for one moment that the patents from the Federal Government ever issued upon the condition that the patentee should keep up a levee on the front. No, the purchaser in such case, if at private entry paid his $1 25 per acre, or the price of his bid if at public sale, and he received the land as free from any servitude, as it was in the hands of the Federal Government, the State could not even tax it for five years, much less could it compel the owner to build a levee across it, or sell him out if he failed to do so.

The back concession law of 1832 for the first time extended the right of pre-emption to the front owner, who held land by virtue of a patent from the Federal Government, this law was in force for three years by the terms of the act passed on the 15th of June, 1832, but before it expired it was extended one year, very few persons had the benefit of it; the obligation on the part of the front proprietor arising from this supposed right of pre-emption, the mere privilege of entering as much land back of him as he had in his front tract is more imaginary than real; no obligation was created by the terms of the patent, or the terms of the back concession law, that he should build a levee, or keep up a road. There is no ground then for the position that the law complained of in the memorial impairs the obligation of a contract, for there is no contract to be impaired.

The only obligation on the part of a front proprietor to build a levee, is imposed by State legislation alone, and that assumption of legislative power which claims to sell out one man for the purpose of erecting an embankment which is to be a common protection for a hundred or a thousand others without making them contribute in proportion to the amount of capital they have protected by it, so far from creating an obligation, is an unwarrantable invasion of private property for public use, and the act of 1852 complained of in the memorial, so far from being unconstitutional, repealed as it were an unconstitutional law which violated private rights, and in place thereof levied an ad valorem tax or a common tax for a common purpose, a common protection against a common danger to those embraced in the law.

The interior of Madison and Carroll is pretty thickly settled, the lands are rich and fertile, the garden spot of the cotton growing region. They are protected by a line of levees on the Mississippi river, miles of which require to be at least 10 feet high, and from 50 to 80 feet base. To require the front proprietor to build these levees at his own expense where the whole of the land owned by him, in many instances, would not sell for enough to build half of the levee, is a proposition which no one should entertain for one moment. To improve a man out of his estate has been called Irish equity; if there be such a thing, the repeal of this law of 1852 would put in operation most effectually that kind of improvement or principle of equity. When a dangerous enemy makes his appearance on the frontier, no one thinks for a moment of leaving those most exposed to fight the battle alone, those from the interior rush to the rescue, and is there a more dangerous enemy than the Mississippi river, which for four months in the year may, at any moment, invade the houses and the habitations of those living in the interior of Carroll, Madison, Tensas, Concordia, Franklin, Catahoula and other Parishes? are they willing to stand still and let the front proprietor, who is already half vanquished, if not entirely so, contend alone in the unequal struggle?

The parishes of Concordia and Tensas first recognized that principle of justice and sound legislation by which a common protection was erected by a common contribution. The parishes of Madison and Carroll next recognized the principle. The parish of Catahoula came into the league expressing a willingness to pay her portion in warding off the common danger. As she stood in the rear of these parishes the waters that desolated them must necessarily reach her. The fact that other parishes did not lend a helping hand to ward off the common danger, who were also exposed, is their fault; it certainly cannot furnish any grounds for a repeal of the law, as is supposed in the memorial; as those parishes embraced in the law have combined together to ward off a calamity which is common to them. No one parish which has entered into this league should be permitted to go out until the dangers of overflow have ceased and the bills have been settled which have been incurred for the common benefit—it is only from the parishes of Catahoula and Carroll that any complaint has reached as to the effects of this law.

Those persons who happen to occupy those portions of these parishes, which are the least exposed to the inroads of the Mississippi river, and whose lands, though below the level of the Mississippi river at its highest flood, are somewhat more elevated than others, think the tax unequal, and are much dissatisfied with the ad valorem principle. That the law may operate unequally to some extent, may be true. But they are not so far elevated above the common level of the waters that would cover these parishes in the absence of the levee, as would make the inequality in the tax very perceptible. Perfect equality cannot be reached in the assessment of any tax on a subject of this sort. An approximation to equality is all that can be hoped for. To come to the conclusion that a tax was not equal and uniform, because the law in its effect does not operate equally to the advantage of every individual, would be to decide at once that no tax could be practically levied under the Constitution. Every man pays towards keeping up the judiciary system, yet he may never have a case in court, and, therefore, not feel immediately or directly the benefit of the system which throws around him and his property its protecting shield, and it may happen that a person occupying a piece of higher land than another, may think that he does not receive as much protection from a levee as his less favored neighbor, who happens to be in the swamp, and yet pays as much for it. It makes very little difference whether a plantation is covered four feet or two inches with water. So far as planting operations are concerned, all are then on a common level. But exclude water, those on the more elevated points are most benefited, because then they reap the advantages of their favorable location, and their capital is thus rendered more productive; and, in fact, were the low lands abandoned, (and some of them were abandoned in 1849 and '50,) this would throw on those who remained on isolated points a tax which they now little dream of.

But this memorial from the parish of Carroll has originated in a difference of opinion as to whether a tax for keeping up a levee should be specific or ad valorem. That is, in place of each person living in the district protected, paying in proportion to the value of the capital he has invested behind a common embankment, he should pay in proportion to the number of superficial acres of land he may happen to have behind it. Five cents per acre say on land in the woods, and ten cents for land in cultivation—or in other words, a man having a thousand acres of land in a cane brake at five cents per acre, pays fifty dollars. Another having a thousand acres in cultivation at ten cents per acre, pays one hundred dollars. So that the man who pays fifty dollars for the protection of a cane-brake, pays half as much for the protection of that which is yielding him nothing, as the one does for the protection of a thousand acres in cultivation, yielding him a bale of cotton or forty bushels of corn to the acre, and where he has all his negroes and mules at work. The first step from the ad valorem to to the specific tax is the first step to injustice, and those who advocate it, labor under an entire misapprehension of the objects and aim of the taxing power, and the subject of its exercise. A common contribution to a common protection to the extent of the capital protected, and coming within the sphere of its action, must strike every mind as the just principle of legislation. This principle is carried out in the law complained of, and with that equality and uniformity which does not, in our opinion, come in conflict with the Constitution, and we can see no reason for a repeal of the law, until the general levee system to be established, shall go into effect, and carry out the works now being done, by the tax levied in those parishes, where those levees are taken as a part of the General Levee System. Then those parishes will be relieved from the heavy burthen which they have heretofore had to carry.

H. SHORT,
H. L. RIVERS.

Mr. Boatner, from the minority of the same committee made the annexed report:

To the Hon. President and Members of the Senate of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, one of the members of the Special Committee to which was referred the memorial of certain citizens of the parish of Carroll, asking for a repeal of an act entitled :"An Act to constitute a Levee District, composed of the parishes of Madison, Carroll and Catahoula," approved on the 18th of March, 1832,—begs leave to differ with the majority of the Committee, both in their reasons and their conclusions, and herewith submits this as a minority report:

The undersigned has carefully examined the memorial above referred to, and heartily concurs with the arguments therein used. I have arguments applying with more particular force to the citizens of Carroll and Madison, and not to Catahoula. The undersigned begs leave to refer the honorable Senate to said memorial, in which will be found concurring reasons why this truly odious Act should be repealed and obliterated from the statute book.

In regard to the parish of Catahoula, the undersigned is of the opinion that this Act, to use the language of the memorialists, is not only unconstitutional and unjust, but it is unequal, partial and burthensome in the extreme A mere casual glance at the map of the State of Louisiana, will convince any disinterested observer of the truth of the above statement. It will be seen that between Madison and Catahoula, there intervene the parishes of Tensas and Franklin, and a large portion of the parish of Catahoula. The parishes of Tensas and Franklin are more protected and more benefited, and the parish of Concordia is as much protected as the parish of Catahoula. Yet, the last named parish is unjustly and ungenerously taxed for the preservation and protection of these parishes, while they are let off "scot free," not paying a farthing for the general protection.

This, in the opinion of the undersigned, is a species of legislation which should not be tolerated or allowed to remain on the statue books, that a few should be taxed for the preservation of many, and they, equally as able to undergo the burthens of a tax, and actually more benefited (for they are entirely protected, and Catahoula is not, having to protect herself from the back water which comes up on her from the Mississippi through the Red River, being thus compelled to pay a double tax.) The undersigned urges the repeal of this Act, on the ground further that the citizens of two of these parishes, to wit: Carroll and Catahoula, ask for the repeal, and he thinks it is his duty, as far as it is in his power, to grant a request so reasonable and just.

A. C BOATNER.

RESOLUTION OF INVITATION TO MR. FILLMORE.

Mr. Rivers moved to suspend the rules in order to take up the resolution tendering the hospitalities of the State to Mr. Fillmore.

Mr. Wickliffe.—I shall vote for the resolution, provided the preamble is not what I suppose it to be. I do not feel disposed to vote for anything which might be construed into an endorsement of Mr. Fillmore's Administration

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY—THE LAND AND LEVEE BILL.

Section 19 was taken up.

Mr. Kenner.—I will repeat to-day what I said yesterday, in relation to this subject. I feel satisfied that the position I then took, is correct. I continue to think that $400,000 is sufficient for us to spend in a year. If we go beyond that amount, we fall into extravagance. It will be ample for the relief and protection of all parts of the State that may be threatened. This position cannot be controverted. You may travel from the Arkansas line to the Gulf, along the Mississippi, and every bayou of the State, and point out every point where there may be the slightest possibility of a crevasse—you may make your estimates as large as you please, and you cannot expend more than $400,000. The Senator from Madison, Mr. Short, in reply to my statements yesterday, made use of the same argument that he used on former occasions—that if we strike out this section it would destroy the efficiency of the bill. I must be permitted to express my dissent from this opinion. The motion is not made with a view to defeat the bill, or to make it impracticable; but rather for the sake of amending and improving it. Let us examine the subject, and see what will be the result. The commissioners order certain work to be done. When it is completed, they have authority to draw a warrant for the payment of what may be due to the contractor. He hands the warrant to the contractor. The contractor comes to Baton Rouge, to receive payment—he finds no money in the swamp land fund, his warrant is inscribed by the Auditor—"not paid for want of funds," and it then becomes a part of the State debt, bearing eight per cent. interest from the moment of presentation. This is the very thing I object to. I am opposed, not only to the credit system in general, but to this peculiar kind of credit. Every one knows that when a contractor understands any kind of work, the first question he asks is, whether he will be paid for his labor. When he knows that he will be paid promptly—that he will not be subjected to delays before getting his money, he will naturally be willing to work cheaper than if he has to wait for a long time. If gentlemen then insist on incorporating the credit system into this bill, I shall move an amendment authorising the Governor to borrow a million of dollars on the bonds of the State. I would call the attention of Senators to the difference between this system and that contemplated by the bill. As I have said, when a contract is made, if the contractor knows he will be paid promptly, he will work cheaper than he would otherwise do. Therefore, if you resolve to have the credit system, borrow what money you think you will need; put it in the Treasury, where you can always have it at your command, and then the contractor knows that when his work is finished he will get his money. Thus, you will secure a saving to the State of at least 15 or 20 per cent.

If we adopt the section under consideration, men without capital will engage in the work, and, being compelled to purchase every thing on credit, will of course have to charge higher rates than if they had the cash on hand. This is one difference in favor of the amendment I propose. Under the other system, the contractors will know as well as the commissioners that there is no money for them, and they will necessarily charge higher prices. There is still another difference. According to the bill, the warrants are to draw 8 per cent. interest. We would have to pay only 6 per cent. on money borrowed. Thus we would make a clear saving of 2 per cent. Even if I be wrong in my proposition that a contractor would work cheaper for cash than on credit, yet the difference of interest alone would enable us to save a sufficient amount to provide for the whole machinery of the bill. It will be enough to pay the salaries of all the commissioners, engineers, and clerks—it will, in fact, more than pay all expenses.

We have now been engaged in the discussion of this bill two or three days, and I do not feel disposed to detain the Senate any longer. Nevertheless, I could not let the occasion pass without expressing these views. I trust you will determine not to embark in the credit system at all. I am opposed to exceeding the $100,000 which we have on hand—but if you determine to do it, then I shall move an amendment providing for the borrowing of a million dollars, so that we may be able to pay the cash, and not forced to get credit. I have endeavored to show the advantages of this course—particularly its superiority in an economical point of view—and I hope that my reasons will be considered good.

Mr. Short. I was opposed yesterday to striking the section under consideration from the bill. The principal reason for my opposition has been correctly stated by the Senator who has last spoken. I did say, as I have probably often said before, that by striking out this section, we should destroy the efficiency of the bill. During the course of the discussion on this subject, I have found it necessary to repeat many things which I had already said, and to advance arguments which I had already made. Such things cannot be avoided, and I have only to hope that the frequent repetitions which I may have made, will serve to impress my viewf upon the minds of Senators. I do not propose now to offer any thing very new. Nevertheless, in addition to my argument of yesterday I will state that it is necessary, in deciding this question, to look to the character of the work we have to do. I must also recur to the present state of the levee system in Louisiana. All admit that it is defective, and need a thorough and effectual reformation—that it does not meet the wants of the country, or answer the objects for which it is intended. This is the starting point—here our labors begin. It is proposed that the State execute the work which has heretofore been thrown on the front proprietors. I am therefore opposed to crippling the action of the Board by restricting its operations to the amount it may have on hand. Gentlemen have been staggered, not at the magnitude of the work, but at its possible accomplishment. It seems that they have not looked at the beneficial results—they have not considered the rich products of the alluvial lands, and the vast extent to which the resources of the State would be developed.

There is a little State in the north of Holland, about the size of two of our parishes. It was called Hollow land, and was once an uncultivated swamp. It is inhabited by the Dutch—an industrious people, though they have the reputation of being rather slow. They had nothing from which to realize profit—no land to cultivate, and no sources of wealth except the products of the dairy. After a while they came to the conclusion that they would drain their lands, and protect them from the overflowing of the sea. Their first embankment cost over £340,000, or about one million seven hundred thousand dollars!

Now, here is the great State of Louisiana, inhabited by chivalric, a wealthy, and an energetic people—shall she refuse to imitate so shining an example?—shall her opulent cotton and sugar planters fall behind the low Dutch in an enterprize so necessary to the prosperity of the State? Now, when you take into consideration the situation of the State of Louisiana, and the character of its inhabitants and products, are you going to falter in an enterprize of such importance when, to commence, you have a capital of $200,000, and a prospect of $7,000,000 to be derived from the sale of the swamp lands? I ask whether you are prepared to fall so far behind the Dutch, as to be staggered at an expense of a million and a-half, when such magnificent results are to be expected. The proposition to confine our operations to the actual amount on hand is entirely untenable. That sum is so far behind what is needed that I am astonished any gentleman could suggest it. Were we to restrict the commissioners to this we would be acting like the Egyptians with the Israelites—giving them half the necessary quantity of straw and demanding from them twice the usual quantity of bricks. In other words, we ask the commissioners to perform an impossibility. The gentleman has advanced a very ingenious argument about the saving of interest which would be effected under his amendment. Why, if we borrow the money we shall have to pay interest from the very date of the borrowing. According to the bill not a dime of interest is to be drawn till the work is completed. By making a trifling amendment, such as rendering the warrants receivable as payment for swamp lands, we will get rid of all the interest. This is the plainest course to be pursued, and no doubt will prove to be the most efficacious system that could be adopted. I shall say nothing, at this moment, of the loan system, which I thought had been abandoned especially by the Senator from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner.)

Mr. Kenner offered the following as a substitute for the 19th section:

Be it further enacted, &c.. That in order to constitute an additional swamp land fund, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, the Governor is hereby authorized to borrow upon the bonds of the State, having from ten to twenty years to run, and bearing interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, a sum of money, not to exceed one million of dollars, to be borrowed in such amounts, and at such times as he may consider the interests of the levee and drainage department may require; the payment of the annual interest upon such bonds themselves, to be made with the proceeds arising from the sale of the swamp and overflowed lands.

Mr Kenner. It is scarcely necessary to say any thing on this subject. I think I have demonstrated the inexpediency of the credit, and the greater efficiency of the cash system. Senators must see how much better it would be to have the cash on hand.

Mr. Wickliffe. Will the Senator be kind enough to say how the warrants are going to depreciate?

Mr. Kenner. I will state, in answer, that I did not say the warrants are going to depriciate. What I said, to recapitulate briefly, was this: The commissioner thinks certain work is necessary, and must be done. He accordingly advertises for proposals. The contractor, who may wish to undertake the work, before entering on it, goes to the Treasurer's or Auditor's office, and asks if there is any money on hand. He is told that there is not—at least the want of money is the basis of the warrant theory. I therefore assume that he finds no money to the credit of the swamp land fund. The moment he ascertains this fact he will ask more for his work, because it is a settled principle of political economy that everything, including labor, can be obtained cheaper for cash than on credit. He knows that when he goes to the Auditor for payment instead of receiving his money, he will only get a warrant with the words "not paid for want of funds" written across its face. If he then be in want of money, which will probably be the case, he must go into the market and get his warrant shaved at a large discount. The broker will say he does not know when payment will be made, and he will naturally charge high for advancing the cash. This loss will have to be borne eventually by the State, on account of the increased prices which the contractors will be forced to demand. My object is to have the money on hand when the bargain is made, and then we will know exactly what we have to pay, and will get rid of great expense.

On motion of Mr. Short, the words "not to exceed at any one time" were inserted before the words "one million of dollars."

Mr. Clifton offered the following amendment to Mr. Kenner's substitute, which was adopted.

The bonds to be numbered as issued in sums of one thousand dollars, and to be paid in the order of their numbers; the State reserving the right at any time, when there are funds on hand to be applied to the payment of said bonds, to redeem the same. The Governor, by proclamation, to be published in the official gazette of the State for thirty days, shall specify the bonds which the State is ready to redeem, and if the holders of said bonds do not present them for redemption, the interest on the said bonds shall cease.

Digitized by Google

The commissioners appointed by this act shall reserve from the funds arising from the sale of swamp lands an amount annually, sufficient to pay eleven per cent. on the amount of any bonds which may be issued under this section.

On motion to adopt Mr. Kenner's substitute as amended,

Mr. Evans called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Barthe, Clifton, Derbes, Kenner, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, McCay, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Theriot and Todd—16 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Evans, Griffin, Millard, Neal, Patterson and Wickliffe—7 nays.

Consequently Mr. Kenner's substitute for the 19th section was adopted.

On motion, the 20th section was rejected.

On motion, the 21st section was adopted.

Mr. Kenner moved to strike out of the 22d section, 3d line, the words "fifteen hundred," and insert "one thousand."

Mr. Kenner.—I think one thousand dollars a sufficient salary for the Commissioners.

Mr. Short.—When the subject of compensation was under discussion in the Committee, I thought that a salary of $1500 would be too large, and that when we give enough to pay expenses that would be sufficient. Our object should not be to make this a desirable office on account of any pecuniary consideration. Nevertheless, I think $1000 would be too little.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Evans now moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Lands and Levees, with instructions to make four Districts.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the motion indefinitely on the table.

The motion to lay on the table prevailed.

The word "of" in the 23d section, 3d line, after the word "engineer," was stricken out, and the word "in" inserted, and the words "within his District" were added to the end of said section

It was then adopted as amended.

The 24th, 25th, 26th and 27th sections weren adopted.

Mr. Kittridge offered the following additional section:

Sec. 28. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Commissioners for the 1st and 2d Districts are hereby authorized and required, when they may deem it necessary, to purchase two steam pile boats, with their attendant flatboats and piling materials, required for stopping crevasses, to be kept at such points in said Districts as may be most convenient to carry out the object contemplated; and they shall be furthermore authorised to provide all materials, tools and utensils, and every thing requisite to the carrying out the duties required of them by this Act: Provided that the cost of said steam pile boats, flatboats and attendant materials, shall be paid for out of that portion of the swamp land fund belonging to the 1st and 2d Districts.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay it on the table indefinitely.

The motion to lay on the table was lost.

On motion of Mr. Kittridge, the section was adopted.

Mr. Clifton offered the following as an additional section:

Be it further enacted, &c., That in case any tract of land, requiring levees, should be abandoned by their owners, then the State shall build thereon the necessary levees, and ipso facto become the owner of the land abandoned, and such land shall be registered in the land office as a portion of the public domain.

Mr. Kenner. I am entirely opposed to the additional section offered by the Senator frm Pointe Coupee, (Mr. Clifton). I believe if it be adopted, that within six months after the passage of the bill, there will not be a levee in Louisiana that will not belong to the State. The effect would be ruinous, and would defeat the whole object of the bill.

Mr Wickliffe. I am opposed to the section, for the reason given by the Senator from Concordia, (Mr. Rivers). I believe he is correct in the position he has assumed—that in six months there would not be a riparian proprietor in Louisiana, who would not have abandoned his levees to the State. The temptation to do so would be irresistible.

Mr. Kenner. The gentleman need not be afraid—our planters are not going to abandon their property in that way. There are some levees so large that they cannot be kept up by private enterprise. These are generally kept up by the parishes in which they are situated. The section offered by the Senator from Pointe Coupée, (Mr. Clifton) only asks that the swamp land fund do that which has heretofore been done by the parishes. No planter is going to abandon 155 feet of his land, and leave the rest to be overflowed. Their land is too valuable for that. Gentlemen from the highlands are needlessly alarmed on this subject.

Mr. Wickliffe. I am greatly indebted to the gentleman for the information he has condescended to give us, that we are needlessly alarmed—but we must be permitted to judge of that ourselves.

I say it is an easy matter for planters to abandon a strip of land, or any portion of it they please—and they would be strongly tempted to do so when they knew that the State would then assume the charge of their levees.

Mr. Boatner. I wish to know whether any lands which are not swamp lands can be legally returned as such.

Mr. Derbes offered the following amendment:

"Provided, That if the owner of such property should, within twelve months, pay the expenses incurred, he shall have the right to repossess himself of his land."

Mr. Griffin offered as an amendment, to insert in Mr. Clifton's section, after the word "shall," in the 4th line, "out of the swamp land fund assigned to the district in which such tract of land is situated."

Mr. Rivers moved to strike out of Mr. Clifton's section the word "portion." and insert "any tract of land."

Mr. King I certainly should not vote for any thing so vague as this section appears to me to be. I agree with those gentlemen who think it would encourage planters to abandon their places and compel the State to take charge of them.

We are not prepared to enter into such a scheme as that. We are going for enough when we build levees for the sake of reclaiming the swamp lands. This is the only object we should have in view. To think of taking all the levees in the State under our control is preposterous.

The section was rejected.

Mr. Short offered the following as an additional section, which was adopted.

Sec. 29. Be it further enacted, &c., That six months after the organization of any general board of public works, the duties herein assigned, and all powers granted to the board of swamp land commissioners, as herein set forth, shall go under the administration of the said board of public works, and the board herein established shall be superseded.

Mr. Palfrey Before the final vote is taken I have a motion to make which I confess I make with very little confidence, as I feel sure it will voted down: Yet my convictions of duty compel me to offer it. I do so because I have constitutional scruples in regard to the bill. I move to recommit it, with instructions to report it back in such a shape as will make it conformable to the Constitution.

The motion was lost.

On the final passage of the bill as amended, Mr. Griffin called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Barthe, Clifton, Derbes, Kenner, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack and Taylor—15 yeas.

Mr. Theriot, on motion, was excused from voting.

Messrs. Boatner, Evans, Griffin, Neal, Nichols, Palfrey, Todd and Wickliffe—8 nays.

Consequently the bill was passed.

The following protest was, by request, spread on the minutes of the Senate:

We are in favor of the main features of the bill, but we vote against it because we believe the same to be unconstitutional.

The Constitution has commanded this Legislature to organize the Board of Public Works, and has placed all public works under its control.

We consider that the two boards cannot exist constitutionally at the same time.

M. BOATNER.

On motion of Mr. Derbes, the bill entitled

An act to amend an act to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and provide for the government and administration of its affairs—approved February 23, 1852, was taken up.

Mr. Derbes offered a substitute for this bill.

On motion the rules were dispensed with, and the substitute was taken up and read section by section, and passed.

The 6th section being under consideration, Mr. Taylor offered the following proviso:

That this act shall not become a law until it shall have been submitted to the qualified electors of the city of New Orleans, and a majority of the votes polled ascertained to be in favor of its adoption.

Mr. Derbes moved to lay the provision on the table.

Mr. Rivers called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lewis, McClay, Millard, Neal, Patterson, Short, Theriot and Wickliffe—14 yeas.

Messrs. Burthe, Kenner, Kittridge, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Taylor and Todd—8 nays.

Consequently the proviso was laid on the table.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Secretary informed the House that the President had signed said bills.

And he requested the signature of the Speaker to a bill entitled

An act for the relief of Thomas P. Hall and the administrator of W. J. McElroy; and Resolution that the State Engineer be, and he is hereby, authorized to make examinations of the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills:

An act for the relief of Theodule Labauve.

An act to repeal an act entitled an act to exempt the homestead of a householder from seizure and sale on execution, and also to exempt from execution, from seizure for rent, and from being garnisheed, certain personal property and effects, and the wages of labor and compensation for professional and other services.

And that the Senate had concurred in the House amendment, both in the body and title, of a bill entitled

An act to provide for the deficiencies of appropriations in criminal prosecutions, up to the 31st March, 1853.

He also reported to the House that the Senate had adopted the joint resolutions of the Committee of Arrangements in relation to the demise of Isaac Johnson, late Governor of the State of Louisiana.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills:

An act for the relief of J. M. Lapeyre, in the parish of Orleans.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastin, the special messenger from the House, informed the Senate that the Speaker had signed

An act for the relief of the Branch of the Louisiana State Bank at Baton Rouge.

An act to create an additional justice of the peace and constable in and for the parish of Rapides.

And a resolution for the relief of Jerome Tourne.

A resolution relative to the establishment of a certain mail coach by Congress.

And he requested the signature of the President to

An act for the relief of Hal Frazier, a mulatto man, suing for his freedom in the parish of Claiborne.

An act for the relief of Samuel Patterson.

An act to change the name of Susan Virginia Haden.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following Resolution instructing our Senators and requesting our Representatives in Congress to use their endeavors to procure the passage of An act to extend the port of New Orleans.

An act to provide for the future management of the affairs of the Consolidated Association of the Planters of Louisiana.

An act to require police juries to provide for the compensation of jurors.

An act to prevent the spread of contagious or infectious diseases by vessels running in the Atchafalaya Bay and its tributaries.

An act to relieve the State from the payment of jurors,

An act to amend an act entitled an act to incorporate the town of Covington.

An act to create two additional Notaries Public in and for the parish of Bienville.

Report of Fillmore resolutions.

And that the House had concurred in.

An act to authorize David Brady, of the city of New Orleans, to change his name from David Brady to David Braden.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

Mr. Hatch, the private secretary of the Governor informed the Senate that the Governor had approved and signed the following bill entitled

An act to authorize the board of trustees of Centenary College to sell certain lands.

TUESDAY, March 29, 1853.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.—AN ACT TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, ETC.

The following, introduced by Mr. Kenner, Chairman of the Committee on Banks and Banking, was taken up:—

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the promulgation of this act, it shall be lawful for any person, or association of persons, in compliance with the provisions of this act, and if more than five, to form themselves into and constitute a corporation for transacting the business of banking, and of establishing offices of discount, deposit and circulation; but the aggregate amount of the capital stock of any such banker or corporation shall not be less than $100,000.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That every corporation which may be established under and by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall have power and authority, first, to have and enjoy succession by its corporate name for the period expressed in its act of incorporation, which shall not be longer than twenty-five years; second, to contract, sue and be sued, in its corporate name; third, to make and use a corporate seal; fourth, to hold, receive, purchase and convey under its corporate name, property, both real and personal; fifth, to name and appoint such managers, directors, and officers, as their interests and convenience may require; sixth, to make and establish such by-laws for the proper management and regulation of the affairs of the corporation as may be necessary and proper, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That every charter of incorporation made under the authority of this act shall contain, first, the name and title of the corporation, and place chosen for its domicil; second, the amount of the capital stock, the number of slaves, amount of each share, and the time when, and the manner in which payments on stock subscribed shall be called or made; third, the mode in which the election of directors shall be conducted; fourth, the mode of liquidation at the termination of the charter.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That the charter of all corporations organized under the terms of this act, and the original subscriptions made for the purpose of organizing it, shall be recorded in the office of the recorder of mortgages, or other officer exercising the functions of recorder of mortgages, at the place selected for the domicil of the corporation, and a certified copy of the same be deposited with the auditor of the State, and said charter shall be published in a newspaper of said place of domicil, and in the official journal of the State, published in New Orleans, once a week, at least for thirty days; but it shall not be necessary to publish the names of the subscribers, and any subscriber may present the said charter and subscription for record with the recorder of mortgages as aforesaid

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the stockholders of any corporations at a general meeting convened for that purpose, to make any modification, addition or change in its act of incorporation, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, or to dissolve the corporation, provided such modification, addition, charge or dissolution, shall receive the assent of three-fourths of the stock represented at such meeting; provided, also, that such modification, addition, change or dissolution, shall be recorded, as is required by the fourth section of this act.

Sec. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That any corporation, established under this act, shall forfeit its charter, for insolvency or for non compliance with any of the provisions of this act, and that in such cases it shall be the duty of the District Court of the district of such corporation, at the instance of any creditor or of the auditor of the State, and on proof thereof to the satisfaction of the court, to decree such forfeiture, and to appoint three commissioners for effecting the liquidation, whose duty it shall be to convert all the assets of the company, including any unpaid balances due by stockholders, on their shares, into cash, and to distribute the same, under the direction of the court, amongst the parties entitled thereto, in the same manner, as near as may be, as is done in cases of insolvency of individuals; and if any bank shall be wound up under the provisions of this section, the protest of the note first protested shall constitute a lien for the benefit of the creditors of said bank upon all the assets of the bank not in the hands of the auditor, said lien to be enforced as other liens in this State, and conveyance of such assets after such protest shall be void.

Sec. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That the auditor is hereby authorized and required to cause to be engraved and printed in the best manner such quantity of circulating notes, in blank, of the different denominations authorized to be issued by the incorporated banks of this State, as he may from time to time deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, of such form as he may prescribe. Such blank circulating notes shall be countersigned, numbered and registered in proper books, to be kept for that purpose in the office of said auditor, under his direction, by such person or persons as he may appoint for that purpose, so that each denomination of such notes shall be similar, and bear the uniform signature of such register, or one of such registers, and shall be stamped on their face "secured by pledge of stock."

Sec. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That every banker or corporation established under this act, upon depositing with the auditor of the State the bonds of this State, the evidences of debt of the United States, shall be entitled to receive from the auditor an equal amount of such circulating notes of different denominations, registered, countersigned and stamped as aforesaid. But such public bonds shall always be, or be made to be, equal to a stock of this State, bearing five per cent. interest, and it shall not be lawful for the auditor to take such bonds at a rate above their par value, nor above their market value.

Instead of tranferring public stocks, as aforesaid, to secure the whole amount of such bills or notes, it shall be lawful for such persons or association of persons, in case they shall so elect before receiving any of the said bills or notes, to secure the payment of one-third of the whole amount so to be issued, by transferring to the Auditor bonds and mortgages upon real estate of this State, bearing at least eight per cent. interest; payable annually or semi-annually, in which case all such bills or notes, issued by the said person or association of persons, shall be stamped on their face "secured by pledge of public stocks and real estate."—Such mortgages shall be only upon improved, productive, unincumbered lands, together with the slaves attached to said lands within the State, worth, independently of any buildings thereon, at least double the amount for which they shall be mortgaged; and the Auditor shall prescribe such regulations for ascertaining the title and the value of such lands and slaves as he may deem necessary, but in no case shall the estimate of the property be greater than that fixed by the assessment for State taxes made previous to the application for such bills and notes; and such mortgages shall be payable within a period of time not greater than ten years.

The Auditor may, in his discretion, assign the said bonds and mortgages, or any of them, to the person or association who transferred the same, on receiving other approved bonds and mortgages of equal amount; and when any sum of the principal of the bonds and mortgages, transferred to the Auditor, shall be paid to him, he shall notify the person or association that transferred the bonds and mortgages, and may pay the same to such person or association on receiving other approved bonds and mortgages of an equal amount.

Sec. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That circulating notes shall not be issued by any banker or corporation to an amount greater than his or their capital paid in.

Sec. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That the interest accruing upon all bonds shall be collected by the Auditor, and paid over to the banker or corporation from which they were received, so long as the market value of said bonds does not depreciate below the rate at which they were taken. Should such depreciation occur, the Auditor is hereby required to retain the interest until the depreciation be made good, or until such further deposit be made as to fully guarantee the amount for which the circulating notes have been issued.

Sec. 11. Be it further enacted, &c., That in case any of the securities in the hands of the Auditor should become depreciated, and the market value thereof be less than the rate at which they were taken, the Auditor shall demand from the banker or corporation pledging the same, that either an additional deposit be made, or that a sufficient amount of circulation be surrendered to cover and make good the deficiency that may arise from such depreciation, and should such banker or corporation fail to do so within thirty days after such demand, all the privileges granted by this act shall be forfeited.

Sec. 12. Be it further enacted, &c., that the Auditor is hereby authorized to return to any banker or corporation any part of the whole of the securities deposited with him, upon receiving and cancelling an equal amount of the the circulating notes delivered by him to such banker or corporation.

Sec. 13 Be it further enacted, &c., That if any banker or corporation shall refuse or fail to pay in specie, on demand, any note or notes issued by him or it, and registered and stamped as aforesaid, that may be presented during the usual hours of business, the holder of said note or notes may demand of the said bank or banker, or the cashier of said corporation, to write across the face of said notes the words "presented, and payment refused," with the date, and sign the same: and it shall be the duty of said banker or cashier, to make this endorsement under a penalty of of a fine of fifty dollars for every omission or refusal to do so, to be recovered before any court of competent jurisdiction, and the Auditor, on the presentation of said notes to him, shall forthwith give written notice to the maker or makers of such notes to pay the same, and if said notes be not paid within ten days after such notice, the Auditor (unless he shall be satisfied there is a good and legal defence against the payment of such note or notes) shall immediately thereupon proceed to sell, in the most advantageous manner, the securities placed in his hands by said defaulting banker or corporation, and give notice in the officia ljournal of the State, or other newspaper printed ed New Orleans, that all the circulating notes issued by said banker or corporation will be redeemed out of the funds in his hands for that purpose; and it shall be the duty of the Auditor to pay all said notes out of said funds, and to adopt such measures for paying all the circulating notes of said banker or corporation as will, in his opinion, most effectually prevent loss to the holders thereof. In case any deficiency shall arise, and that the securities in the hands of the Auditor shall not be sufficient to pay in full all the notes presented, the holders thereof shall be entitled to a preference, and be paid before any other creditor, out of the assets of the banker or corporation aforesaid.

Sec. 14. Be it further enacted, &c., That all securities deposited with the Auditor by bankers or corporations under this act, shall be held by him exclusively for the redemption of the notes of said bankers or corporations put in circulation as money until the same are paid shall be issued of a less denomination than for five dollars.

Sec. 15. Be it further enacted, &c., That no notes

SEC. 16. Be it further enacted, &c., That no individual firm or corporation, except the legally chartered banks now existing, shall issue and circulate as money any note payable to bearer, except such as are authorized by this act, under penalty of one thousand dollars to be recovered with costs of suit, one-half of said penalty for the use of any person who shall sue for the same and prosecute such suit to final judgment before any court of competent jurisdiction, and the other half to be placed in the State Treasury.

SEC. 17. Be it further enacted, &c., That all stock subscribed to any corporation under this act must be paid in full within twelve months after such corporation shall commence business.

SEC. 18. Be it further enacted, &c., That no loans shall be made by any corporation to any of its stockholders on the pledge of its own stock.

SEC. 19. Be it further enacted, &c., That the plates, dies and materials, to be procured by the auditor for the engraving and printing of the notes hereby provided for, shall remain in his custody; and the expenses necessarily incurred for the same, and in carrying into execution the provisions of this act, shall be paid, pro rata, by the bankers and corporations that are formed under the authority of the same.

SEC. 20. Be it further enacted, &c., That bankers and corporations, hereby authorized, shall have power to carry on the business of banking, to discount bills, notes and other evidences of debts, to receive deposits, to buy and sell gold and silver bullion, foreign coins and bills of exchange, to loan money on real and personal security, to exercise all incidental powers necessary to carry on such business.

SEC. 21. Be it further enacted, &c., That the shares of said corporation shall be tranferable upon the books of the same, in such manner as its by-laws may indicate.

SEC. 22. Be it further enacted, &c., that the persons associating themselves under this act may, in their act of incorporation, provide for the increase of their capital and of the number of their associates, as they may think proper.

SEC. 23. Be it further enacted, &c., That all notes put in circulation by an individual banker, shall be signed by him and his cashier, and those issued by a corporation shall be signed by its president and cashier.

SEC. 24. Be it further enacted, &c., That in case of the failure of any banker or corporation established under this act, each stockholder or copartnership, or body politic having a share or shares in such bank at the time of such failure, or who shall have been interested therein at any time within twelve months previous to such failure, shall be liable and held bound individually for any sum not exceeding twice the amount of his or their share or shares.

SEC. 25. Be it further enacted, &c., That the real estate it shall be lawful for the said corporations to hold, shall be, 1st, such as may be necessary for the proper transaction of their business; 2d, such as may be mortgaged to them in good faith as security for loans; 3d, such as shall be conveyed to them in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the transaction of their busiaess; or, 4th, such as they shall purchase at sales under judgments held by said corporation.

SEC. 26. Be it further enacted, &c., That said bankers or corporations shall be required to make a quarterly statement, verified by the oath of said bankers and the oath of the president and cashier of said corporation, to the auditor, of the exact situation of their banks, designating:

1st, The amount of their capital paid in.

2d, Their notes in circulation.

3d, Their deposits and other cash liabilities.

4th, All their other debts of every nature and kind.

5th, Their specie on hand.

6th, Their notes discounted, designating the amounts not having over ninety days to run to maturity, from those at a longer period.

7th, Their exchange, also designating the amount having more than ninety days to run.

8th, Their cash assets, other than specie.

9th, Their bills under protest, and other bad and doubtful debts.

10th, Their real estate and all other assets.

Which statement it shall be the duty of the auditor to publish in the official State journal, printed in New Orleans.

SEC. 27. Be it further enacted, &c., That the auditor is hereby authorized, whenever he may consider it necessary, to ascertain the real position of any of the banks hereby authorized, to examine its affairs, and if, in his opinion, said bank is in a dangerous or failing condition, to cite the same before the District Court for the district in which said bank is domiciliated, as is provided for in the sixth section of this act. It shall also be his duty to make a full semi-annual examination of the condition of every bank, and verify its statement.

SEC. 28. Be it further enacted, &c., That should any bank, hereby established, refuse or omit to pay in specie any of its notes on demand, the holders of the same shall be entitled to receive interest on the same, at the rate of twelve per cent. per annum, from the time of such refusal until they are fully paid.

SEC. 29. Be it further enacted, &c., That said banks shall be entitled to charge at the rate of not more than six per cent. per annum discount, on all their loans or discounts not having longer than four months to run, and not more than at the rate of eight per cent per annum discount on those for a longer period.

SEC. 30. Be it further enacted, &c., That any bank created under this act, domiciliated without the limits of the city of New Orleans, shall have power to appoint any agent in said city for the redemption of its circulation.

SEC. 31. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the auditor, when required to do so by any bank, to receive and cancel any mutilated notes that may be presented to him and exchange them for other circulating notes to the same amount.

SEC. 32. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Legislature, shall at least once every year appoint a joint committee to examine the securities in the hands of the auditor, compare them with his accounts of the amount of notes issued, and report the result of their examination.

SEC. 33. Be it further enacted, &c, that it shall not be lawful for any banker or corporation, hereby authorized, to commence the business of banking, until the securities required by this act shall be duly deposited and accepted by the auditor.

SEC. 34. Be it further enacted, &c., That all banks hereby established shall be banks of discount and deposit as well as of circulation, and their business shall be strictly confined to the business of banking as defined in the twentieth section of this act.

SEC. 35. Be it further enacted, &c., That any banker or corporation established under this act, shall be taxed upon the amount of circulating notes obtained from the auditor, agreeably to the 8th section of this act, at the same rate as all other property in this State.

Mr. Kenner. I move that the bill be read section by section, in order that the merits of each may be discussed. This is an important bill, and deserves the especial attention of Senators

The first section was read.

Mr. King. I do not see why we should not permit one or two persons to do a banking business There is no reason for insisting on more than five. I move to strike out the words "and more than five."

The amendment was adopted.

The second section was read:

Mr. Short. I should like to know how far it is presumed that this meets the wants of the people of Louisiana. In my view, it gives powers to Banking Companies which they should not possess. To confer on them the privilege of entering into the purchase and sale of real estate might be attended with dangerous consequences.

Mr. King. I would call the attention of the gentleman to the 20th and 21th sections, which define the business of bankers.

Mr. Short offered the following words, to be inserted in the second section, between the word "fourth" in the 7th line, and the word "fifth" in the 8th line, as an amendment:

Digitized by Google

To hold, receive, purchase and convey, by and under their corporate name, such property, real and personal, as may be indispensable to the objects of the association; provided that the real estate which such corporation may lawfully purchase, hold and convey, shall be, first, such as may be necessary for the proper transaction of their business; 2d, such as shall have been mortgaged to them in good faith as a security for loans; 3d, such as shall be conveyed to them in satisfaction of debts previously contracted bona fide in the course of their business; and, 4th, such as they may purchase at sales under judgments or mortgages held by themselves, or in which they have an interest by being subrogated to rights, according to article 2156 of the Civil Code.

Mr. Kenner. I do not see the necessity for an amendment; but if the gentleman insists on it, we are willing to let it pass.

Mr. King. I think the amendment is an important and good one, and I hope the section will pass with it.

Mr. Lacey. The amendment merely provides that a banking corporation may receive and convey such property as it is necessary for a corporation to hold.

Mr. Kenner. I understand that the House bill authorizes a bank to buy up all the real estate in New Orleans, and speculate in it to any extent. When they foreclose a mortgage they may buy in the property, and if attacked about it they can say they took the property for debt. The provision is so broad that it can be made to cover all creation.

Mr. Short. I am willing to give banks, when they go into a legitimate banking business, the power to buy where it may be necessary. I am willing to give them any incidental power, that may be necessary, to protect themselves from hostile combinations. But I am unwilling to give them an unlimited power to buy and sell. I do not wish to give them the privilege of going into the market, and buying and selling ad libitum.

The amendment was carried.

Mr. Lacey. I move to strike out "their" and insert "its," the former expression being incorrect.

Mr. Kenner. I think myself that the section might be more grammatically accurate.

Mr. Short. Read the definition of the word "banks."

Mr. Kenner. I move that the grammar be corrected, and the section adopted as amended.

The amendment was adopted.

Section fourth was then taken up.

Mr. Hodge I move to strike out the words "and in the official journal of the State." The State journal has not the requisite circulation It is not read in the country to any very great extent. If a bank be established in the country, where is the necessity for advertising at all in the city! It would be putting these parties to an unnecessary expense, and I therefore object to it.

Mr. Short. Merchants in New Orleans will, of course, take an interest in the stock of banks throughout the State. By being published in New Orleans the advertisement will be more generally read, and the banks themselves will be benefited by it. I can see no necessity for striking out.

Mr. Martin. I am willing to publish in the official journal; but I move to strike out N w O l an, as the State journal may at some time be published in Baton Rouge.

The words "published in New Orleans" were stricken out, and on motion of Mr. Boatner, the words, "provided there be a paper published there," were inserted in the eighth line, after the word "domicil."

Mr. Hodge. Before the vote on this section is taken, I should like to ask what will be charged when a bank advertises in the official journal?

Mr. Boatner. The regular advertising rates.

The section was then adopted as amended.

Mr. King moved to strike out, in the fifth section, sixth line, all after the word "of" to the word "provided," in the seventh line, and insert "a majority in amount of the whole stock of said company."

The section was then adopted as amended.

Mr. Lacey moved to strike out the words "and that" in the sixth section, third line, which was agreed to.

Mr. Boatner. I move a proviso—that commissioners be not stockholders.

Mr. Kenner. I think that stockholders ought to be appointed. Persons interested are much more likely to act with discretion than those who are not.

Mr. Short. I think the proviso would act as a very wholesome check on banks when insolvent, and it would induce caution in the management of them. But if stockholders are allowed to be commissioners, instead of protecting the bank, they will swamp it. They will make more of the dead carcass than of the live animal They will keep the boat off the shore as long as they can, when they know they would lose her the moment they come to land.

Mr. Kenner. The gentleman's argument is, that every man who is a stockholder in a bank must be a scoundrel. For my part, I think that the stockholders are the persons most likely to do justice—certainly much more so than those who are not at all interested.

Mr. Boatner. I think the stockholders ought to be willing to have this guard thrown around them. They ought to object to having their acts and their books thrown open for examination. It would place them on high grounds, and relieve them from all suspicion. I shall insist on my amendment.

Mr. Wickliffe. I cannot see any necessity for the amendment. I think the Senator from Madison is wrong in insinuating that any influence could be brought to bear on the courts in the appointment of commissioners.

Mr Short disclaimed any such imputation.

Mr. King. In some cases, stockholders should be appointed, and in others not. I am willing to leave the matter to the discretion of the courts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. Nicholls moved that the words following be inserted in the seventh line, after the word "liquidation:"

"Who shall furnish bond and security to the satisfaction of the court for the faithful discharge of their duties"

Mr. Nicholls. I see no reason why banks should be placed in a different position from other debtors. They would have the right to convert all their assets into specie, and thus defraud their creditors.

The amendment, and the section as amended, were adopted

Mr. Martin moved to strike out of the eighth section from after the word "value," in the ninth line, to the end of the section.

Mr. Wickliffe. It seems to me, that mortgages on real estate would be as good a security, and as safe for banking purposes as the bonds of the Citizens' or Union Bank.

(Mr. Kenner here made some allusion to the Mississippi banks, which was not audible to the reporter.)

Mr. Short. I do not rise for the purpose of entering into any discussion of the principles of banking in general, nor have I any intention of referring to the host of chartered banks which at one time afflicted Louisiana and Mississippi. But the Senator has made some allusion to Mississippi, and I should like to know what it was.

Mr. Kenner. I do not know what the gentleman is aiming at. I cannot understand the object of his remarks. If I made any allusion to Mississippi, I did not do it in an invidious sense. I did not certainly mean that because the gentleman comes from Mississippi, he is not as good as any one else. Why, sir, I come from that State myself—at least my grandfather did, which amounts to about the same thing—and I am happy to say that he enjoyed an enviable position there. I have lived on the Mississippi, and drunk Mississippi water, almost all my life. Is the gentleman satisfied with that?

Mr. Short. I thought I had heard the expression, but I am glad that the Senator disclaims it. In regard to the State of Mississippi, I must be allowed to say that you may find there some brilliant examples for your imitation You may find characters brilliant in law—brilliant in oratory—and brilliant in all departments of life. Even so far as banking on real estate is concerned, Mississippi furnishes a melancholy example for all other States. Take, for instance, the Hinds County Real Estate Bank, as an illustration. It is true, there are some who think that on the rich soil of Louisiana, banks of this kind would have a different fate; but I, for one, shall not vote for any bill in which mortgage securities are made a basis. I might illustrate the effects of the system, by referring to the experience of the last twenty years—but I shall not consume the time of the Senate by doing it. I rise simply to protest against the insertion of such a clause. It is true one Senator has remarked that this is as good a basis as the bonds of the Citizens' or Union Banks. But is this all that we have to depend on for the safety of those bonds? It strikes me that the faith of the State is involved to some extent with them. But go further back—look at the history of the system. and let experience be your guide. Remember the commercial revulsions, the financial crises, the monetary distress, the general indignation of the people, that attended the fall of the real estate banking system. Can you, remembering these things, consent, in less than fifteen years, to return to the same evil principle?

Mr. Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. Kenner. With the permission of the Senate, I should like to explain my position with reference to this subject.

Mr. Wickliffe. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr Kenner. A simple call for the yeas and nays does not cut off debate.

Mr Wickliffe. I refer the gentleman to the rules

Mr Kenner. There is no necessity for me to read the rules, as we have a presiding officer who understands them.

The question was fully discussed in committee. A portion of the committee were opposed to the principle. It was inserted at the suggestion of the Senator from Pointe Coupeé. I voted against it on the ground of the difficulty of converting real estate into specie. I hold this to be true—the moment we adopt a basis which is not susceptible of immediate convertibility into specie, we adopt a wrong principle. The consequence will necessarily be, a deterioration of the currency. It would not be legitimate to assume that the mere endorsement of a piece of engraved paper, will give it a value equal to gold and silver as a circulating medium, unless it can be easily and speedily converted into specie. The public must have confidence in it, or it will be a failure. The whole thing has been fully tested in Great Britain. In the latter part of the last century, the Bank of England failed. It was the receptacle of the revenues of the Government, and the medium of its disbursements. It commanded the confidence of the community and the Government, to an extent never enjoyed by any bank, before or since. Parliament even passed a law declaring that its bills should be received as the equivalent of gold or silver. Notwithstanding this action of Parliament, the notes of the Bank continued to depreciate, till they fell to twenty-five per cent. below par. This shows the uselessness of a mere legislative enactment designed to maintain the integrity of a circulating medium. The moment a currency begins to depreciate, the question arises, is this basis convertible immediately into gold and silver? If the answer be affirmative, the basis is good—if negative, it is bad. I contend that the mortgage or real estate basis is not good, for the simple reason that it is not convertible into specie. The system has been tried in New York, and the results there were not of a character to induce imitation here. They had, in New York, a large number of banks whose bills were secured by a pledge of real estate. Thirteen or fourteen of these banks failed in one year—their bills depreciated, and the holders suffered a loss of from fifteen to twenty per cent. That was the result of the New York experiment.

I make this explanation because, as I reported the bill, it might be thought strange that I voted against this section.

Mr. Wickliffe. The gentleman said he had not read the rules, as we have a presiding officer who does read them.

Mr. Kenner. Does the gentleman say that the presiding officer does not read the rules?

Mr. Wickliffe. I only repeat the gentleman's words—I am not responsible for their meaning. But I will show him that he does not read the rules, by simply referring him to them. Now, to come to the point in question—I have not heard a single valid reason for striking out the section. I have heard it said that the Citizens' and Union Bank bonds are sound and safe. What have they to show, that would convince a person on this point? Is it their six millions of stock? What are their fourteen millions of bonds based on? Is it not on lands and negroes?—Yet gentlemen say they are sound and solvent, and their bonds safe as a basis for banking, while they wish to strike the same kind of a basis from this bill.

Mr. Kenner. I think I can explain the difference to the satisfaction of the gentleman. The way those Banks were established, was this: A number of persons met and pledged their lands; they then came to the State, and the State gave her bonds. They took these bonds to England—obtained the money for them—brought the money home to Louisiana, and banked on it. Thus they had a specie basis. It is not by any means the same as the system advocated by the Senate. The property of stockholders in the Citizens' Bank was not pledged for the circulation, but for the redemption and payment of the bonds.

The question was then taken on Mr. Martin's motion to strike out, and it was carried.

Mr. Lewis moved to insert after the words "United States," in the fourth line, the following:

"On bonds of the consolidated debt of the city of New Orleans."

Mr. King I offer the following as an amendment:

"Authorized and secured by the thirty-seventh section of the article to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and provide for the government and administration of all its affairs—approved February 23, 1852"

I would remark that the security here offered is as reliable as the bonds of the State. I trust that Senators will act kindly towards the city of New Orleans; that they will give her this means of extending her credit, and bestow on the country portions of the State the facilities for commerce and exchange, which they will thus obtain.

Mr. Wickliffe. If this amendment be added to the bill, I shall have one of the same kind to offer. The town of Bayou Sara is in debt, and she would, no doubt, wish to have her bonds also made a basis for banking There is no reason for admitting the bonds of New Orleans, when real estate in the country is not considered sufficient security. I am opposed to such invidious distinctions. I consider them unjust and impolitic. If city bonds be admitted, we had better at once go for Railroad scrip, plank road scrip, and municipal and corporation bonds of every kind.—They would be just as safe. What security have we that these bonds of New Orleans will ever be paid? Can she not give up her charter whenever she pleases? Why, sir, I have heard gentlemen say that she would secede and declare her independence, if she could not get what she wants. The Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King) has said that city scrip is as well secured as State bonds. What is the security? Can we compel the Council to impose a tax on the people?—There is no such clause in the charter.

Mr. Short. The question to decide is not whether this or that corporation is solvent. The question is simply this: Louisiana at this time desires some system of banking different from the old one, which has been found inexpedient

The question then is, how we are to increase our circulation, or currency, on such a safe basis as will not bring on a crisis, such as heretofore have afflicted this and other States. We must consequently adopt some new system; and in accordance with this necessity we are going, in this bill, to change a principle which has been in operation for centuries, instead of that system under which the banks have on hand at all times a certain amount of specie in proportion to their circulation, and where the balance is represented by bills of exchange and notes on short time, we are going to substitute another totally different. We must now decide how to effect this radical change in such a manner as not to produce injurious results—As for myself, were I to carry out my own views, I would have no banks at all. But I am not here to represent myself, or to give legislative expression to my own views. I represent the wishes and opinions of those who send me here. I shall therefore look at the various systems proposed and see if the circulating medium is based on a safe foundation. I do not consider mortgages on real estate and negroes a safe foundation, because I have seen it fail. The question now before us is whether the bonds of the city of New Orleans are safe, and at all times convertible into specie, which is the great desideratum in the basis of a circulating medium. Let us examine the subject.—The bonds fall due at different periods—they draw interest at a certain rate per annum, which must be met every year. To provide for this, a sinking fund must be provided by the city of New Orleans—the only portion of the State where such a great increase of taxation is demanded. If we make the bonds of New Orleans the basis of a circulating medium, what will be the result? You will, for the sake of increasing banking facilities, create an antagonism of interest between the tax-payers and the capitalists. So soon as the interest on one year's bonds is paid, a tax will have to be imposed to pay the next, and thus every year you will be setting away the basis of circulation and making it less secure to just that extent.—You are going to make a circulation based on bonds, which are as fluctuating in their value, as any other species of property. You will base a circulation on an inconstant and varying foundation. By this system you make it the interest of the State to run in debt, and to keep in debt, in order to maintain the basis of the circulation. If when you have paid off one series of bonds, you do not issue more; you will change the character of the circulating medium: you will subject it to ruinous contractions, and change all the relations of debtor and creditor throughout the State. Then if in New Orleans, those who wish to get out of debt are more numerous than those who wish to keep in debt, you will every year be diminishing the basis of circulation. But if you do this thing, the interests involved in a perpetuation of the system will be so strong that the tax-payers of New Orleans might as well give up all idea of ever getting out of debt. I am not in favor of putting them in this position. In addition to the uncertainties and fluctuations of the currency which would be the inevitable result, it would entail on the State the necessity of entering again on that system of issuing bonds, which has already led us into so many difficulties and which I never wish to see repeated.

Mr. King. The argument of the gentleman is directed not only against the bonds of New Orleans, but against the whole free banking system. When I came here—and I imagine such was the case with almost every gentleman on this floor—I was pledged in favor of some system of free banking. Such was the desire of my constituents, and the voice of the country also was expressed in a manner too energetic to be misunderstood. Both parties seized on the principle, both incorporated it into their platforms, both put it forward as a leading idea in their programme of State policy—both contended with vehemency for the credit of sustaining it with the utmost vigor and sincerity They advocated it through their newspapers, they proclaimed it in their meetings, they pledged their candidates to it through their resolutions, and they even endorsed it on their tickets, on election days. All these things prove that both parties recognised the principle of free banking as having taken a strong hold on the popular mind. We have now come here to discuss the question whether we are to go back to the old system of banking which is rejected by a vast majority of our people, or adopt the new principle which has met with such success in other States, and which we are pledged to carry out. If it be true, as the gentleman would have us believe, that we should not bank on the bonds of the city of New Orleans, then it follows, as a legitimate inference, that we ought not to bank on any. The arguments directed against the bonds of New Orleans, are equally conclusive against the whole system of free banking. Now, sir, is there any one on this floor who will deny that he came here pledged to sustain free banking? Situated as I am, I consider myself under hardly any moral restrictions in voting on this bill. The people have settled the question, and our task now is only to give form and expression to their will. But shall we make a bill embodying merely the semblance instead of the substance of the idea? This would be trifling with the wishes and expectations of the people. Under the present bill but two kinds of bonds are admitted as a basis for banking purposes. First, United States bonds, and next, bonds of the State of Louisiana.—Do gentlemen seriously think that we can use United States bonds for the purpose when they command a premium of twenty per cent? Surely every one will see that, however safe these bonds may be, no one will be willing to pay so high a premium to get them — Then we come to our State bonds. Every one knows that they cannot be obtained in sufficient quantities, and even those which are out, are principally held in foreign countries. If we do not give greater facilities than these, we will establish our free banking system, which we come here to create, on a basis too narrow for it to stand upon. This will not meet the expectations and demands of the public. When it was proposed to admit the bonds of New Orleans, I had supposed the only question would be—are they safe? I had not supposed that any sectional feeling would cause gentlemen to look at the subject from any other point of view, or induce them to bring forward the bonds of little towns to kill off those of New Orleans. A few days ago, a gentleman to whom one of these little towns is indebted, told me that the inhabitants wished to throw up their charter, to get rid of a debt which they could not pay. I had not supposed that now the Senator would come forward and attempt to clothe Bayou Sara in the garments of New Orleans.

Mr. Wickliffe. The city of New Orleans was bankrupt twelve months ago.

Mr. King. No, sir—New Orleans never was bankrupt. She always could pay her debts. At this moment her bonds are as redeemable as those of the State. In fact I might say without exaggeration that they are more so. The State cannot be forced to levy taxes to pay her bonds. Her creditors must depend on her good faith, as well as her ability, to pay. But the act of consolidation compels the city to make provision for her bonds, and that act is not repealable at the will of the city. The only question then is, can these bonds be converted speedily into specie. Let any one examine the subject, and he must come to the conclusion that they can They are now at par and could be converted into specie to-morrow. With this showing in favor of the bonds of New Orleans, how can you deny them admission. You know that the State is in favor of, I might rather say demands a system of free banking, and the bonds of New Orleans are imperatively necessary to render the system effectual. Will you then allow a petty jealousy to overwhelm us? Will you permit sectional feeling to interfere with your duties? Will you give the people a stone when they ask for bread? The idea of free banking will prove to be a bubble which will break into thin air at the first touch unless you authorize the issuing of more bonds by the State, or accept those of New Orleans as a part of the basis. Her bonds are good bonds—they are easily converted into specie—her prosperity is identified with the prosperity of the State—between her and the country there is unity, instead of dissimilarity of interest. She pays, as I am informed by the Chairman of the Finance Committee, more than half of all the taxes of the State, and certainly that is a fact which should entitle her claims to some consideration.

Mr. Rivers. Will the gentleman explain how these bonds are secured?

Mr. King A clause in the Act of Consolidation declares that there shall be a sinking fund, and compels the Council to levy taxes to pay the interest.—That act is not repealable by the city.

Mr. McCay. I will read the section of the act of consolidation which declares that the City of New Orleans shall be responsible for the debt of the old Municipalities. This amounts to nine million dollars. [Reads the section.]

Now let us see how the payment of this debt is provided for. Recollect that it does not apply to any debt contracted after the passage of the act. [Reads.]

It will be seen that every act of every description is absolutely void unless the money is raised to pay the interest on these bonds, which we now wish to make one of the bases of free banking. But let us go farther. [Reads.]

It seems to me that these bonds must be safer than those of the State. Show me where provision is made for the payment of State bonds. We are under no obligation to pay, except the obligation of good faith.—New Orleans, on the contrary, is compelled to pay, by a special provision in the act of consolidation. She could not avoid the responsibility even if she wished to do it. Does any one doubt that she can raise the $600,000 annually, by special taxation?

Mr. Wickliffe. Cannot the law be repealed?

Mr. McCay. Yes! and so can the free banking law. But the rights of individuals could not be affected by the repeal.

Mr. King. I am obliged to my colleague for having furnished the law in this case. It is seen that the bonds of New Orleans are secured by a law, irrepealable by her act. It can only be repealed by the Legislature of the State. The State is not compelled to pay her debts, except by moral power. In the case of New Orleans there is more than moral power, there is the obligation of the law.

And now let me say one word to those gentlemen who have come here in good faith to establish free banking. If this be not done there will be great dissatisfaction, and the same will be the result if we pass a law which will only be a semblance and not a reality. If this amendment is not absolutely necessary, it will certainly give great strength to the bill.

Mr. Wickliffe. I think the excitement evinced on this subject by the gentlemen from New Orleans is a decided illustration of a tempest in the tea-pot. From what they have said, it would appear as if we had been making a desperate attack on the city of New Orleans. This is an error. I certainly have not attacked the city. I oppose admitting her bonds as a basis for circulation, because I do not consider them a sufficient security. One gentleman thinks we will not be carrying out the wishes of the people, if we do not insert his amendment. Now I expect that there was no such issue in the election. The bonds of New Orleans were not in contemplation. The gentleman says that Bayou Sara is insolvent. In this respect, she would be in a no worse position than New Orleans has been. I merely desire to obtain for her the same advantages which he wishes us to extend to New Orleans, and I do not see why distinctions should be made between them. But he has said that he is informed by a gentleman that the people of Bayou Sara wish to surrender their charter in order to get rid of their debts. I think I can divine the source of his information. If I am not mistaken, the person who told him so is an individual named Niles, the very person who reduced Bayou Sara to this situation, by means of his outrageous and fraudulent conduct. The gentleman says, in addition, that the bonds of New Orleans are as well secured as those of the State. Are they so? Has she the same resources—can she afford to pay as well as the sovereign State of Louisiana? Has she the same capacity to pay? That is the true question and the only test. He says that the city pays half the taxes of the state. This is not so.

Mr. King. I said that I had been so informed by a member of the Financial Committee.

Mr. Wickliffe. I care not from whence the gentleman derived his information; but he certainly repeated the statement. Now, I say again it is an error. If the gentleman will take the trouble to consult the record, he will find that New Orleans receives more from the State than she pays into the Treasury. He says also that the bonds of the city are well secured—that they are safe and reliable as a basis for banking operations. But when the tax becomes burdensome—when the people become tired of paying this large sum from year to year, how easy would it be for them to instruct their representatives to have the law repealed! We all know the influence which the city of New Orleans can exercise in the Legislature; and if her united representation come here, determined to repeal the law, we should find it very difficult to resist her demands. You have only to look at the history of legislation in Louisiana to find ample illustration of this point. I must say that I consider the bonds of the State of Louisiana more redeemable than those of any municipal corporation on the face of the earth.

Mr. Short. I am aware that very much has been said of late about free banking, and that the idea has taken a strong hold on the popular mind. Many persons have used the term, and been amused by it, without understanding it. For some time after the commercial revulsions of '37 and '38, the people of the State were opposed to entering into these banking schemes at all. They had felt the effects of the fire, and, like a burnt child, they came to entertain a wholesome dread of it. The consequence was seen in that uncompromising hostility to banking which was developed in the Constitution of 1845. After this the word "free" was introduced. This tended in some degree to smooth the rough road over which we would have to travel to reach a system of banking. The gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) says that the people cry for it. I admit that when a child is hungry and cries for bread we must give it some. It is well enough to give bread, but not a surfeit. The cry for banking is raised from the fact that there is not sufficient circulation to carry on exchanges. Then comes the question in regard to a safe basis. You may make a capital as splendid as that of Corinthian column, but I wish to see the base. When the beauties of the free banking system are described, I wish to see the foundation on which it is based. I wish to be distinctly understood in relation to this matter. As far as I am concerned, I have not given into this cry for free banking. But I will go this far: when a safe system is presented I will support it. When a wild animal is let loose I wish to take out its teeth, so as to prevent its doing any harm. As I consider the banking system a very dangerous system to be let loose in any country, my desire is to deprive it of its dangerous features.

As my arguments may not be sufficiently convincing, I will read a few extracts from a work written after mature reflection, by an able and competent man.

(Reads.)

Reflect well on what is here said. Imagine what would be the consequence of making the very foundation of your system that which can only be taken as security for short loans. It is a system imported from New York, and attempted to be put in operation in Louisiana, a State whose soil is in all respects uncongenial. Look at the thing itself, and try to ascertain its results. We want a system of banking, but not such a one as will again plunge us into ruin and distress. There was once a Chinese philosopher who imagined that the world was placed on the back of a tortoise. He could show that the globe might rest very comfortably in that position, but he was rather puzzled to find a firm foundation for the tortoise to stand on. Now here we are going to make credit a foundation; then we put more credit on top of that, and still more credit on the summit. The whole system would be of a form having a very small circumference at the base, and an umbrella-like expansion at the top. There is a kind of banking which is safe when it is in the hands of honest directors. I shall meet the wants of the people, not so much by going for something new, as for something safe. Novelty should be made to yield to safety.

In 1841, during the derangement in the bank here and in the joint-stock Companies in England and Scotland, (though in Scotland there was less on account of the individual liability system which prevails there) the question was thoroughly tested. From the experience of that era, it became the opinion of bankers that a bank is in danger when it has invested heavily in State Stocks, Exchequer bills, &c. A parliamentary commission was appointed to investigate the subject. What was the result of their examination? Why that, in a commercial community bills of exchange are a better security, than Indian securities, or even Exchequer bills. I will read something on this point—(reads:)

I prefer, then, a bank on the principle originally advocated by Adam Smith—that is one dollar in specie for every two dollars in circulation, and the remainder secured by bills of exchange on sound commercial communities, and notes of hand on short time. This is better than any system of banking based on stocks and bonds.

Mr. Lacey—In arguing this matter, I shall endeavor to act with that liberality which should characterize the opinions of every person who professes to entertain enlarged as well as practical views of political questions. I shall neither underrate, nor over estimate the benefits of the measure now before the Senate. I shall not contract my views so as to make the system inoperative, or expand them to such an extent as to introduce looseness and disorder. I shall endeavor to be so liberal as to enable me to assist in carrying out the interests of Louisiana—not only because the interests of the State should be our first care, but because I owe it to myself in order to preserve my consistency as a politician. I have the honor to be a member of the democratic party—and I was also a member of the convention that laid down that platform of principles which proved so acceptable to the people of the State. That platform was constructed in no narrow and contracted form. It was not hampered and confined by bolts and bars. It was, on the contrary, expansive and liberal in all its features. I, as a member of the Convention, agreed to go for such a system of banking as will grant facilities to the greatest extent consistent with safety — This is my duty as a consistent politician, and I endeavor to be consistent in politics as well as in my personal relations.

It was at first determined not to go for anything but State and United States stocks. But the arguments of the gentlemen from New Orleans, and their reference to the law of 1852, make me willing to go for the bonds of New Orleans I am not willing to support a system based simply on the bonds of New Orleans, though I think they are manifestly superior to those of Bayou Sara. But I am not averse to admitting those bonds issued under the law of 1852. It is perfectly clear that, by the act of consolidation, the taxes are pledged for the payment of these bonds.—Though you may repeal the act, yet all the bonds issued under that act, up to the time of its repeal are absolutely secured by a pledge of the property, or rather of the taxes of New Orleans. I cannot conceive a better security than this. It is better even than the bonds of the State. But do I thoroughly understand the act of 1852? I ask the gentlemen from New Orleans to correct me if I am in error. As I understand the act, it became necessary for the city to take up the old bonds issued by the various municipalities and then taxes to the amount of $600,000 must be levied annually to discharge the interest on the new bonds. Thus it will be seen that you have not the simple bonds of the city of New Orleans, unsecured in any other way, but you have bonds whose payment is secured by a law not subject to repeal I think this is safe. I do not think we can reasonably ask better security. I think it expedient to admit these bonds, particularly as without them we would possess so few facilities to commence a system of banking. Unless you extend the facilities the, free banking system will become a nonentity—a dream—an idle chimera It is also necessary for New Orleans. I have a just pride in that city. She is the metropolis of our State. The promotion of her prosperity is an object dear to me, as it should be to every Senator on this floor I feel as much interested in her welfare as any Senator from New Orleans can possibly feel. But there is one thing which I should like to see attended to. Suppose that bonds to the amount of three million dollars are issued. The Legislature might repeal the law making taxation necessary, before the issuing of the bonds. The consequence is that the payment of these bonds would not be secured by a hypothecation of the sinking fund. They would be nothing but simple bonds, not secured in any manner. I therefore propose this amendment:

"Provided, however, that in case any portion of the said act of February 23, 1852, be repealed, bonds issued after the repeal shall not be received under this act."

Am I understood? As the law at present stands, taxes must be levied annually to provide for the payment of the bonds. But if that portion of the law be repealed, those issued afterwards would be nothing but simple bonds without any security for their payment. I am willing to take the bonds of the city of New Orleans, secured as they are by the act of 1852, but deprived of that security. I am not willing to take them as a basis for a system of free banking. With that hypothecation of the fund, the bonds are as good a security as we could obtain anywhere. They are based on the property of that great and flourishing city, whose prosperity we have all at heart, and whose welfare we all wish to promote, when it can be done consistently with the welfare of all sections of the State.

Mr. McCay—As the Senator from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) denied an assertion which I made, I have looked at the report and find this to be the result. (Reads.)

Mr. Wickliffe—What does the city of New Orleans receive?

Mr. McCay—My statement was that she paid half of all the taxes of the State. If the legislature choose to donate the whole amount back to the city, that does not affect the amount paid. That is a species of squirming which I do not understand.

Mr. Wickliffe—It will be recollected that I said, "such is not the fact; on a fair examination of the balance sheet it will be found that New Orleans receives more than she pays." The gentleman says this is a species of squirming which he does not understand. I can tell him that I know of no one who can squirm with more facility than himself.

Mr. Kenner—I think no one will go wrong if he votes this way No person should be willing to make those bonds the basis of a circulation which he would not be willing to invest his capital in. Now, I apprehend that there is no one here who would not be more willing to invest his money in the bonds of the city, than in those of the State What are the bonds of the State? These are the bonds issued to the Draining Company. What has become of them? Who can tell where they are? Why their existence is scarcely known. Then there are the Nashville Railroad bonds. Where are they? The Railroad was sold a few years ago in the streets of New Orleans for old iron, and nobody ever heard of the bonds. Then there are the Mexican Gulf Railroad bonds, the Barrataria and Lafourche Canal Company bonds, and others of a similar kind. Who would like to invest in them? But we admit that they are bonds on which we may, with propriety, base a system of free banking. On the other hand, you have the consolidated bonds of the city of New Orleans, secured by an act of the Legislature. Can that act be repealed? It cannot. The bonds must and will be paid by New Orleans, unless she repudiate. Does any gentleman here say that New Orleans will repudiate? Does any one, for a moment, imagine such a thing? There is no question that these bonds are better than State bonds, though the fact may not be very flattering to our pride.

Mr. Short—The question is not, whether we would invest in this or that—but ought we to invest in either?

Mr. Kenner—That is exactly what I say. If you say neither is good, you should move to strike out both.

Mr. Hodge moved the following as an amendment after the amendments of Messrs. Lewis and King:

"Provided that every banker or corporation established under this act, shall at all times keep on hand an amount in specie equal to one-third of its circulation, and a failure to do so shall amount to a forfeiture of its charter"

Mr. King—The Senator had better offer that after the vote on the question now before the Senate is taken.

Mr. Hodge—The reason that I feel myself compelled to insist on a vote being taken on my proviso first, is that if it be adopted, then I will vote for the amendment of the Senator from New Orleans. If it be rejected I shall vote against that amendment. So far as the gentleman may think himself bound to take any particular course by the action of the party to which he belongs, I can have nothing to say. My course cannot be influenced by any such considerations. I think the great object to be attained in any system we may adopt, is in the first place, the perfect protection of the note holders; persons who may become possessors of the notes issued by a banking establishment. It is absolutely necessary that they should be secured against loss. In the next place our object should be to give facilities for banking purposes, the want of which is now so severely felt. Though I may admit that State bonds and United States securities are not a sufficient basis, yet I am unwilling to accept any other than what I believe to be perfectly sound unless this proviso be adopted. The best security that can possibly be had, is the keeping on hand, constantly, an amount of specie equal to one-third of the circulation The results of past experience lead me to this conclusion. The history of banking shows that keeping on hand this amount of specie is safe. The experience of banks now operation, warrants the conclusion. I am, therefore, in favor of the proviso. I do not think it would operate as a hardship on bankers It is immaterial to me whether the gentlemen would invest in any of those stocks or not. They would doubtless do so, if they thought it convenient. The great point is the protection of the noteholder. I will not support any system which does not secure this object.

I do not think the Senator from Ascension, (Mr. Kenner) correct in his views when he says the question is whether a person would invest in this or that stock? The question, I repeat, is the protection of those individuals who may happen to come into possession of bank-notes. I have heard, with surprise, the assertion that the bonds of New Orleans are better than those of the State. New Orleans is only an inherent part of the State Her resources and her wealth are only a portion of those of Louisiana. Her property, which they say, is pledged for the payment of her bonds, is already pledged for the payment of the State debt. When the Senator talks so lightly of certain bonds on which some odium rests, I would refer him to that provision of the Constitution which honors them and provides for their payment; but I need say nothing more of bonds. I do not like any of them. I have come to the conclusion that specie is the only safe basis When we have that we have something substantial—something on which we can rely—not the mere evidence of a debt which may or may not be paid.

Mr. Short.—It appears to me that the proviso, as applied to this bill, is an attempt to blend two inharmonious systems. If you require the dead weight of so much specie in the vaults of the bank you make the system impracticable, you require too much. You ask people to invest their capital in stocks as a security, and then as an additional security, you wish them to bury another portion in their vaults. That would be the immediate destruction of the free banking system.

Mr. Kenner.—I thought I had convinced every member of the Senate that if the bill had not accomplished, it had at least aimed at the security of the note-holder. There were two systems before the committee. The specie basis, and the individual responsibility of stockholders to double the amount of their stock, as provided for in the 24th section.

What is the nature of the proviso offered by the Senator from Caddo, (Mr. Hodge?) If a bank have a hundred thousand dollars circulation, it must have always on hand at least $33,000, or it forfeits its charter. Why, this would cause any bank to forfeit its charter in five months. The bill before the Senate makes stockholders responsible to twice the amount of their subscription. This is taken from the Scotch system, although it adopts the principle in a less degree, as that system makes the stockholders responsible to the whole extent of their property. The effect of this is that the Scotch banks are always prosperous. They have outlived the commercial revulsions which overwhelmed other banks, and preserved their credit in the most disastrous times. The stockholders having all their fortunes involved in the prosperity and stability of the bank would naturally act with the greatest care and circumspection. We steered between the two systems, endeavoring to preserve an equitable medium. We thought that when we had made the banks deposite an amount of stocks equal to their whole capital, and then made the stockholders responsible for double the amount of their subscription, we had made as good a security as could be obtained. I leave it to the judgment of the Senate whether this is not a better security than that contemplated by the Senator from Caddo, (Mr. Hodge.) As a member of the committee, I will call attention to other securities provided for in the bill. The moment a note is protested, the whole assets of the bank become liable for its circulation, and a protest of one operates as a protest of the whole. If that does not make the system safe enough, I should like to know what would.

Mr. Hodge.—What is the case with the banks now?

Mr. Kenner.—They profess now to keep on hand one third in specie, but there is no penalty attached sufficient to compel them to do so.

Mr. Boatner.—Does not the bill itself compel payments to be made in specie?

Mr. Kenner.—It does.

Mr. Boatner.—Why then object to the proviso?

Mr. Kenner.—I will explain. When an individual goes to the bank with a note, and payment is refused, he has it protested and immediately commences drawing 12 per cent. interest per annum. The reason I do not wish to admit the proviso is because I think it would be impracticable. Why, at nine o'clock in the morning, the requisite amount of specie might be on hand, and yet be drawn out in half an hour.

Mr Hodge.—The gentleman says that at 9 o'clock, the bank might have the one third in specie on hand, and that it might be drawn out in half an hour. But, on the other hand, suppose a person come to the bank with seventy-five thousand dollars of these notes and demand the specie for them. Of course it would have to be furnished, or if not the bank would forfeit its charter. What is the difference then in principle? If the gentleman examine the question he will find that his argument is fallacious. He will see that even if the bank be not compelled to keep one third in specie on hand, yet if it have more circulation than specie it is liable at any time to be placed in a situation in which it would forfeit its charter. I would call the attention of the Senate to another important provision. It might, at the first glance, seem to be unnecessary after forcing bankers to purchase stock for security, then to make him keep on hand so much specie as an additional safeguard. But it is not such a hardship after all. When he buys the bonds and deposites them he receives 6 per cent. interest on their amount in the form of interest. Supposing that his profits are only 6 per cent., his total gain would be 12. If he make his loans at 8 per cent. which is not by any means a high rate, he would make 14 per cent. Even if you force them to keep one third in specie constantly on hand, it would be, (after deducting the interest at 8 per cent. on the one third in specie kept in hand) a profit of 9 1-3 or 11 1-3 according as the loans are made at 6 or 8 per cent. which is more considerable than the profits now made by any of the existing banks. I insist upon my proviso.

After some further debate, the subject was laid over till to-morrow

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Secretary informed the House that the President had signed the following bills:

An act for the relief of Samuel Patterson.

An act for the relief of Hal Frazier, a mulatto man, suing for his freedom in the parish of Claiborne.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills:

An act to change the name of Susan Virginia Haden.

of entry on the swamp lands, issued by the land officers of the United States subsequent to the 2d March, 1849, and prior to the 17th of March, 1852.

And that the Senate had concurred in the following bills, entitled

An act for the appropriation and reimbursements of certain moneys paid on account of school land warrants.

An act to amend the 17th section of an act to prescribe the mode of disposing of the lands of delinquent tax-payers.

And the Senate requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills entitled

An act for the relief the Charity Hospital.

An act to amend article 1264 of the Civil Code.

And a joint resolution to Congress concerning the erection of a Marine Hospital in the Teche district of Louisiana.

BILLS PASSED.

Mr. Wickliffe—

An act to emancipate Charles Johnson, of the parish of West Feliciana.

Mr. Slack—

An act to authorize the Mayor and Board of Selectmen of the town of Plaquemine to make a certain canal.

Mr King—

An act authorising proceedings to compel judgment debtors to disclose their property.

Mr. Short—

An act for the relief of Wm. L. Knox.

WEDNESDAY, March 30th, 1853.

A communication from the Louisiana State Bank was laid before the Senate.

The communication stated that a report purporting to be from the bank, had been published in the newspapers, but that said statement had not been furnished by the bank.

Mr. Clifton explained. A circular letter was prepared' with the intention of sending it to all the banks. Through some mistake, this circular had not been sent to the State Bank. It was presumed, however, that the circular had been sent, &c. He moved that the communication be printed and annexed to the report of the Committee.

The motion was concurred in.

Mr. King, from the special committee to whom was referred House bill entitled—

An act to take the census of the State—made the following report:

The Hon. W. W. Farmer,
President of the Senate.

A majority of the Committee to whom was referred —An act to take the census of the State—beg leave to present the following report:—

They consider the provisions of the bill for taking the census in the city of New Orleans as inefficient.

The clause in the fifth section, authorising the Assessors in New Orleans to emply assistants to take the census, was introduced because it was well understood from representations made by those Assessors that they could not possibly spare the time necessary to take the census. There is great danger that the work may not be so well done by assistants, as by the principals, who felt the full weight of responsibility. Besides, it is possible, under the provisions of the bill, for the assessors to farm out, at a handsome profit, the business of taking the census If this should occur, it would assuredly prove highly detrimental to the interests of the city. The census would be taken only in those parts of the city where it could be easily done, leaving out those that were difficult to take. The consequence would be, that the city would lose a portion of her just representation. Further, it is but reasonable that those who do the work should get the pay.

This can only be insured by the appointment of persons expresaly for the purpose, and allowing them the emolunents.

For these reasons, the Committee recommend a change in the mode provided for taking the census in New Orleans. This may be effected by the following amendments and additional section.

In the first section of the printed bill, second line, after the word State: insert, "Except in the parish of Orleans."

In the fifth section, after the word, 'enumerate,' in the third line, strike out all to the words, 'said compensation,' in the seventh line.

Insert the following section, to be called the ninth section, and change the ninth section to the tenth:

SEC. 9. Be it further, &c, That the Recorder of the First District of New Orleans, shall appoint three Assessors to take the census in said District. The Recorder of the Second shall appoint two to take the census in that District. The Recorder of the Third District two, to take the census in that District. The Recorder of the Fourth District, one to take the census in that District; and the Police Jury of the Parish of Orleans, Right Bank of the River, one for that District.

The district in which each Assessor is to act, shall be particularly assigned to him, where more than one person is appointed in any district of the city.

The said Assessors to take the census, when so appointed, shall perform all the duties assigned by this act to other Assessors who may take the census, shall have the same rights and powers, shall receive the same emoluments, and be subject to the same penalties, and in all respects conform to this act in taking the said census; they shall also take the oath prescribed by the Constitution for the faithful discharge of their duties.

(Signed,) W. W. KING,
Chairman of Committee.
(Signed,) TH. J. McCAY.

On motion the report was read and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Burthe, from the same Committee, submitted the following as his minority report; which was read and ordered to be printed, together with the majority report:

The undersigned, one of the committee to whom was referred the bill entitled—An act to take the census of the State—begs leave to report this, as a minority report:

If it be true, as stated by the majority of the committee, that Assistant Assessors could not perform the duties of their office, as well as principals, in the city of New Orleans, the only conclusion to be drawn from that fact is, that it would be proper to have such number of principal Assessors in the city of New Orleans, as would insure a faithful execution of the work.

But the undersigned cannot see by what process of reasoning the Committee come to the conclusion that because Assistant Assessors would be inefficient, the Assessors, who are elected by the people throughout the State, should be appointed by Recorders in the city of New Orleans. No reason, good or bad, is given by the majority of the Committee for the adoption of such a measure, which would place the appointment of State officers in the gift of municipal authority, and effectually leave the Assessors under the control of said authority.

The undersigned would therefore recommend that the fifth section of the act to take the census of the State be amended so that the number of Assessors for the city of New Orleans be incrested to , said Assessors to be elected by the people, and to perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the other State Assessors.

(Signed,) VICTOR BURTHE.

The Census bill was then taken up, and passed with a few amendments.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

THE BANKING BILL.

The Senate then took up the bill to authorize banking in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. Hodge offered the following amendment to Messrs. Lewis and King's amendment, in the eighth section:

Provided, That every Banker or Banking Company doing business under this act, shall have on hand, at all times, in specie, an amount equal to one-third of his or their notes in circulation; and that if at any time the amount of specie should fall below the proportioned notes in circulation as herein provided for, and shall remain so for the space of ten days, it shall not be lawful thereafter for such Banker or Banking Company to make any loan or discount whatever, until its or their position is re-established according to the terms herein provided.

Which was adopted.

Messrs. Lewis and King's amendment reads as follows:

Or bonds of the consolidated debt of the City of New Orleans, authorized and secured by the 37th section of the act to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and to provide for the government and administration of all its affairs, approved February 23d, 1852; Provided, however, that in case any portion of the said act of February 23d, 1852, be repealed, bonds issued after the repeal shall not be received under this act.

The proviso of Mr. Hodge was adopted.

Mr. King. I would state that yesterday, in examing this subject, I found a clause in the Lafayette Consolidation bill, compelling $50,000 more to be raised by taxes. This would raise the total sum to $650,000, which is to be raised every year by taxes under a law that cannot be repealed.

Mr. Martin This is purely a matter of figures. I should like the Senator from New Orleans to make a calculation, and he will find that it will take $54,000 to pay the interest, and the balance will not be sufficient to redeem the bonds.

Mr. Short. I shall not add much to what I have already said on this subject. I am opposed to the specie clause introduced by the Senator from Caddo, (Mr Hodge). I will vote for any bill which I consider safe. I do not know that I will vote for a bill containing the bonds of New Orleans, but I shall certainly vote against any that has the specie clause in it. Every one knows that when a Bank is forced to keep so much specie on hand, it operates as a dead weight. It withdraws capital from circulation, and confines it where it can draw no interest.

I will ask the gentleman one question: are not these bonds already issued?

Mr. King. Part have been

Mr. Short. Then the whole thing is no better than an empty sound and tinkling cymbal!

Mr. King. Part have been issued, but much remains to be issued yet. So it is not empty sound and tinkling cymbals, but solid silver.

The amendment, as amended, was then adopted:

Mr. Martin moved to insert, in the 8th section, after the words "United States," in the 3d and 4th line, the words "or of any municipal corporation, or of any Police Jury of this State"

Mr. Martin. I feel satisfied that a majority of the committee will approve of this amendment, as these bonds are certainly better than the bond and mortgage security which was contained in the bill when it came from their hands.

Mr Derbes. I do not see any good reason for this amendment. It is nothing but a waste of time. The gentleman talks about the safety of these bonds. He should recollect that the bonds of the city of New Orleans are secured by a pledge of $50,000,000 worth of property. When he can say that the same amount of property is mortgaged for the security of Police Jury bonds, I will have no objection to his amendment.—But I think, and I have stated candidly that I think, the gentleman is doing this thing merely to make us lose time

Mr Martin. The gentleman is mistaken, if he supposes there is no property in the country on mortgage. The Legislature of last year passed another law taxing mortgage records. These are just as good as the bonds of New Orleans. The city, it is said, has $30,000,000 worth of property. There are various opinions on that subject, as one gentleman told me she had $140,000,000. But admitting the $90,000,000, yet it must be remembered that it is mortgaged for a debt which made the city bankrupt. The City bonds are only the evidence of an old debt which has never been paid. I have the satisfaction of representing a parish which never was bankrupt. If she wishes to issue bonds for Railroads, and other works of internal improvement, they are just as good as those of New Orleans for banking purposes. If we are to embark in this system of legalizing fraud, I wish to give my Parish a fair chance. I do not see why any invidious distinctions should be made. The whole system is rotten, and experience conclusively proves it—but if we must adopt it, let us give one parish as much chance to profit by it as another. It is the same system as prevails in New York—a system of legal fraud and plunder.

The 8th, 9th and 10th sections were then adopted.

Mr. Martin moved to strike out of the 11th section, and 8th line, the word "thirty," and insert "three days"

Mr. Martin. I have no idea of giving thirty days for what can be done just as well in three.

Mr. Kenner. I hope the Senator will not insist on his motion. It must be evident that most of the Banks to be established under this law, will have offices in New Orleans, while the Auditor lives here.—Three days would be an unreasonably short time.

Mr. Martin. Let the Banker take a fast-running boat, and come to Baton Rouge, and he will find three days ample.

The motion was laid on the table.

Mr Martin. Then I move to insert 90 days in place of 30, so as to give ample time for two or three failures.

This motion was also laid on the table.

The 11th and 12th sections were adopted.

Mr. Boatner moved to strike out of the 13th section, ninth line, the word fifty, and insert five hundred; which motion was lost.

Mr. Boatner. I should like to make some inquiry about this section. I wish to know when the endorsement, on non-payment of a bill is refused, to whom the penalty is to be paid, and at whose instance suit is to be brought.

Mr. Kenner. I confess that this point did not strike the Committee. The suggestion of the gentleman is a good one.

Mr. Boatner. I move to change the amount of the penalty from $50 to $500.

Mr. Kener. That would be entirely too high. I think $50 will be thought enough when it is considered that it attaches to every note presented. If we fix it at $500, the amount would become so enormous that it could not possibly be paid. Thus we would defeat our own object.

Mr. Boatner. I could reply that $50 would be so small as to offer no inducement to any one to bring suit. We ought to make it large enough to be effective. Many persons who would bring suit for $500, would not consider $50 an object worth the trouble.

Mr. Short. The penalty is not reasonable for usimple protest; it only attaches in case of a refusal to subscribe the requisite endorsement on the face of the bill. The object of the penalty is to prevent the refusal. Many a banker would be willing to pay the $50 fine in over to avoid the protest, and gain time. I think the penalty ought to be higher than it is in the bill.

Mr. Kenner. I will offer only a few remarks on this subject. It is true the penalty is recoverable only in case of a refusal to endorse the bill, and not on a simple protest where the endorsement has been made. But it must be remembered that every dollar of the assets of the bank is pledged for the redemption of its notes. This is certainly a sufficient protection to the bill-holders. The gentleman says that a banker would rather pay $50 than let the bank be stopped. This may be true as an abstract proposition, but it is not applicable here. In this way a man might present a note every five minutes and make $50 by the operation, which would cost the banker rather dear, should he continue to refuse the endorsement. I think $50 quite high enough for the purpose contemplated.

The motion to insert $500 was lost.

Mr. McCoy I have some objections to this section of the bill. I think it gives judicial power to the Auditor, to which I am opposed.

Mr. Kenner. There is much force in the objection of the gentleman, but I do not think it entirely tenable. It is obvious that a protest of some kind is required.—The plan of the Senate bill is much superior to that of the House bill. The House bill forces a man, when he wishes to make a protest, to go in search of a notary and saddles him with the fees. This is not just. He ought not to be made to pay for the delinquencies of the bank. And again, why should we legislate to put extra fees into the pocket of an official when the business can be done just as well at the bank, by the banker himself, without the payment of any fees at all?

Mr. McCay. I move to strike out that portion of the section giving power to the Auditor to decide on when a bank has a legal defence for having refused to pay.

Mr. King. I object to striking out that clause, as I consider it necessary. If we strike it out we make the forfeiture of the charter of a bank, in case of a protest, absolutely irrevocable. The moment a banker refuses to pay, whether he have a legal defence or not, he must shut up. Suppose, for instance, the bill presented be a forgery—

(Mr. Kenner. Then, if it is a forgery, it is not a bank bill.)

Well, suppose it is not a forgery, but the banker thinks it is, and has good reason for thinking so.—Cases of this kind occur almost every day. Sometimes it is almost impossible for a bank to tell one of its own notes. A banker would certainly be justifiable in refusing payment in a case of this kind. Yet were he to do so he could, if this clause be stricken out, offer no excuse; he would have to shut up and stop business, and the decree would be irrevocable.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Palfrey offered the following amendment to section 13th:

After the words "competent jurisdiction," in the 10th line, insert, "one-half to accrue to the holder of the note, and one-half to the State."

Mr. McCay offered the following as an amendment to the same section:

After the word "auditor," in the 13th line, erase all to the close of the section, and insert, "shall proceed to advertise for sale, at public auction, in the city of New Orleans, the stocks or bonds deposited with him by the maker or makers of said protested notes, and on the day of sale, which shall not be less than thirty days from such advertisement, and which advertisement shall have been published at least twice a week, in two daily papers printed in the city of New Orleans," after deducting the expenses of such advertisement and sale, apply the proceeds of said sale to the redemption, pro rata, of all the notes in circulation, whether protested or not protested, made and put into circulation by the maker or makers of such protested notes; Provided, that nothing in this act shall be considered as implying any pledge or undertaking on the part of the State for any payment beyond the faithful application of the said securities deposited with the Auditor.

Mr. Short moved to insert the words "without waiver of the benefit of appraisement."

Mr. Short. I will give my reasons for this amendment. It frequently happens that a man gets embarrassed and goes forward to one of these corporations to get assistance. He mortgages his property, and in the mortgage the bank stipulates for a waiver of the benefit of appraisement. This operates so as to keep off other creditors. I find that corporations have thrown this net around many proprietors in the country. When a judgment is obtained, the bank comes forward, gets an order of sale, and having covered up the property by the waiver of the benefit of appraisement, it prevents the ordinary creditors from getting anything. I therefore want to prevent corporations from taking any more mortgages of this kind. I know that this mode of proceeding is very common among individuals; but I have never known it abused by them, whereas I have seen it made the subject of great abuses by corporations. I do not speak from theory, or idle speculation, but from an actual knowledge of the facts. I know that some of these corporations are very careful about lending their credit, and seldom take a mortgage without making a stipulation of this kind. By a private arrangement which they make with the mortgagor, the property is held under a stipulation that it is to be returned whenever the debt is paid. This is a wrong system. It is unjust and injurious towards the ordinary creditors, and I wish to put a stop to it. I do not choose to give such advantages to these large corporations, in addition to those which they already possess.

Mr. Kenner. The amendment of the gentleman would deprive a bank or banker of a right enjoyed by every individual. The bill does not give a banker extraordinary privilege; it does not confer any unusual power upon him. I hope the Senate will not take away from a man this right—which is enjoyed by every one else—simply because he happens to be called a banker.

The amendment was adopted.

The 13th section was then adopted as amended.

The 14th and 15th sections were adopted

On motion of Mr. Kenner, the words in brackets in the third line, "payable to the bearer," were stricken out of the 16th section, and it was adopted and amended.

The 17th, 18th and 19th sections were adopted.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, the word "only" was inserted in the 20th section and third line, next to the word banking, and at the end of said section the words, "only at the place where the bank is domiciliated, unless otherwise authorized by the act."

On motion to adopt the 20th section as amended, Mr. Martin moved to lay it on the table indefinitely.

The motion to lay on the table was lost, and section 20th was adopted.

Sections 21st and 22d were then adopted.

Mr. Lacey moved to insert in the 23d section, 2d line, the word "self," after the word him; which was adopted as amended.

The 24th section was then taken up

Mr. Lewis offered an amendment, making the stockholder liable only for twice the amount of the stock not paid in.

Mr. King. I wish to say a few words in behalf of the amendment of my colleague. We are now about to start a system of free banking. The young and tender plant is about starting into life with such strong opposition as to make its continued existence a problem. We have every reason to believe that the existing monopolies, having special charters, look with a jealous eye on the new system, and that they will throw every impediment in its way. Then give it a fair chance; put it on an equality with other banks—don't seek to trammel and constrain it in such a way as will render it inoperative.

The bill as reported, makes stockholders liable for twice the amount of their subscribed stock. This feature is not found in any of our bank charters. In them the liability of the stockholder is limited to the amount of stock owned. If the full amount is not paid in, they are liable for that portion which remains unpaid, and no more. I would ask when a man is going to invest his capital in banking, would he not rather invest it in a bank where he could not lose more than he had originally put in, than in one where he might lose twice as much? If this be not changed, no inducement will be offered to enter into free banking. Capitalists will prefer to invest in the old banks. We will put free banking in Louisiana in the same position as free banking in Alabama. In that State they some time ago passed a general law, and not the first bank has yet been established under it. We will do precisely the same thing here, the next legislature will find that not a single free bank has been established, and it will then be importuned to recharter the old monopolies. The pretext will be a good one. It will be said that free banking has failed, that we need, and must have more banking facilities, and that the only way to obtain them is to recharter the old banks. You have already enough trammels thrown around this bill. You have sufficient security provided; you have given ample protection to the note holders. You have secured them by having an equivalent amount of bonds, and forcing the bank to keep always on hand an amount of specie equal to one third of its circulation. In times past this alone has been thought sufficient security. Thus you have two securities provided, either one of which is ample. You talk about a perfect security—about making a bank safe beyond contingency. Why, sir, to talk about making a bank so secure as to place it beyond all possibility of danger, is not in human nature to accomplish. We may provide all reasonable securities; but the idea of making a bank so safe that it will not be subject to the vicissitudes and fluctuations of commercial affairs, is simply chimerical. I hope, therefore, that the friends of the free banking system will not permit it to be overwhelmed by this new onus. It has enough to bear already, without throwing any further burthens upon it. I hope that the amendment will be adopted. Its necessity must be apparent to every one. If the bill pass in its present form, our legislation will be a mere idle waste of time.

Mr. Short. I am opposed to the amendment. I agree with the Senator from New Orleans (Mr. King), that the free banking system is yet in its infancy—but I hope it is an infant Hercules in its cradle, and that when it comes to maturity it will wield a strong arm against these old banks which have lately grown into such disfavor. Heretofore the banks have had odds of two to one against the people. I hope the position will now be reversed, and that for the future the people will have two to one against the banks. Every one knows this to be the characteristic of banks—that they are the first to see danger, and the first to provide for themselves. They can perceive approaching danger long before ordinary people can discern a cloud on the horizon. They can consequently provide for themselves long before others have an opportunity. When a man goes into one of these institutions, knowing that he will be liable for twice the amount of his stock, you have a safe system. Pass the amendment, and you take away all security. It is said that under the old system there was only one dollar in specie for every three dollars of circulation. For my part, I think the old system an honest one, and infinitely preferable to any system based on municipal bonds.

Mr. McCay. I am opposed to the amendment for the simple reason that I do not understand it. I am also opposed to the section as it stands in the bill. What man would invest his money in a bank when he would be liable for twice the amount invested, and for a year after he ceases to have any connection with its affairs? I find the amendment makes the stockholder liable for twice the amount of his stock not paid in. Now, according to the bill the whole amount must be paid in at once; consequently there can be no balance for the amendment to act on If the amendment be offered with a view of making the section inoperative, I shall vote for it; if to strengthen it, I shall vote in the negative.

Mr. Lewis withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Kenner offered the following substitute for the 24th section:

Be it, &c., That no stockholder in any corporation shall be liable for its debts beyond the amount of his subscribed stock.

To which Mr. Martin offered the following amendment:

That every stockholder &c., shall be liable in solido for all the liabilities of said bank.

The amendment of Mr. Martin was laid on the table.

The substitute of Mr. Kenner was adopted, and the 25th section was stricken out.

Mr. Martin moved to strike out of the 26th section, 2d line, the word "quarterly," and insert "monthly."

Mr. Martin—The banks now have to make monthly statements and I think it would be well to throw the same guards around the little monsters we are about to create.

Mr. Kenner—I would remark that the monthly statements the banks now have to make are nothing like so full as the statement required from these little monsters, as the gentleman calls them.

The amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. Martin moved to strike out the words, "printed in New Orleans," from the same section, 17th and 18th lines; which motion was adopted.

Mr. King offered the following amendment at the end of the 25th section:

For any false swearing, or intentional misrepresentation in regard to the capital stock paid in, or the business or affairs of the bank, in statements made under this section, the persons guilty of such misconduct, or those consenting thereto, or aiding or abetting, in addition to the penalties, civil or criminal, now imposed by law for perjury in case the offence be false swearing, or other offence, shall be liable in solido for the whole debts of the bank, and every bank refusing to comply with this section within twenty days after being notified by the Auditor to furnish said statement, shall forfeit the charter, and shall be liquidated according to the provisions of this act.

Mr. Martin—I heartily concur in the amendment.—I find the gentleman is tinctured with a little of that Scotch prudence which has been alluded to.

The amendment was adopted.

The 2d 7th, 28th, and 29th sections were adopted.

Mr. Lacey offered the following as a substitute for the 30th section.

SEC. 30. Be it further enacted, &c., That every banker and banking company out of the city of New Orleans, doing business under this act, and using circulating notes, as herein authorized, shall keep an office, or designate an agency in the said city, for the redemption of said notes. The appointment of such officer or agent shall be made in writing, and filed with the Auditor, with the Board of Currency, and in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in which the charter is filed; Provided, however, nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize such banker or banking company to refuse to redeem its notes at the counter of the principal bank, as contemplated by this act.

Mr. Wickliffe—It seems to me that if such a thing as the establishment of a bank under the Free Banking law of Louisiana be practicable, every bank must necessarily have an agency in the city of New Orleans. The effect therefore would be to compel country banks to have on hand two dollars in specie for every one dollar that the city banks must have on hand; I am opposed to making the country play second fiddle to the city in every thing.

Mr. Lacey—I have no desire to produce that effect. I do not wish to make it obligatory on country banks to have an agency in the city.

The substitute was adopted.

Mr. Martin moved to amend by imposing a tax on the capital instead of the circulation of the bank.

Mr. Martin—There is an article of the Constitution which requires taxation to be uniform. I wish to impose a task on the capital of the bank in the same way as on all other property. The capital of a bank should be taxed in the same way as the capital of individuals.

Mr. Kenner—That depends on what you mean by capital. If you mean all the assets of the bank, notes, bills of exchange, &c., it cannot but be exceedingly onerous. I presume the gentleman has no such object.

Mr. Martin—Yes sir, that is just my object.

The amendment was laid on the table.

After some further remarks the bill passed to its third reading.

THURSDAY, March 31st, 1853.

AN ACT TO PROVIDE FOR THE PLEDGING OF GROWING CROPS.

The act to permit planters to pledge their growing crops was taken up.

Mr. Martin—I cannot see the slightest necessity for passing this bill. I look upon it as an imputation on the agriculturalists of the State. Any planter, in any parish, can get what money he likes, by mortgaging his property, and he may procure any supplies that he needs, on his parole d'honneur. There is, I repeat, no necessity for this bill, and its passage would only open the door for the perpetration of fraud.

Mr. Kittridge—The sole object of the bill is to enable the honest planter to obtain supplies.

Mr. Lacey—When the bill was before the Judiciary Committee for the first time, the committee reported in favor of it. It was, however, afterwards recommitted and a substitute reported. As the bill has been sanctioned by the committee; as it has received the implied assent, at least, of the Senate, I think it ought to be passed. Its general object is a good one, and I have no doubt it will prove highly beneficial to many of our planters. It has been attentively considered in the committee, and I think it is now in such a form as will meet the views and elicit the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman is mistaken. This bill has never received the assent of the Senate in any form. The bill originally introduced did not seem to be acceptable since it was recommitted. That bill certainly has never received either directly or indirectly, the assent of the Senate. The committee then reported a substitute, which is now before the Senate. I am satisfied that none of my constituents need the aid of this bill to enable them to get supplies. I am convinced that neither myself nor my colleague needs to hypothecate his crops in order to procure supplies. Neither needs resort to any such proceeding. The planters do not require the passage of this bill. It will not aid them—it will not subserve their interests. It may suit certain persons in New Orleans for whom the word of a gentleman is not sufficient. I think that the word of a gentleman should be as good as his bond.

Mr. Nicholls—I think the bill ought to be amended by inserting "judgment creditor." The bill provides for seizing creditors only; but it is well known that there are, in the country, many persons who have no way of recovering their debts except against the crops of their debtors. Now what will be the effect of a law of this kind? Why, if it be passed a planter might laugh the judgment creditor to scorn.

He could go down to New Orleans and make arrangements with some person there, and when his crop is seized by an ordinary creditor, the New Orleans man steps in and shows his privilege. They could say the transactions had been made in good faith; that the crop had been passed over to Jones or Smith; that the real estate was left, and creditors might proceed against that. I consider this a dangerous bill. There are difficulties now in the way of collecting debts. Since I have practised law I have found it difficult to satisfy judgments against debtors, so many are the avenues of escape presented to their choice. I have no idea of giving them any additional facilities to avoid paying their debts.

Mr. Wickliffe—It is a general and very good principle, that the property of a debtor ought to be liable for the payment of his debts. I am opposed to any law intended to favor the debtor at the expense of the creditor. As the Senator from St. Martin (Mr. Nicholls) has very justly remarked, the law already gives sufficient facilities of escape to debtors. Their property should be the common pledge of that condition.

Mr Lacy, The amendment proposed would absolutely destroy the objects the bill is intended to achieve. What is contemplated by it? It proposes to permit a planter to pledge his growing crop, on passing a notarial act, in the parish in which the crop may be, in the same manner as if it had been cut. In other words, it proposes to permit a planter, acting in good faith, and having no desire to defraud his creditors, to raise a little money on his growing crop, by pledging it for that purpose. That is the great object of the bill. If we refuse to pass the bill because the property may be taken from the ordinary creditor, on the same principle we might as well repeal all mortgage laws. We must have no pledges—we must have no mortgages—we must have no privileges. We must sweep them all from the statute book. Everything must be reserved and distributed pro rata among the creditors. But until we do this, until we put all creditors on the same level, no such argument can be justly advanced as that which has been put forward by the gentleman on the other side. I do not know of any jurisprudence in this country, of the kind, to which their doctrines would inevitably lead us. I am in favor of judicious pledge laws. The bill, in giving seizing creditors preference, goes far enough. Who would lend money when other judgments may come in and take the property? To-day, to be sure, there may be no judgment, but to-morrow there may be one, and the person who has advanced money in good faith may find himself deprived of all resource.

I say that I could not have this pledge touched. If it be, your law is no law; it is as worthless as the paper on which it is written. To those who ask for bread it gives a stone, to those who ask for a reality, it gives a counterfeit. At I desire sometimes to legislate for the planting interests, and as this bill is intended to benefit the tillers of the soil, I shall go for it. I have no interest in the bill myself. It was introduced by the Senator from Lafourche (Mr. Kittridge,) who is a practical man, and understands the subject thoroughly.

Mr. Martin—Does the Senator intend to convey the idea that I am impracticable, when he alludes to my colleague as a practical man? We both follow the same calling; we are both interested in the same business. Though he has the advantage of me in years, I flatter myself that I have as much experience as he, and know just as much about this subject. The gentleman manifests great kindness towards the agricultural interests; but I do not know that the planters stand in need of his sympathy. I think they are much better protected, when they are removed from the kind attentions of the lawyers. They are capable of judging of their interests for themselves.

Mr. Short—I must say that my predilections are in favor of this bill. It is intended to achieve a good object—it interferes with no rights, nor operates as a hardship on any one. I have no particular intention of taking the planting interests under my charge. I have never carried on extensive planting operations, but I have many neighbors from whom I have been enabled to pick up some information. It is said by one gentleman that the planter does not need legislation of this kind in order that he may procure advances. It is said that his word is sufficient—that it is or ought to be as good as his bond. Now I admit that every man's word ought to be as good as his bond, but in commercial operations, as they are carried on, in these degenerate days, in this era of the almighty dollar, the bond is generally preferred. Persons who have money to lend do not argue from what ought to be, but from what is, and they generally like to have good security before they part with their cash. Is it reasonable to suppose that a man living in the interior, at a distance from the city, can obtain advances on his bare word, when he is not at all known? No one supposes that he could. But if he can come forward and say, "here is my crop, I will pledge that—it will be ample to cover the amount even though the boll-worm may do some damage,"—if, I say, he can make this offer, he can easily obtain accomodations, which perhaps may be absolutely necessary to him.

Mr. Nicholls.—I would ask whether, under the bill it is not all times in the power of the debtor to prevent the judgment creditor from executing his judgment. The moment a planter of cane or cotton has the privilege of pledging his crop, that moment he has in his possession a means of cutting off the judgment creditor, and leaving him nothing but the real estate on which to exercise his rights. He will be able to levy on nothing but the land and slaves, which may be already covered up by mortgages. The planter then has power to say "you cannot touch my crop; it is pledged to a New Orleans merchant for advances. You can seize my plantation, but you cannot sell it as there are already mortgages enough on it to protect it from you." Of course he would always take good care to give a privilege on his crop to his friend in New Orleans. Senators will observe how loose and general are the provisions of this bill. It says that a planter may have the right to pledge his growing crop for advances or any other facilities. I ask gentlemen to show that the effect would not be what I have stated; I ask them to show that the bill would not open the door to fraud of all kinds. It is said in the bill that the pledge shall not affect the seizing creditor. If he execute against the plantation, that of course carries with it the growing crop. But I do not wish a man to be compelled to execute against the plantation. Let him take his choice, let him seize either the plantation or the crop at his option.

Mr. McCay.—I will give my reasons for opposing this bill. It is a settled principle of law that property cannot be pledged which is not given into the possession of the pledgee. This would be the only exception to that rule. As we have acted on it so long—as it is of such universal application, I presume there must be a reason, and a good one, for it. Another reason which influences me against the bill is that the property of the debtor is the common pledge of all his creditors. This would be again an exception to that rule. For my part, rather than extend any further, the system of privileges, I would abolish them all.

Mr. Short. I have a single word to say as to the effect of this bill on judgment creditors. In the first place, it has not any effect on any judgment creditor whose mortgage is anterior to the date of the pledge. Can it, then, act as any haidship on him? The pledge does not stand in his way. His judgment is a mortgage, and cannot be interfered with by any subsequent pledge. The orgument as to fraud which might result from the bill, is not tenable. The objection is provided for in the bill itself, which sets aside and treats as nullities any of those simulated and fraudulent transactions alluded to. The argument of the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. McCay) rests on the fact that we are making something a pledge, which was not a pledge before; that we are making an exception to certain general principles of law, and making an innovation on long-established custom. Because it has been the uniform course for ages to act in a certain way, therefore we must never act any differently. This is analogous to the argument of the Dutch boy, who persisted in carrying his wheat in one end of a bag, and a stone in the other, simply because his fathers had done it before him.

Mr. McCay. The illustration of the gentleman may be very forcible, but it certainly is not very new. My reason is simply this: I do not wish to depart from a general principle of law, when a change is not shown to be necessary. If such necessity were shown, I should be willing to yield I have not, however, yet heard any sufficiently convincing argument. Here you have a thing not yet in existence, and you are going to make it the subject of a pledge. You do not know its value—you do not even know whether it will come to any thing. Can any thing be more absurd?

Mr. King. I do not think the objections which have been urged against this bill well grounded. I do not see that it places it in the power of the planter to comit fraud, or to hinder or delay the execution of judgments. The bill guards carefully against the perpetration of fraud. Anything done in violation of the rights of creditors, is set aside.

I differ with my colleague in regard to the necessity for this change. I think it is not only expedient but necessary, and that it would result in great benefit to the planting interest. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Lafourche, (Mr. Kittridge,) and I have reliance on his judgment. I believe planters need this bill in order to obtain the facilities necessary to get money. Commission merchants, also, will be glad of it. One of the most common complaints is, that when a merchant has made advances to a planter, he frequently gives his business to others. This would be entirely remedied by the bill.

Mr. Martin. The gentleman is a distinguished lawyer, and I should like to ask him one question. If advances are made and the produce is not sent, cannot the defaulting party be arraigned before the Criminal Court? I recollect a recent case where a gentleman who stood as high as any one in his parish, was brought before a court for something of this kind. I think the accusation was ill-founded; but I cite the case as an illustration of my position. I wish to know whether the proceeding alluded to by the gentleman would not be called in law, "obtaining money under false pretences." I know there are dishonest planters as well as dishonest lawyers and merchants, but I do not think such cases as these would often occur.

Mr. King. There is no express law reaching these cases. There is a law against swindling; but this would be held to be a mere breach of contract.

Mr. Wickliffe. I should like to know if a man obtain $5000 in consideration of sending his crop to the person who makes the advance, whether he cannot be prosecuted for obtaining money under false pretences.

Mr. King. No.

Mr. Wickliffe. It has been repeatedly decided that he can be.

Mr. Hodge. I will give my reasons for opposing this bill, as I do not wish to vote on it without having my position understood. While I agree in opinion with the Senator from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey,) who always expresses himself with so much clearness and precision, that a judicious system of mortgages and privileges is very desirable and expedient, yet I do not find all of them expedient or judicious. There is too much complexity in our system of mortgages and privileges. Louisiana is peculiarly situated. She has great commercial interests, and is the theatre of a large immigration. Persons come here, and, in the course of their business relations, become interested in property. Contracts are made and agreements of various kinds entered into. We ought to have our laws so simple that the citizens of other States can understand them, or our credit will get so low as to cut us off from commercial intercourse with our neighbors.

The gentleman who introduced this bill says the planters cannot get along without—that it is necessary in order to enable them to procure advances and supplies. I give the gentleman credit for knowing the interests of his section, and I claim to know something concerning the interests of that part of the State which I represent. Now I assert that so far from this bill being necessary for them, my constituents have ample facilities to obtain credit. The gentleman from New Orleans has overlooked one of the most important laws having a bearing on this subject. Do you desire to give a planter the privilege of getting supplies by pledging his crop? If so, I will inform him that such is already the law. The gentleman on my left may give me information in regard to planting, but I may be enabled to give him information in regard to some new principle of law. When a planter goes to New Orleans and gets supplies, the party advancing becomes a creditor for the growing crop, and for that which may be made in the succeeding year. Therefore this bill is not necessary, as its object is attained by laws already existing. It may be said that he should have the privilege of pledging his crop for the purpose of speculating with the money. I have no objection that planters should enter into speculations. I am in favor of letting them do what they please so long as it is just and right. But this proposition is an innovation on the civil law which was never before dreamed of. Do gentlemen reflect that this bill would carry with it a right to mortgage personal property? Did gentlemen ever hear of such a thing? The provision of the Code is that in no case does this privilege subsist "on the pledge, except when the thing has been actually put and remained in the possession of the creditor or of a third person agreed on by the parties." The reason of the law is that personal property is supposed to be on the person, and possession is a prima facie evidence of title. Now you wish to make something the subject of pledge which cannot by any possibility be placed in the hands of the creditor—something whose very existence and amount are indeterminate. This is not only a violation of precedent, but of those general principles on which our system of law rests. And you wish to do this when there is no necessity for doing it. You want to travel in a bad road when you can just as well remain in a good one. There is no difficulty now, at least in my part of the State, for planters to obtain whatever advances and supplies they need. When a man goes to a plantation, and sees the crop growing, he has confidence in the ability of the owner to pay. This is all that can be desired. Now, however, you want to introduce this new system of mortgaging personal property. While the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey) talks so learnedly about judicious systems of pledges and mortgages—their expediency and necessity—he desires to give planters power to mortgage personal property—a thing never before heard of in the jurisprudence of any country in the civilized world. I too am in favor of a judicious system of mortgages and privileges but I am not in favor of committing such an absurdity on law as would be involved in the passage of this bill.

Mr. Lacey.—I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from St. Martin, (Mr Nicholls) because I think it will tend to defeat the objects of this bill. It interferes with the principle on which the bill rests. Now, why does this bill encounter such determined opposition? Look at it—look in general and in detail. It was originally introduced by an experienced and practical Senator—it was considered carefully by the members of the Judiciary Committee and has been by them reported to the Senate. Look at the bill, I repeat, and show me what is objectionable in it. Can it open the door to fraud? Can it aid the dishonest planter to defraud his confiding creditor? The bill renders every pledge tainted with fraud as ineffectual as if it had never been made. It sets aside the pledge wherever there is a fraudulent intention. I say again that it opens no door to fraud; it interferes with no pre-existing rights. The vendor retains his preference—the workman his privilege, the furnisher of supplies his prior claim. Thus the avenue to fraud is closed. If the object of the bill be to defeat the creditor it is worthless. Why do we ask the passage of this law? We ask it in order to guard the interests of the poorer classes of the State.

Our legislation should sometimes tend to that object. I desire to protect the wealthy—I do not wish to interfere with their rights; but in protecting them I consider it my duty not to stab the interests of those whose misfortune it is to be poorer. The wealthy can obtain facilities. Their credit is good—they have ample resources. The poor have no such advantages. I am disposed to protect labor—to encourage and assist the poorer classes. I favor this bill because it is intended to have that effect. The gentleman (Mr. Martin) says that the word of a planter is good—as good as bond—that his parole d'honneur is all that is required. However honest a man may be, however correct his intentions, he may not always be able to fulfil his promises. The pledgee, when called on to advance money on the word of a planter may say with justice, "life is uncertain; I have every confidence in your honesty but when the time of payment arrives you may be dead. I cannot advance my money without having some security for its return." Therefore it is evident that the poorer classes cannot obtain those facilities which the law of 1852 gives to the richer; but which they are equally entitled to have. Let the Senate then not take the responsibility of defeating this bill. Its object is a good one—every one must acknowledge that. It is shaped in such a way as to secure its object—the labors bestowed on it by the Judiciary Committee are a sufficient guarantee for that. Let us then pass the bill. It is needed by numbers of persons in the State who cannot now obtain those facilities of which they stand in need, and we ought not to disregard their interests and their claims.

Mr. Todd—I cannot let this bill pass without taking occasion to express my opinions in regard to it. I do believe that it is not so much calculated to benefit the poorer classes as to give an additional security to the commission merchants of New Orleans. Now there is no necessity for additional protection to them, particularly if it be at the expense of other creditors. On the other hand I do not see how this bill is to benefit the planter. On the contrary, so far from giving him greater facilities—so far from benefiting him, it will act as a positive injury. If the bill pass you will see writs of sequestration, and provisional seizures increase a hundred-fold, and thus litigation, an evil which ought to be avoided, will be vastly increased. Persons who may now get advances, will then not be able to procure them on such favorable terms, so that the bill will defeat the very object which it has in view. When a planter goes to a merchant and asks an advance, the merchant will in every case demand that he come under the provisions of this bill; in other words that he pledge his growing crop. This is a condition not required now, and consequently it imposes burthens on the planter which do not now exist. I believe that the bill is calculated to give to the commission merchant greater facilities for the collection of his debts; but will operate injuriously on the planter. It will be an additional source of annoyance to him; it will increase litigation, and produce no benefits of a corresponding magnitude. For these reasons I am opposed to it.

Mr. Griffin—I shall go for the bill as it is intended to benefit the poor man.

Mr. Martin—I object to the gentleman's appropriating the thunder of the Senator from East Baton Rouge. He is peculiarly the poor man's friend.

The bill was laid on the table.

THE JUDICIARY BILL.

The bill dividing the State into Judicial Districts was returned from the House with amendments.

Mr. Lacoste—I am opposed to the amendment making one District of St. Bernard, Plaquemine and Jefferson. The district is now too large, and the addition of Jefferson would make it unwieldy. Plaquemine is 30 leagues in length and St. Bernard 12. This is certainly large enough.

Mr. Rivers—I move to recommit the bill

Mr. Wickliffe—I do not see any good reason for recommitting the bill. We have now been engaged on this subject for five weeks, and I can see no reason for further delay. I do not see why the gentleman desires it unless to carry out the darling project of his mind—that of having only seven Districts in the State, out of New Orleans.

Mr. Rivers. I will tell the gentleman the reason. I wish my parish divorced from Pointe Coupée.

Mr. Wickliffe. There is no good reason for the divorce. Those parishes have always been together, and they seem to have got along very well. I hope the gentleman from Plaquemine will not persist in his opposition to this bill. I went with him at first in his desires in regard to his own district, and I regret that I am now compelled to part company with him. The gentleman has shown his constituents that he has made a brave and gallant fight in the Senate, and if success did not attend his efforts, he cannot be blamed for it. Let him rest satisfied with the laurels he has won. What does he expect to gain by the defeat of the bill? He will only succeed in imposing the large district system on us, and probably probate courts to which he is as much opposed as I am. If the salaries of probate judges could be paid by means of fees, the system might probably be practicable; but as the Constitution expressly prohibits this, I do not see how any one can advocate it. What will be our position if we recommit this bill? We shall be in the same position with reference to the formation of the Judiciary system, as before we commenced. There is every disposition in the Senate to get through our work and adjourn. We ought not to delay for any trifling obstacle. We ought rather to accept the amendments of the House, and pass the bill at once. In regard to the amendment to which the Senator (Mr. Lacoste) objects, I would ask him whether, even including Jefferson with Plaquemine and St. Bernard, a person cannot pass between the most distant portions of the district in a few hours. There are many districts in the State where the judge will have to travel much farther, and will be subjected to infinitely greater inconvenience, yet we hear no complaint from them. I went with the gentleman before when he said that he did not want to have Plaquemine placed in bad company; but as the bill has been returned from the House with this amendment, I do not feel disposed to be contumacious, particularly when contumacy might defeat the bill. As for the gentleman from Concordia (Mr. Rivers,) I think his district is one of the best constructed in the State.

Mr. Lacoste. I do not think that the House entertains such a feeling as the gentleman seems to fear. I think it will concur in our action if we refuse to accept this amendment.

Mr. Rivers. I do not feel disposed to give reasons, though they may be as plenty as blackberries. Yet I will say that I was opposed to the bill, because I did not like the manner of forming the districts. I think that injustice has been done to my parish, and the Senator from Plaquemine (Mr. Lacoste) thinks injustice has been done to his. If we recommend the bill it will come up on its second reading. We can then modify and alter it to suit our own views, and prevent this joining together of parishes having sympathy socially or in any other way.

After a few remarks from other gentlemen, Mr Rivers withdrew the motion to recommit.

The Senate refused to concur in any amendment except that putting Claiborne with Bossier and Bienville.

RESOLUTIONS OF INVITATION TO MR. FILLMORE.

On motion of Mr. Nicholls, the joint resolutions of invitation to Mr. Fillmore were taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe. I have no objection to the resolutions, though I cannot vote for the preamble.

The resolutions were adopted.

The preamble, which is as follows, was then taken up:

"Whereas, it is understood that Millard Fillmore, late President of the United States, will in a short time visit the South, and whereas the high personal and official character of Mr. Fillmore makes it proper that a cordial welcome be extended to him from the people of Louisiana."

Mr. Wickliffe. I never can be induced to vote for what may be construed into an endorsement of Mr. Fillmore's administration. I do not approve it, and I cannot sanction it, either directly or indirectly. If I understand the words "official character," they refer to the character he may have acquired in the discharge of his official duties. I, for one, will never vote for anything that may be construed into an approval of his official acts.

Mr. Short—When we meet around the social and hospitable board, we all meet as Americans. Political differences are then buried and forgotten. When whigs and democrats meet on the stump their language towards each other is very different from that which they employ when they meet in the dining room. I want this affair to be like a social gathering where political differences do not obtrude themselves to disturb the harmony of the feast.

The yeas and nays were demanded, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. Lewis, (his name being called)—I view this subject in the same light as the Senator from Carroll, (Mr. Short.) I consider it a simple invitation to a distinguished citizen who has held a high position as President of the United States.

The preamble was adopted.

THE BANKING BILL.

The bill to authorize banking in the State of Louisiana was then taken up.

Mr. Martin—I move a reconsideration of the first section with a view of amending it.

Mr. King—Did the gentleman vote for it? My impression is that he voted against every section.

Mr. Martin—Most unquestionably my sense of propriety would prevent my moving a reconsideration of anything for which I did not vote. I know the rules of the Senate as well as the gentleman.

Mr. Short—My object in moving a reconsideration is this: The section authorizes banking institutions to be established on a capital of $100,000. The effect of permitting the establishment of these little concerns will be to put in circulation a kind of currency only equalled by what was once known as shinplasters.—As I desire to have the currency of Louisiana equal to that of any State in the Union, want to have the minimum placed at $500,000. We ought not to come down to $100,000. If we do we will be inundated with shinplasters.

Mr. King—This subject has been debated over and over again and I cannot see the necessity of further discussion. It has given rise to every kind of parliamentary manœuvre, and innumerable amendments have been offered. The gentlemen opposed to free banking have manifested their opposition in every legitimate way, and it is time now for them to yield. I do not agree with the inference of the Senator from Carroll, (Mr. Short.) Banks with a capital of $100,000 will not produce a shinplaster currency. In New England, where the banks are perfectly safe, and the currency as sound as any in the Union, there are many with a capital of only $100,000. If a person thinks that he can bank profitably on $100,000 why should we interfere with his private concerns? We have no right to limit the extent of his business one way or the other.

Mr. Short—I rise for the purpose of making a few remarks by way of explanation. I wish the gentleman to understand that my remarks have not been prompted by any hostility to the system of free banking in particular. My objections are to banks in general. No bank of any kind would find favor with me, personally. But representing, as I do, a constituency entertaining views on this subject, adverse to my own, I feel constrained to support any system that I consider safe and effective. I hope, as the gentleman understands the English language he will understand me when I say that I will never vote for any bill which allows municipal bonds as a basis.

The motion to reconsider was lost.

Mr. Short—As I see there is an apprehension existing that the observations which have fallen from me, originated in a spirit of hostility to my system of free banking, I feel compelled to beg the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes longer while I make a short explanation of my position. There is no man thirty years of age, and I presume every Senator on this floor has seen at least that many summers—that does not recollect having passed through that epoch of bank speculation which commenced in 1834, and extended over the whole commercial world. The departure from the old system under which banks were only banks of deposite, to that under which they became banks of discount and circulation, was first made by the Bank of England, and changed the whole monetary system of the world. The consequence was that revulsion followed revulsion till the crisis came in 1837. I had supposed that so much and such melancholy experience would prevent a return to the errors of the past. We scarcely yet cease to observe the wrecks of private fortune and public credit which occurred during that disastrous era. Yet, while we continue to meet these wrecks floating on the tide of human affairs, we wish to tempt the danger again. Why is this? What is the cause of this rashness? What produces this anomaly? Is it the natural perverseness of the human mind?—is it an idiosyncracy of the times? is an incapacity to appreciate or to be instructed by the lessons of experience? Or is it a peculiarity of the American mind, by which it is subject to periodical paroxysms at intervals of ten years? First we have a fever, then a chill; then we take quinine for a year or two till we have nearly recovered, and after that we again become intoxicated; and are again attacked by a fever.

I was willing to vote for a bill in which the basis was State bonds at par, taxes being imposed to pay the interest, and sinking fund for the principle. I was willing to go that far in order to gratify the desires of the people of Louisiana. But what are we going to do? Have gentlemen forgotten the old municipal circulation of New Orleans? Have they forgotten the notes issued by Municipalities Nos. 1, 2 and 3. That was a veritable shinplaster currency. What change has been made in the city by which this circulation can be improved? The answer is that the city has been consolidated and its credit thereby elevated. In other words, if you unite three municipal notes in one city note, you make a vast improvement.

Now, here you will have Louisiana furnished with a currency not resting on her own credit, but on that of the city of New Orleans—a city which is in debt nine millions of dollars. And when will she be out of debt? Will she ever be? Certainly not, if you make her debts the basis of your circulation. Make Georgia bonds, or those of any solvent State, a basis, and I will go it, but I do not wish to see Louisiana trying to elevate herself by piling credit on credit, and having nothing substantial for the edifice to rest upon. I look on this species of currency as not only dangerous in itself, but rendered much more dangerous by this feature which you wish to engraft on it.

Even if the general voice of the people were in favor of this proceeding, we ought not to permit ourselves to be drawn beyond the limit of safe principles. We ought to legislate for the benefit of the people while we represent their wishes. But there is no attention paid to safety in this bill as it now stands; nor is there any necessity for the innovation demanded. Plantations are high, negroes are high—there are no complaints that property sells too low. The only wonder is that they sell so high.

I, therefore, can see no reason why we should embark in this hazardous experiment.

I do not pretend to the gift of prophecy, yet I think I can look into futurity far enough to see what will take place. In New York, already, twenty-five or thirty free banks have failed;—the bubble has burst, and another chapter in the history of banking in the United States has been presented. We are about to enter upon still another. We have already forgotten the ruin, the disasters, the bankruptcies which overtook us after the crisis of '37. We have scarcely yet ceased to feel their effects, and yet we are about to rush into the same danger.

I shall merely say, in addition, that if this section be retained, it will discredit the free banking law in Louisiana. To inspire confidence in the system it must have credit abroad. We now have credit abroad, as every State has, that pays the interest on her bonds. But let it be known in New York in Philadelphia, in the West, that our circulation rests, not on the credit of Louisiana, but on that of New Orleans, and it will lose the confidence of the country. If New Orleans could carry out the system she once undertook of laying the iron hand of taxation on the commerce of the Mississippi Valley, she might pay the nine millions she owes. But that she cannot do. Her resources are confined to her own limits, and when these bonds are to be paid the slightest revulsion will destroy her credit.

The other day, while in the city, I saw the walls covered with placards headed "No tax on Labor," &c. There seemed to be a sort of moral earthquake; a kind of general up-heaving against the heavy hand of taxation. Yet you are going to make the bonds of New Orleans the basis of a circulation. In other words, you will perpetrate a taxation which is already too heavy to be patiently borne. I am not opposed to a safe system of banking, but I am opposed to a bubble which will burst in less than ten years.

Digitized by Google

The yeas and nays were asked for on the bill.

Mr. Griffin. I shall vote for the bill though I do not like it. There are many provisions in it to which I am opposed. Yet, as the democratic party has pledged itself to free banking, and as this is the only bill introduced, I shall vote for it.

Mr. Neal. I wish to explain my position. I am a democrat, but inasmuch as I know my parish wants no banks, I shall vote against the bill.

The bill passed.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The Secretary informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act to amend an act entitled an act providing for the manner notice shall be given of certain judicial proceedings—approved March 9, 1827.

And with amendments,

An act to take the census of the State.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in a bill entitled

An act authorising the Mayor and board of selectmen of the town of Plaquemines to make a certain canal.

And an act authorizing proceedings to compel judgment debtors to disclose their property.

And that the President had signed a bill entitled

An act to fix the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Easten, messenger from the House, requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills and resolution:

An act to provide for the manner of cancelling the bonds and mortgages given by State Tax Collectors.

An act to provide for the manner of cancelling the bonds and mortgages given by Parish Tax Collectors.

An act to confirm the titles of John L. Davis and Daniel Voorhies to certain school lands.

An act to authorize Archibald Barron and Mary Murphy, his wife, to adopt a child named Mary Lucy Barron.

An act supplemental to an act to incorporate the town of Bastrop, in the parish of Morehouse.

An act to dispense with the re-inscription of mortgages in favor of the Commissioners of the Poydras legacy in the parishes of West Baton Rouge and Point Coupee.

An act to improve Big Creek.

An act to regulate Parish taxation in the parish of Concordia.

An act to divide the State into Judicial Districts.

Resolution requiring the State Engineer to make a thorough examination of the channels in Old River, between the mouth of Red River and the Mississippi, and that of the Grand Point, on Red River.

And that the House had concurred in the following bill, entitled

An act to emancipate John Rhodes, of the parish of Orleans.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Millard, from the Committee on Claims, made the following reports, which were adopted:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Captain H. Kean, for services rendered as master of State boat in 1848, have ample testimony to satisfy them that said Kean accepted the station under Col. Williams, State Engineer, under the belief that the compensation would be one hundred dollars per month; but the death of Col Williams, without leaving a written contract, obliged Kean to receive but forty dollars per month from his successor, Mr. Wooldridge. In 1850, however, Capt. Kean prosecuted his claim for the balance due him before the Legislature of that session, and received therefrom the sum of one hundred and eighty-three dollars and thirty-four cents, which he also accepted without leading recorded evidence of his intention to ask thereafter a balance on his demands. This appropriation, by the act of 1850, for the relief of Kean, as far as the record goes, the committee cannot regard as otherwise than a final settlement of the debt on the part of the State. But very respectable testimony is produced to show that the necessities of the petitioner obliged him to accept both payments aforesaid, still believing that a future Legislature would pay him the full amount of his demands.

The Committee, therefore, in view of the necessities then and now of the petitioner, and circumstances explained above, withdraw their former unfavorable recommendation, and ask leave to refer the case to the consideration and action of the Senate.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed,) ED. M. MILLARD, Chairman.

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred a bill to allow Joseph Debuclet, of the parish of St. Martin, payment for a negro condemned to incarceration for life, during the year 1824, are of opinion that, though nothing is before them to show that said Debuclet has ever received payment for said negro from the State of Louisiana, still, the lapse of twenty-nine years before demanding payment, and the want of evidence before them, other than a copy of the judgment of the Court which tried and sentenced the negro, is not sufficient testimony to satisfy them that the claim is doubtless correct. We therefore recommend that the bill for his relief be disallowed.

(Signed,) ED. M. MILLARD, Chairman.

In the case of Louis Dubreuil, of the State of Missouri—

The Committee on Claims find the testimony correct, as stated in his petition, which proves to their satisfaction that said Dubreuil was duly appointed by the Governor of the State of Louisiana to demand of the Governor of the State of Missouri the arrest of one Dr. McManus, a fugitive from justice from the State of Louisiana, having been charged with murder within the parish of Natchitoches; and though at much expense and trouble in executing said order of the Governor of Louisiana, the petitioner has never received any remuneration therefor.

The Committee therefore report a bill granting him the sum of five hundred dollars for said services

(Signed,) ED. M. MILLARD, Chairman.

Mr. Lewis introduced a memorial from merchants, mechanics and others in relation to the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, which was read, and laid on the table subject to call.

Mr. Lacy, from the Judiciary committee, reported favorably on the following bills:

An act to authorize the purchase of 175 copies of Eyma's work, entitled "The Laws of Louisiana on Insolvency."

An act providing for the recovery of damages in certain cases.

An act to emancipate Jane Mary, slave, and daughter of Patsy, f. w. c.

And by substitute:

An act to bar by prescription certain judgments and claims from Other States against citizens of this State.

An act to amend the 385th article of the Code of Practice.

An act regulating the office and duties of the Commissioner of Court in the several parishes of the State of Louisiana, the parish of Orleans excepted.

FRIDAY, April 1, 1853.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, the bill to provide for the speedy trial of cases in which the right to office is involved was taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe. I am opposed to the first section of the bill. An individual may be on trial for his life, and yet a person contending for the possession of some office might step in and take precedence.

The section was adopted with an amendment.

Mr. Lacey offered several amendments to the bill, which were adopted.

Mr. Short. I am opposed to this bill. It is evident that there is a disposition to make these contested cases very numerous, and they may take up the time of the Court for two terms. The incumbents show no willingness to give up, and the claimants will insist on obtaining the places. I am opposed to giving these cases a preference. There is no reason why it should be done. It would be unjust to other litigants. It can result in no good, and may produce much harm.

Mr. Lacey. These are cases in which the people feel much interest. They are anxious to have the point decided as soon as possible. Private interests should be made to yield for a short time to the public good.

Mr. Short. Private individuals may be as much interested in the decisions of the courts, as that very respectable class of persons who claim a right to office.

Mr. Lewis. It would not interfere with the business of the courts, as one case would decide all.

The bill passed.

The bill "to authorize banking," &c., was taken up.

Mr. Lacey moved to amend by inserting the word "free" before banking.

Mr. Martin moved to insert the word "fraudulent." Lost.

Mr. Lacey's amendment was then adopted.

Mr. Short, on the part of himself and Messrs. Wickliffe, Neal and Boatner, submitted the following protest, which was read, and

On motion of Mr. Short, it was spread on the journal of the Senate:

The undersigned members of the Senate respectfully ask leave to have entered on the journal this their protest against the act to organize free banking

The principles of the free banking system having been the subject of discussion for the last two or three years, and the majority of the people having indicated the wish to adopt it, the undersigned were disposed to vote for a law to carry it out. In voting, therefore, against the bill, we wish not to be understood as voting against the system, or expressing any opinion of our own on the policy or impolicy of adopting such a system, but against the character of the bill which has just passed. A portion of the bonds which are made the basis of the circulating medium, we deem an unsafe basis, and calculated in a short time to give the State a degraded currency, and to plunge the State again into one of those spasmodic revulsions from which it has scarcely recovered.

The present state of our currency may be said to be healthy. Property is selling at a high price. Labor is receiving its just reward, the cotton planter and the sugar planter are now investing the proceeds of their crops in the purchase of negroes and other property, at prices so high as to excite astonishment.

The character of the bill which has just passed, in our opinion, is such as will inevitably change the present healthy state of our currency, and give to it a bloated character, and to property a fictitious valuation, and for a time apparent prosperity, which will only lay the foundation for the wrecks of private fortune, individual and public credit; and this at a time when the State has scarcely emerged from a state of bankruptcy produced by the banking mania which reigned from 1834 to 1837. We deem the passage of this act a disregard of the lights of experience to a degree little short of folly; and with the highest respect for the opinions of those who have supported it, the act is one which cannot but excite our astonishment, when we contemplate the effect which it will have upon the real prosperity of the State and its credit.

(Signed,) H. SHORT,
ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE,
MITCHEL NEAL,
M. BOATNER.

Mr. Derbos, according to previous notice, introduced a bill entitled

The bill to divide the State into Congressional Districts. It was taken up.

Mr. Martin. This is a most important bill, and ought not to be hastily acted on. When this subject was under consideration, last year, we were courteous enough to have both the majority and minority reports printed. That course is for the interest both of the State and the printer.

After a few remarks the bill was referred to a special committee.

The President laid before the Senate the following report from George W. Morse, State Engineer, which was read:

STATE ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
Baton Rouge, March 30, 1853.

To the Hon. the Senate and House of Representatives:

Gentlemen—To carry out the intention of your resolution with regard to the Bayou Plaquemines, it will be necessary to make accurate surveys of the banks of the river and bayou, and also of the currrent of the river above and below the mouth of the bayou, both in high and low water

I think the object may be attained by means of a floating boom, which will guide the drift past the mouth of the bayou; but the plans cannot be matured, and specifications made out in time for action by the present Legislature.

If you deem it admissible to appropriate the sum of eight or ten thousand dollars to be expended at the pleasure of the Governor for this purpose, the object may be accomplished or the money retained in the Treaury.

Rafts form every year in Grand River and Bayou Sorrel, by the drifts which enter the mouth of the Plaquemine, which require upon an average the work of two boats for the space of one month to remove; and then, after the navigation is opened, we are obliged to leave one boat in the vicinity to see that it remains open until the fall of the water. This year it has required the continued work of two boats for the last two months, and the work is not yet finished.

This matter is one of great importance to the State, and I intend to give it my most careful attention.

Respectfully submitted,
GEORGE W. MORSE,
State Engineer.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Theriot, from the Committee on Agriculture, Commerce and Manufactures, made the following report:

The Committee on Agriculture, Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred

An act to appoint weighers of sugar and cotton in and for the city of New Orleans,

Respectfully report, that they have given due consideration to the subject, and would strongly recommend the passage of the bill as amended by them.

The frauds that both producers and buyers have been subject to, in the incorrect weighing of those two great staples, sugar and cotton, would, in their opinion, render the passage of this act necessary for the proper protection of both producers and buyers.

A. THERIOT, Chairman.

The Committee on Agriculture, Commerce and Manufactures, to whom was referred

An act to regulate the inspections of tobacco in the State of Louisiana, and also a remonstrance against the passage of said act from most of the tobacco dealers and factors of the city of New Orleans,

Respectfully report, that they have given due consideration to the subject, and believing that the passage of said act would clog the operations of commercial affairs and result unfavorably to the tobacco interest, they report unanimously adverse to its passage.

A. THERIOT, Chairman.

Mr. Martin. I dissent from the conclusions of the report of the majority and shall take occasion to make a minority report.

Mr. Millard, from the Committee on Charitable Institutions, made the following report, which was read:

The Committee on Charitable Institutions, whose attention has been particularly directed to objects and works of charity, in the progress of the investigations appertaining to their duties, are prepared to offer their sincere condolence with the misfortunes of Dr. Brigs, and wish him the heartfelt satisfaction of having performed a noble and praiseworthy action, in the self-sacrifice he sustained in repelling a formidable and loathsome disease from the needy strangers who sought shelter under his roof, and appreciate the humane motives that actuated him in preventing the spread of a dire and dangerous contagion among his neighbors, at his own pecuniary loss and disadvantage.

Yet the committee would consider it as transcending the powers delegated to them by the office which they hold, to recommend any reward, other than every good man must feel in his own conscience for temporal relief extended to his fellow-man, by an act so praiseworthy as that which Dr. Brigs has performed.

Respectfully submitted,
ED. M. MILLARD, Chairman.

The bill to amend the 385th article of the Code of Practice was taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe. I will briefly explain the object of this bill. It is to relieve the seizing creditor who furnishes a bond to the Sheriff from the necessity of paying two setts of lawyers. If a party comes into court and holds the Sheriff harmless, I do not see why he should be forced to pay the lawyer's fees of an official who has all the benefit of the proceeding.

The bill passed.

Mr. King called up the following bill:

An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of New Orleans.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the charter of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, which expires by limitation on the second Tuesday of April next, be, and the same is hereby, extended to the first day of July, 1854, and no longer.

SEC. 2 Be it further enacted, etc., That the said bank shall not, after the said second Tuesday in April, issue or re-issue any of its own notes, but shall call in, redeem and cancel its own circulation.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That the prohibition contained in the 12th section of an act to revise the charter of the several banks located in the city of New Orleans, and for other purposes, approved February 5, 1842, by which it was made unlawful for any banks to pay out at their counters any other than their own notes, shall not be applied to the said Mechanics and Traders' Bank, after the second Tuesday in April next, but that said Bank may, and is hereby authorized, to pay its obligations in specie, or in the notes of other incorporated banks of this State, established by law, at the option of the person receiving them.

SEC. 4 Be it further enacted, &c. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Derbes moved to amend the 1st section by striking out "the 1st July, 1854," and inserting "1st of October, 1853."

Mr. Short. I am opposed to the amendment. For two or three years there has been a deep and anxious feeling in this State, on the subject of banking. There has been great complaint, whether well founded or not, I do not purpose inquiring—nor is it necessary that I should—that this State has been compelled to use the currency of other States instead of her own. The constitution of 1845 was an expression of the will of the people against banking in any and every shape. Since that time a great change has taken place in the public mind. The community has been forced to use the paper of the banks of Kentucky and Tennessee. Although it is true that much of our currency is the issue of these banks, and that we have managed to get along with it, still the people are discontented with it It is true, also, that the desire for a paper currency exists to an inordinate extent in the American mind. It cannot be eradicated, and the desire for it has produced the change in the public mind, to which I have alluded. At this moment the people of the State are in favor of an extension of banking facilities. To deny this fact would be an absurdity. It is too late to deny it, or to attempt to overlook it. If the question were in regard to the establishment of a bank of disconnt and circulation, I should probably go against it. But here is an institution which has been a long time in existence, and consequently the question is difficult. We must admit the existence of a desire for this kind of currency. However great the evils flowing from it, however much we may deplore the establishment of these institutions, yet the operations of this one especially, are so deeply and closely interwoven with the whole business of society, that it would be difficult in the extreme to disentangle them. Admit that they are evils—admit that they are cancers—yet they are evils which cannot now be eradicated—cancers which cannot suddenly be extirpated without great peril to the body politic. The State having decided that it will have banks; that hard money is not sufficient for its purposes; that we cannot accommodate ourselves to a hard money currency (which I declare myself in favor of,) and having also decided against the old system of banking—the question arises—how are we going to pass from the old to a new system in the safest way? Are we to do it by a sudden transition? Do we intend to destroy existing institutions at once? Must we aim our blows at this bank in particular? Will we consent to devote to destruction in a moment, a bank which is so highly recommended by the history of its past transactions, and its present condition—a bank which has repented of all its sins of omission and commission, and is now acknowledged to be safe? An entirely new state of things is contemplated by the free banking law. If we pass to it at once, if we give no time for the gradual extinguishment of the old system, a derangement of the currency must be the inevitable result. In other words, there will be a pressure in the money market. Is it believed that capitalists are going to invest their money under this free banking law? For my part, I do not believe that law can furnish what is needed—a safe currency, and ample banking facilities for the State. It is much easier to tear down an old building, than to erect a new one; it is more difficult to create than to destroy. This is a trite aphorism, but it is not less applicable now than when it was first uttered, and experience but serves to demonstrate its truth. But when we see the new building already tottering, we ought not to be in haste to destroy the old one. When we see that the people are deceived as to what will be the operation of the free banking law, we should not at once annihilate the old system. I am opposed to tearing down the old building before I am convinced that a safe one is to be erected. I do not know how this project was started, to put a sudden end to a bank which comes to us recommended by all the most substantial business men of the State; and to substitute for it something new and untried. In my portion of the State, that bank has very extensive business relations, and by its means, the planters are getting facilities which they never obtained before. They desire and need these facilities, and would be much injured by their loss. It is for this reason that there has been such a change in relation to the currency between 1845 and 1853. If nothing beneficial and substantial be derived from the new system which is proposed, instead of a blessing, it will prove a curse. It will be an insubstantial edifice, tottering about our heads, and threatening every moment to involve us in its ruin. For this reason I am opposed to putting an end to the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank at this moment. I am opposed to a sudden, and what I conceive, will be a fatal transition from one system to another. Let us perform the work slowly, and we shall not do it the less surely. Let us not tear from the bank its existence, or suffer it to expire in a moment. We cannot do so without disregarding the wishes and the interests of the people. When it was supposed that the people were in favor of no banks at all, I agreed with them perfectly. Now, however, there is a change of opinion. Another desire exists. What kind of a currency are we going to substitute for that furnished by the bank? The very arguments that I have heard used against the extension are most potent in its favor. It is said that if we extend the charter, the stock will rise. When this is told to a man in the country, is it not evidence to him of the sound condition of the bank? When, on the contrary, you tell him that the stock is at a discount, it is evidence that the bank is not in good condition.

Mr. McCay. Does the gentleman refer to a conversation with me?

Mr. Short. No; but to a source considered a good fountain of information—the public newspapers.—This subject has been under discussion for a long time. It has been argued by the press, on the stump, and in the halls of the legislature. The decision has not been against banks. I wish it had been. But it has not been against them, and we must submit to the will of the people. They have decided that while other States have a paper currency, we must have it also. They think they should have those bank facilities, which, within a few years, have so much advanced the agricultural interests of Kentucky and other States. They do not look ahead at the evils which are to come, though it may be that we have learned enough from past experience to keep within safe bounds in future. The people of Louisiana, I say, seeing these things, and being compelled to use the paper of other States which is brought into this, have a desire to use their own, instead of foreign paper. There is no difficulty to a man, if he holds a bill which is good, where it comes from—but the question is asked,—why if we must use paper money, cannot we have our own? Why should we not have the banks in Louisiana, where we can have them under our own control, where we can bind them within certain limits, and subject them to our own laws and regulations? This is the question now asked, and it must be confessed it is hard to answer.

The vote being taken, the amendment was lost.

Mr. King moved to amend the 1st section by substituting the "1st December, 1853," for "the 1st July, 1854."

Mr. King. As this is a matter of great importance to my constituents, I trust I shall be indulged if I intrude a few observations on the Senate. I must commence by declaring that I am not in favor of putting an end at once to the Mechanics and Traders' Bank The Senator from Madison (Mr. Short) has said truly the voice of the people demands an increase of banking capital. I have more than once said, and I here repeat it, that where the voice of the people is clear and undeniable on any subject, I, as one of their Representatives, feel it my duty to aid in carrying out their desires. Concerning the opinion of my constituents on this subject I do not entertain the slightest doubt, and I shall not hesitate to act in accordance with it.

To put an end to the Mechanics and Traders' Bank at this moment would have the effect of withdrawing from the State almost the entire capital of the Bank, as it is owned in foreign places. Unless an extension of some kind is granted the immediate effect will be the withdrawal of that capital, and a derangement of pecuniary affairs, to some extent, must follow.—That capital is wanted in New Orleans to carry on commercial affairs—it cannot be dispensed with without occasioning great inconvenience, and perhaps distress. I should, therefore, deplore this sudden withdrawal of capital which is so much needed, and the destruction of bank facilities which the public so imperatively demand. While I am of this opinion I am equally clear against the policy of returning to the ancient system of banks, or of continuing the existence of those old chartered monopolies any longer than we can help. The question practically considered, is simply this—are we to have free banking, or privileged monopolies; are we to open the doors to all the world, or to only a few? This question has been already settled by the people, and I thought their decision had been final. But I much regret to see that another battle has to be fought in these halls—that the question has to be met here. Let me ask gentlemen whether they prefer the old monopoly system, or a bank based on truly democratic principles; a system which does not seek exclusiveness, but invites competition in banking as in every other business, and gives the whole world an opportunity to profit by it? For my part, I confess that I believe the opinion of the people of the State to be the correct one, and I am therefore in favor of free banking. For these reasons I am in favor of giving the bank an extension till next December. If we do this we shall find the Bank ready to come to the support of that system which is the only secure one, and the only one adapted to a Democratic and Republican government like ours. Nevertheless, if we cut her off immediately, before we have even passed the general law, her capital will go from us forever. We wish this bank to come in under the general law. We wish her to be an example of the benefits of the new system we are about to adopt. I am led to believe from conversations I have had with the officers of the bank that she will come in. I believe that we should see her leading that band of new banks which the general law will bring into existence, and she will be more prosperous than ever. We should see her the leader in the contest with the special banks. The weight of her influence will be thrown on the side of freedom and liberality! I think we ought to be glad of having this opportunity to obtain a champion. We should accept her as an ally, instead of repelling her as a foe. Her credit and patronage, brought to the assistance of the free banking system will secure its triumph. Then in kindness to the commercial community, in kindness to free banking, in consideration of the wishes and the interests of the people, let this amendment prevail. Let us give the bank an extension till the first of September. Let us give her sufficient time to write to her stockholders and get their consent to come in under the general law. The law we have passed in the Senate is as favorable to her as the present laws, I think she will consider it so, and come in under it if we only give her an opportunity, and do not insist on strangling her at once. I trust this will be done, and if then, after we have given her sufficient time for consideration, she is not willing to come in, she necessarily falls under the conditions which my judgment imposes on all these privileged monopolies.

Mr. Martin. The gentleman having got through, I presume I can get a chance to say something. The gentleman says that free banking is democratic. I can prove that the Mechanics and Traders' Bank is a Democratic bank likwise. The bill creating it was introduced by Gov. Walker, then a member of the Legislature. It was placed under Democratic management, and has remained so ever since. I am opposed to having these Democratic monsters attributed to us. They must father their progeny.

The whigs have always been opposed to State Banks. Those institutions are the result of democratic policy. They came into existence when General Jackson and the democracy crushed the National Bank. It was during that contest that banks were established in most of the States and were supported by the democracy as being—according to them—safer and less dangerous than the National Bank. The whigs never have been a State Bank party.

This bank (the Mechanics and Traders') is a democratic bank. If gentlemen will refer to the journals of 1833 they will find that Joseph Walker, late Governor of the State was the father of it.

Mr. Short. The Senator from New Orleans (Mr. King) has made an appeal to the democratic party as having decided to depart from the old system, and gone to free banking. I am willing to admit it. But have they decided to abandon the present system for the purpose of going into that which has been adopted by the Senate? This I deny Louisiana will never willingly embark in an experiment of that kind. Neither the State of Louisiana, nor the democratic party ever decided to take passage in such an old leaky vessel as that. They would prefer to stay in the old one, decayed though it may be. If a sound honest looking bill had been presented I should have voted for it; but I could not consent to support the one which passed.

Mr. King. If the vote, three-fourths of which was given in given in favor of the bill, does not convince the gentleman that it is the kind of bill desired by the people, nothing I can say or do will have that effect.

Mr. Short. Were city banks ever discussed? I never heard that they were, in my part of the country.

On motion to lay the amendment on the table, Mr. King called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Barthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Millard, Nicholls, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—11 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Patterson and Theriot—11 nays.

There being a tie, the President voted to lay the amendment on the table.

Consequently the motion was lost.

On motion to adopt the 1st section, the yeas and nays were called.

Messrs. Barthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nicholls, Rivers, Short, Slack and Taylor—9 votes—voted for the adoption.

Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Patterson, Theriot and Todd—12 votes against the adoption.

The President declared the section rejected.

Mr. Todd having voted in the majority, gave notice that he would move for the reconsideration of the vote given on the adoption of the 1st section of the bill.

Mr. McCay moved to reconsider the bill now.

Mr. Nicholls—I do not think the gentleman has the right to move for a reconsideration now. The point has already been decided here to the effect that when notice of reconsideration is given no other person can move for the reconsideration beforehand.

Mr. Rivers—What is the object of a reconsideration? It is evidently to have the full sense of the Senate on account of some being absent at the time the vote is first taken. The gentleman from Morehouse (Mr. Todd) gave notice of a motion to reconsider, to-morrow. Why did he not move for a reconsideration? Evidently because he did not wish to defeat his own object. He wishes that Senators who are now absent may have an opportunity of voting. It is not probable that now any gentleman has changed his opinion, and therefore a motion to reconsider now could be merely an idle waste of time.

Mr. Derbes—I do not agree with the gentleman in his idea of the intention of a motion to reconsider. Its true object is to permit a person, who has voted in error, to change his vote. A short time ago I moved a postponement, with a view to giving some absent members time to get here before taking a vote. The gentlemen on the other side counted noses, and thinking they had everything their own way, refused to agree to the motion. Now, when they have been defeated, they wish to postpone. For my part I think the gentleman can reconsider now as well as ever.

Mr. Short—I hope that gentlemen will not exhibit so much hot haste and fiery expedition to press a vote on a reconsideration at this moment. The question before the Senate is a very important one and requires time for reflection. The votes which I give here, I give as a Senator and a Democrat. I am responsible for them to my constituents alone. I see many persons zealous in behalf of measures which they call Democratic. They tell us that the party will be destroyed if these measures are not carried out, measures which I cannot help thinking prejudicial both to the State and the party. They will prove, it is said, to be the permanent foundation stone of the party. I think they will result in something very different. Democratic principles do not depend on the manœuvres of politicians. There is a sound substratum of common sense among the people which enables them to see the deception. When something is offered which I consider really beneficial I will go for it and give it my support. I objected in advance to the banking bill which came from the House. I notice here two Senators who I thought stood with me on that question. But I observe that when I speak of running in debt they avoid listening to what I say, though they have made remarks on the subject more pointed than anything that ever came from me. I voted against the amendment of the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King,) because I do not think it goes far enough. Though in the contest in regard to the free banking system nothing was decided, not even that we should depart from one system to another, yet there was a sort of expression of opinion in favor of free banking in opposition to the old monopoly system. To my mind, viewing the subject as a Democrat, there is but one safe and substantial basis for banking. It must rest upon actual capital. But when I see a law offered which is something like a free fight—open for every body—I cannot avoid hesitating. Banks must have a solid foundation of capital. The word free does not make a bank any more safe than those we have tried already. It is an inviting appendage, though it is not a guarantee of security. This word "free" is an invention of those persons who saw a necessity for banks, but were opposed to the kind of banks we had in '37 and which resulted in so much ruin and distress. They thought if they could only interpolate this word, they might influence public opinion, and fasten a system of their own on the State. But is their system such as will satisfy the people? Does the bill which has passed the Senate embody a system which is in accordance with the views of the people of Louisiana? Submit that bill to the people and it would be rejected by a more emphatic vote than was given by General Scott. Nor would the proposition, which has been made on this floor to legislate so as to force the Mechanics and Traders' Bank to come in under a general law, meet with any more favor.

The yeas and nays were called for the reconsideration.

Messrs. Barthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Millard, Nicholls, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—11 yeas.

Against the reconsideration,

Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Patterson and Theriot—11 nays.

There being a tie, the President voted in favor of the reconsideration.

Mr. McCay moved to lay the 1st section indefinitely on the table.

Mr. Martin called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Kemp, Lacey, McCay, Neal and Theriot—7 yeas.

Messrs. Barthe, Hodge, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lewis, Martin, Millard, Nicholls, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—15 nays.

Consequently the Senate refused to lay the 1st section indefinitely on the table.

On motion of Mr. Rivers, the bill was then made the special order for Tuesday next, April the 5th, 1853.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported to the Senate that the following enrolled bills were correctly enrolled:

An act to authorize justices of the peace to appoint curators ad litem in certain cases.

An act to authorize David Brady, of the city of New Orleans, to change his name from David Brady to David Braden.

An act to emancipate John P. Montamat.

An act to prohibit the circulation of small notes.

And the Secretary requested the signature of the Speaker to the same.

And he requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills, entitled

An act to authorize banking in the State of Louisiana.

Anact for the relief of Purvys and Dugue.

An act authorizing proceedings in rem to recover loss or damage caused by any carelessness, neglect or want of skill in the direction or management of any steamboat, barge, flatboat, water craft or raft.

An act giving jurisdiction to the Goverument of the United States to and over that part of any street, road or public highway running through the site obtained for the establishment of a navy yard and naval depot opposite the city of New Orleans, on the right bank of the river Mississippi.

And he informed the House that the Senate had concurred in a bill entitled

An act for the relief of H. Kean.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastea, special messenger from the House requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills:

An act to repeal certain sections of an act prescribing duties to notaries public in the parish of Orleans in passing acts of sale, donation and mortgage—approved 21st March, 1850

An act to provide for the removal of certain public records from the parish of Jefferson to the city of New Orleans.

Substitute for an act to unite the offices of recorder of mortgages and parish recorder in the parish of Jefferson.

An act to give the mayor of the town of Port Hudson certain powers.

An act to change the name of George Ross, of the parish of Plaquemines.

An act to provide for the redistricting of the parish of Concordia into police jury wards.

An act to enable the police jury of Concordia parish to extend its sittings.

An act to prohibit municipal corporations in this State from laying a tax upon persons engaged in selling articles manufactured by themselves within this State

Substitute for an act to prevent the common council of the city of New Orleans from levying a tax on persons selling their own manufactured articles.

An act to take the sense of the qualified voters of the town of Port Hudson on the question of abolishing the corporation, and to abolish the same.

An act to authorize the appointment of one additional notary public in and for the parish of Union.

An act to reorganize the police jury of the parish of St. Landry.

An act for the relief of Robert Darpit, of the parish of Terrebonne.

An act to provide for and regulate the office of Attorney General.

Resolutions for the relief of the Charity Hospital.

Resolutions requiring the State engineer to repair to Bayou Darbon and Bayou Corney to complete the improvements for the navigation of the same.

Resolutions of condolence on the decease of the Hon. M. Ronquillo.

And he informed the Senate that the House refused to concur in the following Senate substitute for the bill entitled

An act for the relief of persons holding certificates of entry of the swamp lands issued by the land offices of the United States subsequent to the 2d of March, 1849, and prior to the 17th of March, 1852.

And he requested the signature of the President to the following bills, entitled:

An act for the appropriation and reimbursement of certain moneys paid on account of school land warrants.

An act to amend the seventh section of an act entitled an act to prescribe the mode of disposing of the lands of delinquent tax payers.

An act for the relief of Theodule Labauve.

BILLS PASSED.

An act for the relief of Robert Despit, of the parish of Terrebonne.

An act to reorganize the police jury of St. Landry.

SATURDAY, April 2nd, 1853.

Mr. Hodge introduced an act to give to the parishes the fines and forfeitures to be collected for violation of the criminal law.

Mr. Hodge.—I will explain the object of this bill. By acts passed at this and the last session of the General Assembly, the parishes are compelled to pay the cost of prosecutions within their own limits. It is therefore nothing more than fair that they should have the fines and forfeitures. This is a matter of great importance, especially to the parish of Orleans, where, though the expenses are very large, the fines and forfeitures would be almost enough to pay them.

Mr. Wickliffe. The bill is an excellent one, and I hope it will pass.

The bill passed.

An act to provide for the pledging of growing crops, was taken up for reconsideration.

Mr. McCay objected to the same, and called for the yeas and nays:

Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Kemp, Kittridge, King, Lewis, Millard, Neal, Patterson, Rivers, Short and Taylor—12 yeas; and Messrs. Hodge, McCay, Nicholls, Slack, Todd and Wickliffe—6 nays.

Consequently the motion to reconsider prevailed.

The 1st and 2nd sections were then adopted.

The third section, was read as follows:

Be it further enacted, &c., That the privilege intended to be secured by this act shall not take precedence over the privileges now allowed by law to the creditor overseer, furnisher of supplies to plantations, and workmen, nor to any seizing creditor upon any judgment, although such privilege may have accrued after the pledge herein contemplated, nor over any seizing creditors upon a judgment rendered prior to the pledge.

Mr. Nicholls moved to strike out the words, "nor to any seizing creditor, upon a judgment rendered prior to the pledge," and insert, "over a judgment creditor."

Mr. Lacey moved to lay the amendment on the table, and called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Kemp, Kittridge, King, Lacy, Lewis, Millard, Patterson, Rivers, Short, and Taylor—12 yeas; and Messrs. Hodge, McCay, Noal, Nicholls, Todd, and Wickliffe—6 nays.

The 4th and 5th sections were adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Easten, special messenger from the House, requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills:

An act of incorporation of the New Orleans, Red River and Texas Telegraph Company.

An act to incorporate the St. Anna's Asylum for the relief of destitute females and helpless children of all religious denominations.

And he informed the Senate that the House had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House shall have the right to name any member to perform the duties of the chair during his sickness or temporary absence from the seat of Government, although such substitution extend beyond the period of adjournment; and that the member thus named shall sign all such warrants, bills and other papers that the permanent Speaker may sign

Hon. J. M. Sandidge, of Bossier, has been appointed by the Speaker to fill the chair during his absence.

WEDNESDAY, April 6th, 1853.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Lacey, from the Judiciary Committee, submitted the following report, which was read:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution passed by your honorable body, instructing such committee to report a bill to be made in conformity with the requirements of article eleven of the Constitution,

Beg leave to report that your committee has felt bound under, and in pursuance of the resolution above referred to, to report to your honorable body a bill carrying out the object of the resolution; and, in the discharge of such duty, your committee submits, for the consideration of the Senate, the accompanying bill, entitled:

An Act to provide for the Registry of Voters in the City of New Orleans, in pursuance of article eleven of the Constitution.

Your committee does not pretend to say that the bill submitted to the Senate is perfect in itself, but believing that such a bill can be better corrected in its details in the Senate than by the committee, it is submitted in its present form for the consideration of your honorable body.

Your committee respectfully recommend the printing of the bill.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEORGE S. LACEY,
Chairman of Jud. Com. of the Senate.

Mr. Lacey, from the Judiciary Committee, reported favorably on the following bills, entitled:

An act to provide for the change of venue in civil and criminal cases, in pursuance of article 112 of the Constitution.

An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in civil cases, to questions of law only.

And by substitute to a bill entitled:

An act relative to mortgages and privileges;

Ordered to be printed, and made the order of the day for Friday, April 8, 1853.

And he introduced, without previous notice, on first having asked and obtained leave to do so, a bill entitled:

An act to provide for the registry of voters in the City of New Orleans, in pursuance of article 11th of the Constitution.

Mr. Short, from the Committee on Lands and Levees, made the following report:

To the Hon. President and Members of the Senate.

The Committee on Public Lands and Levees, to which was referred the act entitled:

An act for the relief of those who have irregularly purchased lands from the State of Louisiana; reported from the House, and referred to this committee on the 26th of March, respectfully report:

That this act is for the relief of certain persons who purchased land warrants irregularly from Richard Loucks, late Register of the Land Office. Your committee would call the attention of the Senate to what they have said in their general report with reference to the warrants, or certificates above alluded to:

"There is another class of persons who hold certificates of entry issued by one Richard Loucks, late Register of the State Land Office, in pursuance of a resolution passed on the 4th of March, 1852. As will be seen by the report of the present Register of the Land Office, he gave notice to the holders of such certificates to present them. Those presented since the notice was given amount to 1002 6-100 acres. We deem it the duty of the State to return to the holders of these certificates the amount of money paid by them, upon the return of the certificates." P. 3 and 4.

This was as far as your committee deemed the State should go,—not that they held that the State of Louisiana was bound in law to refund the money which these individuals had erroneously handed to Mr. Loucks,—he was not the proper person, in his capacity of Register, to receive the money; and neither the State nor Loucks's securities could be held liable for acts not coming within the sphere of his official duties.

It was the duty of the Treasurer of the State to receive the money for warrants, upon an order first passing through the Auditor's office; and upon the Treasurer's receipt, it became the duty of the Register to issue a certificate of entry in favor of the person paying the money into the Treasury. None of those formalities were complied with, and no entries are to be found on the books to show the extent to which Loucks carried out his system of rascality, in defrauding the State and the innocent persons who took him for the proper person to whom the money was to be paid for land warrants.

But, in consideration that Loucks had been appointed an officer of the State, and thereby, having a sort of State endorsement for honesty, and believing that the individuals who handed him the money honestly believed that he was the proper person to whom it should be paid, the committee came to the conclusion that the State should refund the money to the individuals thus deceived.

The existence of these fraudulent certificates was called to the attention of the Legislature at their session of 1852, and on the 4th of March they passed the following resolution:

"Be it resolved, That the Register of the Land Office is hereby authorized and instructed to notify, by publication in the official journal for six months, the holders of the certificates for land issued by Richard Loucks, late Register, to present the same to him, that he may ascertain who hold fraudulent certificates; and the Register is hereby instructed to make a report thereof to the next Legislature.

"Be it further resolved, That whenever the Register shall discover any of the lands fraudulently sold by said Richard Loucks to belong to the State, he shall withhold the same from sale except to the person or persons who ignorantly made the purchase; and if the lands not belonging to the State, which are covered by these fraudulent certificates can be selected by the State, the Register shall make such selections." Acts of 1852, pp. 86 and 87.

The present Register of the Land Office not having stated, in his general report, that any of the lands specified in these certificates of entry belonged to the State, or that he had withheld them from sale, or that the lands specified in the certificates could be selected by the State, the only thing your committee could recommend, was the repayment of the money to the holders of these certificates, as recommended in their general report.

The note addressed to the Register of the Land Office, and his reply thereto, annexed to this report, will exhibit the condition of the lands specified in the the certificates, so far as they have come to the knowledge of the Register.

The bill reported from the House, and referred to this committee, proposes that the State shall recognise all the certificates issued to bona fide persons by Richard Loucks, while Register, as binding on the State, as if the same had been regularly issued, and as if all the acts of Loucks had been done in accordance with the requirements of law; and the present Register of the Land Office is required to issue patents to the holders of such certificates, and the date on the face of the certificate, is the date on which the the patent is to take effect, if the certificate issued when Loucks was in the regular discharge of his duties.

Now the fact is, that when these certificates issued, and when Loucks took the money from these parties, he was in the very irregular discharge of his duties. He was doing what he had no right to do, and acting in violation of law. He could not regularly issue a certificate of entry, which is the evidence of title, except on the receipt of the Treasurer that the money had been paid, on an order passing through the Auditor's office; on this alone could he issue a certificate of entry in the regular discharge of his duties. Had these parties paid the money to the Treasurer, the State would not suffer any loss, nor would they have suffered. But what they have done and suffered through ignorance of the formula of obtaining the certificates, the State is willing to repair to the extent of refunding the money; but as to confirming the entries, and giving validity to them from the date on the face of these fraudulent certificates, thereby to disturb the titles of other parties, in no way connected with the unfortunate transactions growing out of the dishonesty of Loucks, is what no Legislature ought to sanction.

If the land called for in these certificates has not been entered by other parties, then let the holder of the certificate have it. But any act by which those who have entered it, and paid their money into the right office, and received their evidence of title, are to be ousted by giving validity to a fraudulent certificate of a prior date, should be put down at once. Your committee cannot, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill as reported from the House. But, in accordance with the opinion expressed in their general report, recommending the passage of a bill refunding the money upon the surrender of the certificates, unless a patent can issue for the land described in the certificate, which land has not been entered and paid for by other parties; and your committee herewith submit a substitute for the bill reported from the House.

H. SHORT,
Chairman.

BATON ROUGE, April 4th 1853.

W. H. CREWSHAW, Esq—Dear Sir:

Will you look at the resolution No. 110, passed by the last Legislature, Acts of 1852, p. 86, and say whether any of the lands fraudulently sold by Richard Loucks, belong to the State or whether they belonged to the State at any time since the certificates were presented to you, spoken of in your report to the Legislature; and if those lands did not, or do not belong to the State, are they such as can be selected by the State, according to the terms of the said resolution? Are not the lands called for in those certificates swamp lands, and entered by other persons than those mentioned in the certificates?

Yours respectfully,
H. SHORT,
Chairman of Senate Com. on Lands and Levees.

LAND OFFICE OF LOUISIANA,
April 5th, 1853.

Sir: In reply to your inquiry of the 4th, I have to say, I have examined the Resolution No. 110, adopted March 4th, 1852, by the Legislature. There is no evidence in this office that any of the lands pretended to have been sold by Richard Loucks, according to the certificates returned to this office, belong to the State, or can be selected by the State, except that of Lusina Haily, which has been approved to the State as swamp land, and that of James H. Gibbins, which was selected as internal improvement land. So soon as I learned the condition of Mrs. Haily's land, I wrote to the Commissioner of the General Land office, and requested his approval of it. I gave notice at once to the Hon. Mr. Bartlett, who is her representative, that she could now purchase the land, and marked her name in pencil on the map. James H. Gibbins was notified that his land had been selected as internal improvement land some years previous. He at once paid into the Treasury the amount for it. With regard to the other lands, where certificates have not been presented, but which were shown me last winter, the United States has parted with its title, and so far as I am informed, all of them were the private property of other parties before the passage of the resolution, or were before the pretended sale by Loucks.

I am, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
W. H. CRENSHAW,
Register.

Hon. H. SHORT, Senate Chamber.

Mr. Kittridge called up a bill entitled:

An act to amend the second section of an act providing for the subscription by the parishes and municipal corporations of this State to the stock of corporations undertaking works of internal improvement, and for the payment and disposal of the stock so subscribed.

Mr. Martin.—Some time since, I asked the favor of the Senate not to act on this bill at that time, in order that I might, in conjunction with the representative from the parish of Terrebonne, have an opportunity of making inquiries to find out the true state of the case, I am not yet satisfied that this bill is an expression of the sentiments of the majority of slave holders in that parish. The bill introduced by my colleague provides for a tax on every description of property. I am opposed to the principle of taxing slaves for the benefit of railroads, but if the majority of the slaveholders themselves desire it, I am willing to yield that point. But I cannot go for taxing horses, jackasses, mules, and horned cattle, as is contemplated by this bill. That is an extension of the system to which I cannot assent. The bill introduced by my colleague was drawn up by an unworthy citizen—a man whose presence pollutes this chamber if he is in it. I have conversed with a prominent citizen of the parish—Mr. J. J. Hanna—a gentleman who is greatly interested in these enterprises. He informs me that this bill is not what the people of Terrebonne desire. They wish to tax only real estate and slaves. Mr. Hanna, who is the most prominent gentleman in the Parish, in connection with the Opelousas Railroad, told me that he did not approve the bill of my colleague. As I have before said, I am opposed to taxing slaves for this purpose. They do not receive any additional value, they are not benefited as property, and it is unjust to tax them. With these few remarks I submit the following substitute:

An Act, providing for the subscription to the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company by the Police Jury of the parish of Terrebonne, and for the payment and disposal of the stock so subscribed.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That it shall be lawful for the Police Jury of the Parish of Terrebonne to subscribe to the stock of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company, on complying with the conditions of this act.

SEC. 2 Be it further enacted, &c., That all ordinances passed for such subscriptions shall contain the following provisions, to wit:

1st. A statement of the number and amount of the shares proposed to be subscribed.

2nd. The levy of a tax on the landed estate and slaves situated and owned in said parish, sufficient to pay the amount of said subscription, and specifying the rate of the taxation, and the period or periods when it shall be payable

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That no ordinance passed under the provisions of this act, shall be valid or take effect until it shall have been approved and ratified by a majority of the voters on whose property the tax is proposed to be levied, at an election to be held specially for that purpose, by order of the Police Jury of the parish of Terrebonne, and said police Jury shall prescribe the manner of holding such election, and shall cause to be furnished to the commissioners of the same, a certified list of the authorized voters, and such election shall be preceded by a notice of thirty days, published in every police Jury ward in said parish; provided, however, that if such ordinance shall be rejected by a majority of the voters, owners of real estate and negroes, it shall be lawful, at any subsequent period, again to take the sense of the voters in the same manner as at the first election, and at intervals of not less than six months.

SEC 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That if any subscription be made by the Police Jury of the parish of Terrebonne, under the terms of this act, the stock so subscribed shall not belong to, nor be administered by the Police Jury, but shall belong to the taxpayers who shall have paid therefor, and the tax receipt of each taxpayer shall entitle him to a certificate, transferable from delivery, from the corporation to which subscription has been made, for an amount equal to the amount of the tax paid; Provided, however, that said Police Jury shall be empowered to require such bond and security, and in such sums, from the sheriff or collector, as may be deemed necessary.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That if the payers of taxes on lands and slaves in the parish of Terrebonne shall avail themselves of the provisions of this act, they shall be exempt from the provisions of an act entitled an act providing for the subscription by the parishes and municipal corporations of this State, to the stock of corporations undertaking works of internal improvement, and for the payment and disposal of the stock so subscribed, approved March 12, 1852.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That the taxes authorized to be assessed under this act, shall not be collected until the directors of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company shall give an assurance to the Police Jury of the Parish of Terrebonne of their determination to construct a branch of said road to the forks of the Bayous Terrebonne and little Caillou.

Mr. Martin. The last section of the substitute provides that the act shall not take effect till the Company give satisfactory assurance to the Police Jury that a branch shall be made into the Parish,—This is suggested by Mr. Hanna, a Director in the Company, and in my opinion is very judicious. It will have the effect of creating a degree of confidence among the people of Terrebonne, sufficient to carry the tax. By this bill all sections of the parish will be benefited.

Mr. Kittridge. The Senator refers to a letter from Mr. Hanna. That gentleman was here four days. He knew of my bill, and approved it. Every person from Terrebonne with whom I have conversed, approves it. The memorial which I have presented here in favor of it, has ninety-five signers, and there are only 135 slaveholders in the parish. The bill has already been so amended as to meet the objections which have been urged, and therefore the substitute is unnecessary. As I have said, ninety-five slaveholders have signed the memorial, and several who were out of the parish when it was got up, are known to be in favor of it.—There are not more than twenty or twenty-five in the whole parish against it. The people of Terrebonne intend to run a branch to the forks of Little Caillou, but let them decide on that themselves, by a vote of the people.

Mr. Martin. The gentleman is mistaken. The letter alluded to says nothing about his bill. It merely asks that taxation be extended to slaves (Reads the letter.) I do not pretend to be anything of a lawyer, but I cannot help thinking that a written test is better than a verbal one.

Mr. Kittridge. The gentleman has brought forward a letter as authority. Why, the object of that letter was to convert a gentleman who was opposed to the measure Mr. Hanna was here for several days, and suggested no change in my bill, though he knew its contents perfectly well. I say, let the people do as they please about the terminus of the branch. Let them fix it where they wish. My bill merely takes up the general law of last year, and makes an amendment in relation to the parish of Terrebonne.

Mr. Short. Are the majority of the slaveholders of the parish in favor of this bill?

Mr. Kittridge. I have already stated that 95 out of 135 signed the memorial, and that others would have signed it, had they been in the parish at the time. The number opposed is at most twenty or twenty-five.

Mr. Hodge—On what principle does the gentleman go for allowing a majority of the voters to decide on taxing a particular kind of property.

Mr. Kittridge—None except those interested will be allowed to vote on the measure. But I will refer the gentleman to the law of last year.

Mr. Palfrey. I move, sir, to lay the bill and substitute both on the table. As I expect, sir, to vote against the passage of the bill, if my motion is lost, I desire to define clearly and plainly my position in relation to its bearing, as connected with existing laws on the same subject. I desire, sir, to take no part on either side in the discordant views of my friends from Assumption, considering it as a domestic disturbance with which I have nothing to do, but mean to apply my remarks to a more general view of matters connected collaterally with the bill.

I am opposed, sir, to municipal and parochial taxation, laid for the purpose of raising capital stock in private enterprises, though they may be denominated works of public utility—and shall therefore vote against all bills of the character of that before the Senate. I view these contributions forced from individuals towards raising stock of this description, as unconstitutional; and not only unconstitutional, but unequal, oppressive and unjust. I will go as far probably as any Senator on this floor—as far, at any rate, as I may deem proper or prudent—towards carrying into effect the provisions of the Constitution which authorize the State to grant aid to companies or associations formed exclusively for the purpose of making works of internal improvement, because this is expressly provided for in the Constitution; but as I said before, forced contributions from individuals, whether they are willing or not to contribute, have never met with my approval, nor do I believe they ever will.

I have said that I view laws of this nature as unconstitutional. I will briefly state the grounds of the opinion I entertain on this subject:

By reference to article 105 of the Constitution, we find the following provision: "No vested right shall be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation previously made." Now, sir, let me call your attention to the practical effect of the law authorizing partial taxation to force individuals to take stock in private incorporated companies.

We will pass over at this time the gross enormity of this oppressive measure, in thus laying the tax at all, and proceed to what is to follow after the tax is laid. The law provides that Railroad scrip is to be returned to the tax-payers at par, to the same amount as the tax paid. There will be cases, no doubt, sir, where the individual taxed will be unable to pay the tax, because it must necessarily be a very onerous one. This will be the case probably with the property of minors, which is not usually administered with the same degree of attention and care as other property. Also, the lands of those who are comparatively unprovided with the appliances necessary for producing a revenue from it; such appliances, I mean, as stock, slaves, and other property needful for carrying on a plantation to advantage—of which there are many cases. The consequences of non-payment will of course be, that the property taxed will be seized and sold by the collector of taxes. Here, sir, is a vested right divested—for what? to contribute stock to a private enterprise—not belonging to the public, or over which the State has any control—but to an association of individuals, who are shifting and changing by transfers of stock from day to day.

I acknowledge, sir, that these railroad enterprises are works of public utility—that is, they are useful to the public. So are many other industrial enterprises—and so some of us are in the habit of considering Banks to be, when properly organised; and how would it appear to some Senators on the other side of this Hall, if a law were proposed to force contributions in this manner to Bank stock? The principle, sir, is the same in both cases

And now, sir, for the "compensation to be previously made." What does it consist of, under the operation of these laws? The property is sold—the vested right divested—and the compensation si to consist of Railroad scrip at par, to the amount of the tax, (when perhaps the stock is far below par in the market) and of money for the remainder. Is this, sir, adequate compensation? even supposing the property will sell for its value—which is not likely, but at a sacrifice, on the contrary. Are certificates of stock a legal tender in payment of debts? Is it not required rather to be in gold and silver, under the Constitution of the United States? Are the people, whose rights have been thus trampled on, to be put off, by the tender to them of certificates of depreciated stock? I ask, sir, can this be called adequate compensation? Is it compensation previously made?

I acknowledge, sir, that these railroad enterprises are to be beneficial—highly beneficial—and I have been ready and willing, as a private individual, to contribute to stock in such enterprises; and I am also willing, in my character of a Senator on this floor, to extend towards them such aid on the part of the State as is constitutional, and consistent with sound policy. But I cannot consent to overlook, in this connection, the obligations I owe to the Constitution, as I understand it, or until it be otherwise interpreted by the tribunals of the country, or my sense of what is due to the immutable principles of truth and justice. I am aware, sir, that the position I have taken here, is not a popular position. The Parish which I have the honor to represent has voted a rail-road tax; but in the vote which was there given, there were many proprietors who, holding a considerable proportion of the landed interest in the parish, could not vote upon the question—namely, women, minors, and absentees; and taking in connection with this view of the case, my indisposition to yield my opinions and constitutional scruples deliberately formed, to an erratic, capricious expression of public sentiment, imperfectly manifested at best,—I shall, as I said at the opening of my remarks, vote against the passage of all such laws.

April 8th, 1853.

Mr. Kittridge—I will make a single remark in reply. Every improvement is founded on the will of the majority. The Legislature authorizes works of internal improvement. The conclusion is ineritable that if the Legislature, by the vote of a majority, can do this, the parishes ought to be entitled to tax themselves by a majority vote. The argument is unanswerable. No gentleman on this floor will deny it.

Mr. Wickliffe—I move to postpone the subject.

Mr. Kittridge—I object.

Mr. Wickliffe—Then I shall enforce the rule which prohibits a Senator from speaking more than twice of the same question.

Mr. Martin—I hope the gentleman will not enforce it on me. I know of no one who takes more latitude in that respect than the Senator from West Feliciana.

My colleague says the principle that the majority have a right to any taxes is not questioned. I do not intend to make a constitutional argument. I am not a constitutional lawer as he appears to be. In my substitute only those interested are allowed to vote. It is the wish of the stockholders that the subject be submitted to them alone. I am informed of this by Mr. J. J. Hanna. He was here a few days ago and went home to get signatures to the memorial of which my colleague speaks. There is no reference to his bill contained in it. A few days since my colleague said he was a property holder in Terrebonne. I do not own property there but I know something of the localities. The population in the section through which the branch will run is very dense, and the people will be much benefited by it.

Mr. Kittridge—I have seen almost every body in the parish and I know my bill is what is wanted by the people.

Mr. Martin—The object of the bill is to submit the question to all the voters of the parish. The slaveholders wish it to be submitted to themselves alone. The gentleman says he has seen everybody. I do not believe it. Let him make the most of that.

Mr. Kittridge—The bill only proposes that those who are to be taxed shall have an opportunity to vote. I move to lay the substitute on the table.

Mr. Martin—My substitute covers the whole ground desired by the people of Terrebonne. It is almost a literal transcript of the law of 1852, which says that no one shall vote except those who are taxed. This is what was desired by Mr. Hanna, who left here to get up the memorial. My colleague knows it. He dares not deny it. If he do, I can prove that he knows it.

(The debate here assumed an entirely personal character.)

The substitute was then laid on the table.

The original bill then came up.

Mr. Hodge—Before the vote is taken I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill proposes to change a general law of the State in its application to particular parishes. The bill proposes in the first place to change the general law, and then contains a provision to the effect that this change shall only apply to the parish of Terrebonne. If the bill affects the general law I shall oppose it, and I think it will have that effect. I believe no other parish has asked for such a law as this. My constituents do not want it. They know the dangers which might result from it. If the gentleman make a bill simply allowing the peopople of Terrebonne to tax themselves for certain purposes I shall not oppose it. But he does not do this. He proposes to change the general law, and then to apply it only to the parish of Terrebonne. The gentleman would achieve his object equally well by drawing up a short bill authorizing the citizens to take stock and pay for it by taxes on lands and slaves. I do not wish to let the constituents whom I represent think that I would do a single thing in derogation of the Constitution.

Mr. Short—Whenever the question comes up in my parish I shall probably side with the gentleman, as I believe that in doing what is contemplated by this bill we are going beyond the proper province of legislation. But the bill does not, as he thinks, change the general law except so far as the parish of Terrebonne is concerned. If the people there wish to tax real estate, slaves, &c., why let them do it. As I have said, when the question comes up in my parish I shall oppose it. I do not believe that we have a right to force people to take stock in any private enterprise.

Mr. Hodge—The bill commences by saying that it is an amendment to the law of 1852. If it has no object it is not drawn up well. If the gentleman wishes to apply it to the parish of Terrebonne let him frame a bill without any reference to the general law. But the bill which he presents professes to be an amendment of that law, and consequently it will have a more extensive effect than is contemplated. If it is intended to apply this act to the parish of Terrebonne only the bill is not correctly drawn.

Mr. Short—The amendment only applies to the parish of Terrebonne. The bill may be inartistically drawn, but that is not my fault. I had no hand in it. I am willing to take it as the Irishman took his wife—for better or for worse.

The bill passed.

THE MECHANICS AND TRADERS' BANK.

The President of the Senate directed the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill entitled,

An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank,

Had been made the special order for yesterday, but there being no sitting of the Senate on that day, the bill could not, therefore, be taken up.

In the absence of precedents to guide him in his decisions, he would decide that when a bill has been fixed for a particular day, and the day passed without the bill having been taken up, the bill takes its place among the other bills in its order, according to number.

Mr. Hodge—It is nothing more than just that a bill should come up in its regular order if there be no session of the Senate on the day for which the bill is fixed. The bill ought not to lose its precedence from the failure of the Senate to meet on that day. I shall move that the bill be taken up in order to make it a precedent for future action—that when bills are the special order for any particular day, and the Senate fail to meet on that day, they may come up first in order on the next day that a session is held.

Mr. McCay—The only way for the gentleman to get at it is by a suspension of the rules on an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman wishes to take up a bill by a bare majority when two-thirds are necessary for a suspension of the rules. The gentleman wishes to act as if under a new rule. I wish the rule to be established—to be written—before I can consent to recognise it. I have taken pains to inform myself on the way in which a point of this kind is decided in a co-ordinate branch of the General Assembly. I am informed by the Speaker of the House that in a case of this kind the bill must be passed over as if it had not been reached. According to the argument of the gentleman, since it was not the fault of its friends that the bill had not been acted on, therefore it should come up by preference at another time. I am informed that in this body at the last session, the uniform practice was as I have stated it to be in the other House.

Mr. Wickliffe—Who says that such was the case?

Mr. McCay—Mr. Sandidge who was then a member of the Senate.

Mr. Martin—All these appeals to the usages of the other House are entirely out of order. We have our own rules by which we must abide. We are governed by our own rules and not by those of the other House.

Mr. McCay—We are governed by something else.—When there is no precedent, and we can show a uniform custom in the co-ordinate branch of the Legislature we ought to give some weight to it, more especially when the President says that he knows no precedent here to guide him.

Mr. Hodge—I understand that the President would like to have the sense of the Senate on this point. I should like to have it myself, and show the gentleman that I can vote independently, and without any reflection on the chair. I therefore appeal from the decision of the chair.

Mr. Derbes—I think we have a precedent before us. I recollect perfectly well that when the bill for the amendment of the Charter of the City of New Orleans was before the Senate it was made the order of the day for the day on which Governor Johnson died. I was consequently compelled to move for a suspension of the rules in order to get it up. The dispensation was refused, and the bill had to be fixed again.

Mr. Hodge—The Senator will acknowledge that at that time there was no discussion on the point. Consequently there was no decision and therefore the precedent amounted to nothing at all.

The vote being taken the decision of the chair was sustained.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to make the Mechanics and Traders' Bank bill the order of the day for to-morrow.

The President—The motion requires a suspension of the rules with a view of bringing the bill before the Senate. It cannot be fixed until it is brought before the Senate.

Mr. Martin.—It only requires a bare majority to fix any bill as the order of the day.

Mr. Mouton—The President has decided already that it requires a suspension of the rules to bring the bill before the Senate, and a suspension of the rules requires a two thirds' vote. The Senate has sustained the decision of the chair, and now the gentlemen again wish to take up the bill out of its order.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to suspend the rules.

The motion was lost.

Mr. McCay moved to make the bill the special order of the day for Wednesday next.

Mr. Wickliffe.—When the bill comes up I desire to be heard on it. The motion of the Senator would defeat any action on the bill, and therefore I shall vote against it.

The question was taken by yeas and nays on Mr. McCay's motion.

Mr. Hodge (his name being called) I ask to be excused from voting. I consider the motion frivolous. The Senator who made it knows that its effect will be to defeat the object of the bill. I am unwilling to vote on any proposition made in this frivolous manner. The motion was lost.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Rinehart, Assistant Clerk from the House, informed the Senate that the House refused to recede from their amendments to bill entitled,

Substitute for an act entitled an act to unite the offices of Recorder of Mortgages and Parish Recorder in the parish of Jefferson.

SECOND READING.

An act to amend an act entitled an act more effectually to prevent slaves from obtaining spirituous liquors without the consent of their masters.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, it was laid indefinitely on the table.

An act for the relief of Pierre Onesime Broussard, late parish Superintendent of the parish of Vermillion, and amendatory to an act providing the manner by which Parish Superintendents and their securities may be relieved from their bonds, approved March 18th, 1852.

In which the House had concurred by substitute.

On motion of Mr. Mouton, the Senate concurred in the substitute.

The bill entitled an act to provide for the pledging of growing crops—was read the third time.

Mr. Martin.—I believe this bill is not required by the planting interest. I am sure it is not needed in the parish which I represent. I believe it was got up by some merchant or attorney in the New Orleans who had some rascally customers in the country whom he wished to tie down. When the Senator from East Baton Rouge (Mr. Lacey) says it emanated from the planting interest he knows nothing about it.

Mr. Lacey.—Well Sir, who made the Senator so wise. This bill was introduced by his colleague who represents the same district with quite as much ability as he does. I do not know whence it emanated, but I have my own views in relation to it.

A bill to provide more effectually for preventing the selling of liquor to slaves was taken up.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to concur in the report of the Judiciary Committee, which was unfavorable.

Mr. Lacey. I am not particularly anxious about this bill. It was introduced at the suggestion of the Attorney General, who, on account of certain recent decisions of the courts, thought the law ought to be stronger. He thought the word "written" ought to be inserted before the word "permission," and that no evidence, however strong, be permitted to supply the place of a written permission from the owner

Mr. Hodge. I would ask the Senator, whether it was not the unanimous opinion of the Committee that the person who drew the bill knew nothing of the law of 1852.

Mr. Lacey. The gentleman seems to have all the knowledge, but it is only in his own vanity. I will say, that in the Committee we had forgotten the act of 1852, till it was called to our recollection.

Mr. Hodge. I was not present at the time the bill came up in the Committee, but when I came in and was informed of the subject I turned to the law and satisfied the Committee immediately. I intend no reflection on the Attorney General, or any one else, nor do I assume anything for our side of the House.

Mr. Lacey There must be some misapprehension. I am willing to admit, that, in regard to the "written permission," the law of 1852 is sufficient; but on the point that no evidence shall be suffered to supply the want of a written permission, it is defective.

Mr. Wickliffe. I would remark, that I did not know this bill was introduced at the suggestion of the Attorney General, and I do not care if it was. I wish the gentleman to understand that when he wants my assent to any bill he may introduce, he must attach a title to it, stating the source whence it emanates.

Mr. Hodge. I would ask the Senator from Madison (Mr. Short) what decision the Committee came to in regard to the fact that the person who drew the bill was ignorant of the law of 1852?

Mr. Short. The Committee did come to the conclusion that the bill was superfluous, inasmuch as its objects had been attained by the law of 1852. (Reads law.)

Mr. Kittridge, having voted in the majority in support of the President's decision on the subject of replacing on the calendar, to take its order, the bill entitled: "An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank, Moved for a reconsideration of the vote.

Mr. Derbes called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nichols, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—12 yeas; and Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Kemp, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay and Mouton—9 nays. Consequently the motion to reconsider prevailed.

On motion of Mr. Derbes to adjourn,

Mr. Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Derbes, Evans, Kemp, Lacoste and Mouton—6 yeas; and Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—12 nays.

Consequently the motion was lost.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe for a call of the House, the following Senators answered to their names:

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—13 Senators.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to call in the absent Senators.

After some time, the Sergeant-at-Arms reported in writing to the Senate, that

In obedience to the direction of the President of the Senate, I have sought for, and have not been able to find the Senators who have absented themselves.

(Signed,) BERLIN CHILDERS,
Sergeant-at-Arms.

Baton Rouge, April 6, 1853.

Mr. Wickliffe offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue warrants for the arrest of those Senators who have absented themselves from the Senate without leave this day.

Mr. Mouton. I wish to know if the President has any such authority?

Mr. Wickliffe. The authority is contained in the Constitution itself. A minority may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members.

Mr. Hodge. The power to compel attendance necessarily infers the power to issue warrants.

Mr. Mouton. Can we do it without passing some law authorizing it? The Constitutional provision is clear, and admits of no doubt where there is a law authorizing the issuing of warrants. We have a right to pass such a law. But I contend, that without passing such a law, we have no way in which to exercise the power.

The question was taken

Mr. Martin (his name being called.) I vote against the resolution, because there is no law authorizing the issuing of warrants for absent members. If there were such a law, I admit we would have the power.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—12 yeas; and Messrs. Mouton and Patterson—2 nays.

The President decided, that in the absence of any law authorizing him to issue warrants, he could not do it.

Mr. Hodge. I am astonished at the course taken by some Senators—particularly at that pursued by the gentleman who raised the objection that we have no power to issue warrants, he having been one of those who absented themselves. I move to publish the names of all those Senators who have left their seats.

Mr. Mouton. I did absent myself without leave—and I would do so again.

Mr. Wickliffe, I rise to a point of order. I would rather hear nothing than hear a speech.

Mr. Lewis moved to adjourn.

Mr. Hodge. I second the motion to adjourn. I do so because I see no probability of obtaining a quorum—and I wish this fact distinctly stated in the report of the proceedings.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Mouton. I see no use in staying here any longer. The Sergeant-at-arms has reported that he cannot find the absent members. But even if he had found them, could he compel their attendance? They are responsible to their constituents for what they have done. There is no law to compel their attendance, if they think proper to leave. The Sergeant-at-Arms could not bring one of them back, unless he made it a mere question of physical force.

Mr, Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays

Messrs. Lewis, Mouton, Patterson and Short—4 yeas; and Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—10 nays.

Consequently the motion was lort,

At three o'clock, the Senate adjournep, to meet tomorrow at 9 o'lock, A. M.

THURSDAY, April 7th

The journal of yesterday being read, Mr. Martin remarked there was an error in it, where it stated that there had been an appeal from the decision of the chair. There was no appeal. It was merely an expression of the views of the Senate in accordance with the decision of the chair.

Mr. Morton—The gentleman is mistaken. There was an appeal from the decision of the chair.

Mr. Hodge—I think I can explain the matter.—The President was in some doubt as to what course to pursue, there being no precedent to guide him. He wished to have the sense of the Senate taken. But there was no way of getting at the sense of the Senate except through an appeal from the Chair. It was with this view that the appeal was made. The journal reads correctly, but the report of the debate will show the true state of the case.

Mr. Martin introduced the following resolution, which was read:

Whereas, article 19 of the constitution declares that "not less than a majority of the members of each House of the General Assembly shall form a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and shall be authorized by law to compel the attendance of absent members."

And whereas, the President of the Senate having yesterday decided not to issue warrants for the arrest of certain members of the Senate who absented themselves without having the permission of the Senate, on the ground that there was no law authorizing the issuing of such warrants.

Therefore be it Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby instructed to prepare and present to the Senate, at the earliest possible moment, an act to compel the attendance of members of the Legislature who absent themselves without permission.

Mr. Martin—The necessity for this resolution is apparent. When there is a thin attendance, a small fraction or faction, may defeat legislation. It is therefore necessary that there should be some law to compel the attendance of absent members, as a doubt exists in the mind of the President in regard to his power to act without authority. I do not think his opinion is well founded, but in order to put the matter beyond doubt, we should instruct the committee to bring in a proper bill.

THE SWAMP LAND BILL.

The Senate took up a bill entitled

An act to reclaim and drain the swamp and overflowed lands donated to the State of Louisiana by act of Congress, entitled an act to aid the State of Louisiana in draining the swamp lands therein—approved March 2, 1849.

The House had refused to concur in the Senate's amendment reducing the salary of the Engineers from $3000 to $2000.

Mr. Wickliffe—The amendment of the Senate reduced the salary of the Engineers from $3000 to $2000 per annum. I and others, expressed a doubt of the possibility of getting competent men for $2000. Engineers of ability could not take $2000 in the service of the State, when they can easily make $3000 or $4000 elsewhere. The House has refused to concur in the amendment of the Senate. They say that $3000 is nothing more than a fair compensation for the duties to be performed. I know of no competent man who cannot make that sum, and I shall vote for that at least.

Mr. Hodge—How much does the State Engineer receive?

Mr. Wickliffe - Three thousand dollars.

Mr. Hodge—And he is appointed for the State at large. I will vote against $3000.

Mr. Short—The duties of the Engineers under this bill will be much greater than any ever performed by the late Engineer. My object in going for a salary of $3000 is to see one of these Engineers in my section, where one was never seen before, and I want to pay an honest price for services rendered.

On motion to agree with the House in restoring $3000, as provided for in the 9th section of the bill, and which had been reduced to $2000 by the Senate's amendment,

The yeas and nays were called for.

Messrs. Boatner, Burthe, Kittridge, McCay, Patterson, Short, Taylor and Wickliffe—8 yeas.

And Messrs. Clifton, Derbes, Hodge, Lacoste, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey and Slack—11 nays.

Consequently the Senate refused to restore $3000, and maintained their amendment.

Mr. Derbes moved a reconsideration of the vote just given.

Mr. Hodge—I must express my disapprobation of the motion to reconsider. I voted against the bill, when it was before the Senate because I thought the salaries extravagantly high. I do not understand how Senators can be willing to vote away the money of the State in this manner, when they know that the people desire high salaries no longer. The wish of the people is certainly entitled to some respect. At the last session of the Legislature all salaries were materially cut down. A Special Committee was appointed to inquire into the expediency of reducing salaries, and recommending such reductions as might appear judicious. That Committee laid down the general principle that high salaries stimulate the desire for office till they become places sought after, not for the sake of honorable position, or because the aspirant desires to be of advantage to his country, but merely for the sake of pecuniary profit. [Reads from report of committee.]

This expression of the opinion of the Special Committee, it occurs to me, should be considered worthy the attention of Senators, and should cause them to reflect before acting. The bill now before the Senate proposes to do the very thing which the committee recommended should not be done. It proposes a large number of officers, large salaries, and a consequent large increase in the expenses of the State. In the first place, there are three Commissioners at $3000 each, and a number of inferior officers. I have not calculated their number, but it must be great, and their salaries must average at least $100. I am, as I have said, opposed to high salaries. They dont secure the best men—men of the most worth, and the greatest capacity. On the contrary, they serve only to stimulate cupidity, to allure designing men, and others who care for nothing but to enjoy the salaries and perquisites of office. Our own State presents an illustration of these facts. Here in Louisiana, where we pay high salaries, higher than those paid in any other State, we have not succeeded in securing the best talent for our service. What will be the effect of this bill. It will create dozens of new officers, drones on society, consumers, instead of producers, who instead of adding to the wealth of the State by their labor will live on the salaries drawn from the industry of the people. It is true that they are to be paid from the swamp land fund. But that fund belongs to the whole people of the State. We have no more right to squander it than if it were derived from taxation. What a spectacle is now presented! Here we have a party which has always boasted of its efforts for retrenchment and reform. They have made it the watchword of their party, they have emblazoned it on their banners in every processsion. But here, in this Legislature, succeeding a whig legislature which was truly one of retrenchment and reform, we find that party indulging in the wildest extravagancies. They create innumerable officers, and pay them higher salaries. What will the people say to that?—Let me ask how much you give your District Judges? Thirty-five hundred dollars, and yet you prohibit them from practising their profession. These engineers and commissioners may not be employed during six months in the year, and the rest of the time may practise their profession; yet they are to receive as much as our judges. This may seem a small sum to many, but it is more than realized by 99 out of every hundred in the legal profession. It is at the rate of eight dollars a day. Do two-thirds of the people of Louisiana make that much? They may make it for a short time, by coming to the Legislature and acting as officers, whom we are in the habit of paying so liberally. Our reporter and our secretary may get fourteen dollars a day during the session; but these are rare exceptions—and, moreover, they are persons who leave their homes and sacrifice their private interests in order to serve the State. But these officers will be at home six months in the year, either enjoying an elegant leisure, or devoting themselves to other pursuits; yet they are to have $3000 per annum. Thus we are to expend in salaries for a few officers, $135,000 a year, which is 5 or 6 per cent on the entire amount with which to commence operations.

The fund will thus be converted into a fund for the benefit of office-holders and the expenses will exhaust it. I think the bill is antagonistic to the wishes of the people as expressed in the Constitution. We have no right to appoint three commissioners when the Constitution says there shall be four, and we have no right to squander the public money. I say "squander" because it is the proper term. If gentlemen on the other side insist on pursuing this course, I want the people to know that the party which claims to be the party of economy, is in reality the party of extravagance, and that the Whigs are the real party of retrenchment and reform.

Mr. Wickliffe—The committee to which the gentleman has referred was a Democratic committee.

Mr. Hodge—It is enough for me to see that the party now in power attempts to wrest from the people in violation of the Constitution, the power to elect their officers, and bestow it on the Executive. I have not yet heard any answer to the argument that the majority are trying to take from the people the right of electing the commissioners which the Constitution has bestowed on them, and give it to the Executive in order that he may appoint his friends and adherents.

Mr. Wickliffe—I believe that the gentleman has correctly stated his motive for opposing this bill. It is because the Governor is invested by it with the power of making appointments. The last Legislature was called the Legislature of retrenchment and reform, but the impression that it was so will not last long. The State Treasurer, who is a good Whig, gives quite a different name to it.

(Reads from the Treasurer's report.) Such is the account given by the Whig keeper of the Treasury.

Mr. Hodge—He is an honest man.

Mr. Wickliffe—I believe he is, and he gave the last Legislature an honest name. He christened it as it should be christened, and the people said Amen.

The gentleman says this bill is formed for the purpose of giving the Governor power to make certain appointments. It is not so. It is formed in order to carry out the provisions of the act of Congress donating the swamp lands to the State. It is with great pleasure that I support the bill, though I represent a constituency not directly interested. I came here to support, and I am willing to give way to gentlemen of experience who know more of the subject than I do.

Now what objection could there be to permitting the Governor to make these appointments?

Mr. Hodge—A great deal, as you will see by looking at the Constitution.

Mr. Wickliffe—If the Governor is a gentleman capable of making good appointments, there can be no objection. The Democratic party had confidence in his ability when it elected him Governor. For my part I would rather trust his judgment on a question of this kind, than to leave it to the whole people. Neither the Senator nor I know anything about engineering. But does he not know that to become a competent engineer, requires the study and the experience of many long years? Does he not know that capable engineers can make more than $3,000 a year? I know some who make $5,000 in as many months. Yet the gentleman opposes a bill intended to carry out the objects of the acts of Congress, simply because it gives the Governor the power of appointment. I should like to know if there is any article in the Constitution which says these officers must be elected by the people. If there is, I do not know of it. I say again that competent engineers cannot be obtained for $2,000 a year.

Mr Short—The gentlemen who oppose this bill have travelled entirely out of the record. I am aware that all arguments based on reasons of economy are apt to meet with much favor. The arguments drawn from flags and banners, carried at the head of political processions have also been very captivating. But I had supposed they had had their day, and produced all the effect that could legitimately be attributed to them. The simple question now is, whether a skilful engineer can be provided for a less sum than is allowed in this bill—whether we can get a man to perform the onerous duties imposed by this bill for a less amount than $3,000 a year The question is not one of retrenchment and reform. Speeches filled with allusions to those ideas may do well enough for barbecues, political meetings, and processions in which those famous little flags are carried, but they are entirely out of place at this moment, for the simple reason that they do not touch the point. That point is, "What salary ought we to give in order to secure a man of honesty, ability, and capacity?" In fine, what will be a fair price? As to all these captivating arguments about retrenchment and reform, they are foreign to the question. We have only to decide whether we will stand to our amendment or concur in the action of the House.

Mr. Martin—I have read a portion of the lecture which the late State Treasurer addressed to the Legislature, and I do not consider it respectful. It is entirely out of the line of his duty, and utterly uncalled for. The gentleman (Mr. Wickliffe) says he is a good Whig. I do not question his Whiggery; but that does not justify him in putting such things in his report. I have a word to say in regard to this subject. The gentleman says that the Committee on retrenchment and reform was a Democratic Committee. Well, sir, last year, Mr. Baker, a Whig, introduced a resolution against extra compensation, which the State Treasurer was so hard on.

Mr. Wickliffe—Was not the resolution repealed on the solicitation of a good Whig?

Mr. Martin—I do not know.

Mr. Wickliffe—The journal will show it.

Mr. Martin—If it was so, it was on the last night of the session, when the Democrats were in a majority, as Mr. Burthe and others were out of the room busily engaged enrolling bills. It was then that Mr. Phillips, a Democrat, introduced a resolution to pay Mr. Hamilton, an enrolling clerk, $100 as extra compensation. Mr. Phillips was a Democrat, and Mr. Hamilton was a Whig.

No doubt Mr. Phillips wished to conciliate him, as he was reported to be a gentleman of some influence in his district. Five Whigs and four Democrats voted yes, and three Whigs and five Democrats voted no. Messrs. Burthe and Gardere were not in their seats, but without them there were just seventeen members present and voting, eight of whom were Whigs, and nine Democrats. It thus appears that the Democrats had a majority, and could have controlled the action of the Senate.

Mr. Wickliffe. I have not referred to the subject of extra compensation, but I am glad that the gentleman has done so. I am happy that he has referred to these documents, as they will prove by the vote, that the Democrats were not in a majority at that time. If the gentleman will examine, he will find that one of these resolutions was introduced by a Democrat as a rider, in order to defeat the original resolution. I recollect that Mr. Burthe and Mr. Gardere were absent at the time, being very much occupied. But where were the others. One more would have made a tie, and given the gentleman, (Mr. Martin,) who was in the Chair, an opportunity of deciding the question by his casting vote. Where, I ask, were the others? Surely there were more than eleven Whigs in the last Senate.

Mr. Derbes. My reasons for moving a reconsideration are these. I voted before to reduce the salary of the Engineers from $3,000 to $2,500, because I thought the bill would be recommitted, and we could then have four districts instead of three. Of course in that case the labor of each would be less. I think that $3,000 is not too much for the duties to be performed when we have only three districts.

The vote was reconsidered, and the Senate receded from its amendment.

The Senate proviso that nothing in the act should be construed so as to repeal existing police and levee ordinances was taken up. The House had refused to concur.

Mr. Hodge. I think the House is correct, because this proviso takes from this department which should be entirely independent, the power of directing and controlling the subject, and places it under the direction of the parochial authorities.

The Senate amendment dividing the fund in a certain proportion was taken up

Mr. Short. When this section was before the Senate, I opposed it because the division was not made with reference to the account of work to be done in each district.

The Senate amendment to borrow a million dollars then came up, the House having disagreed.

Mr. Clifton. This is a very important amendment, on the score of economy, and will save the State twenty-five or thirty per cent. I hope the Senate will not recede.

Mr. Short. I thought the bill was best as it originally stood, because when warrants are not issued till the work is done, it would be a very simple and convenient arrangement. I thought it might conciliate all those who were opposed to the borrowing system. The machinery of the original bill was very simple, and should have commended itself to all.

The section providing for pile-driving machines came up.

Mr. Kittridge. I consider that section to be worth all the others. It will be the means of saving a vast amount of property from destruction.

Mr. Wickliffe. If we want to bring ridicule on the bill, we will keep these pile-driving machines in it. What in the world do we want of three or four of these cumbersome machines, waiting for a crevasse at perhaps the very point where one may never occur.

Mr. Kittridge. The gentleman speaks of this section as throwing ridicule on the bill. Now, Sir, the collective wisdom of the State has frequently been placed in a ridiculous attitude, by seeing hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property destroyed by crevasses without doing anything to prevent it.

Mechanics' and Traders' Bank.

Mr. Derbes. I desire to offer the following protest of myself and others against the conduct of the majority of the Senate yesterday. We intend no disrespect towards the majority. We merely wish to show the grounds on which we acted.

To the Honorable W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate:

The undersigned, members of the Senate, beg leave to represent—

That on or about the first day of the present month, an act granting an extension of the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, came up for consideration in your Honorable body, and upon a vote being taken upon the first section of the bill, the same was rejected; a motion, however, was made for the reconsideration of the above mentioned vote, and was passed by the Senate. In this state of things, the bill was made the special order for Tuesday, April 5, 1853. On that day, no quorum of the Senate was present, and for the want of a quorum, that body adjourned until Wednesday, April 6. Wednesday, April 6, a motion was made to call up for consideration, the act above mentioned, but an objection being made, the President of the Senate decided that the consent of two-thirds of the members present was necessary to take up the bill according to rule—of the rules of the Senate—that the bill, not having been taken up on the day, for which it was specially fixed, fell into its regular order, as indicated by its number, and, in the absence of another assignment, it could only be taken up, when reached. An appeal was taken from this decision of the Chair, and the decision of the President was sustained by the Senate. Upon a motion for a reconsideration of the vote sustaining the Chair, the Senate, by a majority of one, agreed to reconsider.

The Senate having thus concluded to reconsider the vote, sustaining the decision of the chair, the undersigned deemed it their duty, without intending any disrespect to the Senate, to leave their seats, until other business was ready to be taken up.

When the motion was made to call up the bill, the undersigned were clearly of the opinion, that the bill hereinabove referred to, having been made the order of the day for Tuesday, April 5th, and not having been disposed on that day, lost its preference; and that it had to be renewed for another day, or taken up when reached in its regular order upon the calendar. In this opinion, the undersigned ware clearly sustained, by the pointed authority, taken from article 149, page 84, of Cushing's Manual; the words of which authority are as follows: "Orders of the day, unless proceeded in, and disposed of, on the day assigned, fall, of course, and must be renewed for some other day; it may, however," says the author, "be provided by a special rule, as in the legislative assemblies of Massachusetts, that the orders for a particular day shall hold for every succeeding day, unless disposed of."

It will not, of course, be pretended, that there is a special rule of your honorable body, which modifies or changes the general rule so fully laid down by the authority referred to.

The just and legitimate conclusion of the undersigned was maintained by the Chair, and afterwards it was affirmed by the Senate, in a direct vote, to sustain the decision of the President; and when the undersigned discovered that their views were subsequently disregarded, particularly authorities thrown aside, the decision of the Chair reversed, and the opinion of the Senate itself entirely changed, in a shorter period of time than is required to tell of it, and in order to dispose of a bill, which directly opposed itself to the political views of the undersigned, they conceived they had a perfect right to withdraw from their seats in the Senate Chamber.

Had the bill been reached in its regular order, according to the rules of the Senate, and the requirements of parliamentary usage, as expounded by our impartial and able presiding officer, the undersigned would have remained in their seats, even though the bill was destined to be passed over their heads; but they could not consent to be deprived of their rights, as accorded to them by the rules of the Senate, and by parliamentary usage, while they possessed the power by a withdrawal, to prevent it. The rules of a deliberative body are the only means by which the minority can hope for full protection against the attacks of the majority, and the undersigned are and will be justified for any step which they have taken, or may hereafter take, with the view of protecting their rights under the rule.

Such is our justification for the withdrawal from the Senate Chamber, and we respectfully pray that the same may be placed upon the minutes of this honorable body.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

M. BOATNER,
A. DERBES,
GEO. LACEY,
P. H KEMP,
TOM. S. McCAY,
C. H MOUTON,
CASIMER LACOSTE.
C. W. CLIFFTON.

Mr. Hedge—I move it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Martin—The motion is not in order. The question now is on receiving the protest.

Mr. Derbes—If the gentleman were in our position, I should oppose such a motion as he has made. It is right for us to express our reasons for our action. It is right that we should make our constituents acquainted with our motions. It is not to be supposed that gentlemen would retire from the Senate Chamber without having some reason for it. To prevent them from placing those reasons on the record, when they ask the privilege of doing so, would exhibit a want of courtesy which cannot but be astonishing.

Mr. Hodge—I have no objection to letting the protest go on the journal, but I want an opportunity to answer it. The document makes charges against the majority. It speaks of the rules as good to shield the rights of the minority, and declares that the majority violated those rules. This is a charge which I do not wish to go forth unanswered. As I before remarked, I have no objection that the gentlemen should put on record their argument in justification of their conduct; for it is an argument after all, though it professes to be only a protest. But I want an opportunity to reply to it. I wish to give my reasons.

Mr. Derbes—If the gentleman has any reasons he can give them now. The matter is now before the Senate.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman is mistaken. His suggestion would be out of order. The question before the Senate now is on receiving the protest.

Mr. McCay—As objection has been made to receiving this protest, I shall withdraw it.

Mr. Nicholls—We have no objections to letting the gentlemen place their reasons on record. But when they come here and ask us to place on the record an attack on the majority, they ought to be willing that we should have a chance to reply.

Mr. McCay—What can the Judiciary Committee say on the subject? I see no necessity to have the protest referred to them, and I shall, therefore, withdraw it

Mr Hodge—I say to the gentleman, and I suppose he can understand it when I say it directly to himself, that there is no objection, at least from this side of the House, to his placing the protest on record.

Mr. McCay—I did not refer to the Senator from Caddo. I referred to the Senator from Assumption (Mr Martin.)

Mr. Martin—I objected only to receiving the protest without a dispensation of the rules. I do not want a factious minority, which interferes with the legislation of the Senate by its factious conduct to impose its protest on the journals. I am determined that the gentleman shall not place me in the wrong.

Mr. Short—I must say that I was in favor of letting this thing be spread on the minutes, although it was an attack on the majority. I was in the majority yesterday. I was prepared to vote on a certain subject, though I did not get a chance to do so. I took my position in full view of all the responsibilities of the case, and after full consideration. I am therefore prepared to bear any attack that may be made on me as one of the majority.

Mr. Hodge—I move to defer the subject till to-morrow.

Mr. McCay—I again withdraw the protest, as objection has been made to receiving it.

Mr. Mouton—I also move to withdraw it.

Mr. Hodge—I again move to defer the subject till to-morrow.

The President decided that the protest was no longer before the Senate.

Mr. Martin—On what rule does the President base his decision?

The President—The gentleman has a right to withdraw a document of this kind.

ORDER OF THE DAY—UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The unfinished business of yesterday, on the decision of the President—

That when a bill has been fixed for a particular day; and the day passed without the bill having been taken up, the bill then takes its place among the other bills, in its order according to number—was then acted on.

Mr. Wickliffe. The decision as there expressed is correct, in a general view of the subject, but it leads to the inference that there actually was a meeting of the Senate on the day specified. I admit that if there had been a meeting, the case would have been very different. But there was no meeting—and consequently, the conclusion to which the President has come, is incorrect.

Mr. Lacey. The reasons which influenced us in the course of conduct we adopted, were set forth in the protest we presented to-day. That protest was not intended to convey any imputation on the majority. It was simply intended as a justification of our action. Now it fortunately happens that we can recur to very good authority. It is the book used by the Speaker Farrar. (Reads.) Here we have a general rule laid down. Is there any exception to it? I know of none made by the rules of the Senate. They are silent on the subject, and we must look elsewhere for light. We find here that if a bill be fixed for a particular day, and that day passes over without action on the bill, for whatever cause; the preference falls, the order is destroyed, and the bill must fall back to the foot of the calendar—to draw it whence, a two-thirds vote is required. Common sense teaches us this principle. We cannot help seeing it, if we look closely into the subject. What, I would ask, is the subject of the Order of the Day? The object is to give certain bills a preference on some particular day. If we adopt the principle advocated by the gentlemen on the other side, we shall introduce confusion, by interfering with subsequent orders of the day. It seems, then, that even without precedent—without authority—arguing only on general principles, and according to the dictates of reason, when a bill is made the special order of the day, and the day passes without action being taken on it, the bill ceases to have preference, and must take its place on the general record. But here we have authority. We have a book which was used by Speaker Farrar, an accomplished Parliamentarian. If Jefferson's Manual makes a contrary decision, I yield the point. But Jefferson is silent. He says nothing about the subject, and we are therefore compelled to look to other sources of information. It appears, then, that we have a complete authority for our position, and a full justification of our action in withdrawing from the Senate chamber when we saw that the majority were determined to depart from parliamentary rule. I want the rules enforced. I do not wish to see them disregarded. They are made for the protection of the minority, as will as of the majority. I am determined, as long as I have the physical power to walk out, to have the benefit of the rules and customs of this body.

Mr. Short. I do not rise for the purpose of saying much on this subject. The authority which the gentleman has read does not cover the case. It must be recollected that the Senate had assigned the bill for the special order of the day on Tuesday. If the Senate had met on Tuesday, it could have done any official act. It could have passed the bill, or rejected it. It might have changed the order to some subsequent day. But the Senate did not meet on Tuesday. It did nothing to evince any change of intention—and its intention evidently was to act on that bill first. Ought it not then to stand? Has the bill been taken up? Had anything been done on Tuesday? If the Senate had met on that day—if it had done any abt—if it had, in any way, manifested a change of intention, the case would have been very different. But nothing of the kind took place.

Mr. Wickliffe. It is not my province to complain of the action of Senators who thought proper to absent themselves from this chamber yesterday, at a time when their presence was necessary to form a quorum. I speak only for myself, when I say that no circumstances could arise which would induce me to absent myself from my seat, with the purpose of breaking a quorum. It might happen that the minorito might take possession of the offices, as was once the case here.

The gentleman was called to order.

Mr Hodge. I have a few words to say on the question before the Senate, in reply to the ingenious argument of the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, (Mr. Lacey). I am sorry to be compelled to differ with the President of the Senate. I have as much respect for the decision of the Chair as any one can have, but as I find that almost every Senator here has had something to say in relation to the matter, I think it due to myself I should say something to justify my action in voting against that decision. In the first place, I do not believe that the authority adduced by the gentleman, (Mr. Lacey) will bear him out, because he says that in a case of this kind, we must proceed in the regular order. The gentleman is certainly too good a lawyer to insist that we must do an impossible thing. How could the order be proceeded with? If the gentleman be correct, a factious minority might at any time break a quorum. and prevent the passage of a bill to which they might be opposed. This would be putting the majority completely in the power of the minority. Suppose we had held a meeting on Tuesday; the same gentlemen who broke the quorum afterwards, might have done so then, and, according to the theory of the gentlemen, the bill would have to take its regular order, and it might not come up till next Tuesday, when it will be too late.

Mr. Derbes. Would not the effect be the same, if we were to do so at any time?

Mr. Hodge. The gentleman is no doubt extremely happy in his reply, but let him look a little farther. I do not suppose that they would break the quorum again to-day, though they did do it yesterday. So, according to my position, we would have some guarantee, when a factious minority breaks a quorum, that the bill can be brought up again, unless that minority puts an end to the session altogether. Now, although we have no direct precedent, yet we have as good authority as that of a work which goes wandering about, and no one knows where it comes from. I would cite the Massachusetts Legislature—one of the best deliberative bodies in this country—and also the practice of the Courts, as illustrations.

Mr. McCay. Such is not the case with the Courts in the city. When a case is not reached on the day for which it is fixed, it goes to the foot of the docket, and loses its preference.

Mr. Hodge. Then even in the city they have some preference. In the country, where I come from, the Courts are more old-fashioned. They do the justice to try cases whenever they can, if they have not reached them on the day for which they are fixed.

Mr. Lacey. I know that when an authority is urged, it ought to have some weight, else it could have little effect. If they can show anything in Jefferson's Manual to sustain their position, I am willing to give up the point. But as they have not produced a single word in confirmation of their views, and as all the authority brought forward gives weight to this work, we must claim that the advantage is on our side. I will say, also, that this work is not in opposition to Jefferson's Manual, but is based on it In order to show what it is intended to be, I will read the preface. [Reads.] Now, sir, this book was considered by Mr. Speaker Farrar of such weight and authority, that it was used by him for a text-book. Who doubts Mr. Farrar's abilities as a presiding officer? Who doubts his impartiality and knowledge of parliamentary law? I contend that a book which was considered good authority by him, ought not to be disregarded by us. Such is the authority we bring forward. [Reads farther.]

So if the prolongation of business might defeat an order of the day, the want of a quorum might have the same effect. The reason in each case is because the order has not been reached. The same principle applies in case of the want of a quorum as in any other. Such are certainly the views of several Senators In some cases in order to avoid this dilemma bills are the special order for a particular day, and every day thereafter until they are reached. This is the same as the rule prevailing in the Massachusetts Legislature.

One thing, gentlemen can rely on. Whenever this bill comes up in its regular order I shall be in my seat, and prepared to vote upon it. I shall vote against it, but I shall vote.

The question was then taken and the decision of the Chair was reversed by a vote of 10 to 13.

Mr. Wickliffe—I move to take up the Mechanics' and Traders' bill, and I hope democrats will remain in their seats and meet the question.

Mr. Mouton—As I understand the question the bill ought to have come up yesterday. By the decision of the Senate if any business was done on that day the bill loses its order. Business was done yesterday, and the question recurs whether the bill can come up to-day.

The President decided that the bill must come up to-day.

The President then decided that the bill entitled

An act for the recordation of mortgages in favor of minors and married women, which had been fixed for the special order for Tuesday, as the first bill for that day, was, under the reversal of his decision, the order of the day.

Mr. Hodge moved to lay it on the table subject to call.

The next bill, the special order of the day for Tuesday last, was then taken up, and reads as follows:

An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of New Orleans.

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, which expires by limitation on the second Tuesday of April next, be and the same is hereby extended to the 1st of July, 1854, and no longer.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said bank shall not, after the said second Tuesday in April, issue or re-issue any of its own notes, but shall call in, redeem and cancel its own circulation.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c. That the prohibition contained in the 12th section of an act to revise the charter of the several banks located in the city of New Orleans, and for other purposes, approved February 5, 1842, by which it was made unlawful for any banks to pay out of their counters any other than their own notes, shall not be applied to the said Mechanics' and Traders' Bank after the second Tuesday in April next, but that said bank may, and is hereby authorised to pay its obligations in specie or in the notes of other incorporated banks of this State, established by law, at the option of the person receiving them.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. Lewis moved to amend the 1st section by substituting the 1st December, 1853, in lieu of the 1st July, 1854.

Mr. Hodge—That question has already been decided by the Senate. I appeal to the journal to prove it. I now move the previous question.

Mr. Lewis—Then I move November.

Mr. Hodge—I have the floor, and have called for the previous question.

Mr. Kittridge—I wish to say a few words in explanation of my position. I have always been in favor of extending the time of this bank, though only till December. But I am not in favor of destroying the bill. I wish to act in accordance with the interests of my constituents. I believe much damage would be caused by killing this bank at once. I think to amend the bill now would be equivalent to defeating it. I am therefore willing to take the longest time rather than none at all.

Mr. Hodge moved the previous question.

Mr. Mouton called for the yeas and nays on the question, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, and Todd, voted in the affirmative—12 yeas.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, Neal—11 nays.

Consequently the previous question was carried.

On motion to adjourn, Mr. Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Neal, Patterson—9 yeas.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Lewis, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd, and Wickliffe—13 nays.

On motion to adopt the 1st section, Mr. Wickliffe called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Lacey, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—13 yeas.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, Lacoste, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, Wickliffe—9 nays.

The section was adopted.

Mr. Neal was excused from voting.

Mr. Lacey moved to reconsider the above vote.

Mr. Hodge moved to lay the motion on the table, and called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—11 yeas.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, and Wickliffe—13 nays.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Hodge called for the yeas and nays on the question to reconsider.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton, Patterson and Wickliffe—12 yeas.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—11 yeas.

Mr. Neal, having paired off with Mr. Rivers, was excused from voting.

Consequently the motion to reconsider prevailed.

Mr. Derbes moved to amend the 1st section by striking out the 1st July, 1854, and inserting the 2d December, 1853.

Mr. Hodge called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay and Mouton—10 yeas.

Messrs Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—13 nays.

Consequently the amendment was lost.

On the adoption of the 1st section, Mr. Mouton called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—12 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton and Wickliffe—11 nays.

Consequently the 1st section was adopted.

On the adoption of the 2d section, Mr. Lacey called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—12 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton and Wickliffe—11 nays.

Consequently the 2d section was adopted.

On the adoption of the 3d section, Mr. Lacey called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor and Tood—12 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton and Wickliffe—11 nays.

Consequently the 3d section was adopted.

On the adoption of the 4th section, Mr. Lacey called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Burthe, Hodge, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Slack, Taylor and Todd—12 yeas.

Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Kemp, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mouton and Wickliffe—11 nays.

Consequently the 4th section was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Easton, special messenger from the House, requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills, entitled

An act for the relief of Barney McFeely.

An act to amend the several acts relative to the police and government of the town of Franklin, parish of St. Mary.

An act to authorise Melite Dunean, f. w. c., of the parish of St. John the Baptist, to emancipate a slave.

An act to incorporate the Opelousas Fire Company,

An act relative to judicial advertisements.

Substitute for an act concerning advertisements of sheriffs.

Resolution relative to the funeral obsequies of the late ex-Governor Johnson.

And that the House had concurred in the amendments to a bill entitled

An act to provide for the speedy trial of cases in which the right of office is involved.

FRIDAY, April 8th, 1853.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Claims, made the following report:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

The committee to whom has been referred the claim of the Good Intent Towboat Company, beg leave to report that they took the subject into due consideration; and they are convinced that the claim is a just one, as far as the services rendered to the State by the Company are concerned; and they leave it to the Senate to fix the amount of compensation. To that effect they offer the following act.

(Signed,) A. DERBES,
Chairman pro tem.

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

The undersigned members of the committee to whom was referred the claim of Manuel Hernandez, Constable of the Fifth Justice of the Peace of the Parish of Orleans, beg leave to report that they have had the matter under mature consideration, and they are of opinion that the Senate ought to reject the same. His bill, amounting to the sum of nearly nine hundred dollars, is for services rendered to the State in his aforesaid capacity of Constable. The Committee have in vain looked for a law authorising the payment of similar charges, and in the absence of such a law, they are not willing to establish a precedent which would involve the Senate in eternal legislation, and to considerable appropriations of money. Therefore, they beg leave to be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

(Signed,) A. DERBES,
(Signed,) W. R. TAYLOR.

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

The Committee on Claims, to whom has been referred the petition of Wm. F. Dinkgrave, Collector of State Taxes for the Parish of Ouachita, beg leave to report favorably, and submit the accompanying act.

(Signed,) A. DERBES,
Chairman pro tem.

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

The Committee on Claims, to whom has been referred the petition and memorial of B. K. Stephens, asking to be relieved from the payment of a bond of six hundred dollars, for the appearance in Court of one Thomas H. Hammersly, charged with larceny, beg leave to report in favor of remitting the half of said bond, to wit: three hundred dollars; and ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

(Signed,) A. DERBES,
(Signed,) W. R. TAYLOR.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastin, the special messenger from the House, requested the signature of the President to the following bills, entitled:

An act to punish any attempt to injure any levee or embankment on any of the navigable rivers or waters of the State.

An act to provide for the speedy trial of cases in which the right of office is involved.

And informed the Senate that the Speaker had signed the following bills, entitled:

An act to emancipate John Rhodes, of the parish of Orleans.

An act for the relief of the Surveyor General.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate to—

An act for the relief of the School Directors in De Soto parish.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported the following bills correctly enrolled, and the Assistant Secretary requested the signature of the Speaker to the same:

An act for the relief of Pierre Onesime Broussard, late Parish Superintendent of the parish of Vermillion, and amendatory to an act entitled an act providing the manner by which Parish superintendents and their sureties may be relieved from their bonds, approved March 18, 1852.

An act to authorise Frederick Stockel and Maria Prujer, his wife, to adopt Louisa Wilhelmina Garnur.

An act to amend an act for the uniform regulation of elections in the State of Louisiana, excepting the parishes of Orleans and Jefferson, approved June 1st, 1846.

And he informed the House that the President had signed the following bills:

An act to locate the seat of justice of the parish of Jefferson.

An act for the relief of William L. Knox.

An act for the relief of H. Kean.

The Assistant Secretary requested the concurrence of the House in the following bills:

An act to emancipate Jane Mary, slave and daughter of Patsy, f. w. c.

An act to enable the stockholders of the Iberville Female School Society to proceed and effect a liquidation.

An act to authorise Theodore Helveston and Anne Elisa Peel, his wife to adopt Thomas Whelan, an orphan.

And the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act to amend and re-enact the thirty-fifth section of an act entitled an act to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and provide for the government and administration of its affairs.

An act to amend the several acts relative to the police and government of the town of Franklin, in the parish of St. Mary.

And with amendments in the following bills, entitled:

An act to incorporate the Vicksburg, Shreveport, and Texas Railroad Company.

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company.

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

And that the Senate had concurred in a bill, entitled:

An act for the relief of the creditors and legatees of the estate of Abner Robinson, deceased.

And that the Senate had concurred in House amendment to a bill entitled:

An act regulating the duties of Notaries without the limits of the city of New Orleans.

AN EXPLANATION

Mr. Mouton—Having voted to extend the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, I am fearful it may be thought that I was really in favor of extending the charter of that institution. In order to place myself right on the subject I, in connection with others who voted with me, beg leave to present the following written explanation of our vote, which we desire to have spread on the journal.

The undersigned, in voting for the amendment proposing to extend the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank to the 2d day of December next, did so because they preferred that period to the time fixed in the original bill. Upon the final passage of the bill, it was the intention of the undersigned to vote against any extension of the charter of said bank.

(Signed,) C. H MOUTON,
GEO, S. LACEY,
M. BOATNER,
TOM, G. McCAY,
A. DERBES,
C. W CLIFTON,

The document was ordered to be entered on the Journal.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

The Private Secretary of the Governor informed the Senate that the Governor had approved and signed the following acts:

An act for the relief of the Branch of the State Bank at Baton Rouge.

An act to emancipate William T. Glasscock.

An act for the relief of Thomas P. Hall, and the administrator of Wylie J. McElroy, deceased.

An act to create an additional justice of the Peace and one constable in and for the parish of Rapides.

An act relative to the oath directed to be taken by article ninetieth of the Constitution.

An act to amend an act entitled an act to amend the several acts relative to the police and government of the town of Baton Rouge.

Resolution relative to the establishment of a certain mail coach by Congress.

Resolution for the relief of Jerome Tourne.

Resolution directing the State Engineer to examine the falls of Red River.

Resolution authorising the State Engineer to make an examination of the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine.

An act to prohibit the circulation of small notes.

An act to authorize David Brady, of the city of New Orleans to change his name from David Brady to David Braden.

An act to authorize Justices of the Peace to appoint curators ad litem in certain cases.

THE RAILROAD BILLS.

The railroad bills were taken up and reconsidered for the purpose of making certain corrections.

Mr. Short moved an amendment giving the privilege of cutting timber only while the lands belong to the State.

Mr. Hodge—The privilege would then amount to nothing. Parties will come forward and enter the lands as soon as the road is located, and so the concession would in reality be valueless.

Mr Hodge offered an amendment granting the privilege of cutting timber from the public lands for five years.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

"An act for the recordation of the evidence of mortgage, &c."

Mr. Hodge.—As the Senator from Ascension (Mr. Kenner) is away and as he has expressed great interest in the subject, and would like to say something on it, I move that the bill be laid on the table subject to call.

Mr. King.—I was not aware that the Senator from Ascension took peculiar interest in this bill. He certainly does not make it manifest by being absent from his seat when the bill comes up. I am not aware that the gentleman is unwell or that he has been called away by pressing business. He is absent in pursuit of his own pleasure. I do not think that the business of the Senate ought to be interrupted and delayed, in order to contribute to the pleasure or suit the convenience of any Senator.

Mr. Martin.—I am astonished that the gentleman should speak of Mr. Kenner being absent for pleasure, when he himself has just returned from a visit to New Orleans, where, it is suspected, he went for the purpose of enjoying himself.

Mr. Hodge.—I reiterate what I before said. To show what interest Mr. Kenner takes in the question, I will state that, at the last session of the Legislature, Mr. Benjamin introduced a bill similar to this one. Mr. Kenner expressed his opposition to it and made a speech against it.

Mr. Boatner —The argument of the gentleman might be applied to his favorite bank measure; for it was only last week that, while in the city, Mr. Kenner told me he was opposed to it, and only regretted he was not here to make a speech against it.

Mr. Hodge.—Well, I will disclaim that motive. I will say that my reason for wishing a postponement is because I desire to give preference to the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank bill. The reason is that but little time is left and unless we act upon the bill immediately, we may not have time to do it at all. If the bill be not passed before Tuesday next, it will be unavailing, as the charter of the bank will expire on that day. The gentlemen on the other side have consumed all the morning in making frivolous motions such as I never before saw in a legislative body. I have been in them before, though never a member till this time, and I must say that I never saw the reading of bills called for on the first reading, as has been done here this morning only to produce delay. I say again that I wish to give the bank bill the preference. I wish to put the bill now before the Senate, at the foot of the calendar for that purpose, and gentlemen may make the most of it.

Mr. King.—I understood the gentleman at first to urge as a reason for delay, that a certain Senator who took great interest in this bill was absent from his seat. (Mr. Hodge. That was a part of my reason.)

I understood it was the whole reason—at least I heard no other urged in connection with it. Now, the gentleman disclaims that reason and gives quite another. As to the insinuation of the gentleman from Assumption, that I have been absent on pleasure, I had hoped that my present appearance would have protected me from any such attacks as that. But if the gentleman wishes to indulge his humor or such things at my expense, let him proceed. I shall say nothing in reply, as it only accords with a disposition which I have seen evinced before. I hope that the bill will be taken up as it is of great importance; vastly more so to my constituents than the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank bill.

Mr. Lacey.—If the object of the Senator who made the motion to postpone, is to take up the Mechanics' and Traders' bank bill, I shall vote against it. I am opposed to that bill and will vote for any motion to defeat it. I vote to take up the special order because it is of great importance; of vastly more importance, as the gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) has well said, than the bill to extend the time of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank. I shall try every parliamentary method to defeat that bill, and it it pass, it will do so without any aid from me. If it pass it will be because I am ignorant of any parliamentary method of defeating it. A reason urged for postponing the special order, is that a certain Senator is absent. What did you do in regard to me in a similar case. You will recollect that my swamp land bill was fixed for a particular day. I was absent at the time it came up. I heard the result of the vote and the defeat of my bill when at the side of the sick bed of my wife. No courtesy was extended to me. My absence was not thought a sufficient reason for delay, though the bill was my own bill, and I was detained from my seat by claims which no man would be willing to disregard I am opposed to this Mechanics' and Traders' Bank on principle. I voted against it as it came from the House and I shall continue to vote against it from the beginning to the end.

Mr. Wickliffe. I will say that when I voted to lay the gentleman's Swamp Land Bill on the table, I did not know of the illness of his wife, though had I known it, I should have voted the same way, because the motion to lay on the table was made before the gentleman left the Senate Chamber.

Mr. Martin. The gentleman says he is opposed to the Mechanics and Traders' Bank bill on principle. I say that with him there is no principle involved in the matter all. Yesterday he offered a protest against our action of the day before. That protest contained expressions against any extension of the charter of the bank. Yet the gentleman voted to extend it till December. Thus he conceded the principle, and made the question of time as a matter of expediency, the only point involved. The sole question with him becbme whether to extend the charter to December or July.

Mr. Derbes. The gentleman will recollect I said when I made the motion to extend to December, that I did not abate one bit of our principles.

Mr. Martin. The only Senator who has acted consistently on this bill is the gentleman from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe). He has been opposed to it from the beginning to the end. But he did not make a factious opposition.

Mr. Mouton. The gentleman says that the Senator from West Feliciana is the only one who has acted consistently on the Mechanics and Traders' Bank bill. If he will look at the journal, he will find that when I voted for the amendment extendment extending the Charter of the bank till December, I voted for it because I thought it the best we could get, and we wished to make the bill acceptable to the gentlemen on the other side. In order to place this fact on record we have this morning offered our reasons in writing, which, with the consent of the Senate, have been spread on the Journal.

Mr. Lacey. I have given way to several Senators already to enter into explanations on this subject. I will now resume the floor, but only for a moment. The gentleman says that in voting for the amendment he alluded to, is an abandonment of principle. I do not think it is so. I did it only to render the bill more acceptable if it should pass. If the vote had been taken on the final passage of the bill, we should have shown that we were opposed to granting a moment's extension of time.

Mr. McCay. I moved to lay the gentleman's swamp land bill on the table because I thought that the Senate, in its legislation, should not regard the casual absence of any Senator. My vote to-day will illustrate my position.

The bill for the recordation of mortgages was then taken up.

Mr. King. This bill, Mr. President, is one whose importance can scarcely be exaggerated. It touches one of the most delicate subjects known to the law. In forming the bill, no degree of attention and caution has been spared. It was introduced in the Senate at an early period of the session, and was then ordered to be printed for the use of members, that they might mace themselves perfectly acquainted with its principles and details. Special pains were taken to send copies of the bill to the Judges and most prominent lawyers of the State. Their opinion was asked, not as a mere formality, but for the sake of eliciting fair and impartial criticism. I requested that these bills might be returned, with such criticisms and suggestions as were deemed advisable. Many persons complied with the request. The bill then came before the Judiciary Committee, to whose critical inspection it was for some time subjected. Thus it comes before the Senate with the light of many minds thrown upon it. It is the result of long reflection, frequent consultation, and mature deliberation. If it is not perfect, it is as nearly so as it is possible for a bill of this kind to be. Its general object, expressed briefly, is to disembarrass real estate from the incumbrance which now lies so heavy upon it; to give to its holders the powers of capitalizing their real estate, and borrowing money on it. It is known that now, no amount of legal knowledge would enable a man safely to sell, purchase, or lend money on, real estate. The man who lends money on, or buys real estate, frequently discovers, too late, the existence of a tacit mortgage which intervenes between him and the property, and either destroys his title, or takes away his security.

The knowledge of this characteristic of our system of law, prevents the influx of capital into the State, by rendering its investment insecure. I wish to capitalize real estate. I wish it to be regarded here as elsewhere—as the best security that can be offered. In New York or London, a person having real estate can get money on it almost to its full value, at the lowest rate of interest. In Louisiana, on the contrary, owing to our anomalous and hurtful system of tacit mortgages, which render real estate a very insecure sort of security, money can hardly be raised on it at all; or if it be procurable, an enormous interest must be paid. He must fortify the real estate with personal security, and then pay 18 per cent. interest. If we capitalize real estate—or, in other words, facilitate its conversion into capital—we might get money in Louisiana at as low a rate of interest as anywhere else. If we can carry this bill through, we will cause foreign capital to flow in on us; we will augment the prosperity of the State, and enhance the value of our property There is scarcely any Senator who has not formed an opinion of the great importance of this subject. If I could be sure of the unbiassed attention of the Senate, I would have more to say. But I feel that every one has come to some conclusion already, and in my present debilitated condition, I do not feel capable of making much exertion. I can only say that this bill has undergone the scrutiny of legal men, and has been approved by them. It is not intended to destroy the vested rights of minors and married women, but to secure them more effectually, by making a complete recordation of the evidence of mortgages in their favor. I appeal to any one to say if a recorded mortgage is not better than a tacit mortgage. By this bill, not an iota of the rights of married women and minors is abated; they are more fully secured.

Mr. Barthe offered a substitute for the bill.

Mr. Burthe I do not wish to delay action on this subject, but my opinion is that the bill I offer is far superior to the one before the Senate—and I therefore move that it be printed.

Mr. King. I understand this bill to be the same as the one introduced last year by Mr. Benjamin, and which was voted down by the Senate, as I thought, very properly. We have adopted everything good in it, and have added various improvements, so that we have made our bill much superior. We have supplied the omissions, and omitted the superfluities. I consider this an attempt to take the wind out of the sails of our bill, and to force through the exploded bill of last year, which was voted down—as it ought to have been. I move to lay the substitute indefinitely on the table.

Mr. Burthe withdrew the substitute.

Mr. Mouton offered an amendment, providing that these mortgages be recorded only in the parishes where the party resides.

Mr. Wickliffe. That would destroy the rights of minors and married women.

Mr. Short. The object of the bill is to convert an unknown into a known mortgage. We wish to secure the rights of married women and minors, by having the receipts recorded in every parish where the party has property.

Mr. Boatner. I am opposed to the whole section. It requires a man to do what moral honesty forbids him to do—and that is, to give a receipt for a thing which he has not received, and makes him swear to it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCay. I move a reconsideration of the 1st section

Mr. Wickliffe. For what reason?

Mr. Wickliffe. As the gentleman will not tell his reason, I move to lay his motion on the table.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. Mouton. I do not like so many oaths. If the tutor be an honest man, one oath is sufficient. If he take an oath to discharge his duties, no other is necessary. There is no use for him to swear to anything more than that he has recorded the mortgage.

The bill passed to its third reading.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

The Mechanics' and Traders' Bank.

The Mechanics' and Traders' Bank bill was taken up

Mr. Lacey. I move to recommit the bill to the committee on Banks and Banking.

Mr. Hodge moved the previous question.

The vote being taken, Mr. Hodge said:

I vote No, because I see the object is to get a vote during the absence of Senators who have temporarily stepped out.

Mr. Evans. I had paired off on this subject with Mr. Rivers, but I will vote to recommit, as I am opposed to the bill. Perhaps Mr. Rivers will be here when the bill comes up again.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

SATURDAY, April 9th, 1853.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Martin, from the Committee on Commerce, Agriculture, &c., reported a substitute for a bill, which was referred to his committee, entitled

An act to prevent the spreading of contagious and infectious diseases by vessels arriving in the Atchafalaya Bay and its tributaries.

On motion of Mr. Palfrey, the rules were dispensed with, and the substitute was concurred in.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Enrollment, reported as correctly enrolled—

An act to punish any attempt to injure any levee or embankment on any of the navigable rivers or waters in the State, and

An act to provide for the speedy trial of cases in which the right of office is involved.

And the special messenger, Mr. Steward, informed the House that the President had signed the same.

Mr. Todd, according to previous notice, introduced a bill entitled

An act to create two additional notaries public in and for the parish of Morehouse.

On motion of Mr. Todd, the rules were suspended, it underwent its several readings, and it passed.

Mr. Clifton, from the Finance Committee, submitted the following report:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, President of the Senate, &c.

The undersigned a member of the Finance Committee, to whom was referred a bill entitled an act to more effectually carry into effect an act entitled an act for the advancement of medical education in Louisiana, approved 21st March, 1850, begs leave to dissent from the majority of said committee, and to offer the following minority report against the adoption of said bill:

Digitized by Google

It appears by the act of 1850, referred to above, and which this act is for the purpose of more effectually carrying into effect, that the State of Louisiana appriated the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, for the purpose of purchasing anatomical and other preparations, medical drawings, &c., for the use of the University of Louisiana, and requiring the Dean of the Medical Department to furnish a catalogue of all the articles purchased under the provisions of the act of the Legislature, and also to make a full and detailed report of the expenditures made by the faculty under this act. The undersigned has in vain examined the journals of the Legislature to find any evidence that the provisions of this act have ever been complied with by the University of Louisiana, except that of receiving the $25,000, which is shown by the Treasurer's report. The records show no "full catalogue of the articles purchased," no "full and detailed report of the expenditures made by the faculty," as required by the 4th section of the act of 1850, and yet the University, in order more effectually to carry out the act of 1850, introduces a bill to grant it another appropriation of $6000. There is no member of your honorable body more zealous than the undersigned in the cause of public education and the advancement and dissemination of scientific knowledge, or no one who more fully recognizes the duty of the State to extend its fostering aid and protection to institutions established for those purposes; but at the same time the government has a duty to fulfil in endeavoring to lighten the burthen that now presses so heavily upon the people, suffering as they are under a high rate of taxation, with a prospect of a considerable increase by the present Legislature to meet its existing liabilities.

In the opinion of the undersigned, the University has already received a sufficient proportion of State aid to enable it now to stand alone upon its own resources, and not to apply to our exhausted Treasury for a further appropriation.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) C. W. CLIFTON.

Mr. Martin—I have a resolution to offer instructing the Secretary to proceed to the House and ask the return of the bill permitting the pledging of growing crops. I think I can show such reasons as will convince any one that the bill was proposed under a misapprehension.

Mr. King—The senator who introduced that bill, and who took peculiar interest in it, is now absent. The action proposed by the gentleman would be extremely discourteous towards him.

Mr. Martin—I do not wish to take advantage, you shall not pass action while my colleague is absent. I have no objection that the subject should be discussed in his presence I only desire that the bill be returned now.

Mr. King—Well, it would be an anomalous proceeding. A bill has passed the Senate, and has gone out of its possession. It is now before the other House, and the gentleman proposes to get it back. Why, such a course would extend legislation to infinity.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman's legal knowledge, no doubt, surpasses mine; but my parliamentary knowledge teaches me that is not at all an unusual method of proceeding.

Mr. King—I understand that the bill has already been referred to a committee in the lower House.

Mr. Martin—That is not action.

Mr King—I think it is.

Mr. Martin withdrew the resolution.

On motion of Mr. Todd, an act to provide for the trial of recused cases was taken up.

Mr. Todd—It is absolutely necessary that some provision should be made for the trial of these cases in the country. Sometimes the difficulty is so great as to amount to an absolute denial of justice. It is necessary that some measure for the speedier trial of these cases should be adopted. Many of the country districts are very large, and at some seasons the roads are almost impassable; so that judges from the neighboring districts cannot attend. The consequence often is that recused cases are postponed ad infinitum, and not tried at all. My plan is this: A member of the bar is to be selected by the counsel, and if they be unable to agree the judge is to appoint three from whom one must be selected by lot. This one decides the case, and the district judge signs the judgment and gives it effect. The Judiciary Committee reported against the bill on constitutional grounds. They took the ground that we cannot invest a person with the functions which the Constitution imposes on the district judge. This is true. But we do not do it. We only authorize the parties to appoint a referee; but his judgment has no efficacy until it is signed by the judge. The reference is only incidental. The judge gives all their efficacy to the proceedings. The Constitution of Kentucky contains a similar provision, and also those of Mississippi and other States, where it has been found to work well. I hope that senators will withdraw their objections and pass the bill. Let them look at the facts and take into consideration that it is necessary to provide some easier method of trying these cases.

Mr. Lacey—I am willing to vote for the bill, and leave the question of its constitutionality to be decided by the courts. The evil evidently requires a remedy. My district has certainly suffered much from it.

Mr. Nicholls—That is exactly the case in my district. I know cases there remaining since '45, and not tried yet. This, as the gentleman says, amounts to a denial of justice.

Mr. Todd—I will state, that in the Convention, I wished to introduce a clause of this kind into the Constitution, and the unanimous opinion of the Judiciary Committee was that it was not necessary.

Mr. Boatner—I shall vote against the bill, as I think it unconstitutional, and I have have heard no argument to change my opinion on that point. The article of the Constitution is imperative and unequivocal. Judges of the inferior courts shall be elected by the people. The senator from Morehouse (Mr. Todd) says that this article does not apply, inasmuch as the judge signs the judgment. It appears to me that one essential requisite is, that the judge should hear and determine the case. If the mere signing of the judgment is sufficient, it appears to me that the proper definition of a judge has not hitherto been understood The article of the Constitution is imperative. Judicial functions cannot be delegated to third parties. There may be cases of hardship, but we are bound to abide by the Constitution.

The bill passed.

The President laid before the Senate the following report from the State Engineer, which was referred to the Committee on Internal Improvement.

STATE ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
Baton Rouge, April 7, 1853.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana:

GENTLEMEN,

By the second section of an act, approved March 18, 1852, there was allowed to the State Engineer an annual "contingent fund" of $1,000 for travelling and office exponses.

I do not know for what purpose this law was passed, for I cannot imagine that the State Engineer would travel more than the business of his office required, or that he would expend more money in his office than would be found necessary. Whatever might have been the intention of the Legislature, I am sure that no such law can be of service to the State so far as this department is concerned, especially as this office is always prepared with the proper vouchers to show and explain in whatever manner it has disposed of all the means placed at its credit—and besides, all warrants are approved by the Governor or Secretary of State. If you consider what is required, it will plainly appear that the sum is quite small.

This office must keep a strict account of all disbursements; all orders must be copied into an order book; all letters must be recorded; and during the absence of the State Engineer and his assistant, some person must be left in the office to attend to any pressing business in the way of orders from any of the different divisions of State hands. To perform this work, a good clerk has long been employed, and is still required, to attend to the duties of the office.

The State Engineer must travel not only enough to make the surveys and examinations required by your honorable body, but he must see to and direct the work of the State force in such a manner as will make it most useful. The real wants of this department are so great and have been so often spoken of, that it appears almost useless to make further mention of them.

In order to accomplish within a reasonable time even the most important and useful work now demanded, a great increase of its force would be required.

If the force were sufficiently augmented, we could not only remove all obstructions to navigation, but we could with slave labor place locks in our rivers and bayous, and make good the navigation, where now we have none except in high water. We could also contruct plank or railroads for one half the sum that such works would cost if performed by white labor.

The State force is now so well trained, that to construct works which are purely mechanical, we require only a foreman among them. For the locks on the Barataria and Lafourche canals, we have only one mechanic, besides the masons, and that is a master carpenter. For the bridging on the plank roads, from the Grosse Tete to Baton Rouge, there is employed by the company but one carpenter, and nearly all the mechanical labor of such works can be done well enough by slaves at one-quarter of the cost of white labor.

How useful, then, to the State would three or four hundred of such men be. Carpenter's wages are from $2 to $3 per day, while this force would cost the State, when once acquired, but little more than their food and clothing. The cost of support would not increase in proportion to the number of slaves employed, for one superintendent could in most cases as well manage fifty hands as twenty-five.

In order to keep open the numerous streams which afford an outlet to the Mississippi through the Atchafalaya and Plaquemine, so that the water should drain off quickly to the Gulf, and not cause inundation to the valuable portion of the State, it is necessary that at least one good snag boat should be constantly employed in them. We find here a great natural basin for the reception of the overflowing waters from above, and attention should be directed, not only to the navigation through it, but to its capacity for draining purposes.

We have on hand the machinery, and to make the force in charge of this department serviceable, two good boats should be constructed to receive it. This will require an outlay of about $10,000, and to make such alterations as are required on the 'Florida' will cost $2000. In the construction of the new boats I wish to make some improvements in the model and working machinery, which I believe will not only enable them to move from one portion of this State to the other with greater facility, but to be more efficient when at work. The year is already so far advanced, that to have them ready for the low water season, they should be commenced without further loss of time.

I would respectfully recommend that an appropriation of the sum of $12,000 be made for the building and repairing of boats, and I must state, that without it, we have but one good boat for the whole State service. I would advise the repeal of the law creating the "contingent fund" before alluded to.

The ordinary yearly appropriations will be quite sufficient for the salaries and expenses of this department, even if the two additional boats should be furnished.

Very respectfully, your ob'd't serv't,
(Signed) GEO. W. MORSE,
State Engineer.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Easten, messenger from the House, informed the Senate that the House had amended the amendments of the Senate in the following bills, entitled

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company.

An act to incorporate the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company.

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills:

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

An act for the relief of A. M. Gray, of the parish of Avoyelles.

An act to authorize the Auditor and Treasurer of the State to place certain school monies to the credit of the parishes which are entitled to the same.

An act relative to the safe keeping and preservation of the arms of the State in the public arsenals of New Orleans.

Substitute for an act No. 288, incorporating the stockholders of the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad Company.

MONDAY, April 11th, 1853.

AN ACT FOR THE RECORDATION OF MORTGAGES, &C.

The bill for the "recordation of mortgages in favor of minors and married women" was taken up.

Mr. Nicholls. This is a bill of great importance. It affects all the married women and minors in the State. Though the author says it is as perfect as the human understanding can make it, yet it evidently needs amendments. Let it be recommitted so that the proper amendments can be made.

Mr. King. I suspect the motive of the gentleman is not so much to improve as to defeat the bill.

Mr. Nicholls. I will be obliged to the gentleman to speak for himself. I do not impugn any one's motives, and I will not suffer any one to impugn mine.

Mr. King. Am I then to understand that the gentleman is in favor of the principle of the bill?

Mr. Nicholls. Yes sir. Yet I think that this bill, so far from being perfect, is one of the most imperfect ever presented to a legislative body.

Mr. King. The reason I imputed to the gentleman the object of defeating the bill was because I thought he was opposed to its principle. Do I understand that he is in favor of the abolition of tacit mortgages?

Mr. Nicholls. Not of their abolition, but of the recordation of the evidence of them, which is implied in the title of the bill.

Mr. King. Well, that amounts to the same thing, for when the evidence of the mortgage is recorded, it is no longer tacit. The gentleman says that this bill is one of the most imperfect ever submitted to a legislative body. I beg leave to differ from him. I think it is just the contrary. It was drawn up with great care, and was submitted to the most eminent lawyers of the State, with a view of getting the opinion of persons competent to judge. It then passed into the hands of the Judiciary Committee, the members of which were diligent in their examination, and dissected it line by line. It was approved by them, and all to whom it was submitted. When I say it is as perfect as the human understanding can make it. I mean that it is as perfect a bill as ever has been presented here. It is intended for the abolition of a great evil. The tacit mortgage system is a cloak for frauds and malpractices of various kinds, and this bill will put an end to them.

It may once in a great while operate injuriously on some one; but what law will not? I may without impropriety mention the names of some of the gentlemen to whom the bill was submitted, and who gave it their approval. It was placed before Mr. Roselius, who examined it thoroughly, and said that it was a good bill, and he hoped it would pass. It was submitted to Mr. Micon. I am permitted to use his name also. He did not find the bill incomplete, but he said it was good, and he hoped it would be adopted. He found that the rights of minors and married women were sufficiently protected. I hope then that this left-handed blow will not be dealt to the bill—a blow which would defeat it as effectually as if it were laid on the table.

Mr. Short. It may be possible that the bill is complex in its character. But it will be seen that this could not be avoided, when we take into consideration the complex character of the subject which it proposes to regulate. It starts with the design of converting unknown into known mortgages by recording the evidence of them. This is a complex bill, because it undertakes to resolve a tangled subject; to bring order out of chaos, and to settle a multitude of difficulties. As I have said, the object of the bill is to convert unknown into known mortgages as far as legislation can go, by recording the evidence of them. There is a class of mortgages in favor of miners, which present nothing that can be recorded. This bill provides only for the recording of the instrument which is the evidence of the mortgage, when it can be done. Thus I think no harm can result from it.

Mr. Palfrey—I am no lawyer, nor do I pretend to have any legal learning, but I must be very obtuse not to see one very serious objection to this bill. For instance, it contains no provision for the appointment of a tutor in parishes where property may be acquired after the original appointment. I have an amendment to propose, to obviate this difficulty, and in order to have it inserted, I shall vote for recommitting the bill.

The motion to recommit was lost, and the bill passed.

Mr Mouton gave notice that he would move a reconsideration to-morrow.

Mr. Lacey. It has been decided that no discourtesy would be involved in moving an immediate reconsideration, and certainly I would never willingly be guilty of discourtesy towards my friend from Lafayette This is a bill of great importance, and should be disposed of at once. I therefore move a reconsideration now.

Mr. Rivers. I rise to a point of order. Can the gentleman make a motion of this kind? Does it not destroy the very object of reconsideration?

Mr. McCay. I should like to have some information on this subject. Does not a motion take precedence of a mere notice of intention to make a motion? The gentleman might change his mind to-morrow, and not make the motion at all. The gentleman from East Feliciana has actually made the motion, and it must be acted on. That has already been decided by the Senate.

Mr. Rivers. Will not the object of reconsideration be defeated if the right and privilege of a Senator to give a notice of his intention to make a motion be cast off. The case has not been decided as the gentleman says, but on the contrary, in a totally different way. I believe that if the President were in the Chair, he would decide in the same way.

Mr. King. It seems to me that reason favors the conclusion to which my colleague from New Orleans has come. A notice is not a motion. It is merely a piece of information which a gentleman gives to the Senate. A motion actually made must of course take precedence. The right to move a reconsideration exists for two days, excepting a motion to the same effect has already been made. In that case the first motion must be acted on, and is final.

Mr. Rivers. If the Senator from East Feliciana had made his motion first, the vote on the reconsideration could be taken now. But another gentleman has given notice, and that sets the question at rest till to-morrow. What is the object of a reconsideration? It is to have a question tested again in a full Senate, when members who may be absent at the time the vote is taken may be present. But if we reconsider now, we cut off the very object, and interfere with the privileges of the Senator who makes the motion.

The Chair decided that the motion to reconsider was out of order.

Mr. Mouton. I have no desire to cause delay. I only wish to exercise my right as a Senator. My object in giving the notice that to-morrow I should move a re-consideration, was to have the question tested de novo, in order that the sober second thought may be permitted to have some effect. If we take the vote now, the result will be the same as before, and the bill would inevitably be carried, because it is known that a majority of the Senators now present are in favor of it. But to-morrow those members who are now absent may be in their seats, and have a chance of voting, Thus the result might be changed.

The gentleman says that my notice was a mere expression of intention. Not so. It was a notice that I will make the motion. I desire to have the vote taken when there is a fuller Senate, as I believe that then the bill would inevitably be defeated, notwithstanding its perfect character. My object is to have the question tested de novo—and the only way the gentleman can prevent it, is by appealing from the decision of the Chair, and having his appeal sustained by the Senate.

Mr. Short. There is nothing in reason to show that a mere notice should take place of a motion. I shall vote to reconsider immediately.

Mr. Boatner. There are two reasons why I shall vote to sustain the decision of the Chair. The first is, that it will be merely an act of common courtesy to the gentleman who gave the notice. He says that to-morrow he will make the motion—and I believe he will. His reasons are, that he desires the vote to be taken in presence of a fuller Senate. This will not necessarily cause the defeat of the bill. It will only defer it for a day. Another reason is, that I do not wish to be guilty of discourtesy to the Chair. It is to be presumed that the presiding officer is acquainted with the rules of the Senate, and that he will give correct decisions. I shall therefore vote to sustain his decision.

Mr. King. Gentlemen seem to be in error in regard to the object of reconsideration. It is not in order to have a fuller Senate, or to enable those to vote who may not have been present. It is simply to give those who have voted in error, an opportunity of changing their votes.

Mr. Griffin. I shall vote to sustain the decision of the Chair. I do so, because for years I have read the reports of the proceedings in Congress, and I have never observed a case where a notice of this kind was interfered with by a motion to reconsider immediately. I have never heard of such a thing, and I cannot suppose the Senate will permit it now.

Mr. Boatner. If a Senator should give notice of his intention to introduce a bill, would it not be thought extremely discourteous for another member to introduce it now?

Mr. Palfrey. Something has been said by one gentleman about the sacredness of fair play. Now, this bill affects the interests of thousands of married women and minors in this State. Fair play towards them, demands that we should have a fuller vote on it. We should have the opinions of all.

The decision of the Chair was sustained.

The following act was then taken up and read:

An Act to amend article 312 of the Code of Practice.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, that article 312 of the Code of Practice, which reads as follows:

If, three days after this first judgment has been rendered, the defendant neither appear nor file his answer, definitive judgment will then be given for the plaintiff, provided he prove his demand. This proof is required in all cases—

Be, and the same is hereby amended, so as to read:

If, two days after this first judgment has been rendered, the defendant neither appear nor file his answer, definitive judgment will then be given for the plaintiff, provided he prove his demand. This proof is required in all cases.

Mr. King. I find that the bill applies to New Orleans as well as to the country parishes. As there is no necessity for a change in the city, I think New Orleans should be excluded from its operation.

Mr. Todd. I am willing to have the bill amended so as to exclude New Orleans.

Mr. Lacey. I move to amend, so as to exclude the parishes of East Baton Rouge and Livingston.

Mr. Short. I hope the gentleman will not press his amendment. I thought Orleans was the only parish entitled to be excepted from the operations of any bill.

Mr. Lacey. I see no good reason why New Orleans should be excluded. I would go even farther than the bill, and dispense with proof—as by making default, the defendant admits the justness of the claim.

Mr. King. If the opinion of my colleague prevail, it would be a license for a general system of spoliation. My constituents do not desire any change. The present law is good enough, and not liable to any objections When the people are accustomed to a law, and know it, I would not change it without grave and important reasons.

The amendment was lost, and the bill rejected.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

The bill to compel the Trustees of Centenary College to pay the board of the indigent youths sent there by the State, was then taken up.

Mr. Rivers. I hope, sir, that this bill will not pass. The effect of it will be, to throw an additional burthen on Centenary College. The Institution is already compelled to educate a certain number of youths at its own expense; and now, in addition, you wish to make it board them gratis. This comes with a bad grace from the State, particularly when we take into consideration the disaster which recently befel the College in the burning of a portion of its buildings.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Boatner. I hope the bill will pass. The State has granted $100,000 to the College, and I think that it can afford to bear this burthen, which is the only one we wish to impose on it. It is very little trouble simply to instruct the indigent youths whom we may send there. The evident intention of the law when the donation was made, was, that they should be maintained while at the College. In consequence of this not being done, the law is rendered almost nugatory—as those who would wish to avail themselves of its benefits cannot do so, on account of the expense. The late Governor called out attention to this fact in his message. The burning of the buildings attached to it, does not relieve the College from the duties imposed on it by law. Like all corporations, it should be bound by the spirit, and not by the letter of the law.

Mr. Rivers. I will show the gentleman that he has been arguing a subject which he does not understand I can inform him that the complement allowed to the State in that College is full—there being ten children there now, who are educated gratuitously. Why press the College now? Why entail additional expense on it when it is in difficulty, and has suffered losses?

The gentleman says that indigent persons cannot avail themselves of the law, because they are too poor to pay their board. Such is not the history of the indigent youth of this country. Delay action on this subject for a few days, and I will show that no complaint can justly be made against the Institution, when it has fulfilled its contract by educating ten indigent youths. If we pass this bill in the face of the fact of the destruction of a large amount of its property by fire, when we know that its agents are traversing the country soliciting subscriptions to relieve it from difficulty; when we have already passed a bill permitting the Institution to sell some of its surplus lands; we will be guilty of a piece of oppression and injustice.

Mr. Short—I don't know the extent of the gratuity granted to the College, but if it was $100,000, I do not think it can be considered a very great hardship to pass this bill.

Mr. Wickliffe—The reason the Committee on Education reported in favor of the bill was because last year the college received a very large grant from the State.

Mr. Rivers—I do not think it received a cent But if it did, what then? We made a contract, and now we come forward and say we let the college off too cheap; it must pay the board of those youths in addition to educating them. You might as well compel the college to clothe them, and furnish them cigar money, and cabs to ride about in at night.

The bill was referred to a special committee.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. Stewart, special messenger, informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills, with amendments of the House:

An act to incorporate the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company.

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastin, special messenger of the House, informed the Senate that the Speaker had signed the following bills.

An act to emancipate Laura Ann Robb, wife of Perry Dorman.

An act to amend an act for the uniform regulation of elections in the State of Louisiana, excepting the parishes of Orleans and Jefferson, approved June 1st, 1846.

An act to create an additional Justice of the Peace and one constable in and for the parish of Rapides.

An act to emancipate Nancy Virginia Peck.

An act to authorize Frederick Stockel, and Maria Prujer, his wife, to adopt Louisa Wilhelmina Garnur.

An act to emancipate Charles Johnson, of the parish of West Feliciana.

And he requested the signature of the President to the same.

Mr. Eastin, special messenger for the House, requested the concurrence of the Senate in the following bills:

An act to provide for deficiencies in appropriations for the year ending 31st March, 1853; and

An act relative to the Judiciary of the State, the First Judicial District excepted.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR.

Mr. Hatch, private secretary of the Governor, reported that the Governor had approved and signed the following acts.

An act entitled an act for the relief of the Surveyor General of the State of Louisiana.

An act to provide for deficiencies of appropriations in Criminal prosecutions up to the 31st of November, one thousand, eight hundred and fifty-two,

An act to emancipate John P. Montamat.

An act to emancipate John Rhodes, of the parish of Orleans.

An act to authorize Frederick Stockel and Marie Prujer, his wife, to adopt Louisa Wilhelmina Garnur.

An act to amend an act entitled an act for the uniform regulation of elections in the State of Louisiana, excepting the parishes of Orleans and Jefferson, approved June 1st, 1846.

An act to create an additional Justice of the Peace and one constable in and for the parish of Rapides.

An act to emancipate Laura Ann Robb, wife of Perry Dorman.

An act to emancipate Charles Johnson, of the parish of West Feliciana.

WEIGHERS OF COTTON AND SUGAR.

The Senate took up the following bill, which was read section by section.

An act to appoint weighers of sugar and cotton in and for the city of New Orleans.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That there shall be appointed every two years, by the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, twelve weighers of sugar and cotton for the city of New Orleans.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said weighers, after being duly sworn for the faithful discharge of their duties, as prescribed in this act, shall give security to the satisfaction of the State Treasurer, in the sum of five thousand dollars each for the said faithful discharge of their duties.

SEC. 3 Be it further enacted, &c., That each of said weighers is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint one or more sworn deputies to aid and assist in the discharge of the dutics of said office; and each weigher shall be fully responsible for the faithful conduct of his said deputy, under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said weighers of sugar and cotton are hereby authorized and required to make an allowance of tare, of ten per cent. on every hogshead of sugar weighed by them.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That each bale of cotton and each hogshead of sugar shall be branded with the name of the weigher, the gross weight, under the penalty of ten dollars for each hogshead of sugar or bale of cotton weighed and not branded by them, to be recovered from said weigher thus offending before any court of competent jurisdiction, for the benefit of any person who may sue for the same.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said weighers shall receive the following compensation, and no more, to be paid by the owner, consignee, or other person importing or bringing said cotton or sugar in the city of New Orleans, to wit: ten cents for the weighing of each hogshead of sugar and each bale of cotton.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said twelve weighers be, and they are hereby constituted a board, to be called "the Board of Public Weighers," which board shall elect their officers from their own body, to serve during their term of office, unless removed by a vote of the board, for cause.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That the duties of each of said Board of weighers shall be equal and uniform; and that at the end of each month, the amount of fees received by the said Board for weighing sugar and cotton, shall, after defraying all expenses, be equally divided among its members.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That all owners, consignees or other persons importing or bringing cotton or sugar into the city of New Orleans, shall cause the same to be weighed by one of the Board of Public Weighers, when sold or disposed of, under the penalty of ten dollars for each hogshead of sugar or bale of cotton not weighed and branded by said Board, to be recovered from said owner, consignee or other person so offending, before any court of competent jurisdiction, for the benefit of said Board of Public Weighers.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That all laws in contravention of the provisions of this act, be, and the same are hereby repealed.

SEC. 11. Be it further enacted, &c., That this act shall take effect thirty days after its passage.

Mr. King—I have not heard any desire expressed in the community in which I live, for a bill of this kind. At one time offices of this kind existed, but were afterwards abolished. I am opposed to this vacillating and shifting policy, and shall vote against the bill unless urgent reasons in favor of it are shown.

Mr. Nicholls—The bill is not intended for the benefit of New Orleans, but for that of the planters in the country. For my own part, I have not the slightest personal interest in it. I have no connection with planting in any way; but the planters in my parish earnestly requested me to draw up a bill of this kind, and endeavor to get it passed. It is intended to protect them against the frauds which they so frequently suffer.

Mr. Todd—I must express my opposition to this bill. It offers no greater security against fraud than the present system. The weighers appointed by the State are just as liable to commit error as any others. The system of State weighing has been tried and abandoned. It has been found that under it the temptation of fraud is greater than under the voluntary system. At present, the weighers are responsible. They are selected by the merchants, who, of course, choose those in whom they have the most confidence

Mr. Palfrey—We might as well try this experiment There is something wrong in the manner in which the weighing of sugar is now conducted in New Orleans. Some of our planters send their sugar direct to the North, and they find it weighs more there than the sugar sent to New Orleans, though the latter ought to have the advantage in that respect. This is a matter of surprise, and shows that there must be something wrong in New Orleans. I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. McCay—I can scarcely say that I am prepared to vote either for or against the bill, as I have not had it before me. My impressions in regard to it are formed from those I have derived from the same principle in regard to tobacco, but in 1848 or 1850 it was abolished. I have had occasion, on presenting the memorial against the abolition of the voluntary system, to compare the two. Without a single exception, every commission merchant, buyer and trader in tobacco in the city, has protested against the repeal of the voluntary sytem. The gentleman says the bill is not intended to benefit the merchants of New Orleans, but the planters of the country. In 1848, we had petitions from growers in all parts of the Western country, in favor of abolishing the inspection system. I am now prepared to show that they are opposed to the repeal of the voluntary system. There is, therefore, a perfect agreement and identity of interest between the producer and the factor. Another objection to the compulsory system is, that it will cost twice as much as the other. In Mississippi, they are not willing to confide the weighing of cotton to a board of this kind. In this State the planters have no more right to be in favor of it. I think merchants should be permitted to employ whom they please; but before I can decide how to vote, I wish to have the bill before me, that I may examine its details. Before I conclude, I wish to allude once more to the tobacco inspection. I have had occasion to examine the amount of reclamations, and I find it amounted, under the compulsory system, to ten times as much as under the voluntary system.

Mr. Nicholls—Did not the Inspector fix the quality?

Mr. McCay—Yes.

Mr. Nicholls—Then the objection does not apply. The simple question is, whether we shall have a responsible officer of the State to affix his mark to every hogshead of sugar and every bale of cotton, or whether the weighing shall be done by an irresponsible person.

Mr. McCay—I move to have the bill printed. I wish to examine and consider it before I vote.

Mr. Wickliffe—I have a statement to make I was requested by some of my constituents, at the last session, to introduce a bill of this kind. They say that their cotton weighs much more at home than it does in New Orleans, and that it is the general complaint all over the State. I shall vote for the bill, as I think it will do much good and little harm.

Mr. Nicholls—I am opposed to delaying this bill, as I am under the impression that it has been printed. The case of tobacco is not analogous to that of sugar and tobacco. It was the duty of the tobacco inspectors not only to weigh the article, but to classify it. The weigher under this bill was not to say whether the cotton or sugar is good or bad, middling or fair. The only question is, whether we shall have a responsible weigher of sugar and cotton. I have no practical experience myself, and no interest in the matter beyond my desire to serve the constituents who sent me here. They asked me to introduce a bill of this kind. They told me that there were frauds—that there was something rotten in New Orleans; and I wish to have them secured, as far as legislation can effect it. I believe this bill will have the effect of preventing fraud, and will be of great benefit to our planters.

Mr. Slack—I can speak for the sugar interest, and I do so with confidence, when I say that it needs some protection. As to the cotton interest, I cannot speak. What has been said in regard to tobacco does not apply in this case. Now we have nothing to depend on but the honesty of parties. The reclamations are no guarantee under the old system. I have purchased barrels of pork which the seller would not even guarantee to contain the article. This shows that under the voluntary system no certainty is obtained. We want to have responsible weighers appointed to mark each bale of cotton and hogshead of sugar, so that there can be no mistake about it. We have a right to claim this.

Mr. Todd—I trust that sufficient time has elapsed for us to know the evils of the voluntary system. The question is whether this bill will remedy them.

Mr. Nicholls—I am not particularly wedded to this bill. Let it be taken up section by section, and amended, so as to meet all objections. If ten cents is too much to pay, then give five; if twelve weighers are too few, let us have more. I am willing to have the bill modified, so as to make it suit.

Mr. King—I have a few words to say on this subject. In the first place, a principle is involved to which I am strongly attached—that of leaving every man to attend to his own affairs. We ought not to interfere any more than is absolutely necessary for the concerns of the government. I go for free trade in its widest sense, not only on the sea, but on the land. This bill is in conflict with that principle. What is the present system? Gentlemen say that many frauds are committed under it. But as the gentleman from Morehouse has asked, is there any certainty that frauds will not be also perpetrated under the bill proposed? Now the buyer and seller have the right to select their weigher. It is the same as in other transactions—just as in a horse trade. If all parties agree it is well. If not there is no trade. I do not see why they should come to the Legislature and ask us to interfere in order to settle their difficulties. Let them do that themselves. The gentleman says that frauds are committed. If so I advise him to change his commission merchant. If the merchant stands by and sees the planter defrauded he is a villain and ought not to be trusted. If no honest men can be found in New Orleans let the gentleman come to the city and sell his sugar himself. I am in favor of leaving the whole thing in the hands of the buyer and seller where it naturally belongs. Is a man supposed to have superior capacity for weighing because he is appointed by the State? Do you not see that if you create an officer whose word is law, and from whom there can be no appeal, you at once give a motive for fraud and an incentive to bribery?—You give an opportunity for bribery too in order to secure a mark over or under the true weight. Now the whole matter is left to the buyer and seller, and the weigher acts as their agent. As for New Orleans if I had come and asked for the appointment of ten or a dozen weighers it might have been said that I wanted to get offices for some persons. But I advise what is for the interest of nine-tenths of the commission merchants in the city. The present system protects the planter, as he is represented by the New Orleans commission merchant. If gentlemen have been unfortunate in choosing their merchants they had better change. The salaries of these twelve weighers will amount to at least $15000 each. If I had asked for the appointment of a dozen officers at an expense of $15000 per annum for each, I might have been charged with asking more for New Orleans than she is entitled to. The weighing of sugar will amount to about $24000, and of cotton to $15000 per annum. This is certainly a round sum and worth contending for. If I thought I could find favor with the Governor I would become an applicant myself.

(Here some gentleman stated that the rate was now fixed at 10 cents by the Chamber of Commerce.)

Mr. King—The Chamber of Commerce does not make laws

The custom is to charge a certain rate, but there is nothing compulsory in this. I can say also that there are laws against false weighing.

Mr. Wickliffe—The gentleman says that he represents nine-tenths of the commission merchants of New Orleans. I can tell him that we represent ten-tenths of the planters of Louisiana. If the planter wishes this done—if he wants a responsible man appointed to weigh his cotton and sugar; what right has the commission merchant to complain? He does not have to pay the tax. The gentleman says there are laws against false weighing. So there are against all species of fraud. But here we have some security—some responsibility. The weigher is compelled to give security. If he weigh falsely the surety is responsible. I say that the commission merchant does not represent the planting interest. The moment the crop is shipped it is the interest of the commission merchants to make as much off of it as they can. I do not say that they commit fraud; but I deny that their interests are in unison with those of the planters.

Mr. Mouton—I consider the bill a good one except in the large sum paid. It is necessary for the good of the planting interest. But $1500 a year is too much though it comes out of the planting interest. The gentleman advises us, if we are defrauded, to change our commission merchant, or sell our sugar ourselves. He knows that we cannot do it. The commission merchant is a necessary evil. I hope we may get rid of him when the railroads are finished and we can go to New Orleans with more facility.

Mr. Taylor moved to have the bill printed, and make it the order of the day for Wednesday next.

Mr. Nicholls moved to lay the motion indefinitely on the table, and called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Griffin, Lacey, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack and Wickliffe—12 yeas; and Messrs. Evans, King, Lauve, Lewis, McCay, Taylor and Todd—7 nays.

Consequently the motion to print, &c., was lost.

On motion of Mr. Taylor to strike out of the first section, "twelve weighers of sugar and cotton," and insert twenty,

Mr. Taylor called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. King, Lauve, Lewis, Mouton, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack and Taylor—9 yeas; and Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Evans, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, McCay, Neal, Short, Todd and Wickliffe—11 nays.

Consequently the motion to strike out was lost.

On motion to adopt the 1st section; Mr. Lacey called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, Lewis, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor and Wickliffe—15 yeas; and Messrs. Evans, King, Lauve, McCay and Todd—5 nays.

Consequently the 1st section was adopted.

On motion, the 3d section was amended by inserting in the 2d line, after the word "appoint," the words "one or more," and on motion it was adopted as amended.

On motion for the adoption of the 4th section, Mr. King called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor and Wickliffe—14 yeas; and Messrs. Evans, King, Lauve, Lewis, McCay and Todd—6 nays.

Consequently the 4th section was adopted.

On motion of Mr. Palfrey, the vote just given was reconsidered.

Mr. Palfrey moved to strike out the whole of the 4th section.

Mr. Griffin called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Kemp, King, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—17 yeas; and Messrs. Evans, Griffin and Mouton—3 nays.

Consequently the 4th section was rejected.

Mr. Griffin moved to lay the bill on the table indefinitely, and called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Evans, Griffin, King, Lauve, McCay and Todd—6 yeas; and Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Kemp, Lacey, Lewis, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor and Wickliffe—14 nays.

Consequently the motion to lay on the table was lost.

On motion of Mr. Taylor, the words "without any allowance of scalage on the hogshead of sugar," were inserted in the 5th section, 3d line, after the word "weigher," and the word "gross," was inserted in same line; and the section was adopted as amended.

On motion, the word "ten" was stricken out of the 6th section, 5th line, and "eight," was inserted.

Mr. Mouton moved to strike out "eight," and called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Griffin, Lauve, McCay, Mouton, Neal, Palfrey, Taylor, Todd and Wickliffe—10 yeas; and Messrs. Dupre, Evans, Kemp, King, Lacey, Lewis, Nicholls, Rivers, Short and Slack.

There being a tie, the President voted in the negative—11 nays.

Consequently the motion to strike out was lost, and the words "eight cent for a hogshead of sugar and five cents for a bale of cotton" was adopted.

The 6th section was then adopted as amended.

The 7th section was then adopted.

On motion, the 8th section was rejected.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, the vote just given on the rejection of the 8th section, was reconsidered, and on motion, it was again adopted.

The 9th section was then adopted.

On motion, the bill then passed as amended.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to reconsider the vote given on the final passage of the bill; Mr. Lacey called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Evans, King and Todd—3 yeas; and Messrs. Boatner, Dupre, Griffin, Kemp, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack and Wickliffe—15 nays.

Consequently the Senate refused to reconsider

On motion, the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, 9 o'clock, A. M.

TUESDAY, April 12th 1853.

THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. Wickliffe called up the following bill:

An act relative to the Judiciary of the State—the First Judicial District excepted.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That there shall be elected in and for each Judicial District in the State (the First Judicial District excepted) by the qualified voters thereof, one Judge, for the term of four years, who shall receive a salary of twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, payable quarterly, on his own warrant, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. Mouton—I move to strike out of the first section, 8th line, the words 'twenty-five hundred dollars,' and insert 'three thousand dollars.'

I have voted in favor of giving thirty-five hundred dollars to the Judge in the city. The system we have adopted will increase the duties of the country Judges, and we should therefore increase their salaries. There is no reason why we should give so much more to the city than to the country Judges. The latter will have nearly as much to do as the former; they will require as much legal talent, and as great attainments. There is no reason, then, why they should be placed on a lower level.

Mr. Todd. I am opposed to the amendment. The Judges will have very little, if any more to do. If we have given too much to the City Judges, that is no reason why we should give too much to those in the country. We can obtain the best talent for twenty-five hundred dollars—of that I am convinced.

Mr. Short. If the Judges were not required to hold four instead of two terms, I should not be in favor of an increase of their salaries. But as we have abandoned the large district system, refused to establish Probate Courts, and provided for four terms a year, we have thrown more labor on the Judges. Instead of giving less than in New Orleans, where the Judges are never compelled to leave home, and have a comparatively easy time, we ought to give more.

Mr. Boatner—Under the system we have adopted, we have only one District more than under the old one, and we have imposed but few additional duties on the Judges. They have been in the habit of taking $2500, and they are just as well able, and will be just as willing to take it under this system. A great outcry has been raised by some gentlemen against the supposed immense expense which would be entailed on us by the large district system. They have talked much of economy, and of the policy of saving a few thousand dollars, and now the first thing they propose is an additional expenditure of eight or nine thousand dollars. There is not the slightest reason for this. The duties to be performed are very slightly increased, and there are few districts of more than three parishes. The labor can be performed easily by a competent man. The Judges in the country will have much less to do than those in the city, and twenty-five hundred dollars is a sum amply large enough. It will command just as good talent as a greater sum.

Mr. Mouton—I know it is generally supposed that all measures which have a tendency to increase the expenses of the State are unpopular. They are seized on by politicians and ridden as electioneering hobbies. But I am not afraid to take the responsibility when it is necessary in order to secure competent officers—when it is to obtain the services of those who are to decide on our rights and liberties. These are serious duties, and involve heavy responsibilities. They are not to be lightly entrusted to the hands of those who may be incompetent to perform them. We must have men to discharge them who are men of standing, of intellect, of acquirements. The only way to secure such is by offering a sufficient inducement in the shape of giving a good salary. Three thousand dollars is certainly little enough. The argument that twenty-five hundred is enough is based on the fact that we have had some good judges at that salary. It is true we had good ones in some districts. But that is not a good argument. We want good judges in all the districts. I have voted for thirty-five hundred in the city. Is there any good reason why we should give a thousand dollars less in the country? Have the judges not the same duties to perform? Must they not have the same talent? Must they not be in all respects as competent men? And if so, why should we make a distinction in the amount of their salaries?

Mr. Wickliffe—I am surprised at the objections urged by the gentleman from Catahoula. He was an advocate of the large district system, the expenses of which would have amounted to over a hundred thousand dollars per annum. Now, when we have increased the duties of the Judges, the gentleman raises an objection because we insist on giving them $3000 a year. Taking for granted that the salary be fixed at $3000, and that the gentlemen go with us for economy, there will still be a saving of sixty thousand dollars, or about sixty per cent. on the system which he has advocated with so much earnestness. On the score of economy the gentleman certainly ought to go with us. In my district, the Judge can scarcely keep up with the business. It will take him nine months incessant labor to catch up and he is determined to do it if he is so fortunate as to be elected by the people.

Mr. Palfrey. I am in favor of the amendment. The gentleman from Morehouse says that the Judges will have but little more work to do. If they have any more, we ought to give them a larger salary.—We should make the payment proportionate to the work. It is also necessary that we should have experienced and competent men. We must offer a sufficient inducement to cause them to abandon their practice and go upon the bench. When a lawyer gives up his practice, even to accept a judicial station, he leaves it forever. He cannot recover it, if at any time he may go back to the bar. He does not take it up where he left off—he must commence entirely anew,

I have not the slightest interest in this matter myself. I am no lawyer. But I wish to see the laws well administered, and to have competent men on the bench—men who will be an ornament to our Judiciary, and whose opinions will command the respect of the community. There is only one way in which this can be done. We cannot hope to get good judges by offering low salaries. We must pay a fair sum, and then we shall succeed in obtaining good judges.

Mr. Todd. There has been too much delay on this subject already. If we adopt the amendment we shall occasion still further delay. The House may not adopt, and then there will be a difference which cannot be settled without a great waste of time. The gentlemen speak of the great increase of duties under this system. I contend that there is actually no increase. The holding of four terms a year does not increase the labor, it only secures greater dispatch. There is no reason why we in Louisiana should pay more than is paid anywhere else. The duties in other States are more onerous, and I have yet to learn that we have abler Judges here. The cost of living is no higher. It is time for us to begin the work of retrenchment. It is time that we listen to the demands of the people for a more economical administration of our affairs. Are all persons so mercenary that they seek an office, or consent to accept it, only on account of the salary attached to it? Is there no other object; no greater motive—no higher ambition? We ought it is true, so to graduate salaries as to obtain the best talent, and at that point we ought to stop. There is no reason why we should increase the salaries of our Judges now. The amount paid has been heretofore found sufficient, and it ought to be so hereafter.

Mr. Boatner—I know not on what the gentleman from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) has based his figures. My calculations bring me to an entirely different result. The difference between his estimate and mine is $70,000. The large district system would cost only $80,000 instead of $150.000 as the gentleman said. I advocated the large district system because I was pursuaded that the people wished it. Others thought differently, and I have no doubt they were sincere in their convictions. When the people desire a thing, it is the duty of a representative to try to obtain it. He reflects the opinions of his constituents; not his own. I contend that there is no reason for an increase in the salaries of the Judges. The districts are no larger than they were before; there is no greater extent of territory to be travelled over by each Judge, and the duties to be performed are not increased. It is true that they are compelled to hold four terms a year; but gentlemen will remember that the judiciary system was first established under the Convention of 1845; the Judges then had to hold four terms, till the lawyers petitioned that the number might be reduced as there was not sufficient business to warrant holding so many. Then there were lawyers willing and anxious to be Judges. They were glad enough to take a seat on the bench without grumbling at the amount of the salary. There was no argument that we could not procure competent men without increasing the salary. If the gentlemen on the other side will show us a single good reason, I might be induced to vote with them. But I must be permitted to think that the salaries are high enough when I find men of ability on the bench—when I see that two of them have been elevated to the Supreme Bench, which I should think is a sufficiently satisfactory test of ability. This shows that we can get competent men at the present rates. The gentleman from West Feliciana (Mr. Wickliffe) speaks of the great labor imposed on the Judge in his district. I have no doubt that his statement is correct; but that district must be an exceptional case. The Senator from Morehouse (Mr. Todd) has told us that in his district the Court sometimes does not sit more than a week during the year. And yet you propose to give the Judge three thousand dollars—three thousand dollars for a weeks' work. Does not that appear to be rather extravagant? Does it not appear a little too high? Ought we to pay so much for so little? I repeat that I can see no reason for an increase of salary. I think I voted against giving the Judges in the city $3,500; if not, I ought to have done it.

Mr. Short—I have a word to say in reply. The gentleman asks what additional burthens are imposed on the Judges. If the gentleman had to go twice to mill where he only went once before, would he not consider it an additional burthen? If he had to swim a bayou to-day, twice as large as it was yesterday, would he not think he had to work twice as hard? Now, what is the fact in this case? In my district, composed of the parishes of Tensas, Madison and Carroll, two terms a year are held in each parish. When this judiciary system was established under the Constitution of 1845, four terms a year were held in each. That plan was afterwards abandoned. Does the gentleman know that some lawyers in that district who would like to have the honors of the judgeship are actually too poor to take it? And now, when we have increased the number to four, acting like the Egyptians towards the Israelites, who demanded double the quantity of brick for the same quantity of straw, we demand double the amount of work for a decreased salary. And this from country gentlemen whose expenses incidental to the office must be very heavy. For instance, in my district the Judge must take a steamboat to go from one parish to another. This costs six dollars each way, which is a considerable item in itself. Did the gentleman ever calculate these expenses? If so, let him reflect that they are now doubled, and that the labor is doubled; that the unfortunate Judge in the course of his peregrinations has to put up with all sorts of inconveniences, to lodge in out of the way taverns whose monotony is only varied by the lively attacks of bed bugs and fleas, and to encounter hardships innumerable. (Mr. Wickliffe—Let the gentleman speak for his own region.) I speak of those places I have been in the habit of visiting as a practising lawyer since 1836. Now, you propose to double all this and give only $2500 per annum.

The amendment was adopted and the bill passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastin, special messenger, requested the signature of the President to a bill entitled "An Act to divide the State into Judicial Districts."

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate in a bill entitled "An Act to reserve from sales, location, or pre-emption, certain lands belonging to the State."

THE CITY JUDICIARY.

Mr. King called up a bill entitled, "An Act to organize District Courts for the parish and city of New Orleans."

An amendment was offered referring the trial of minor cases to the Recorders.

Mr. Todd—There is a constitutional objection to the amendment. The Constitution says that all trials must be on information or indictment.

Mr. McCay—The object of the amendment is merely to give the Recorders jurisdiction over these cases, which does not necessarily imply that the trials are not to be by information or indictment.

The amendment was adopted.

"THE BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE RECORDATION OF MORTGAGES, &c."

In accordance with previous motion, Mr. Monton moved to reconsider the vote adopting the bill for the recordation of mortgages in favor of minors and married women.

Mr. Nicholls—I trust the motion to reconsider the vote adopting the bill, the title of which is "A bill for the recordation of the evidences of mortgages in favor of minors and married women," will prevail. There has been no bill of so important a nature before this Legislature; no bill in which the people of the State are so generally or so immediately interested—none which so much requires careful inquiry and reflection—none on which hasty and injurious legislation would produce such wide-spread ruin and disaster. Yet, strange to say, this important bill was suffered to pass without amendment or debate. A radical, an important change in our laws and institutions is proposed, and no reason in favor of the change is given to the people. Why is this? Is it on account of the eulogy on the bill pronounced by the Senator from New Orleans, (Mr. King)?

Is the Senate convinced that it has at last found that monster which the world ne'er saw before—a faultless act? Is it because the bill has received the sanction of Mr. Roselius and other lawyers, that we are to pass it without discussion—that we are not to scrutinize its provisions? Are we to submit to them without exercising our own judgments? Is no voice to be raised here? I hope for my part that the sober second thought will prevail, and that the bill will be reconsidered. I must say that gentlemen have mistaken the shadow for the substance. In wishing to record the evidences of a certain kind of mortgages, so that the honest purchaser might be protected, they have gone much beyond their intention. The title of the bill is "an act for the recordation of the evidences of mortgages in favor of minors and married women." That is certainly unobjectionable. If the body of the bill corresponded with the title, who could say a word against it? It is known, and well known, too, that the people of the State desire the rights of minors and married women to be protected. No representative who should stand up against this desire, and attempt to break down the safeguards by which those rights are now protected, could go home and face his constituents. It has been decided that a system of tacit mortgages is the safest and best method of enforcing and protecting those rights. The system is as old at our jurisprudence. We have lived under it till the present time. We have grown up with it, we have become accustomed to it by long usage, and we should not abolish it till we are certain that we can replace it by a better system. I do not deny that sometimes injustice and hardship may be the result of its operation; that occasionally, perhaps frequently, ruin may be entailed by it upon innocent persons. But these are evils which it is the part of a wise Legislator to correct and remedy. I stand ready to support any bill which will effect it, by the conversion of unknown into known mortgages. I will support a bill compelling curators and tutors to record all papers from which mortgages may arise in every parish where property under their charge is situated, and I would be willing to impose a severe penalty on them for neglecting to comply with the obligation. While I am prepared to go thus far for the protection of the honest purchaser, I cannot forget that minors and married women have rights which shall not be sacrificed by my vote. What would be the effect of this bill? It says to husbands and curators, and all persons having charge of the estates of minors and married women, if you do not do your duty, if you fail to comply with the obligations which the law imposes on you, the blow shall fall, not on you who are the guilty parties, but on those who are innocent. What matter if they cannot act for themselves, what matter if the fault be with others, they must suffer because it is so nominated in the law. Louisiana has seen Northern lights in the firmament, and she must change her policy. Are you prepared for this? Will you consent that if a worthless husband neglects his duties, the wife shall lose her mortgage? That if a clerk be careless and omit to record the papers, the minor shall be left to the tender mercies of interested and irresponsible parties? Then, indeed, the law would be a mockery. But further: The author of the bill does not seem to be satisfied with depriving the married women and the minors of all rights except those which the husband or tutor may be pleased to grant by obeying this law—but the revolution must go backward; it must even affect all those mortgages now in existence. It matters not if the husband has squandered the property of the wife, if he has failed to do what the law requires of him; it matters not that these rights are vested rights, and that the Constitution declares vested rights shall not be divested, they must all give way before this perfect act. They must yield to the new doctrines, and submit to be swept away! I do not believe the Senate understood the extent to which it was going when it passed the bill. Let us examine it a little further. It provides that on a certain day the clerks of courts shall take down their musty records and examine them for the purpose of ascertaining who have been tutors, curators, etc. They must then issue citations summoning the said tutors and curators to record the evidences of the mortgages existing on their property. If they fail to apply, new ones are to be appointed. Have you reflected on the probable consequences of this plan? Can you tell what will be its result? Where is the security if the tutor has removed from the State and cannot comply with the summons? Does the mortgage of the minor fail? Does he lose his rights? We should be almost forced to apply to a Yankee to guess for us where a record should be made in such a case as the bill says it must be done in every parish where it is thought the absent tutor or curator has property. And again, where is the security for the minor when the tutor has taken possession of the property and spent it? What remains to him under the law? If a man marry a widow, what security has she under this act? For my part, I think the present system, with all its faults, real and imaginary, is better than the one proposed by this bill. I am not indissolubly wedded to the tacit mortgage system. I am, on the contrary, in favor of recording the evidences of all mortgages. I am in favor of procuring for the purchaser some security in his purchase. But I am not in favor of saying to husbands, tutors, curators, etc., you must do so and so, and if you neglect to obey, the punishment shall fall upon innocent parties. I trust, sir, that the bill will be reconsidered.

Mr. Lacey—I do not intend to discuss this subject at length, yet I cannot omit to offer a few remarks in favor of the bill. It is agreed that the bill is of a very important nature, and that it is intended to remedy evils of which everybody acknowledges the existence. I can believe the gentleman, when he says he is in favor of some principle of the kind involved in the bill. But I trust if he is really in favor of the principle, if he sincerely wishes to remedy the evils which now provoke so much complaint, and produce so much injury, I hope that he will not persist in advocating a course which will insure the defeat of the bill. If we reconsider the bill, it will be equivalent to its defeat. But if improvement be needed, I have no doubt the Senate will willingly aid the gentleman in framing an additional bill. When this bill was before the Judiciary Committee, we bestowed every attention upon it. It met the approval of the majority of the Committee, and of many eminent lawyers who, as the gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) has informed us, were called upon for their opinions on it. That it attains the end for which it was framed, I think must be admitted. If it is imperfect, it is only what we may expect from a human production. Where can we find a perfect production of man? Where can we find an infallible human being? If the gentleman wishes to have any thing done to preserve the rights of minors and married women, I will go with him, provided he will embody his ideas in another bill. He endeavors to impress us with a reverence for the present system on account of its age. I, sir, care nothing for the age of a measure or a system. I care not that an institution may come down to us touched by the hand of time. That has no influence with me. If in the progress of ideas and the march of improvement it becomes necessary to wipe out the records of the past, I am willing to do it. The tacit mortgage system is a bad system. That is acknowledged. It is admitted to be our interest to invite capital to the State. But we cannot do this as long as the tacit mortgage system, that incumbrance which rests upon us, rises up and interferes with our plans and our prosperity. As long as it exists, can we expect to induce capitalists to bring their funds here for investment?

Our true policy is to give capitalists such a lien as will secure them, and which cannot be removed without their consent. When we do this, we accomplish all that we can desire—we obtain the great desideratum. What will be the effect of this bill? We must decide on doing one of two things. We must continue the present system, by which the avenues of our prosperity are choked up, and which covers fraud of the grossest kind, or we must compel tutors and all persons having charge of the estates of others, to give notice of all liens existing on their property. Is there any want of equity in that? Is there any hardship in compelling a man to place on record the evidence of mortgages existing on his property? It seems to me that this is a thing which ought to be done. I should prefer to require this to a continuance of that system which encourages fraud, which retards our prosperity, and which is opposed to the best interests of Louisiana. I trust the bill will pass. If we add strength to it, if we can guard the interests of the minor better by a supplemental bill, I promise to go with the gentleman in supporting it. But I hope he will not insist on killing the bill. I do not wish to interfere with the rights of minors and married women. I do not wish to detract any thing from the security which they enjoy at present. I am willing to protect them to the full extent of our power—as they are protected in other States. I am willing to protect them in any manner except in this which is so injurious. I am willing to do anything to secure the widow and the helpless orphan. But I cannot do what I consider countenances a system of fraud, and is opposed to the interests of Louisiana. I am in favor of protecting labor and capital, and when we can achieve that, I hope it will be done. I have no desire to interfere with the legislation of the other House. I never cross that door. I never show my face in the other branch of the Legislature to defeat or to insure the success of any bill whatever. I am willing to leave this bill in the hands of the other House, and I trust that a due appreciation of the interests of the State will force it through.

Mr. Short. The Senator from St. Mary, (Mr. Nicholls,) attributes an object to the bill which is not in it, and which I would not sustain myself. I do not go for impossibilities. I only go for recording the evidences of the mortgages which the law gives to minors and married women on the property of husbands, tutors, curators and others. But when a man marries a woman, there is no written act, nothing giving a mortgage which can be reduced. Therefore the law is new. The question is, shall we enter on the work of reform now or postpone it till a late period.

Mr. Wickliffe. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose a man gives ten thousand dollars to a woman in the presence of her husband. A receipt is given for the money. No mortgage results from this. She then, in some other place, gives the money to her husband, That moment a mortgage attaches.

Mr. Nicholls. What if the receipt be lost?

Mr. Short. The gentleman knows that lost documents are excepted.

Mr. Nicholls. Then I am opposed to the bill because it will give rise to more legal distinctions, and litigation, of which we certainly have an ample share at present. If the lawyers should find their business failing, and should call a convention to devise some means of resuscitating it, they could not hit on a better plan than is presented by this bill. I shall then move to amend the bill so as to make it conform to this peculiarity.

Mr. Short. That is an object which ought to be used elsewhere. My object is to supply the great wants of the State. There is not much difficulty in doing this. Let us take one step in advance. Let us hold up a light for those who are to come after us even if it be only a farthing candle. The objection that the present system has existed a long time is threadbare. We may say, with the poet,

——In this
The plain old form of things is much disfigured.

But it is necessary it should be disfigured. There are evils which must be corrected. We must at least take one step. We must have some light. If we take the first step now we shall find the second easier.

The bill was reconsidered.

Mr. Martin. I presume the object of reconsidering the bill was to give room to amendment so as to render it less objectionable. With that object I shall move to recommit it, in order that the proper amendments may be made.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

J. D. Steward, special messenger of the Senate, informed the House of the concurrence of the Senate to the following entitled bills:

An act to define the manner in which the votes cast at all elections for Attorney General, Secretary of State, State Treasurer and Superintendent of Public Education shall be counted, and the result of said elections made known.

An act to provide for the manner of cancelling the bonds and mortgages given by State Tax Collectors.

An act for the relief of Charles W. Boyce, of the Parish of Rapides.

An act to authorise married women, absent from the State, to appoint agents in certain cases.

An act for the relief of Henry Parish and John Moore Norman, of the parish of Orleans.

And he requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills:

An act to authorize District Judges to recuse themselves in certain cases.

An act to provide for the trial of recused cases.

An act further to regulate and provide for the payment of the expenses of the State Library.

An act for the relief of B. K. Stephens.

An act for the relief of Wm. H. Dinkgrave, Collector of Taxes for the parish of Ouachita for the years 1849 and 1850, and for the relief of his securities.

An act for the relief of E. K. Skillman.

An act to provide for the removal of all cases now pending in the Supreme Court of the State, under the Constitution of 1845, to the Supreme Court to be established under the new Constitution.

An act to incorporate the Grosse Tete and Baton Rouge Plank Road Company.

And he requested the signature of the Speaker to the following enrolled bill:

An act to authorise Theodore Helveston and Ann Eliza Peel, his wife, to adopt Thomas Whelan, an orphan.

And he informed the House that the President had signed the following enrolled bill:

An act to divide the State into Judicial Districts.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastin, special messenger of the House, requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following entitled bills:

An act to authorise the Recorder in and for the parish of Carroll to appoint a deputy

An act granting to Julien Deshautelle the right of keeping a ferry in the parish of Avoyelles.

An act to change the name of Solomon Zucker.

Resolution requesting the Governor to obtain, if possible, from the Secretary of War, certified copies of all maps, surveys and levels, &c.

An act to regulate corporations for the transmission of intelligence by magnetic telegraph.

And he informed the Senate that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act for the payment of the commissions due the Register and Receiver of the Land Office at Baton Rouge upon the sale of the internal improvement lands.

An act for the payment of the commissions due the Register and Receiver of the Land Office at Baton Rouge on sales of Swamp lands.

An act for the relief of the School Directors of De Soto parish.

AN ACT TO REDUCE THE TIME FOR CONFIRMING JUDGMENT.

Mr. Todd moved to reconsider the vote of yesterday, on a bill entitled

An act to amend article 312 of the Code of Practice.

The vote was reconsidered.

Mr. Todd. What objection can there be to making this amendment? Suppose, for instance, the Court meets on Monday: this gives the defendant till Saturday. He can be prepared just as well on Wednesday, if he has any answer at all, and no injury would result to any one. I will show how the present system operates in some of the country parishes. Cases are tried on Monday, and the docket is cleared. There is then nothing to do till Saturday. The jury is kept in attendance the whole time. Then jury cases come up, and the whole business goes over till the next term. This is a serious disadvantage to certain sections of the State. I hope the bill will pass.

The bill passed.

SECOND READING.

An act to exempt from taxation the property of the Board of Trustees for Presbyterian publications in New Orleans, and all other similar institutions of every denomination in the State.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to lay the bill indefinitely on the table.

Mr. King. I object to laying the bill on the table. Here is an institution of a peculiar character coming within the same category as churches and other similar institutions which have always been exempted from taxation. The charter forbids it engaging in anything for the sake of profit. Why then refuse to grant this small favor? Why make an exception against it, when you have exempted twenty corporations from taxation on not half as good grounds as are presented by this one Some persons may object to the word 'Presbyterian.' For my part, I have no sectarian prejudices. In my capacity as a Senator, all sects are the same to me, and have equal claims. I do not see why we should make distinctions on account of a name. When we are so generous in some things, I do not think we ought to be parsimonious in this. It is exactly analogous to what we have done in other cases of a similar kind—for the 'Odd Fellows,' 'Masons,' and others.

Mr. Palfrey. The gentleman says that churche are exempte dfrom taxation. Is he sure that such i the fact?

Mr. King Yes, sir.

The motion to lay the bill on the table was lost.

Mr. Mouton offered an amendment, providing that the same privilege be extended to all institutions of a similar kind, of whatever denomination.

Mr. McCay. I am informed that the Finance Committee reported adversely to this bill. I wish to say that I was not present when this was done, nor was I consulted on the subject. I knew nothing of the action of the committee, till I was informed of it by my colleague.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Clifton. I requested the Clerk to notify the members of the Committee that there was to be a meeting on that evening. Whether the member from New Orleans was present or not, I don't recollect; but I remember that there was a quorum of the committee

The amendment was adopted, and the bill passed.

An act providing for the recovery of damages in certain cases, was taken up.

Mr. King. There are serious objections to this bill. It is of a much more important character than at first glance meets the eye. It will make it an impossibility for any company or man of wealth to run a railroad car or a steamboat. It does, or pretends to do, what is beyond the limits of human power—it estimates and establishes the value of human life. It thus brings us upon ground which no human imagination can compass. You may talk of two or three thousand dollars—but sometimes two or three millions would not suffice, if for every little accident a suit for damages is to be brought. If the parties be poor on one side, and rich on the other, the damages would be assessed at such an enormous amount, that no person would be willing to own stock in a steamboat or railroad company. It would impede commerce, and be fraught with dangerous consequences. I raise my voice against it here, and I hope the Senate will unite with me in killing it.

Mr. Lacey. The gentleman opposes the bill on account of the quantum of damages. He knows very well that the damages are not settled in the bill.—That is for the Courts to settle. Whether it be one dollar or a million, the Courts will decide how much is to be paid when an individual loses his life through the carelessness of a railroad or steamboat company, or its agents.

The gentleman thinks that the good of internal improvements is in opposition to this bill, and consequently wants to let railroad companies do as they please, because if we constrain them, we may interfere with commerce.

The gentleman is generally right, but in this case he has fallen into an error. He opposes this bill because it might give damages to the amount of a million for the destruction of a life. Because it may impede internal improvements, which I don't admit, we must give these companies the right to kill as many as they please without being held responsible for it. This bill is founded on the law of Illinois, and is, I think, a good one. The Supreme Court has decided that if a spark of life remain, there is a ground of action; but if the person be killed there is none. That is to say, the greater the injury, the less the damage. I should imagine the principle ought to be, the greater the injury, the greater damage. That is the doctrine of common sense. If a man is killed, his widow and children, who have so vast an interest in his life, ought to have a right of action. Justice and equity require it, but the Supreme Court has decided against it. I therefore think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. McCay—This subject was fully reviewed in the case of Hucbech against the Carollton Railroad Company. It was there declared that under the law of Louisiana, where a man is killed, no right of action exists against the railroad company. This bill is the same as the present law of England, and the law of Illinois was taken from the English. Both of them were noticed in the decision of the Supreme Court. There is no reason why the family of an individual, dependent on him for support and protection, should not have a right of action for the loss of his life. It is true there is no way of estimating exactly the amount of damage, but there are other cases where there is also no certain measure of damage As I have said, this is the law of England and Illinois. How far it is carried I do not know. It is not the law of Mississippi, because the Supreme Court referred to decisions there declaring that there was no right of action in such cases. The Court here has decided that if a man live twenty minutes, just long enough to consult an attorney and file a petition, the right of action is transmitted. But if he is killed at once, no right exists. In New Orleans many cases occur in which we ought to be able to reach these cases civilly, as the criminal courts are not willing to let us touch them.

Mr. King—This very case shows the impropriety of opening the courts to litigation of this kind. The man Huebech was an engineer on the Carrollton Railroad, who blew himself up by his own carelessness. The wife brought suit for damages, and recovered $5000 in the District Court. And what was the plea? Why that the Company should have had an engine which would not blow up. Take the case of a man who owns a steamboat. He is not on board; by some accident perhaps unavoidable, she blows up; every widow made by the catastrophe sets an enormous value on the life of her husband. She accordingly brings suit, and because the defendant happens to be a wealthy man, recovers enormous damages. It is obvious that such a system would render property in steamboats very insecure. In the case alluded to by my colleague, an engineer blew himself up Under the influence of that false sentiment which is ruining society, you will say, oh! we must give the widow something. And so you give her a large sum of money, which you take from the Company, in order that she may deck her person, instead of mourning for her husband. The gentleman says that the Courts will assess damages. They will not do it, if we do not. The doctrine of the Romans, from whose law ours is derived, was that no value could be set on a man's life. The law of Moses, which is of divine authority, says, "life for life," such is the law that was given from Mount Sinai. Such has been the law till this sentiment for the weeping widow wishes to let them estimate the lives of their husbands in dollars and cents. Those who take life ought to be punished. If they are guilty they can be. If they take life maliciously, it is murder: if negligence, it is manslaughter These are crimes which the criminal law punishes. But I am opposed to interfering with commerce by rewarding the widow according to the value she may set on the life of her husband.

Mr. Short—I have a word to say. The gentleman from New Orleans appears to be laboring under a slight mistake. He seems to be under apprehension that if this bill passes, engineers will set to work to blow themselves up for the benefit of themselves or families. The gentleman knows well enough that if a man were to blow himself up, no right of action would accrue. The intention of the bill is to provide that an action may lie against owners of steamboats and railroad cars, when lives are destroyed through their negligence, or that of their agents. It is not nearly as probable that a person will blow himself up, as that he will be blown up through the negligence of others—owners or agents. Why not then give a right of action. If a person be killed does not his family lose the benefit of his labor and skill? And have not his family an interest in him which is affected to that extent? Are they not dependent on him for support? If they have no right of action they should have. I do not see the reason for the distinction which is made. If a man be mangled and not killed, he has a right of action; but if he be killed, he has none—he is not injured so much by the greater misfortune, as by the lesser. I hope sir, the bill will be sustained

The bill passed.

WEDNESDAY, April 13th, 1853.

Mr. Clifton submitted the following letter and statement of the Cashier of the Louisiana State Bank, which was read, and on motion of Mr. Clifton, 500 copies were ordered to be printed:

LOUISIANA STATE BANK,
New Orleans, April, 9, 1853,

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana:

Gentlemen:

In the statement sent to the Joint Committee on Banks and Banking, an error was inadvertently made of over $300,000, by which the assets of this bank are undervalued so much. This error is occasioned by our having omitted from the statement of the condition of the Branch at Baton Rouge, the amount due to that Branch by the mother Bank. This was a clerical error, and which will become apparent by reference to the general statement of the bank and branches I at the same time furnished said committee.

I have the honor to enclose herewith a corrected statement in lieu of the one containing the error, and respectfully ask that it be submitted therefor.

I am, very respectfully
Your obedient servant,

Mr. Clifton—The report of the committee seems to be correct. It is based on data furnished by the Bank itself, and the committee is not responsible for the error.

I move that 500 copies of the letter be printed for the justification of the committee.

Mr. Wickliffe, from the Committee on Public Education, made the following report:

To the Honorable W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate.

The Committee on Public Education, to which was referred the memorial, signed by numerous good citizens of the city of New Orleans, asking for a more equal distribution of the money now most wisely appropriated by the State of Louisiana to the support of free public school education, and setting forth what may be considered the hardships growing out of the present mode of distributing the funds arising from taxation, and devoted to common school education, beg leave most respectfully to report:

Your committee have taken the said memorial under most deliberate consideration, with a desire to grant the prayer of the memorialists, if the same could be done without injury to the cause of common school education, and after a most careful examination of this subject, your committee have come to the following conclusion:

That your committee can see no good and valid reason why the city of New Orleans should not be divided into School Districts; why the legal voters of these districts should not have the right to elect School Directors; why these School Directors should not possess the powers now given by law to School Directors throughout the State of Louisiana, instead of this power being vested by law, as it is at this time, in the Common Council of the city of New Orleans; or, in other words, why that system which has given such satisfaction in the country parishes of this State should not prevail in the city of New Orleans.

Therefore your committee introduce the following bill for the favorable consideration of the Senate, and return said memorial to the Senate.

Respectfully, &c.,
(Signed) ROBERT C. WICKLIFFE,
Chairman.

An act to divide the city of New Orleans into School Districts.

Mr. Martin called up a bill entitled: "An Act providing for the vacation of offices which are held in violation of article 122 of the Constitution."

Mr. Mouton—Might not the bill be so construed as to prevent Sheriffs from selling property seized on execution, &c.? I offer an amendment to remedy it in that respect.

Mr. King—I understand that the principal object of the Senator from Assumption is to prevent Clerks of Courts acting as Auctioneers.

Mr Martin—I said Clerks principally, but I wish the bill to apply to all.

Mr. King—It is superfluous to pass a law for a thing which the Constitution itself provides. As I originally understood the bill I was willing to vote for it. It does seem that there is some impropriety in granting a salary to a Clerk for the performance of his duties and then letting him act as Auctioneer by selling property. But the error which exists in the gentleman's mind is in supposing that a licensed Auctioneer is a State officer. Some persons are licensed to sell groceries, others to sell liquors; but none pretends that these are officers of the State. I am unwilling to vote for a bill which would occasion inconvenience in many parts of the State.

Mr. Martin—I am astonished at the argument of the gentleman. He wishes us to understand that grocers are State officers. This is not so Their license is merely another form for a tax receipt. I direct this bill against all who accept more than one State office, exclusive of that of Justice of the Peace. I wish to prevent the cumulation of offices. That is the object I have in view. The amendment of the gentleman from Lafayette (Mr. Mouton) meets my approval. I do not wish to interfere with Sheriffs in the discharge of their duties. I wish to give practical force to article 122 of the Constitution. There is no provision for the vacation of offices under that article. It is necessary that there should be, notwithstanding the gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) says it would be a work of superfluity.

Mr. Rivers—I would also remind the gentleman of a case in point in Mississippi. The Constitution prohibited the introduction of slaves for sale, but as no vitality was given to the article by a legislative enactment, imposing a penalty for its violation, it was declared of no effect.

Mr. King—I am well acquainted with the history of that case. But there the Constitution declared that the Legislature should pass a law on the subject, which it neglected to do.

Mr. Rivers—There is no penalty here either for a violation of article 122 of our Constitution.

Mr. King—The penalty is the inability to hold two offices at the same time. When a man accepts one, he virtually resigns any other which he may previously have held. That is the doctrine of the law books. I have a substitute to offer which I think covers the ground. We ought not to legislate for evils which are not complained of. I am not willing to vote for a bill whose operation may occasion great inconvenience in some of the country parishes, where the office of Clerk is of little value and where persons holding it require this privilege in order to support themselves.

Mr. King offered the following as a substitute:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That no Clerk or Deputy Clerk of a Court shall act as an Auctioneer in any sales which may have been ordered by the Court of which he is Clerk or Deputy Clerk, or connected in any manner with his duties as Clerk or Deputy Clerk

Mr. Todd offered the following proviso:

Provided, That the Clerk's act shall not prevent the Clerks or Deputy Clerks from selling at public auction the property of such successions as they are authorized by law to administer.

The substitute and proviso were adopted.

A bill to carry out the provisions of the Act for the advancement of medical education in Louisiana, was taken up.

Mr. Short—I will move a proviso that the Medical College shall continue to instruct gratuitously, one student from each Parish in the State. I believe the time for which the arrangement was made has run out.

Mr. Wickliffe—When the bill comes upon its passage I shall have something to say about it. The Medical College came before the Legislature last year and asked for five thousand dollars. After discussion on the subject the proposition was defeated. I suppose the demand is increased a thousand now on account of the defeat of last year. I think the College has no claim to this donation. I should like to have the bill referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCay—The gentleman thinks there is no claim and yet he wishes the bill referred to the Committee on Claims. He has thus admitted the inappropriateness of that Committee. I am opposed to the further postponement of this bill. We all know of what importance it is, and that it ought not to be delayed. A majority of the Finance Committee reported in favor of it. Only one member, the Chairman, reported against it.

The history of the matter is this: The Legislature appropriated $25,000 sor the purpose of procuring for the Medical College an anatomical museum and a complete assortment of instruments. A gentleman was sent to Europe to purchase the articles. He succeeded in getting a copy of the celebrated anatomical cabinet of Florence, at a very low price. Still there was a deficit for the expenses of transportation and other necessary outlays. It is to pay this, that the Institution asks for an appropriation by the State The expenses are necessary, and could not be avoided with the strictest economy. The Medical College has for ten years been receiving indigent students from each parish in the State, and educating them gratuitously. It has faithfully complied with its obligations in this respect. It has not even restricted the Parishes in the number of students sent—having from some received three or four. The necessity of this appropriation must be obvious to any one who considers the subject. The benefit of a complete cabinet, such as the one obtained, can scarcely be exaggerated. It will be an ornament to the State, and of vast use in giving students a complete knowledge of their profession.

Mr. Wickliffe. What was the object of the act of the Legislature referred to by the gentleman? It appropriated $25,000—and for what? The act says, for the advancement of medical education in the State of Louisiana. Did that mean the purchase of these wax dolls for the amusement of the students and professors? As if the great city of New Orleans does not furnish a practical illustration of every disease that flesh is heir to—but the Professors must have a lot of wax dolls to exhibit to the students, and point out things which human subjects would show much better.

I should like to know how much that Institution has received from the State already. Twenty-five thousand dollars in cash—the ground and buildings—and now it asks for six thousand dollars more to pay for wax figures, when there are in New Orleans thousands of living subjects, much better calculated for purposes of practical illustration than any wax dolls that ever were made.

If the nature of the bill, as stated in the title, is to carry out the provisions of the act of 1850," let it go to the Committee on Claims,—let the Committee report how much that institution has received from the State, and how much more it is entitled to. I should also like to know why the demand has been increased $1000 since last year.

Mr. McCay. Because it has been found that the increased expenses of transportation would amount to that sum.

The bill passed, with some amendments.

The bill providing for registering the voters in the city of New Orleans, was taken up.

Mr. King. I move to refer the bill to a special committee.

Mr. Martin. If the gentleman wants information, let him have the bill read. The bill has already come from one committee. It is an important bill—one which the Constitution makes it our duty to pass at this session.

Mr. King. I hope the bill will not be passed in such haste. It is a matter which concerns New Orleans alone, and none of us have yet seen or read the bill.

The bill was postponed.

A bill for the relief of certain persons who had purchased lands irregularly entered, was taken up.

Mr. Martin. I cannot vote for this bill. I was one of a committee appointed last year to investigate this subject. One of the applicants for relief then was a District Judge, who certainly ought to have known the law, and not let himself be imposed on by a fellow like Loucks. I allude to Judge Selby. He was the man who brought the whole subject before the Legislature.

Mr. Wickliffe. The parties thought, when they paid their money, that they were receiving a valid consideration. If the State did not receive the money, it was the State's fault.

Mr. Martin. I cannot see how it was the fault of the State. The law provides for a certain way of disposing of the public lands, and people ought to know it. If they have sufficient confidence in the Register to deposite money with him, and he is dishonest enough to keep it, they must suffer.

Mr. Wickliffe—It is both the fault and the misfortune of the State if it has a bad officer.

Mr. Short—It is true that the State is not legally bound for this money. But when the State appoints an officer and endorses his character by appointing him, it holds out the presumption to the world that he is honest. If, then, he, in his capacity as a public officer, defrauds any person, the State is morally, if not legally, bound for his acts. If this be received as a custom, it will make our high officials more careful in regard to the character of their appointees. The Committee recommended the payment of these sums on principle; though it could not go so far as the House, which said that patents should issue, to date from the time the payments were made. There is an obligation resting on the State to do justice in this matter. As for Mr. Loucks, the Register, he got the price of 1002 acres of land. He sold his honesty at a low price. I know the Judge to whom the Senator from Assumption (Mr. Martin) has alluded. I have known him for years. He is a man as liable as others to be deceived, where he reposes confidence, but no more so. He is a gentleman of worth and attainments, and the fact that he may have been deceived by Mr. Loucks, is no proof of deficiency in either.

Mr. Martin—We punish criminals even though they may be ignorant of the existence of the law under which they are made amenable. Why should we exempt from the operation of this general principle, an individual who may be injured by his ignorance of the law? Under the land laws the purchase money was to be paid to the Treasurer, and a receipt taken from the Auditor, when a patent would issue. These formalities were made necessary in order to guard against fraud. In the cases before us, the formalities were not complied with. The money was paid to Loucks, who pocketed it. I do not see why the State should be made to suffer on account of the ignorance of one party and the rascality of another. I should not like to see a precedent of this kind set.

The bill was passed over.

THE MECHANICS AND TRADERS' BANK.

Mr. Martin—I should like to know at what time the Committee on Banks and Banking may be expected to report on the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank bill.

Mr. Palfrey—The Committee held a meeting this morning, but the Chairman did not bring the subject before them.

A bill to permit the lawyers of other States to practice in the Courts of this State was then taken up.

Mr. Short—I should like to hear some reasons against this bill, if any exist. For my part, I think it ought to pass. Many hardships result from the existing order of things. As far as I am concerned, I can say that I never appeared in any Court until I had obtained a license under the laws as they existed. But I do not think this ought to be demanded. I have always been in favor of this—that where a person has a certificate of a right to practice in the highest Courts of other States, or in the Federal Courts, he ought to have the right to practice in any other State. The mere fact that a man is licensed to practice law is not the highest evidence of legal qualifications. It has been said that, as Louisiana is the only civil law State, we ought to compel all persons, even lawyers from other States, to go through a course of study, and obtain a regular license here. But would you compel a man to do this who perhaps has been practising law for thirty years? Would you make him walk such a narrow plank as that? Would you tie him down to this Procrustean bed before you would let him follow his profession? Is there something so grand in the civil law that it is necessary for all lawyers to pass a committee in New Orleans before they can be admitted to practice? I remember that I passed that ordeal just after the examination of a gentleman now high in office in the neighboring State of Mississippi. He studied hard—so hard that he injured his eyes and destroyed his health—in order to prepare himself to go before the awful committee And yet he was rejected. I thought if a gentleman of such distinction and acquirements could not succeed there would be little chance for me. Nevertheless, I studied intensely I read Domat and the Civil Code, and Justinian, and many other books, including the 44th chapter of Gibbon, in order to see who compiled the books of Justinian, and to learn the history of Tribonian. I knew that if I could not tell who Tribonian's wife was, and how many children he had, I should be rejected. Now, sir, I contend that if a man is not qualified to practise law, he will not be employed.

Men get law business, because they have just ideas, and are considered to be competent. Would we employ a man to run a steamboat because he has a certificate that his eyes are good? No! we employ him when we know he has experience. I am in favor of removing these restrictions, and throwing our courts open to the lawyers of other States. I do not wish it to be any longer in the power of a committee to say that because a man cannot tell who Tribonian's wife and children were, therefore he is not a lawyer.

Mr. Derbes. There is another objection to this bill which has not been noticed. We have a law department of our University, which has been established at great expense, and which will be rendered useless by passing this bill. Persons who wish to avoid the trouble and expense of going through the University, or the difficulty of passing this Committee, will go to some State where there are scarcely any formalities, and procure a license there.

Mr. Todd. I am opposed to the bill. A man may practise law in other States twenty years, and yet not be fitted to practice in Louisiana where the civil law prevails. The people would not be able to distinguish lawyers from other States, and they might frequently be injured by employing incompetent and ignorant men. The ordeal which has to be passed now is an incentive to exertion, and is at least a guarantee for the possession of a certain amount of legal knowledge. The bill would produce empiricism and quackery, and would result in injury to the community.

Mr. Wickliffe. I shall vote for this bill with pleasure, on the same principle that I voted for the bill abolishing the licensing of physicians I do not believe that because this is the only civil law State, it should be the only exception to that general rule of courtesy which prevails among the rest of the States. What is the necessity for the present system? Has it come to this, that the legal profession in Louisiana needs protection against the competition of lawyers from abroad? I contend that there is no valid reason for the law as it now stands. Do we imagine that in case we pass this bill, the lawyers of other States would come upon us like a pack of wild wolves, and subvert the civil law? I should like to hear one good reason against the bill.

Mr. Lewis. One good reason is that it would enable persons who had fled from our bar, to come back to Louisiana and practise law

Mr. McCay. As I introduced the bill, I should like to say a few words in favor of it. Every other State in the Union, except two, admits persons to practice on the presentation of a permit from the Supreme Court in the State from which they may have come. As a mere matter of courtesy and reciprocal feeling, I should be in favor of extending the same courtesy to others that they extend to us. It appears to me that gentlemen make use of a strong argument when they say that the Supreme Courts of other States, or of the United States, are not competent to decide whether an individual is capable of practising law. They say that he must be examined; that he must go before a Committee. Now sir, that examination is a profound humbug. I know the Committee is composed of the first talent of the State, but I know also that a man may be an ass or a lawyer, and be either admitted or rejected. I have known some of my friends who had studied hard, and were well read in the law, to be thrown aside and denied a license, while a man who had not studied three months was triumphantly admitted. If the object is that all who pass shall be well qualified, no reliance is to be placed on the endorsement of the Committee. I was myself examined before that Committee. I passed principally on the endorsement of a member of the committee with whom I had studied. I am confident that I knew little, if anything about the subject, and yet I passed a triumphant examination. I presume that the object of an examination is to get good and competent lawyers. The question is, whether that is better secured by this system than by any other. Does it give any assurance that those who pass are well qualified, and that all who are well qualified pass? I would go even farther than this bill goes. I would follow the example of New York, and let every man practice law that chooses.

Mr. Lewis. I would ask the gentleman if the bill makes any provision against foreigners who may be licensed in other States.

Mr. McCay. From whatever land a man may come—under whatever sun he may have first breathed the breath of life, I would admit him if he possessed the necessary intelligence.

Mr. Nichols moved a subtsitute permitting any person to practise law.

Mr. King—I supposed it would come to that at last. The question has been enough discussed already and I do not intend to enter into it very deeply. I believe that the system we at present have is necessary for the protection of the unwary. It is to secure them from imposition that it is necessary to license attorneys. I admit that if all the States were common law States, it would be well enough to permit the endorsement of the Judges of other States to be a license here. I might then be willing to let a helpless widow put herself in the hands of a man from another state bringing a letter of recommendation from a judge to prove that he was competent to practise. But now she would only become a victim of spoliation and wrong. I think also that Physicians ought to be licensed. For the same reason those who go in Court and undertake to defend the rights of others have the same responsibilities If we abolish all formalities, persons will be subject to the grossest frauds. To say that because a man is competent to practise law in Mississippi, he must be competent here, is absurd. The case of the Governor of Mississippi who failed to be admitted, only proves that he was unfortunate. The illustration of the steamboat is an unfortunate one. Suppose you have a pilot who knows the Hudson river from beginning to end, does that prove that he would be capable of guiding a steamboat among the sandbars and snags of the Mississippi? The fact that a man is qualified to practise common law, is no guarantee that he is competent to practice civil law. The qualifications required in other States are not the qualifications required here. As to the examination which has been spoken of, it could be no terror to a competent man. If a man be competent, he will pass.

Mr. McCay—Is the possession of a license evidence of a man's fitness?

Mr. King—I do not say that it is always so, but it is the best we can have. It is, of course, not always a certain guarantee. The gentleman says that he himself passed when he ought not to have passed. The question of courtesy cannot apply to us. The common law is the basis in all other States; the civil law here. The moment the boundary is crossed, a totally different system presents itself. Our laws are more like those of France; should we admit those to practise who are totally unacquainted with them? If so, why confine ourselves to the United States? Why not admit Chinese, Tartars?

Mr. Wickliffe—Does the gentleman think that the people are not competent to judge of the qualifications of a lawyer?

Mr. King—I do not suppose the gentleman thinks everybody so smart as never to be taken in. I am as much in favor of progress as anybody, but not that kind of progress which very much resembles that of the crab. Gentlemen may waste their figures of speech on the subject, but they cannot alter the facts.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman belongs to that party which is in favor of free trade and free competition. He is in favor of admitting foreign sugar, which competes with my sugar, to the production of which my intellect is applied. It takes as much intellect to raise sugar as to be a lawyer, and I go for free trade in law as well as in sugar.

Mr. Short—The gentleman from New Orleans (Mr King) has said something about figures of speech. In the progress of the age we may get to have indictments against these rhetorical illustrations. Now, sir, I ask again why we employ a certain pilot. It is because we know he is competent; because he has steered clear of impediments through many a foggy night. Why is the gentleman from New Orleans employed in many suits? Because he has steered clear through so many foggy cases. When a pilot seeks for a situation he is asked about his experience. If he has none, he cannot get employment; he might run the boat ashore at Devil's Bend, or get her on a sand-bar. So it is with lawyers. Unless they are known to be competent they cannot get practice. I remember when I was quite young myself, being acquainted with a young man of fine mind and brilliant attainments, who was engaged in the study of the law. He went before a committee, one of whom was an old pettifogger, who had no ideas above an assault and battery, or a case of larceny. He was examined on Turner on Remainders, and then on Shelley's cases. Perhaps he did not recollect every thing in these erudite works; at all events he was rejected. He was again examined and again rejected. He was poor and proud, and just as talented. He made another effort and was admitted. At his first case he met the old pettifogger who had tried to keep him down. He was awed by the contact with so much wisdom, and failed to make a speech worthy of himself. Six months afterwards he met his enemy again. He had grown wiser by this time, and obtained a complete triumph. Turning to his adversary, he exclaimed, "Why, is it possible that you are the man who has been frightening me all this time?" I have seen more talent kept from the bar by this system than is covered by all the parchment documents to which you seem so much attached.

On motion of Mr. Dupre, the whole subject was laid on the table.

THURSDAY, April 14th, 1853.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY—"AN ACT FOR THE RECORDATION OF THE EVIDENCES OF MORTGAGES, &c."

The Judiciary Committee reported back the bill for the recordation of mortgages, without amendment.

Mr. Nicholls—I had no idea that it was the intention of the majority of the Committee to make a report in writing to-day. The Committee had a conference yesterday and differed so widely that they could come to no decision. I am astonished that the bill is now returned with the endorsement of the Committee. I had understood that it was to be returned with a notice that the Committee was unable to agree.

Mr Lacey—The report only returns the bill to the Senate. The majority of the Committee did not wish to amend it as it had been carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee. They simply returned the bill to the Senate without amendment. As the Senator says, the differences in the Committee were so irreconcilable that no conclusion could be arrived at.

Mr. Nicholls—Would it not have been sufficient for the Committee simply to state that fact. It was not necessary to enter into an elaborate argument in favor of the bill.

Mr. Lacey—If the gentleman had read the report he would have seen that it makes use of no argument for or against the bill. It simply gives the reasons in a respectful manner why the bill is reported back without amendment.

The bill, which is as follows, was taken up on its second reading:

An Act to provide for the recordation of the evidence of mortgages in favor of minors and married women.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the 1st day of January, 1854, no mortgage shall be enforced or exist against a third person acting in good faith, unless the act, appointment, receipt or other instrument of writing, which gives rise to the mortgage, is duly recorded. This record shall be made in order to affect landed property and slaves attached thereto in the parish where such property is situated, and to effect other slaves in the parish where the debtor has his domicile or usual residence.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of every notary public, or other officer exercising the functions of a notary public, to cause to be recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages in the parish where the party resides, against whom the mortgage created may exist, every act passed before him in which under existing laws of this State, a legal mortgage is created in favor of the wife on the property of the husband; whether the said act be a marriage contract or any other act which may serve to show the sums of money or other property which the wife may have brought by way of dower at the time of marriage; or receipts or other acts serving to show the amount of money or other property received by her, or by her husband for her account during the marriage.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever married women shall be entitled to property or money by inheritance or by testamentary disposition, it shall be the duty of the executors, curators or administrators through whom the property or money may be received, to take from the husband an authentic receipt for the money or property, which shall be recorded as a mortgage against the husband in the parish in which he resides, if he be a resident of this State; but the property or money shall not be delivered to the husband until he makes oath that said receipt has been recorded in the parish in which he resides and in every other parish in this State in which he owns immoveable property; provided that this section shall not apply to cases where the wife is separate in property from her husband, and administers her own property; and, provided furthermore, such receipt shall be no evidence of the delivery of such property or money to the husband until such receipt is endorsed, by the person to whom payment or delivery is made, "paid," which endorsement must be dated subsequent to the record.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a tutor for minors, or a curator of an absentee or interdicted person, shall have been designated by the Judge or other person having the competent authority to appoint tutors or curators, the clerk of the court shall deliver to the person so designated, or to his agent or attorney, a copy of the order of appointment, in order that it may be recorded in the office of Recorder of Mortgages, in conformity to this act; and letters of tutorship or curatorship shall not issue until said order shall have been recorded, and until the person appointed tutor or curator shall have made and subscribed the following oath:

I, (A B.,) tutor of the child (or children) named ——, or curator of ——, an absentee, or of ——, an interdicted person, as the case may be, do solemnly swear, (or affirm, if the party have conscientious scruples against making an oath,) that I have caused the order of appointment given to me to be recorded in the office of Recorder of Mortgages, in the parish in which I reside, and in every parish in this State, in which I own immovable property—which oath must be recorded by the clerk in his office. Nothing in this act shall prevent tutors from giving a special mortgage in lieu of the general mortgage in favor of minors in the manner provided by law; but in all such cases every tutor, before entering on the duties of his office, instead of the last clause of the above affidavit, shall be required to make oath that the special mortgage has been recorded in the parish or parishes, as the case may be, in this State, in which the property so specially mortgaged is situated.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That the office of all tutors, curators of absentees, and persons interdicted, now existing in this State, shall expire on the 1st day of July next; unless in the interval any such officer shall have caused to be recorded the letters of tutorship or curatorship originally given to him, or copies thereof, or a certificate of the clerk, showing the date of his appointment in the manner directed in the preceding section of this act, for recording orders of appointment, and shall have taken the oath therein directed, which oath shall be recorded as above provided Said letters, when recorded, shall be evidence of the existence of a mortgage from the date of the original appointment of said tutor or curator. If any tutor shall have qualified by giving a special mortgage in the manner provided by law in lieu of the general mortgage against his estate, such tutor may continue to act upon his making oath within the time above prescribed, that such special mortgage has been recorded in the manner directed in the foregoing section, for the recordation of such special mortgages.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., that on the beforementioned 1st day of July next, it shall be the duty of every clerk of a Court in this State, (except clerks of the Supreme Court) in whose office records of the appointments of tutors and curators of persons interdicted and absentees heretofore made are kept, to examine thoroughly the said records, and within ten days after said 1st day of July, to make out a correct list of all the said tutorships and curatorships which the said records show still to exist; which list shall designate the names of the minors and the persons appointed tutors and curators who have not qualified under this act, with the dates of their appointments. The list thus perfected shall be kept as a part of the records of the court.

It shall further be the duty of the clerk to make out triplicate copies of said list, one of which shall be kept posted up in a conspicuous place in his office for the space of forty days; another on the door or in the room of the courthouse for the like time; and the other shall be delivered to the Judge of his court, or of the court having jurisdiction in such matters, immediately, if said court be in session, and if not, at the first term of the court thereafter held. The clerk shall be allowed one dollar from each tutorship or curatorship, for making out said lists.

It shall be the duty of said clerk, if he be vested with such power to issue notice, or if not, of the Judge or other person having, under the law, competent authority therefor, to order notice to be issued by the clerk, which shall be served by the sheriff in the manner in which citations are served, upon all such tutors or curators who have failed to qualify as may reside in the parish, to appear within five days after the service of said notice, before the said clerk or judge, or other competent authority, and apply for re-appointment under this act.

Should the sheriff neglect to serve the said notice in those cases in which service can be made by him, or to make due return of service of such notice, where it has been made within five days from the date of its service besides being liable to the minors or other parties interested, for all costs and damages which may have been incurred, he shall be subject to a fine of twenty-dollars, to be imposed by the Judge for the benefit of the minors, in each case in which he fails to make service of notice as aforesaid; and if the notice cannot be served, the Sheriff must make his return within twenty days from the time at which it was delivered to him. The same penalty and fine shall be incurred by the sheriff for the neglect of any duty assigned to him by this act.

If any tutor or curator should appear within the time designated, and pray for his re-appointment, he must qualify in conformity with the provisions of this act, by taking the oath prescribed by the preceding fourth section, in addition to which he must further swear that he has caused to be recorded a copy of the letters of tutorship or curatorship originally issued to him, or a certificate of the clerk showing the date of his original appointment in the parish in which he resides, and in every parish in this State in which he owns immovable property, which letters, or certificate of the clerk, thus recorded, shall operate as a mortgage upon his property from the date of his original appointment. But if the tutor has given a special mortgage, then he must swear that the said special mortgage has been recorded in the parish in which the property mortgaged is situated The recordation herein provided for must be done within forty days after the tutor has applied for his re-appointment.

If the tutor or curator does not appear within the time specified, or if, after appearing, he does not qualify within the 40 days, the clerk, if he has the power, or Judge or other competent authority, shall proceed to appoint another tutor or curator, as the case may be, in his stead, granting such preferences as are now given by law in the choice of tutors or curators, who shall qualify as directed by this act, within forty days, and it shall be his duty immediately, to apply to the clerk for copies of the letters of tutorship or curatorship originally given to the person who has failed to requalify, or for a certificate showing the date of the original appointment of his predecessor, which letters or certificate he shall cause to be recorded, unless the same shall have been already recorded in the parish in which his predecessor resided, or if he be dead in the parish in which his predecessor resided, and also in every parish in the State, in which he has reason to believe his predecessor owns or did own immovable property; and if his predecessor gave a special mortgage which has not been recorded in lieu of the general mortgage, it shall be his duty to have such special mortgage recorded in the parish or parishes in this State, in which the property thus specially mortgaged is situated; it shall further be his duty to cause the same evidence of any previous tutorship or curatorship, or of any previous special mortgages to be recorded in the same manner, all of which, when recorded, shall operate as a mortgage against the property of any previous tutors or curators from the date of their respective appointments.

For any neglect of the duties prescribed by this section, the tutor or curator so appointed shall be liable to the minors or other persons interested, for all damages and costs which may be incurred thereby, and shall further be subject, in case any loss or damage to the minor should be thereby sustained, to the criminal laws enacted against tutors who embezzle the property of minors, and upon conviction thereof, after prosecution in due form of law, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for a period not to exceed two years.

It shall further be the duty of every tutor or curator appointed under this section, to institute suit if it be necessary, against all previous tutors or curators, to recover whatever may be coming to the minors or persons for whom he has been appointed tutor or curator; provided, that at any time before the newly appointed tutor or curator has qualified under this act, it shall be within the discretion of the person exercising the power of appointing, to reappoint the original tutor or curator, upon his appearing and showing that he has been guilty of no neglect, and offering to requalify in the manner pointed out by this act.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That when any tutor or curator has removed from, or does not reside in the parish in which he was originally appointed, the notice prescribed by the preceding section, shall be sent by the clerk to the sheriff of the parish in which said tutor or curator resides, and he shall be allowed twenty (20) days within which to appear and make application for re-appointment, and the sheriff shall be allowed forty days in which to make his return, but must always make his return within twenty days after service of the notice

Any sheriff neglecting to comply with the duties prescribed by this section, shall be subject to the penalties prescribed for similar neglect by the previous section.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, &c , There where any tutor or curator heretofore appointed, has removed from, or does not reside in the parish of his original appointment, and his place of residence be unknown, if he does not appear and claim a re-appointment within forty days after the said first day of July next, it shall be the duty of the competent authority to proceed at once to supply his place by the appointment of another tutor or curator as the case may be; provided, it be stated in the proceedings for appointment, that the residence of such absent tutor or curator is unknown.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That where any tutor or curator hereafter appointed, removes from the parish in which he resides at the time of the appointment to another parish in this State, it shall be his duty, unless he has given a special mortgage in lieu of a general one against him immediately after his said removal, to cause the evidence of the mortgage existing against his estate as tutor or curator, to be recorded in the parish to which he has removed, and the same course shall be observed on each subsequent removal. For any neglect to comply with this section, it shall be the duty of the competent tribunal to remove such tutor or curator from his office, and to appoint another in his stead.

The said tutor or curator shall further be condemned to pay to the person appointed in his place not less than one hundred, and not more than one thousand dollars, to be recovered in any competent tribunal.

If any loss or damage should accrue to the minor or minors or absentee, or persons interdicted, in consequence of the failure of the tutor or curator, who has removed to another parish, to record the mortgage existing in favor of said minors or absentees, or persons interdicted, besides being liable civilly to the minor or absentee, or persons interdicted, for all such damages, he shall be deemed guilty of an embezzlement, and on conviction thereof, be fined and imprisoned at the discretion of the court.

Sec. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for any person, on tender of the legal fees, to demand the inscription in any mortgage office, of any act or document tending to show the existence of a legal mortgage, and also any of the documents or certificates which are made by this act evidence of the existence of a mortgage, and it shall be the duty of all recorders of mortgages, upon such application, to record the said acts or evidence of the existence of a mortgage.

Sec. 11. Be it further enacted, &c., That any clerk of a Court in this State who shall fail to discharge the duties imposed upon him by this act, or be guilty of any wilful neglect in relation thereto, shall be dismissed from his office by the Judge of the Court of which he is clerk, and shall further be responsible for all such damages as may be sustained by any minor in consequence of his said failure or neglect to discharge his duties, with a right of appeal, however, from such judgment, to the Supreme Court of the State.

Sec. 12 Be it further enacted, &c., That any Judge or judicial officer, who shall fail to discharge the duties imposed upon him by this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor in office, from which he may be removed by impeachment or address.

Sec. 13. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall not hereafter be necessary to reinscribe, after the lapse of ten years, the evidence of the legal mortgages in favor of minors or married women, or persons interdicted or absentees, but the inscription, when once made, shall remain valid until the mortgaged debt is extinguished by payment, prescription or otherwise.

Sec. 14. Be it further enacted, &c., That all laws, and parts of laws, contrary to, or inconsistent with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed.

Mr. Hodge—I have been absent for several days while the bill was under discussion, so that I have not had an opportunity of preparing an amendment which meets my views. As little can I assert that I shall have to oppose the entire bill. I do not now deem it necessary to enter into a long argument on the subject. No doubt Senators have reflected on the question, and will vote in accordance with the conclusions which they may arrive at after mature deliberation. In order that my vote may be understood, I shall explain the reasons which will govern me in casting it. There is no doubt as to the policy of the general principle of recording any act or right possessed by a citizen which may affect any other citizen. When a right or a mortgage privilege, or a lien is enjoyed, it ought to be so inscribed that other parties can know of its existence. I am willing to concede that we ought to make the property available by putting it in such a position that the rights existing on it may be easily referred to. While I admit this, I insist that it is the duty of the legislature to sustain the policy of protecting those classes who have so long been deemed incapable of protecting themselves. It has been the settled policy of Louisiana ever since she became a State, to guard the interests of minors and married women. I imagine that no gentleman on this floor would dare to proclaim himself in favor of taking from those classes the rights which they now enjoy, and the safeguards which the law throws around them. If this policy which has been so long pursued, be a correct and true one, the question then resolves it into one of pure expediency—whether we shall cut loose the safe-guards which now exist, or relieve property at the expense of helpless women and children. Is it necessary for us to legislate for the sole purpose of letting owners of property realise capital on it with which to speculate? Must we do this regardless of any other interests, unmindful of any other claims on our consideration? If so, we had better sweep from our statute book all mortgages, all liens and privileges, and let him who may be the possessor of property for the time being, be in all cases its owner. This would be the legitimate consequence. But as long as there are parties whose interests require protection, I shall resist any such attempt. I am not opposed to making public all these rights and liens, but while I am in favor of their inscription, I am not in favor of letting the punishment, in case of neglect, fall on the minors and married women. If the gentleman will present a bill with a provision by which the punishment shall fall on the official who neglects his duty, I will go as far as he who goes farthest in support of it. I will vote for the most stringent penalties, to compel officials to do their duty, but not for a measure which will destroy the rights of a large class of our population. Let us inquire what will be the effect of this bill? It declares that after the 1st of January, 1855, no mortgage, excepting conventional, legal and judicial mortgages, shall exist. According to this, unless the tutor or curator, &c., records the mortgage, the minor loses his rights. Who, let me ask, will look to see that the Clerk, or the Parish Recorder does his duty? Will the minor attend to it? Unquestionably not. Who has charge of the interests of the minor? Why the tutor, and he certainly will not trouble himself to see that that is done, which will prove an incumbrance on his property. The law will therefore be a deal better so far as protection to the interests of the minor is concerned. Years afterwards, when the minor reaches a maturer age, he goes to his tutor and asks for his property. Now we all know, that not in one case in a thousand, does the tutor discharge his duty faithfully. It is known that they make the administration of estates confided to them a matter of speculation. They have little or no interest in the estate, except to serve their own purposes.

When, as I say, the minor asks for his property, the tutor says it is worth nothing, he has spent it, or sold it, or mortgaged it to some broker in Wall st. You did not have the documents recorded, and you have no remedy. The foreign capitalist who comes here and purchases property and sells it again, protects himself by a conventional mortgage. He will be preferred to the minor and the married woman of our own State. Is this just? Will not the gentleman be content with a law compelling the clerks of courts to have the mortgages recorded and making them liable for damages in case of neglect? That is all that can be asked in equity. We can make it the duty of the clerk to send a copy of a bond to the Recorder's office within 20 days, and if he neglect to discharge his duty, make him liable on the bond for damages. If the clerk does not comply, no injury will result. I go the Recorder's office and find no mortgage existing on a certain piece of property. I purchase it. The minor afterwards institutes suit for an infraction of of his tacit mortgages. I go to the clerk and have recourse to his bond. If that be not sufficient to indemnify me, it is not the fault of the Legislature. The bond is supposed to be good. If it be not, that is an evil which legislation cannot reach. When the clerk knows that he is liable for any damages that may result through his negligence, he will be active and vigilant. He is a full grown man and can look after his own interests. He is not interested in the property of the minor. He has no interests to guard except his own, and men usually are apt to be careful where their own interests are at stake. It is certainly a matter of little consequence to the clerks and recorders whether the interests of the minor be protected or not. But when you bring the case home to themselves, and make them personally liable for neglect, becomes a very different affair. There would not be one failure in a thousand cases. This is a brief sketch of the system which I propose. But I will not support such an attack on right and justice as is made by this bill. For my part, I have not seen all the harm result from tacit mortgages that has been attributed to them. It is all a bugbear. I never knew an instance in which a creditor or purchaser was robbed of his rights by the operation of the tacit mortgage of a minor. We cannot say as much for the system proposed by this bill. It is a direct and violent attack on the rights of all the minors and married women in the State. I will vote for an inscription of the evidences of mortgages of this class. I will go even farther.

I am willing to say that married women shall have no tacit mortgages which will interfere with the rights of others. But I will never vote for breaking down the safeguards which the law throws around the rights of minors. In every community, minors are made the subjects of robbery and oppression. Yet we are now asked to destroy the defences which protect them. I for one will not consent to it under any consideration. It is well enough to secure the honest purchaser against loss; but to attain this object we have no right to sacrifice the rights of others. This the gentleman's bill does.

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.

In trying to avoid one extreme it falls upon another.

Mr. Nicholls moved to strike out, in the 1st section, after the word "convened," in the 3d line, to the word "recorded," in the 7th line, and insert the following substitute:

That no mortgage shall be enforced or exist against a third person acting in good faith, when such act, appointment, receipt or other instrument of writing which gives use to this mortgage, shall bear date after the 1st day of January, 1854, unless the act, appointment, receipt or other instrument of writing is duly recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages.

Mr. King. The effect which would be produced by this change would be to defer the benefit of the bill till all existing tacit mortgages have expired by limitation or been extinguished in some way, a delay which would be fatal to the very object of the bill.

The object of the bill is that the records shall show all existing incumbrances on all the property of the State. The time for this to be effected is fixed in 1854. We did not make the bill take effect, in this respect, immediately, because it might have been considered an infraction of vested rights. But the period fixed gives ample time, and relieves the bill from all objections of that nature. I had hoped that then the records would show the condition of all the property of the State, and that an end would be put to the numerous frauds, on innocent third parties, which have heretofore been perpetrated. Under the operation of the substitute offered by the Senator from St. Martin, these benefits cannot be realized till all the minors in the State attain their majority—till all the married women are dead. This would be legislating for posterity instead of for the present generation. It would be depriving ourselves of the benefit which we confer on those who are to come after us. My desire is to increase the value of real estate, to make it convertible into money, and to give that confidence to foreign capitalists, which they do not now possess. This will be effected by the original bill, but would be prevented by the substitute.

Mr. Hodge. I would ask whether a minor, in whose favor a mortgage exists, will lose his right if that mortgage be not recorded?

Mr. King. We have presented a long bill which we think insures the recordation of these mortgages Our object is to insure the rights of all, which we say is more certainly achieved by this bill than under the present system. Suppose, for instance, that the mortgage exists on a negro. There is no evidence, on any public record, of the existence of the mortgage. The negro is finally sold to a third party, who, after all due diligence, is unable to find any mortgage. Some years afterwards, he discovers that a tacit mortgage attaches to the negro. He immediately runs the negro off to Texas or some other place where he cannot be found, and the mortgage becomes of no avail. So this boasted tacit mortgage, which incumbers property and interferes with trade, fails of its very object.—An individual who has purchased property honestly, and in good faith, is not very willing to give it up. He will make use of every means to prevent its being taken away from him. By our bill a more efficient protection is secured to all parties.

We want the records to blason forth the mortgage to the whole world Then there would be no possibility of fraud such as we now frequently witness. This is the great advantage of the bill. I would rather that my children should enjoy a recorded than a tacit mortgage; but when vested interests are affected it is necessary to grant a fair time to effect the object.—We cannot overlook those who are trembling for the rights of their children. We cannot disregard the wishes of the aged parents, who, with a large family, clustering around them, look anxiously to the fate of this bill, which will secure their estates to their children, and prevent the perpetration of fraud by tutors and curators

Mr. Nicholls. I agree entirely with the sentiments which have been expressed by the Senator from Caddo (Mr. Hodge). They are the same as those expressed by myself a few days ago. But if it is the determination of the Senate to take action on the principle of this bill, then I feel anxious to make it as little objectionable as possible. It is with this view I have offered the amendment The gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. King,) says it will defeat the very object of the bill; that it will be legislating for posterity.—Suppose we do legislate for posterity—what then? Is it inexpedient to legislate for our descendants? The difference between us is, that while I desire to legislate for posterity, he desires to legislate for his ancestors. He wishes to go back and say that the rights secured by law shall not exist any longer. The tacit mortgage standing this day in favor of a minor, is as perfect as if it were a conventional mortgage.

Is it in the power of the Legislature to say to the contracting parties, "your rights shall be stricken down, you shall no longer enjoy the benefits of this mortgage?" Suppose the Legislature should take a notion that in order to advance the interests of commerce, every sale of real estate that may be or has been made in Louisiana, shall be recorded in every State in the Union, and unless the recordation be effected within a given time, all sales should be null and void; I ask whether a bill containing such a provision would be entertained for an instant? Yet the effect of the bill before the Senate is the same. If rights be secured now by the law, it is impossible to secure them better. We cannot make a perfect right more perfect. The tutor squanders the property confided to his charge, and the minor has a mortgage by which he is secured. The action of this or twenty succeeding Legislatures could not disturb the right thus obtained, and thus existing through the operation of previous laws. Gentlemen may talk of remedial laws, and prescription; but this is a very different case. The bill attacks rights and not remedies. Some persons say that they desire a change. They do not know if the new system will protect the minor, if it will benefit the purchaser, if it will infringe on vested rights, but they want change for the sake of change. We know however that change is not always beneficial. I know the benefits of the proposed system; but they are vastly exaggerated by those who come here to make everything bend beneath the iron heel of commerce—who proclaim, and wish us to believe that commerce is king—who wish to compel us to bow down before the commercial interests of New Orleans. I am willing to do anything for the prosperity of New Orleans when I am not asked to fell to the earth those interests that are dearest to me. You wish to carry your point amid the groans of minors and the tears of women. Is this the legislation we are to accept? Was this the entertainment to which we were invited? The country members who desire change are about to bind themselves down beneath the iron yoke of commerce. The only argument made use of is that trade will be benefited; that capitalists will be inspired with confidence; and for this we are to sacrifice the rights of our children and our wives. In the country parishes, where I have practised law for ten years, I have seen few evils result from the tacit mortgage system; I have seen few honest men evicted from their property under its operation. The purchaser of property is a man—a man full grown—having possession of all his faculties, and able to make suitable inquiries. If he be injured by a mortgage not being recorded, it is his misfortune.

But better thus than that the minor should be placed at the mercy of his tutor, and have no redress when his property is squandered or illegally appropriated. The under tutor, you say, will do everything necessary to protect the interests of the minor. But we know that he cannot, as he is generally considered a spy on the tutor. I say that the legislation of this State is not prepared for such a change. At this late period in the session, when we have little time left for discussion, and Senators admit that they do not know what the effect of the bill will be, we had better stand to the landmarks we have, than launch into a speculation which may end in ruin.

In the other House a proposition has been made to refer the matter to a committee with instructions to report a bill to the next Legislature for the cure of the evils of the tacit mortgage system. Let us place the subject in abler hands. Let us pause and reflect; let us consider whether our action now may not result in more harm than good. And is there any necessity for immediate action? I think not. Up to this time, we have lived happily and poor prosperously under the tacit mortgage system, and we should pause before we adopt another which may be productive of nothing but mischief.

Mr Short. I have not thought that any elaborate argument was necessary in order to point out the evils and to elucidate the changes sought to be introduced into the tacit mortgage system. The great object which commends itself to me, is to make that known which before was unknown. It is time, as the gentleman says that we should be generous towards the future and not endeavor to legislate for the benefit of our ancestors. But the one is achieved, and the other is not contained in this bill. Our object is to lay down rules of human action; to govern the conduct and the relations of men with each other. We wish to make them particular in their transactions with each other, so that when one buys property, he may be certain that it will not be taken away from him. These are rules of action: laws are nothing more. When the Legislature lays down a rule of action to operate uniformedly on men, it is a step forward in legislation. But, is is said we are not prepared for this step. And why not? For years there has been a system of mortgages in Louisiana unknown in any other State. If we can make our system uniform with theirs, is that not an object worthy to be accomplished? It is not such a great change as the gentleman thinks. When the bill was before the committee, all possible attention was bestowed on it; but the Senator all that time made no suggestion of his opposition. I am surprised that, with the talent and keen judgment which he possesses, he should recommend us to leave the subject to other and abler hands. Is he satisfied that those are a superior race of beings who will come after us? It has long been known that the evils of this tacit mortgage system are insupportable. They have been frequently mentioned and frequently condemned. But the gentleman is discontented with this bill, though he admits that there are frauds now, and though it is acknowledged that the present system is one of the best that could be devised for the perpetration of fraud. Why the old English system of contingent remainders which nobody but the lawyers could comprehend, was not comparable to the tacit mortgage system for covering up property, and encouraging litigations. I do not wish to be understood as merely desiring an innovation on this old and venerable system. But if I can find a better system my reverence for old error will not be overbalanced by my fear of change. It seems to me that when men have only three or four steps to take, they do not like to take any step at all. They seem content to bear the ills which afflict them without seeking a remedy. But we seek things not beyond that bourne which separates the known from the unknown, and we do not wish to fly from ills we have to those we know not of. We desire to improve, not to deteriorate. We wish to take a step which we think is good and therefore we ought to take it.

Mr. Hodge—I would ask whether, if a tutor sells the property confided to him, he will be liable civilly or criminally?

Mr. Short—If a man sell that on which he knows a superior claim to exist, he is guilty of a certain species of fraud; but it is not the same as though he were to obtain money under false pretences.

Mr. Hodge—I will show the gentleman how mistaken he is. (Reads art. of code.) So it appears that if the tutor do this thing he is a swindler, and may be prosecuted as such.

Mr. Short—There is no such thing as a tutor giving a mortgage on the property of a minor. That can only be done by the consent of a family meeting.

Mr. Hodge—I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Code contains the following article. (Reads.)

Mr. Short—That is very true. But to remedy the defects of the law is one of the objects of this bill. It is to remedy the tacit mortgage system that the bill is introduced. And does the gentleman say that the system has no evils? Are we to be told that there is no system endurable but the tacit mortgage system? To give an illustration: A man may marry a woman to-morrow; perhaps he does not feel the less interested because she has thirty or forty thousand dollars. They may spend the money, may go to New York, or somewhere else. The woman may participate, does participate, in the pleasures and luxuries derived from the expenditure of the forty thousand dollars, and I am told that with that sum a considerable amount of enjoyment may be had. She comes back and says that her husband is spending her money, that her dotal and paraphernal property is in danger. She gets a judgment for $25,000, and although her husband may have sold the plantation, and a mortgage be existing on it, yet the wife can come in and take it from the creditor. It is this kind of thing that we wish to remedy. We wish to prevent a man giving his wife the power of assisting him to defraud his creditors. We do not wish the man to be changed from the head of a household, to the chief butler; we do not want the wife, when she has spent her own money, to have the power of taking her husband's from his creditors. Is any one so blind as not to see the evils of this system; evils so plain, so palpable, that they are encountered at every step? I say again that I do not desire simple innovation merely for the sake of innovation; I only wish to make those mortgages known which have heretofore been unknown. Then if the purchaser does not know of its existence he cannot complain. He at least has his eyes open. But do not let the punishment fall on an innocent person—on one who has no way of knowing the existence of the mortgage.

Mr. Hodge—I shall make a few remarks in answer to a part of those which have fallen from the gentleman from Carroll. As I have already stated, I have been for some time absent, and have not had an opportunity of paying that attention to the subject which it deserves. I have stated that there is, probably, not that amount of fraud perpetrated under the present system, which he supposes, because there is a statute which declares that if the tutor, when he mortgages or sells his property, do not make known the existence of the tacit mortgages attaching to it, he shall be considered guilty of swindling. The Civil Code itself is explicit on this point. And while alluding to the Code, let me here remark that a more admirable, a more luminous emanation of mind worthy of compiling law for a free and intelligent people, has never been presented to the world. The Code points out the different kinds of mortgages, and the manner of making them; and the kind under consideration, it calls tacit mortgage, not because there is no inscription of it; but because it is created without the intervention of a special contract. The Code prescribes regulations for the inscription of every kind of mortgage except those in favor of minors and married women.

The next article makes it necessary that all acts creating mortgages shall be recorded. Every public officer who passes an act creating a mortgage, must record it, whether the mortgage be conventional or legal. It also provides that it shall be the duty of Judges to record the appointment of tutors, curators, &c. Thus every act which gives rise to a mortgage, if not the mortgage itself, must be recorded. If this be neglected, the defaulting party is liable for damages.

The gentleman's whole argument is nullified by the fact that the law of '24 says, that where a man borrows money on property mortgaged in any manner, without declaring the existence of the mortgage, he shall be considered guilty of swindling. I have never heard of a tutor being prosecuted for obtaining money in this way, because no tutor would be willing to subject himself to the penalty attendant on an infraction of the law. The law is stringent enough, and, with some slight amendment, would be sufficient for all purposes. I am content to let it stand on the record, that I, for one, am unwilling to aid, by my vote, in striking down the rights of those who are unable to defend themselves.

Mr. Short. If the gentleman has found in the Code, or in the law of '24, a remedy for the evils now complained of, he has made an invaluable discovery, and the people will be under great obligations to him for it. The gentleman says that a man is indictable fer not declaring the existence of a mortgage on his property. Very true—when he knows of the existence of the mortgage. But when he does not, and could not know it, can he be judged guilty of swindling? Such would not be the understanding of any Court in the civilized world. He could only be considered culpable when he knows the existence of the mortgage. But that he can be indictable for not declaring what he does not know, I will never subscribe to such a doctrine as that.

Mr. Hodge. The gentleman does not understand. Does not every tutor know that there is a mortgage on his property?.

Mr. Short. Take the case of an interesting young man who marries a young woman with $25,000. I do not know of the existence of the mortgage on his property. I purchase it, or I lend money on it. In a few months the wife comes forward and takes it away, or prevents me from exercising my right, by the intervention of the prior mortgage. The Supreme Court has decided that a man may go to Kentucky, or Mississippi, and marry, and if the parties declare their intention of coming here, the money received by the husband there, will constitute a mortgage on his property. I wish to guard against this evil also.

Mr. King. I hope gentlemen understand the effect of the substitute. It is simply this: By it the benefits of the bill which we wish to make real and tangible now, will be deferred so long a time, that the present generation will experience none of their effects. Perhaps none of us would ever live to see the day when the great evil which now afflicts us—which retards our prosperity, and diminishes the value of our property—would be extirpated. We expected to derive benefit from this bill in 1854. The substitute defers it to an indefinite period. Should we adopt the substitute, we would not fulfil the wishes of the people; we would be false to our constituents; we would be literally keeping "the word of promise to the ear, to break it to the hope."

Mr. Wickliffe. Has the gentleman ever heard of a married woman or a minor complain of the tacit mortgage system?

Mr. King. I have heard married women say that they were greatly annoyed by having to make renunciations and go through the formalities which are now necessary—such as having to run to the mortgage office, and to do various things which a woman dislikes to do. I now see, however, that the differences in our opinion are irreconcilable. I represent the interests and wishes of my constituents, who will derive greater benefits from this bill than will be conferred on them by all the railroads and banks that the action of this Legislature may bring into being.

One gentleman has said that he never knew an instance of hardship resulting from the operation of a tacit mortgage in favor of a minor. Why the gentleman sleeps in a house which was purchased by an honest mechanic, who paid his own money for it, and thought it his property, when it was suddenly wrested from him by the operation of a tacit mortgage. If the gentleman has not known of this case, I am not surprised that he is so oblivious in regard to affairs in his own parish. Why should we delay this matter? He says there is nothing to complain of, yet he proposes to refer the subject to a committee of lawyers. Why, this bill was drawn up by lawyers, examined by lawyers, digested by lawyers, and has been approved by the most eminent lawyers in the State; not by one or two, but by twenty. At the last session of the Legislature, a bill having the same object in view, was introduced into the Senate by Mr. Benjamin. This bill is founded on that; but it provides for cases which were not reached by that. I am at liberty to mention some of the distinguished lawyers who approve of this bill. In the first place, I will refer to Mr. Benjamin, because his bill is the foundation of this. Then there is Mr. Micon, a lawyer of eminence, and Judges Eustis and Strawbridge. I refer also, with proud satisfaction, to my associates on the Judiciary Committee, Messrs. Lacey and Short. Here I should think is an array of legal talent enough to satisfy any gentleman. I do not say that the bill is perfect. A man may imagine cases of hardship which may arise under it; but what law is free from such an objection. What I do assert is, that this bill would remedy the evils which now exist, and will be as destitute of injurious effects as any piece of legislation can be expected to be.

Mr. Todd—I am opposed to the substitute. I believe it would defeat the object of the bill for the reasons given by the gentleman from New Orleans, (Mr. King.) It would in fact be legislating for posterity instead of for the living generation, which certainly claims some of our sympathy and consideration.—There is no doubt that the present system acts as an incumbrance on the property of the State, and prevents that free transmissibility which is one of the necessities of a prosperous community. For the last ten years the people have been crying aloud for the abolition of this injurious system. Gentlemen on the other side admit that it opens the way to fraud; they admit, at least impliedly, that it weighs like an incubus on the prosperity of Louisiana; that it prevents the influx of capital, and diminishes the confidence which people abroad might otherwise feel in our laws. They admit all this, and yet they do not wish to remedy the evil. I am for cutting the bonds and setting the victim free. It is incumbent on this legislature to take the first step. If we cannot do everything that is necessary, let the work be perfected hereafter. I have as tender a regard for the rights of minors and married women as can animate any Senator on this floor; but I agree with the Senator from New Orleans that this bill protects them better than they are now protected. Actuated by these views, believing that the interests of Louisiana imperiously demand a change from the present system, I shall cast my vote for the bill.

Mr. Hodge—I would ask the gentleman if the consequence of not inscribing the mortgage would be a loss of it, when it came into existence under a law not requiring its inscription? And if so, would the act be constitutional?

Mr. King—There is not the slightest doubt that we have the power to require an inscription of all mortgages. But if it be not constitutional, why object to the bill? It can do no harm on the gentleman's own theory. If it be unconstitutional it can have no effect, and consequently can work no injury.

The substitute was laid on the table.

Mr. Hodge. I moved to lay the section on the table, but afterwards withdrew it, in order to let the vote be taken directly on the section—though such courtesy is not usually extended to this side of the House.

Mr. Mouton moved to extend the time to the 1st of April, 1854.

Mr. King. Would the gentleman be satisfied with the bill then?

Mr. Mouton. Not so—but I would not object to it so much.

Mr. King. I do not see the reason for the amendment, unless the gentleman wishes to give the next Legislature a chance of repealing the law.

Mr. Mouton. The gentleman is good at guessing. That was certainly one of my objects.

Mr. King. Well, I accept the amendment.

Mr. Palfrey. I should like to know whether there is a clause in the bill providing for the recording of mortgages by tutors on immovable property, in different parishes, as fast as it is acquired. As the law now is, a mortgage exists on the immovable property as fast as it is acquired in any part of the State. I consider this an essential feature in any system which may be adopted. Suppose a tutor, having no property, is appointed. He invests the money of his ward as he pleases. What security does the bill offer for this? Does it contain a provision that the tutor must record the mortgages on his property in different parishes? This is absolutely necessary, in order to prevent embezzlement.

Digitized by Google

Mr. King. There is a section in the bill intended provide for these cases.

Mr. Palfrey. That section makes it a penal offence to omit recording the mortgages. But I do not want punishment—I want security that the minor will be protected. Suppose the tutor should die—what security would there be? What way would the minor have of protecting his rights? You cannot punish a dead man.

Mr. Nicholls. I think the remarks of the Senator from St. Mary are perfectly correct.

Mr. Taylor offered the following amendment, to be put at the end of the 3d section, which was adopted:—

It shall be the duty of the Clerks of Court in whose courts there may at this time exist evidence of a legal mortgage upon the estate of the husband in favor of the wife,—if the same be not already recorded,—to record the same in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages; and in case any clerk shall fail to do so on or before the 1st day of April, 1854, he shall be liable to any married woman for all damage she may sustain for such failure or neglect, and to the further penalty of one hundred dollars—one half for the use and benefit of the person bringing the suit. For making such recordation, the clerk shall receive a fee in each case of one dollar and fifty cents.

The third section was then adopted as amended—and

The fourth section was adopted.

Mr. Palfrey offered the following as an additional section:

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That, in addition to the offices of record for mortgages, now established by law, there shall be established, at the seat of Government of this State, a central office for the recording of all mortgages contemplated by this act, whether in favor of married women or of minors; and all mortgages contemplated by the provisions of this act shall be recorded in said office, as provided in this act for recording the same inother offices.

And no acknowledgment of receipt of money or property on the part of the husband, shall be evidence of the delivery of such property or money, unless accompanied by the certificate of the officer in charge of said central office of mortgages, to the effect that said receipt has been duly recorded in his office, and no letters of tutorship or curatorship shall issue to persons applying for the same until the certificate of the officer in charge of said central office of mortgages shall have been exhibited—showing that the order for such appointment has been duly recorded in his office; and the recording of said receipt of the husband or said order for appointment of such tutor or curator, as the case may be, shall operate and take effect as a general mortgage on the immovable property and slaves of such husband or such tutor or curator, as the case may be, throughout the State, and against third persons, from the time of record in said office.

Mr. Short—I am opposed to the creation of a central office as proposed by the additional section offered by the gentleman from St. Mary. The distance to the seat of government from some parts of the State is such that before a man could come here and procure a certificate, some other person might have obtained a mortgage. It would increase the difficulties which we are now trying to get over, and would be an incumbrance on the bill. The bill is long enough already; I hope the gentleman will not try to augment its proportions and encumber it with additional and superfluous sections. If the gentleman offer many such amendments, he will overwhelm the bill entirely. I sincerely hope that he will not evince such a disposition towards a bill so well considered as this has been.

Mr. Palfrey—As long considered as the bill has been, it is not yet ripe. The gentleman has more than once told us that his object was to convert unknown into known mortgages. This is the very object of my amendment.

Mr. King—There is one substantial objection to the amendment. We should have to send to Baton Rouge for a certificate of every mortgage. Much time would thus be consumed, and after all we should have no better index of the condition of the property of the State. The bill before us provides that the tutor shall record the mortgage in every parish where he has property, and makes it penal for him to neglect it.

Mr. Nicholls—But what security is offered for the minor?

Mr. King—The security is that the recordation of the mortgage is made certain, at least we think that it is.

Mr. Palfrey—The bill does not provide for the recording of any mortgage after the appointment of the tutor. I acknowledge the evils referred to by the advocates of the bill, but what are they in comparison with the destruction of the rights of minors?

The amendment was lost.

The fifth section was then adopted.

The sixth section was taken up.

Mr. Nicholls—The section pretends to protect the rights of the minor when it does no such thing. Instead of being a protection, it is only a cloak for a most odious system of taxation; and this when the people are already ground down by taxation. It provides that the clerk shall summon all tutors or curators to record the mortgages existing on their property. Does the gentleman know what the cost of this process would be? I can speak within bounds when I say that in my parish there would be at least 500 cases of this kind, and the expenses for the clerk and sheriff would amount to ten dollars in each case. In my parish, I repeat, there are at least 500 succession cases. 500 multiplied by 10, gives a tax on the parish of St. Martin alone of $5000. When the tax-gatherer rides around collecting these bills, and says to the widow and the orphan, you have been able to save very little, but the officers of the law want to get some more out of you," when, I say, the tax-gatherer presents himself at our doors, no man who supports this bill would be able to stand up against the force of popular opinion. The bill says that the clerk must summon everybody who he has reason to believe has been a tutor, &c Will not the reason of the clerk be stimulated to believe this a great number of times, when he is to receive ten dollars for every summons? Thus the tax would be greatly increased, and when you take attorneys' fees into consideration, it will be more than quadrupled. Why sir, if the lawyers had assembled and devised a plan for the encouragement of litigation, they could not have formed a better one than is contained in this bill. Perhaps I myself may come in for some of the spoils. But notwithstanding this I must protest against this system of taxation—a system not for the support of the government, but calculated to fill the pockets of a miserable set of officials, and make the fortunes of a pack of ravenous attorneys. The people of my parish are willing to lend their property for the sake of preserving the credit of the State, but they are not willing to give away their money to a set of greedy officers The provision is grinding—oppressive—odious. The taxation imposed by it is onerous in the extreme; it will impair our credit and create discontent. The gentleman thinks it calculated to restore credit. How can it have that effect when it imposes a burthen of five or ten thousand dollars on each parish. I know it will be said that I am presenting an exaggerated picture. But I am prepared for that argument. These mortgages run back for 25 years, and in the parish of St. Martin there are 500 of such cases, This is the odious feature of the bill, and I will never reconcile myself to it. Why not adopt some measure whose generous influence will be felt all over the State; not one under which the minor will be plundered and the people oppressed?

I say that under this bill there would be perpetrated a more enormous amount of plunder and fraud on minors and married women than under any law that ever was passed. I ask, are you willing that the sheriff shall ride around and proclaim that all successions must be re-opened and gone through with again; that new taxes must be paid, and all for the security of capital and the benefit of commerce? Commerce! Commerce! Commerce must have its way; capital must take its course; no matter who may be ruined, no matter who may be defrauded, no matter who may be trampled in the dust.

Quid non mortalia pectora cogis, Auri sacra fames!

Commerce is checked and capital is cramped by the tacit mortgage system; so we are told by the advocates of this bill. Better that they should be trammelled and confined, than that the rights of minors should be destroyed, and the innocent orphan deprived of his property. I shall oppose it with all my faculties, with all my energies; and I trust a day of reckoning will come when the people will know with what object this bill was passed.

Mr. Short—The gentleman has drawn a very vivid picture, and I really feel sorry that I have it in my power to relieve the bill of the objection which has given rise to such a display of fancy. The bill simply directs a certain thing to be done. There are no citations, no costs, no taxation. The gentleman has told us of the enormities of this bill. He has exhibited to us the State of Louisiana writhing under the iron heal of commerce; certainly a very painful spectacle to me, though I imagine it is nothing more than an offspring of the gentleman's excited fancy. It is a brilliant picture, but the gentleman has not told us in what gallery he intends to place it. One little amendment which I have to offer, will, I should think, effectually dissipate the gentleman's objections, viz: that the tutor shall be liable for the costs. So, after all, it amounts simply to this. The law commands him to do certain things, and if he do not do them, he must suffer. The gentleman, I believe, intended to make a motion to lay the section on the table. I shall not interfere with him by making a long argument. I only wanted to show that the objections which have been urged do not apply. I am willing to strip the bill of all semblance of taxation and lawyers' fees. If we could pass a law to get rid of the lawyers altogether, it would be so much the better. It would be a consummation most devoutly to be wished; though I might then, with truth, say, "Othello's occupation's gone."

Mr. King—The gentleman has raised up a creation of the imagination with which to frighten us from our propriety. What effect would his motion to strike out have? We have already passed a section making it incumbent on tutors or curators to have these mortgages recorded by the 1st of April, 1854. Now here is a section providing for the manner of recordation, and the gentleman who has constituted himself the peculiar champion of minors, though I do not believe he is followed by a very large retinue of them, who has dreamt of oppression and fraud, and found them in what is a remedy for those very vices—he, I repeat, wishes to have this section stricken out. Now if we adopt his amendment, on the 1st of April next, the rights of minors all over the State will be stricken down at one fell swoop, and thus will be left without a remedy. I do not wish to do this. If the gentleman wishes it, I must dispute with him for the championship of those interesting creatures whom he has taken under his especial charge. If the gentleman will look at the records of his own parish, he will find that almost every mortgage is already recorded, and every honest tutor will rush forward to obey the requirements of this bill. If they do not, I wish I could impose a hundred fold the penalty on them. If a tutor is so callous, so false to his duty, so negligent of the sacred rights he has sworn to protect, he should be punished with extreme severity. This section is intended for the protection of minors If the tutor neglects his duty, the penalty will follow him. I had thought that as a matter of course the Courts would assess the costs on a tutor who does not fulfil his duty. But to make this sure I shall be happy to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Carroll (Mr. Short.)

Mr. Nicholls—The gentleman says that the section is intended for the protection of minors. If it be so it is such protection as vultures give to lambs.

The section was adopted.

The bill finally passed section by section.

THE MECHANIC'S AND TRADERS' BANK.

Mr. Palfrey submitted the following minority report:

The undersigned, member of the Committee on Banks and Banking, to which was referred the bill entitled

An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, dissenting from the majority of said committee in the report they have made on said bill, begs leave to report that, in common justice to this institution, which has been administered and conducted throughout its term of existence in a manner to furnish satisfactorily a safe and sound currency and liberal financial facilities to the commercial and agricultural interests, as well as from considerations of expediency, which should avoid a sudden withdrawal of a large amount of monied capital from the use of commerce in our State, recommend that such action be had in said bill as will enable said institution to wind up its business without causing embarrassment to itself in liquidating its affairs, or to the commercial community in calling in, too suddenly, payment due to the bank.

(Signed) W. T. PALFREY.

SENATE CHAMBER, April 21, 1853.

Mr. Clifton, from the Committee on Banks and Banking, made the following report:

Hon. W. W. FARMER, Lieutenant Governor:

In behalf of the Committee on Banks and Banking, to whom was referred

An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank, the undersigned begs leave respectfully to report that, as the charter of said Bank expired on the 12th April last by limitation, and as no action of your committee could, consequently, affect the bill, they return it to the Senate without amendment or commment.

(Signed) C. W. CLIFTON, Chairman.

April 14, 1853.

Mr. Martin—I move that five hundred copies of the reports be printed. The object of the motion to recommit was to smother the bill. It was a parliamentary trick, and I want the people to know about it.

Five hundred copies of the reports were ordered to be printed.

Mr. Lacey introduced the following joint resolution:

Be it Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives be requested to use their influence and exertions to obtain an additional Post Office in the parish of Livingston, State of Louisiana, and to be located at or near the present residence of Robert Bruton.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the Governor to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. Martin—I move to strike out the word "instructed."

Mr. Mouton—I am opposed to the motion. I believe in the right of instruction.

Mr. Martin—That is the very reason that I make the motion. I do not believe in it. To instruct our Senators to do a thing is simply ridiculous.

The amendment was carried.

Mr. Rivers called up the following bill, entitled

An act for the completion of buildings in the Louisiana Penitentiary.

On motion to adopt the first section, which reads as follows:

Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the sum of ten thousand dollars be, and the same is hereby appropiated for the completion of the now cell room in the Louisiana Penitentiary.

Some discussion ensued, but eventually the bill passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Eastin, special messenger from the House, requested the signature of the President to the following enrolled bills:

An act to reorganize the Police Jury of St. Landry.

An act to amend the several acts relative to the police and government of the town of Franklin, parish of St. Mary.

Digitized by Google

And he requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following bills and resolution:

An act to reorganise free public schools in the State of Louisiana.

An act to regulate the election of District Attorneys, (the First Judicial District excepted.)

An act to emancipate George Milette.

An act to make operative the principles contained in article 28th of the Constitution.

An act to secure the collection and prompt payment of public monies.

An act to define more precisely the limits between the parishes of Orleans and St. Bernard.

An act to provide for the recording of brand-marks of cattle and other animals.

An act providing for the appropriation and reimbursement of monies paid on account of certain school land warrants sold for location in the South East Land District.

An act supplementary to an act entitled, "an act to provide for the expropriation of lands for railroad and other works of public utility—approved March 8, 1852."

An act for the relief of John Rains of the parish of Morehouse.

An act for the relief of the property banks in liquidation.

An act to provide for the performance of the duties of Parish Recorders in case of vacancy.

Resolution instructing our Senators and requesting our representatives in the next Congress to obtain the repeal of any regulation refusing admission to the Marine Hospitals of the United States of any seamen or other persons attacked by supposed incurable diseases.

And he informed the Senate that the House had concurred in, with an amendment,

An act for the relief of Emile La Sere, State Printer.

And that the House had concurred in an additional section to the substitute of the Senate to the House bill entitled;

An act for the relief of the holders of certificates of entry of land warrants issued by Richard Loucks, Register of the Land Office.

And that the House had concurred in the following Senate bills;

An act to create two additional Notaries Public in and for the parish of Morehouse.

And that the House refused to concur inthe amendments of the Senate to the House bill entitled:

An act relative to the Judiciary of the State, (the First Judicial District excepted.)

He requested the concurrence of the Senate in a bill entitled:

An act for the completion of buildings in the Louisiana Penitentiary.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills, entitled:

An act to emancipate Alexander Green.

An act to authorize Archibald Borron and Mary Murphy, his wife, to adopt a child named Mary Lucy Borron.

An act to give to the Mayor of the town of Hudson certain powers.

An act to prohibit municipal corporations in this State from levying a tax upon persons engaged in selling articles manufactured by themselves within this State—substitute for.

An act to Prevent the Common Council of the city of New Orleans from levying a tax upon persons engaged in selling their own manufactured articles.

An act to punish injuries to levees or embankments on any of the navigable rivers or waters of this State.

An Act of incorporation of the New Orleans, Red River and Texas Telegraph Company.

An act to incorporate Big Creek.

An act to authorize Rufus D. Kilgore and his wife, Sarah C. Kilgore, to adopt Robert Bliss Read, and to change his name to that of Robert Read Kilgore.

An act to emancipate Francois Nicholas.

An act to provide for the manner of canceling the bonds and mortgages given by parish Tax Collectors.

Also, a joint resolution tendering the thanks of the General Assembly to Captain Ricketts, U. S. Artillery, for firing salute in honor of the remains of ex-Governor Johnson.

Resolution requiring the State Engineer to make a thorough examination of the channels in Old River, between the mouth of Red River and the Mississippi river, and that of Grand Point, on Red River.

Resolution for the relief of Charity Hospital.

And he requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills of the Senate:

An act more effectually to carry into effect the provisions of an act entitled an act for the advancement of medical education in Louisiana—approved 21st March, 1850.

An Act for the relief of Mrs. Joseph DeBuclet, of the parish of St. Martin.

An act to incorporate Baton Rouge and Clinton Plank Road Company.

An act to prevent clerks of courts and their deputies from acting as auctioneers in certain cases.

SATURDAY, April 16, 1853.

Mr. Derbes, from the committee on claims, introduced an act for the Relief of Shadrack Brooks and David Sherly, and a report from said committee—which was laid over.

Mr. Short—The Senator from East Baton Rouge having been obliged to leave town, has requested me to introduce a bill, with a request that it be referred to the Judiciary committee, viz:

An act to regulate the practice in District Courts,

Which is referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Griffin—I am authorized by the Committee on Parochial Affairs to report favorably on the passage of the bill to provide for uniform representation in the parish of St. James for Police Jurors, &c.

The rules were suspended, and the bill read a third time and passed.

Mr. Wickliffe called up bill from the House—

An act to authorize the purchase of 250 copies of a revised edition of the Civil Code, Code of Practice and Louisiana reports, by Thomas Gibbs Morgan.

Mr. Mouton—I object to a suspension of the rules for a third reading of this bill, and would ask for an explanation of the necessity of the State incurring this expense.

Mr. Wickliffe—I will inform the Senator that there is not a copy of either of the named works in the State Library—that a new and revised edition is urgently called for, and that, in my opinion, the purchase is actually necessary.

Mr. Mouton withdrew his objection, and the bill passed.

Mr. King asked leave to introduce a report from Committee on Internal Improvement, and an act to erect public works at the mouth of Bayou Plaquemine, as a substitute.

Mr. Slack moved a dispensation of the rules for the purpose of taking substitute to a second reading.

Rules suspended.

Mr. Slack moved the adoption of section 1st.

Mr. Short—Although I do not live in the second district, I feel a deep interest in this matter, and cannot refrain from expressing my astonishment and regret at the introduction of a measure which, in my opinion, is a violation of the law appointing Swamp Land Commissioners, and also a violation of the law of Congress which made the fund arising from the sale of the lands donated by them, applicable to the purposes of leveeing and draining alone. The act now before the Senate is a commencement of a system of Legislation which I hoped had been abandoned. The act which has just passed both Houses establishing the Board of Swamp Land Commissioners, gives the power to the Governor to appoint one in each of the three districts into which the State is divided. This Board appoints an Engineer for each district, who are to make the necessary surveys, and ascertain the work necessary to be done. These Commissioners and the Engineers are authorized to determine what works come within the meaning of the works leveeing and draining, and a fund is put under their control to accomplish the purposes of that act. The bill now before the Senate is one which will interfere with the general levee system which has just been established, and will defeat the object of that act. The act of Congress provides that the proceeds arising from the sales of the sale of the swamp and overflowed lands shall be applied for no other purpose than leveeing and drainage. Does not the act now before the Senate provide for an application of these funds to an object not coming within the spirit or words of the grant? To build a breakwater at the mouth of a bayou, or a break-drift, which is to keep drift from coming in the mouth of a bayou, I do not believe has ever before been considered as coming within the meaning of leveeing or draining, and if it did, the Board of Swamp Land Commissioners and Engineers under the lêvee bill can decide on that matter, and carry out all works which do come within the meaning of that act.

I do hope, therefore, that the Senate will not go back to that system of special legislation by which appropriations were made first to this point and then to that point, when they had established a Board to carry out a system of leveeing and drainage, and had placed the swamp land fund under their control for that purpose.

You are breaking into the principle of the law of Congress, and I hope the bill will not pass.

Mr. Slack—I ask for the report of the Internal Improvement Committee to be read, which I think will remove many of the objections urged against the passage of this bill. It appears to me that if the honorable member from Madison and Carroll were made acquainted with the nature of the country where this improvement is proposed, he would withdraw his objections. I will inform the Senate that it is absolutely necessary to erect works at the mouth of this bayou, to prevent drift coming in, before any other work can be done towards either leveeing or draining. I have seen in one day a rise of two feet of water at this point, which overflowed a large district, and which was caused entirely by the accumulation of drift-wood in the mouth of the bayou The waters of the bayou are now four feet higher than in any other portion of the State, and until the raft is removed, there is no use of attempting the accomplishment of anything like leveeing. I think this bill is strictly within the meaning and spirit of the law, and that as a matter of right and justice, it ought to pass.

Mr. Griffin—I consider the bill now before the Senate unconstitutional, and will not vote for its passage If the swamp land fund can be applied to this purpose, it can be applied to dredging and ditching, or any other purpose foreign to leveeing and draining.

Mr. Nicholls—I consider this bill a proper application of the swamp land fund, and coming within the meaning of the grant. Many members of the Senate know that the mouth of this bayou is greatly enlarged, and that nearly all the drift coming down the Mississippi is drawn in, and forms a raft blocking up nearly all the streams leading to the Gulf, and obstructing navigation. Also, the lands in the neighborhood of the bayous have been overflowed four feet, and are from this cause constantly subject to a recurrence of this disaster; if this bill, which is for the purpose of removing this raft from the mouth of the bayou, and which is the acknowledged cause of these overflows—if it removes the water from the land, is it not draining? Does it not come within the law? If, sir, we cannot remove the cause of the overflow, we cannot drain; and if this be not draining, I know not the meaning of the term. No other method of draining can be devised to relieve that section of country than the removal of the raft accumulated at the mouth of the bayou.

Mr. Short—One word on the principle to be adopted in that bill, which has not been touched upon. The Board of Swamp Land Commissioners are the persons authorized by law to do the work contemplated in the bill now before the Senate. And what are you going to do? You are going to take the work from them which they are authorized by law to superintend, and send an Engineer from point to point over the State, in violation of a law made by your own body. And what, let me ask, is the meaning of the word draining? It is to remove water from land by the process of cutting ditches to lead the water to lower land. If you could find some way of turning the Mississippi or Ohio river on the other side of the Rocky mountains, it would be just as much drainage as the principle contended for by the gentlemen who have preceded me on this subject.

Mr. King—I think that this bill ought to pass. I think that drainage means anything that keeps water off from the land. Also, I think that the appropriation in this bill is a proper and legitimate use of the swamp land fund.

Mr. Short—I ask the gentleman if he has not established a Board of Swamp Land Commissioners to counsel in matters and undertakings of this nature? and are you not taking their duties from them? I do not agree with the Senator from Orleans that this is a legitimate use of the swamp land fund, and I move that the appropriation to carry out the objects of this bill be made out of the internal improvement fund, instead of the swamp land fund.

Mr. Todd—I move to lay the amendment on the table. I consider it unjust to take the fund for internal improvement for this purpose. I approve heartily of the bill and hope it will pass. I consider the principle correct—the act of removing the raft is an act of drainage and cannot in my opinion be viewed in any other light.

Mr. Palfrey—I do not think, sir, that the Legislature parted with all its power of legislating on leveeing and draining, when they created the Board of Swamp Land Commissioners. I approve of the bill, and think it comes within the meaning of the law. And, sir, from considerations of economy, I shall vote in favor of the original bill—as I consider it provides for the most speedy and cheapest method of draining that district of country.

Mr. Short's amendment was lost—and the original bill passed to second reading.

Mr Griffin called up bill to provide for deficiencies in appropriation for the year ending 31st March, 1853—stating that there was an omission in the bill of an appropriation for the Engineer Department. When on motion of Mr. Wickliffe the bill was referred to Finance Committee.

Mr. Rivers moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of taking up the Citizens' Bank bill, which was carried. And on motion to read the bill a third time, by its title, the yeas and nays were called.

Mr. Mouton—I beg the Senate to excuse me from voting on this bill, having paired off with Mr. Kenner, who has left the city. I am, however, opposed to its passage, and would vote against it if Mr. Kenner was present. Excused, and the bill then passed.

Mr. McCay moved a suspension of the rules, to take up an act entitled An Act to provide for and regulate the office of Attorney General—which was carried.

Mr. Todd—This is a very important bill, and I have not yet seen or read it, and I wish time to examine and consider it before voting. I therefore move that it be printed and made the special order of the day for Tuesday next.

Mr. McCay—I think that Senators have had time enough to examine this bill, and the importance of its provisions makes it necessary to have prompt action upon it. I think the bill ought to pass now, and hope that the Senator will withdraw his motion to postpone.

Mr. Todd—I must insist on my motion to print and postpone the bill. Motion was lost.

On motion of Mr. McCay to adopt first section of the bill—

Mr. Mouton regretted that he was obliged to oppose the bill—that if the duties of the Attorney General were increased, by the fact of his being obliged to assume a portion of what had been the duties of the District Attorney of the parish of Orleans, his pay ought to be increased also, and the salary of the District Attorney decreased in the proportion that his duties were taken from him.

On motion to adopt 10th section of the bill—

Mr. Todd said—I move to strike out $3500 and insert $3000, as the salary of the Attorney. I think that $2500 would be right, but am willing to meet gentlemen's views halfway. I think that although the duties of the office were arduous, and the labor worth $3500—at a time like this when the State was nearly bankrupt, $3000 was enough. I think that economy in legislation is incumbent upon us, and that a beginning at reform should be made.

Mr. McCay—The amount proposed to give this officer is the same as was appropriated last year—$3500. Subsequently the Legislature reduced the amount to $1500, with a contingent fund of $500 at his disposal, making it $2000. I think that $3500 is only a fair compensation for his services, his duties being increased in the parish of Orleans. I can see no reason why the Attorney General should not attend to it in any part of the State, whenever and wherever the State may require his services, in the Federal courts. He appears onlywhen the amount in suit exceeds 2000. There is an average of about 60 criminal capital suits per annum in the parish of Orleans, in the prosecution of which the District Attorney stands alone; the Attorney General having no such duty to perform. Now I ask any member of the bar, any attorney on this floor, whether he would prosecute and attend to 60 criminal cases for less than $3500. I think that low salaries do not bring out talent, that no lawyer would give the close attention, the time, and the labor, necessary to insure success, for small pay as he would for good pay. I would not do it myself; nor do I believe it to be in the nature of man to do so. The labors of the District Attorney of the parish of Orleans are too great; and if the labors of the Attorney General are increased, his pay ought to be. And the amendment reducing the salary, I trust, will not pass.

Mr. Wickliffe—I was not disposed, at the first blush, to vote for this bill. I am not only not in favor of, but strongly opposed to exorbitant pay. But I now think that the bill is right and shall vote for retaining the salary at $3500.

Mr. Nicholls—I think that $3500 is little enough for the salary of the Attorney General of the State, and am willing to vote in support of my opinion.

Mr. Todd called for the yeas and nays on his amendment to strike out $3500 and insert $3000—which was lost—5 to 15.

After which the original bill passed.

The Senate then passed to the consideration of the order of the day An act relative to the Judiciary of the State—the First Judicial District excepted—returned from the House, the House not agreeing to the Senate's amendments.

Mr. Boatner moved that the Senate recede.

Mr. Mouton—I hope that the Senate will not recede; the object of the House is to make country judges receive $1000 per annum less than city judges. The same amount of talent and the same duties are required for the country as for the city, and I will never agree to such an unjust distinction.

Mr. Wickliffe—I do not see what possible good can ensue from insisting on these amendments, as it is well known they cannot pass the House.

Mr. Short—I think that the Senate ought not, and I hope that it will not, recede from its position. I can see no reason why a judge living in New Orleans, who is never obliged to leave home, nó bayous to swim, and not obliged to ruin his digestion with country circuit fare, who, in fact, lives better and performs his duties easier, should receive more pay than a man who has harder duty to perform and requiring equal talents. I can see no good reason for retrogading from my position, and mean to stand by it.

The question was then taken on receding, which was carried—11 to 11—the President giving the casting vote. The Senate was then informed that the House had concurred in the amendment for the relief of Emile LaSere, State Printer. And also asked the concurrence of the Senate in the amendment of the House, to correct the date, so as to read from 1st Monday in March, instead of 1st Monday in present month.

On motion of Mr. Short, the amendment of House was agreed to.

The following act, was returned by the House, having disagreed to Senate's amendment—entitled: "An act to organize District Courts in the parish and city of Morehouse;" in 14th section, the Senate struck out the words "except the First District Court, &c., &c.," which the House disagreed to and restored.

Mr. McCay—There are two points of objection to the Senate's receding from its position in this matter—the first is exclusive criminal jurisdiction, and the next in regard to the plea of jurisdiction. That suit shall not be dismissed—I oppose it because I think it might injure non-residents of New Orleans to be subject to be sued in New Orleans—and am opposed to it because it is iniquitous.

Mr. Short—I do not want to subject persons living in other parts of the State to be sued in New Orleans, and I think that the Senate should not recede from that portion of the amendment.

Mr McCay moved that the Senate do not recede, which was rejected to.

An amendment added to the bill, with the consent of the House, "that this act shall take effect from and after its passage," was adopted.

Mr. King moved that a committee of conference with the House, on the above bill, be appointed, which was carried.

The Chair appointed Messrs. King, McCay and Short.

An act entitled an act to regulate the election of District Attorney in the several judicial districts in the State, was then taken up under a suspension of the rules.

Bill passed—after striking out the words "except the First Judicial District"—adding a section, "that this bill shall take effect from and after its passage."

An act for the relief of Property Banks in liquidation, was taken up and read first time by title.

An act granting compensation to Chas. Fitz, Register of the Land Office of the parish of Orleans.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the rules were suspended for a second reading.

Mr. Short—I would state to the gentleman that the Committee on Lands and Levees reported a bill some time since, granting to Mr. Fitz all the compensation to which they considered him entitled. The bill, I understand, was suppressed, and Mr. Fitz carried his claim to the House of Representatives, where this bill originated, giving him a larger sum than the Senate committee deem him entitled to. I therefore request that this bill be referred to the Committee on Lands and Levees. Referred.

An act granting pensions to the veterans of 1814 and '15.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the rules were suspended for a second reading.

Mr. McCay—I would suggest the propriety of a due consideration of the merits of this bill. Its passage will require an appropriation of $40,000, and I think that so large on appropriation, at this period, requires the approval of some appropriate committee

On motion of Mr. Martin, the bill was referred to the Finance Committee.

An act to provide for the appointment of an Attorney or representative of the State in each Parish, was taken up and the rules suspended for a second reading; when,

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the bill was laid on the table by a unanimous vote.

Mr. McCay—I now give notice that on Monday I shall move a reconsideration of the bill regulating the salary of the District Judges.

On motion of Col. Short, the House bill No. 394, entitled an act granting an extension of time to actual settlers to make application and payment for lands, was taken up, passed and sent to the House.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

An act relative to mortgages and privileges; when

On motion of Mr. King, the consideration of the bill was postponed and made the special order of the day for Tuesday following.

An act to provide for the registry of voters in the city of New Orleans, was taken up.

Mr. Short—As the subject of this bill concerns the city of New Orleans alone, I move its reference to the New Orleans delegation.

Mr. Nichols—I am opposed to the reference of this bill to the New Orleans delegation. I think that the country is as much interested in honest voting as the city, and ought to have an equal voice in the consideration of this matter. I move, sir, that this bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee. Referred to said committee.

An act to divide the State into congressional Districts, was taken up; and on motion of Mr. Wicklife, the consideration of the bill was postponed until Monday following

Mr. King's bill, entitled an act to provide for the recording of mortgages in favor of minors and married women, was taken up and passed—title passed.

Mr. Wickliffe gave notice that on Monday he should move a reconsideration of the vote on the final passage of the bill.

An act to extend the charter of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, was taken up.

Col. Short moved that the consideration of the bill be made the special order of the day for Wednesday following, with the report of the committee. Carried.

Col. Short—I am now, sir, prepared to state to the Senate, positively, that the Bank does not wish any more time than the first of July, and also that the Directors of the Bank have passed a resolution not to apply for a re-charter under any circumstances. I make this statement, hoping that it may relieve the fears of many gentlemen and induce them to vote with me.

On motion, the rules were suspended to take up the bill, when,

On motion of Col. Short, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until Wednesday next.

MONDAY, April 18th, 1853.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to make the bill for the registry of voters, (which had been made the order of the day for Wednesday next, under a misapprehension,) the order of the day for to-day.

Mr. Wickliffe, according to previous notice, moved for a reconsideration of the vote given on Saturday last, on a bill entitled—

An act to provide for the recording of mortgages in favor of minors and married women.

On motion it was reconsidered, and on motion of Mr. Nicholls, it was referred to a special committee of three, with instructions to report by Wednesday next.

The President appointed Messrs. Wickliffe, King and Kenner of said committee.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY—THE FREE BANKING BILL.

The following bill was taken up:

An act to establish a general system for Banking in the State of Louisiana.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That any person or association of persons, or corporation formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, may transact the business of banking in this State, and establish offices of discount, deposit and circulation for that purpose, upon the terms and conditions, and subject to all the liabilities and penalties herein prescribed.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That bankers and banking corporations carrying on the business of banking under this act, shall have power to discount bills, notes and other evidences of debt, to receive deposits, to buy and sell gold and silver bullion, foreign coins and bills of exchange; to lend money on real and personal security, and to exercise all incidental powers necessary to carry on said business.

But the aggregate amount of the capital stock of such banker or corporation shall not be less than one hundred thousand dollars.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That any number of persons more than five, associating themselves for the purpose of banking under this act, may constitute themselves a corporation, are hereby authorized to become a corporation, with power and authority—

1st. To have and enjoy succession by a corporate name, to be selected by themselves, for a period which shall be expressed and limited in the Articles of Association, provided, such period shall not exceed twenty years; and by that corporate name to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, appear, answer and prosecute, in any and all courts of justice, and elsewhere.

2d. To hold, receive, purchase and convey, by and under their corporate name, such property, real and personal, as may be indispensable to the objects of the association; Provided, That the real estate which such corporation may lawfully purchase, hold and convey, shall be, first, such as may be necessary for the proper transaction of their business; secondly, such as shall have been mortgaged to them in good faith, as security for loans; thirdly, such as shall be conveyed to them in satisfaction of debts previously contracted, bona fide, in the course of their business; and fourthly, such as they may purchase at sales, under judgments or mortgages held by themselves, or in which they may have an interest by being subrogated to rights according to article 2157 of the Civil Code But they shall not have power to hold any real estate acquired in any way, except such as may be required for the transaction of their business, for a longer time than five years.

3d. To make and use a corporate seal, to be described in the Articles of Association.

4th. To name and appoint such managers and directors to administer the affairs of the corporation as they may think necessary and proper; the number and style of such directors or managers being described in the Articles of Association, and to fix the compensation of all persons in their employment. All said managers and directors shall be citizens of the State.

5th. Make and ordain such by-laws for the proper management of the affairs of the corporation as may be necessary and proper, and in conformity with the provisions of law, the Articles of Association, and this act; and such by-laws to repeal, alter and amend at pleasure.

SEC 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That corporations under this act shall be organized by written articles of association, duly executed by a notarial act, and recorded in the office of the Recorder of Mortgages, or other officer exercising the functions of Recorder of Mortgages, at the place named in the act as the place of business, or domicil of the corporation. A certified copy of the same shall be deposited in the office of the Auditor of Public Accounts; the same shall also be published once a week for four weeks in the official journal of the State, and if the official journal of the State should not be a newspaper in the city of New Orleans, the said act shall also be published for the same time in at least one daily newspaper in the city of New Orleans, and also in a newspaper at the place named in the act as the place of business, if there be one published there. A duly certified copy of the record of such an act may be used as evidence for and against such corporations.

SEC 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That the act thus recorded and published shall contain and set forth under the signatures of the subscribers and associates, the name assumed to distinguish such banking company, and to be used in its dealings—the place where the banking business of such association is to be carried on, designating the particular parish and city or village in the State, the amount of the capital stock of such Banking Company, and the number of shares into which the same shall be divided; the names and places of residence of the share holders, and the number of shares held by each of them respectively, and the time when, and the manner in which payments on stock subscribed shall be made; the period at which such association shall comence, and the period of its duration; the number of its directors and managers and the mode of election, and the mode of liquidation at the end of the term.

The same may also provide for an increase of the capital, and of the number of associates, and for any modification, addition or alteration in the articles of association; Provided, that such increase, and every such modification, alteration or addition shall be submitted to a general meeting of the stockholders, held after thirty days' notice, and shall be approved by two-thirds of the amount of the capital stock, and every such increase, modification, alteration or addition shall be executed, recorded and published as provided in this section for the original articles.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That all stock subscribed to any banking company under this act, must be paid up in full, in specie, within twelve months after the said company shall commence business.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That no loans by any banking company shall be made to any of its stockholders on a pledge of its own stock.

SEC. 8 Be it further enacted, &c., That the shares of the said banking companies shall be deemed to be personal property, and shall be transferrable upon the books of the same in such manner as the by-laws may direct; but no shareholder thereon shall be liable for its debts and contracts to a greater amount than the whole amount of his shares therein; unincorporated bankers shall be liable to the full amount of their obligations and contracts.

The liability as stockholder shall apply not only to such persons as appear by the books of the company to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, although the same may appear upon such books in the name of another person; and also to every person who shall have advanced the instalments or purchase money of any stock in the name of a person under twenty-one years of age, and while such person remains a minor; and also to every guardian or trustee who shall voluntarily invest funds in said stock; no trust funds shall be liable for the corporate debts, but the guardian or trustee shall be personally liable, until the person beneficially interested become competent to control and dispose of the same, and for sicty days thereafter. But when a guardian or trustee holds such stocks under a transfer from a third person, in good faith, or by posftive directions to make such investment, the person so transferring or giving directions, or his estate, if he be deceased, shall be responsible for the debts and liabilities chargeable on said stock.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That the stockholders of any banking company formed under this act shall be exonerated from any responsibility therefor in respect to any stock which shall have been duly transferred on the books of the association, in good faith, and without the intent to evade such responsibility, before default has been made by the company in the payment of its debts. The assignee in said case, shall succeed to the same responsibilities as though he had been owner of the stock at the time of contracting the debt or liability for which the stockholders are responsible, and the same rule of responsibility shall prevail in regard to all subsequent assignee.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That every Banking Company established under this act shall, on proof of any act of insolvency, or non-compliance with the conditions of this act, forfeit its corporate any of rights, and it shall be the duty of the district court of the district in which such corporation is situated, at the instance of any creditor or of the Auditor of Public Accounts, and on proof of the alleged facts, to the satisfaction of the said court, to decree such forfeiture and to appoint thereupon commissioners to effect the liquidation of the affairs of the said corporation—to convert into cash, as speedily as may be, under the direction of the court, all the assets of the corporation, including the sums that may have remained unpaid by stockholders upon their respective shares of the capital stock; and after providing according to article 120 of the Constitution, for any unpaid balance which may be due to the bill holders, to distribute the same, as now provided by law, in the case of insolvencies of individuals.

SEC. 11. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said Auditor of Public Accounts of this State is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be engraved and printed, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting, such a quantity of circulating notes, in blank, of the different denominations, not less than five dollars each, which are authorized to be issued by the incorporated banks of the State, as he may from time to time deem necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act; such blank circulating notes shall be countersigned by the said Auditor, and numbered and registered in his office, by and under his direction by persons appointed for that purpose, so that the notes of each denomination of such circulating notes issued to the same banker or banking company, shall be uniform. All such circulating notes, of every denomination, shall be stamped upon their face, "secured by pledge of public stocks." The form and devices of such circulating notes, may be selected by the bankers and banking companies, who may be entitled to receive them from the auditor, under the provisions of this act; but the Auditor shall prescribe a uniformity among all the notes engraved, in the device for receiving the signature of the Auditor, and the number herein described to be put upon such notes, by him or in his office.

SEC. 12. Be it further enacted, &c., That Banks and Banking Companies established under this act, upon legally assigning to, and depositing with the said Auditor, the bonds, or evidences of debt, of the United States, bonds of this State, or bonds of the consolidated debt of the city of New Orleans, authorized and secured by the thirty-seventh section of the act "to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and provide for the government and administration of all its affairs," approved February the twenty-third, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, and the fifth section of the act approved February the fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, entitled, "an act supplementary to an act to consolidate city of New Orleans, and providing for the incorporation of the city of Lafayette with the city of New Orleans," shall be entitled to receive from the said Auditor, an equal amount of such circulating notes, in blank, of the denominations such as they may prefer, numbered, registered, countersigned, and stamped as aforesaid. But such public stocks shall always be, or made to be, equal to a stock of this State, bearing not less than six per cent interest; and it shall not be lawful for said Auditor to take such bonds at a rate above their par value or above their market value.

SEC. 13. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said auditor shall collect, at regular periods, the interest which shall accrue upon the bonds and stocks deposited with him, as security for the circulating notes, issued under the preceding section of this act, and shall pay over the same, on demand, to the parties from whom they were received, so long as the market price of said bonds does not fall below the rate at which they were taken by him. In the event of such a depreciation, the said auditer is authorised and directed to retain the said interest until the said securities shall recover their full value, as rated in their receipt on deposit, or until such further deposit shall be made as will fully make good the amount for which the circulating notes were issued. And the Auditor is further empowered, in case of such depreciation in the securities deposited, to require from the Banker or Banking Company, either an additional deposit of bonds, to make up fully the original security for the notes issued, or the return and surrender, by the parties depositing, of so much of the amount of circulation received from the Auditor as will make good the deficiency of security, produced by such a fall in the markot value of the said deposited securities, and on the failure of such Banker or Banking Company to comply with such demand, within twenty days after it shall be made, all the privileges acquired under this act shall be forfeited, and the Auditor shall immediately take the proper steps to cause the affairs of said defaulting Banker or Banking Company to be liquidated, as provided in cases of insolvency: Provided, that the said Banker or Banking Company shall have the right to appeal from the decision of the Auditor, within ten days, to the district court of the place where said Banker or Banking Company have their domicil, and the said court is hereby required to hear and determine the issue, in preference to all other cases, either in open court or in chambers, and the decision of the district court may be appealed from to the Supreme Court then in session, at such time as may be fixed by the district court, in order to have the same as speedily disposed of by the said Supreme Court as the interest of the parties and the public may require.

And provided further: That during the pendency of said appeal, all proceedings of said Banker or Banking Companies, as such, shall be suspended.

SEC. 14. Be it further enacted, &c., That all the securities deposited with the said Auditor under this act shall be held exclusively for the redemption of such circulating notes as have been issued thereupon, but he may, on application of the depositors, change and transfer them, on receiving the amount of securities of equivalent value receivable under this law, or on receiving and cancelling an equivalent amount of the circulating notes for which they were pledged or deposited. He may also receive and cancel any mutilated notes, and issue in exchange other circulating notes of a corresponding amount, but the notes thus received shall be recorded and preserved as vouchers, until the annual examination of the legislative committees.

SEC. 15. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever said securities shall be assigned to, and deposited with the Auditor, in manner aforesaid, a full description of the same, signed by the said Auditor, and the parties as signing and depositing the same, shall be filed and recorded in the office of the said Auditor, and also in the office of the Treasurer of the State; and every change, transfer or substitution of the same shall be described, filed and recorded in the same manner. The securities shall be delivered to the Treasurer for safe keeping, on his receipt to the Auditor for the same; and every redelivery of the same to the Auditor for any of the purposes of this act, shall be made on a written order of the said Auditor, specifying the purposes for which they are required. Which order shall be filed and recorded in the Treasurer's office, with the Auditor's receipt for the securities or any portion of them delivered to him. A report from the Auditor of every sale and disposition of said securities, shall also be filed in the office of the said Treasurer.

SEC. 16 Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful for the said Auditor to countersign bills for any Banker or Banking Company to an amount in the aggregate beyond the amount of stocks or bonds deposited, at their rate of value estimated under this law A violation of this provision shall subject the said Auditor, on conviction, to a fine of five thousand dollars, and imprisonment for ten years at hard labor.

SEC. 17. Be it further enacted, &c., That the plates, dies and materials procured by the Auditor, for the engraving and printing of the circulating notes, as directed by this act, shall remain in the custody and under the direction of said Auditor. The necessary expenses incident to the procuring of the said plates, dies and materials, the printing, numbering, countersigning and registering of the same, shall be paid by the respective Bankers and Banking Companies for whose use they were received, before the said notes shall be delivered by the Auditor; and the said Auditor is further authorized to charge and receive from every Banker and Banking Company such rate per cent as may be sufficient to defray his or their equitable proportion of the general expenses incident to the execution of this act.

SEC. 18. Be it further enacted, &c , That Bankers and Banking Companies, receiving such blank circulating notes from the Auditor, to execute and sign them in such manner as to make them obligatory in law as prommissory notes, payable to bearer on demand, and without interest, at the place of business of the said Bankers or Banking Companies, and not elsewhere, unless otherwise provided by this act, and may circulate and use the same as money, according to the usual course of banking business as defined in this act, and regulated by the laws and usages of the State All such circulating notes shall be signed by the Banker or Bankers and his or their Cashier, or by the President and Cashier of the Banking Company issuing them, and by no other person whatever for them.

Provided: That no individual firm or corporation, except the legally chartered banks now existing, shall issue and circulate as money any note except such as are authorized by this act, under a penalty of one thousand dollars, to be recovered with costs of suit, one half of such penalty for the use of any person who shall sue for the same, and prosecute the same to final judgment, before any court of competent jurisdiction, and the other half to be placed in the State Treasury

SEC. 19. Be it further enacted, &c., That in case the maker or makers of any notes, countersigned, numbered, registered and issued as aforesaid, shall, at any time within the usual hours of business, at the place where the same is made payable or redeemable, refuse or fail to pay or redeem the same on demand, in lawful money of the United States, the holder of such note may cause it, or so many of such notes as he may present, and of which default in payment is made, to be protested for non-payment; and the Auditor, on receiving and filing such protested note or notes, shall forthwith give notice to the makers of such notes to pay the same and all costs; and if he or they shall omit to do the same for three days after the service of such notice, the said Auditor shall thereupon give public notice, through the official journal of the State, and one other daily newspaper in the city of New Orleans, and if the official journal be not published in the city of New Orleans, in at least two daily journals published in the city of New Orleans, and also in the newspaper published at the place of business of the maker or makers of such notes, if out of the city of New Orleans—if there be one published there—that all the circulating notes issued by the maker or makers of said notes will be redeemed by him, out of the Trust Funds deposited in his hands.

SEC. 20. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever a notice of Protest for non-payment of any note as described in the preceding section shall be lodged in the said District Court verified by the affidavit of the creditor, that the amount is still due and unpaid, the court shall forthwith issue a writ of sequestration and appoint a receiver to take charge of all the assets of said Banker or Banking Company, and place his seal upon the same to await the further action of this court, and the said Court shall forthwith also issue a rule requiring the Banking Company or Banker issuing said note to show cause within ten days why the said note or notes were not paid on presentation: and in case, on the hearing of said rule, said respondent should fail to show cause, it shall be the duty of the said Court to pronounce judgment of insolvency, and proceed to provide for the liquidation of the affairs of said Banker or Banking Company.

SEC. 21. Be it further enacted, &c., That no Banker or Banking Company shall after notice of protest, of his or their note as recited in the nineteenth section of this act, make any assignment, transfer, conveyance or sale of his or their property or assets; every such assignment, transfer, conveyance or sale shall be null and void, and every Banker, President, Director, Manager and officer assenting to such assignment, transfer, conveyance or sale of such property or assets, shall be personally liable in full, for all the debts of the company and may be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, punished on conviction by fine and imprisonment,

SEC. 22. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said Auditor immediately on giving the public notice required by the 18th section of this act, of the non-payment of any protested bill or notes issued under the authority of this act, he shall proceed to advertise for sale, at public auction in the city of New Orleans, the stocks or bonds deposited with him, by the maker or makers of said protested notes, and on the day of sale, which shall not be less than thirty days from such advertisement, and which advertisement shall have been published at least twice a week for four weeks in two daily newspapers printed in the city of New Orleans, cause the said securities to be sold for cash under his own supervision, and shall, after deducting the expenses of such advertisement and sale, apply the proceeds of said sale, to the redemption pro rata, of all the notes in circulation, whether protested or not protested, made and put into circulation by the maker or makers of such protested notes: Provided, that nothing in this act shall be considered as implying any pledge or undertaking on the part of the State for any payment beyond the faithful application of the said securities deposited with the Auditor.

SEC. 23. Be it further enacted, &c., That if the proceeds of the sale of the said securities should exceed the amount required to redeem and pay the circulating notes aforesaid in full, the Auditor shall pay over such excess into the general fund of the assets of said insolvent Banker or Banking Company, but if the proceeds of such sale should be insufficient to provide in full for the said circulating notes and he should declare a distribution pro rata thereupon, he shall forthwith furnish in writing to the commissioners or liquidators of said insolvent, a certificate in writing of the amount of said deficiency which said certificate shall be legal notice to them to receive out of any assets of such insolvents which may be or may come into their hands, an amount sufficient to provide for such deficiency, and he shall further furnish to every holder of any note or notes presented to him for redemption, and redeemed in part, a certificate of the amount unpaid on such note or notes, and such certificate shall entitle the holder to payment of the amount therein designated—in full out of the assets of the insolvents herein directed to be reserved—if the said assets should be sufficient to pay all the said notes, in full—or, rateably if they should not be sufficient—in preference to any other claims and debts whatever, except the costs of liquidation.

And should the proceeds of the sale of said securities be insufficient to redeem all the notes put in circulation by any corporation established by this act, then the stockholders of said corporation shall be liable for the full amount of all unredeemed notes in the ratio of stock which each one may own.

SEC. 24. Be it further enacted, &c., That the holder of any circulating note, which may have been protested for non-payment, shall be entitled to damages at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum, in lieu of interest, until final payment, payable out of the general fund of said insolvent party.

SEC. 25. Be it further enacted, &c., That Bankers and Banking Companies, doing business under this Act, shall be entitled to charge and receive discount at a rate, not greater than the maximum allowed by law, on conventional obligations; and their other contracts shall be regulated by the laws in regard to interest upon contracts between individuals.

SEC. 26. Be it further enacted, &c., That every Banker and Banking Company, doing business under this Act, is required, in addition to the securities for circulation, deposited with the Auditor, to have on hand, at all times, in specie, an amount equal to one third of all its or their other cash liabilities, and for the remaining two thirds of the same liabilities, an equal amount, in specie, specie funds, bills of exchange or discounted paper, maturing within ninety days, and not renewable.

SEC. 27. Be it further enacted, &c , That if at any time the said specie, and specie funds, and short paper, held by such Banker or Banking Company, should fall below the proportions to cash liabilities, prescribed in the preceding section, and shall remain so for a space of ten days, it shall not be lawful thereafter for such Banker or Banking Company to make any loan or discount whatever, until its or their position is re-established according to the terms of the said section. A violation of this provision shall be held to be an act of insolvency, and the Auditor shall cause the necessary steps to be taken for the liquidation of the affairs of such Banker or Banking Company, as in cases of insolvency, and every Director or Manager of a Banking Company, who may participate in, or assent to such a violation, shall become individually liable for all its debts and obligations.

SEC. 28. Be it further enacted, &c., That every Banker and Banking Company, out of the city of New Orleans, doing business under this Act, and issuing circulating notes, as herein authorized, may keep an office or designate an agency in the said city, for redemption of said notes. The appointment of such officer or agent shall be made in writing and filed with the Auditor, with the Board of Currency, and in the office of the Recorder of Mortgas in which the charter is filed; Provided, however, nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to authorize such Banker or Banking Company to refuse to redeem its notes at the counter of the principal bank, as contemplated by this act.

SEC. 29. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Board of Currency, as now established by law, or as it may be organized hereafter by law, shall supervise the execution of this Act, and possess all the powers, and perform all the duties which are conferred or imposed upon them by the laws in regard to incorporated Banks, or may be hereafter conferred or imposed upon them by law, in regard to incorporated or other banks. They may examine the affairs of Bankers and Banking Companies doing business under this act, whenever they may deem it necessary to do so, and shall require from them weekly statements, verified upon oath by every said Banker and his Cashier, or by the President and Cashier of every such Banking Company; which said weekly statement shall give the following particulars of the affairs of the Bank.

1st. Capital paid in.

2d. The amount of stocks deposited with the Auditor, with a list of the same, and the rate at which they were received for circulating notes.

3d. Amount of investments in real estate.

4th. Amount of investments in loans having longer than ninety days to run, distinguishing whether on mortgage or otherwise—loans on stocks and what stocks.

5th. Suspended debt and protested paper.

6th. All other assets not realizable in ninety days.

7th. Loans on paper maturing within ninety days.

8th. Exchange, domestic and foreign.

9th. Deposits.

10th. Circulation.

11th. Other cash liabilities.

12th. Specie and cash assets. Stating each item separately.

SEC. 30. Be it further enacted, &c., That the said statements shall be regularly filed in the office of the Board of Currency, and the statements so furnished on the last Saturday of every month, by the Bankers and Banking Companies doing business in the city of New Orleans, shall be signed by the Board of Currency and published in the official journal on the first Wednesday of each and every month. The Board of Currency shall prescribe for each Banker or Banking Company, doing business out of the city of New Orleans, a period within which their said weekly reports shall be furnished to the said board, and said monthly statement published by the Board of Currency shall include the last weekly statement duly received from every such banker or banking company.

SEC. 31. Be it further enacted, &c., That a list of the stockholders in every banking corporation doing business under this Act, verified by the oath of the President or Cashier, shall be furnished monthly to the Board of Currency, but need not be published with their monthly reports.

SEC. 32. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Legislature shall annually appoint a joint committee of the two Houses, whose duty it shall be to examine the securities deposited by Bankers and Banking Companies, together with all books and papers relating to the business of banking under this act: Also, to count all circulating bills which may have been returned by any banker or banking company, and after comparing them with the books, to cancel and destroy the same, giving the Auditor a sufficient certificate for the same; and, generally, to make such investigations as they may deem proper to enable them to report a true statement of the condition of the Banks operating under this law.

SEC. 33. Be it further enacted, &c., That any Banker, and any Director, Officer, Agent or Clerk of any Banker or Banking Company doing business under this act, who shall make false statements or entries in the books of such Banker or Banking Company or who shall exhibit false paper or practice wilful concealment of facts within his or their knowledge, with intent to deceive the Board of Currency or other persons having lawful authority to examine; or to deceive the public as to the condition of such Company; as also any person who shall, with a view to defraud any such Banker or Banking Company, knowingly draw or pay any check or checks, or be accessary to the drawing or paying of any check or checks, without funds in the said Company drawn upon or to the embezzlement of any of the money or assets of said Banker or Banking Company, by any clerk, officer or agent thereof shall be subject, on conviction, to imprisonment in the penitentiary of this State, for a term not less than one year or more than three years. And when any such false statements are made under oath, the person or persons shall be adjudged guilty of perjury and punished according to law.

SEC. 34. Be it further enacted, &c., That Banking Companies framed under this act, may be Banks of Discount and Deposit only, and are not required to be Banks of circulation; and such Banks may pay any of their obligations in specie, or in notes of the incorporated Banks of the city of New Orleans, or notes countersigned and secured by public stocks, under this act, at the option of the party receiving them.

SEC. 35. Be it further enacted, &c., That Bankers and Banking Companies doing business under this act, shall be taxed upon their capital stock, at the same rate as other personal property, under the laws of this State.

SEC. 36. Be it further enacted, &c., That whenever any Banker or Banking Company shall have redeemed 80 per cent. of its or their notes, and delivered to the Auditor a certificate of a deposit to the credit of the State Treasurer, in such Bank as the Auditor may approve, to an equal amount with the circulating notes still unredeemed, it shall be lawful for him to receive the same, and to give up all securities heretofore deposited by such Banker or Banking Company, for the redemption of circulating notes issued.

SEC. 37. Be it further enacted, &c., That such Banker or Banking Company, after having complied with the provisions of the thirty-sixth section of this act, may give notice once a fortnight, for one year, in the State paper, also in a paper publishad in the city of New Orleans, and in a paper published in the parish in which said Banker or Banking Company has its or their domicil, if any paper be published therein, that all the circulating notes issued, must be presented at the Auditor's office, within one year from the first publication of such notice, or that the funds deposited, will be given up to such Banker or Banking Company, and on receiving satisfactory proof of the giving of such notice for the time aforesaid, the Auditor shall surrender to said Banker or Banking Company, any funds which he may hold for the payment of the unredeemed notes.

Sec. 38. Be it further enacted, etc., That the Auditor of the State shall have the authority, with the approval of the Governor, to employ in his office, such additional clerk or clerks as he may deem necessary, in order to execute the duties imposed upon him by this act, and to pay such compensation therefor as he may deem sufficient—the same to be paid by a general assessment upon the Bankers and Banking companies for whom the services were performed.

SEC. 39. Be it further enacted, etc., That the salaries now established and the contingent expenses now allowed by law to the Board of Currency, shall be assessed upon all banks, subjected to their supervision, under this act, as well as upon the incorporated Banks, and paid in the same proportion and in the same manner.

SEC. 40. Be it further enacted, etc., That upon the decease of any Banker who has done business under this act, the funds, bonds, stocks, and securities deposited by him with the Auditor, shall not become assets until all the liabilities of said Banker under this act are discharged

And after twenty days notice by the Auditor to the legal representative or the heirs of said deceased and all the liabilities by him contracted should not be discharged.

The Auditor shall proceed to sell said securities in the mode declared in the twenty-second section of this act, and distribute the proceeds of said sale to redeem all the liabilities said deceased had contracted in his capacity as banker, and pay all costs incurred, and pay the overplus, if any, to the legal representatives or heirs of said deceased.

The bill was read section by section.

The eighth section being under consideration

Mr. Kenner said—I move to strike out the words "anincorporated banksers shall be liable to the full amount of their obligations and contracts." I do not see what difference there is whether banking be carried on by four or five persons or by one. They are each liable for the amount of their stock. But this section makes one individual who carries on the business by himself, liable to the full extent of his means; therefore, any one having $100,000 which he might wish to invest in banking, would associate with him three or four men of straw, in order to avoid the provisions of the act.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to amend so as to make the stockholders individually liable.

Mr. Kenner—If I consulted my own feelings, I should vote for the amendment. But I am satisfied that in the present state of public feeling, it would not be compatible with the views of the community, and would render the bill inoperative.

Mr. King—I think the Senator from Ascension does not correctly understand the meaning of the section. It is intended to operate against those persons who do not comply with the provisions of the bill, such as Jacob Barker and others in the city of New Orleans. I think, however, that the third section should be reconsidered, as it allows only more than five persons to form a corporation for banking purposes. I think with the gentleman from Ascension that we should permit any number of persons to enter into the business. I would, therefore, move a reconsideration of that section, in order that it may be amended so as to meet the views of the gentleman,

Mr. McCay—The first section of the bill says that any "person or association of persons" may transact the business of banking in this State.

This clearly permits any one present to transact such business on complying with the requisitions of the law. But the third section says that any number, more than five, may engage in the business. Does this prevent a less number?

Mr. Wickliffe—I move to make the share-holders personally responsible.

Mr. Short—This would entirely destroy the efficacy of the system. It is true that free banking does tend to change the features of our old system; but let us give it a fair chance. This cannot be done if we measure the liability of shareholders by a standard different from that which is applied under the old system.

Mr. Mouton—I agree fully with the Senator from West Feliciana, (Mr. Wickliffe.)

Mr. Wickliffe—I hear it said on all sides that free banking is going to make the people prosperous.—Why, sir, I have heard, ever since I was a boy that banks improve the condition of the community and make the people happy and prosperous. If these banks are going to do what it is said they will, why should we not make them liable? I never will vote for any system that does not make the stockholders liable in the same way as debtors in ordinary business transactions. Here we are going to permit banking on city scrip. We are told that it is impossible for that scrip to fall in value; that there is no possibility of loss on it. One gentlemen has described it as the safest basis that could be adopted. How then is it possible for banks established on such a basis to fail. They must deposit this security with the State.—Why should we then object to binding the stockholders in solido, if the security is so good. If we put that in, we shall have a good system.

Mr. King—Whether I am consistent or not, does not affect this measure. But I have not been inconsistent. I have said that if gentlemen expected to devise a system in which there would be no possibility of loss, they would be seeking too much. Such a system cannot be found any more than the philisopher's stone, and we would only waste our time were we to attempt to make such a one. But I did say that this is a better system than any we have had, and less likely to result in loss. I did say that New Orleans city bonds are a better security than the world ever saw before. Besides the moral obligation resting upon the city to pay, you have the force of a legislative enactment which makes it compulsory on her to do so. That statute is irrepealable by the city, and consequently she has no way of avoiding payment, even did she wish to do so. You have, then, both a perfect and imperfect obligation resting on the city. For these reasons her bonds are better than any security that could be offered. With all other stocks there is only a moral obligation to pay. There is no power that can compel it. When this subject was before the Senate the other day, the gentleman made a brave fight on it. I thought he would be content to rest on the laurels which he then gained. But I suppose he acts on the principle that a man who lives may always fight another day, even though defeated in the first encounter. The gentleman from Carroll (Mr. Short) has stated the case correctly in saying that to trammel the bill any more would render it inoperative. We have required full security; better security than is given by any bank now in operation in this State, and better than is demanded by any other system of this kind. In addition to requiring stocks to the full amount of circulation to be placed in the hands of the Auditor, the bill contains a very stringent provision as to the amount of specie which must be kept on hand. After this ample security, the gentleman requires that all the stockholders shall be liable in solido. Suppose I should subscribe five hundred or a thousand dollars to the stock of a bank, what liability would I not incur? On a business of a million dollars I would be liable for five million. Who would enter into banking, who would subscribe to the stock of a bank in the face of such an enormous liability. The gentleman himself would not do it. If we do not intend to tantalize the public, we will reject the proposition. I do not want to throw out a tub to the great popular whale; I wish to give the people what they desire.

Mr. Wickliffe—I have listened with anxiety to hear something which might be considered a tangible argument on the point in question; but so far from furnishing argument the gentleman only tells us that the amendment will defeat the bill. I think not. I do not see how it can if all be true that is urged in favor of the free banking system; if its panegyrists have depicted it correctly, if it be really that safe system of banking that has been asserted.

If, in the ordinary transactions of life, a man is liable to the full amount of his property, why should he cease to be so when he becomes a stockholder in a bank? Gentlemen say it will defeat their system. Are we, then, going to establish a system of swindling? If not, why do we fear to make stockholders liable? Is it because we fear the effects of mal-administration of these banking corporations? I go for making the stockholders responsible, and then we shall have a safe system.

Mr. Short—One point seems not to be sufficiently understood. It is the difference between this system and the old one in the security which they offer to note holders. So far as any contracts of discount and deposit are concerned, those who enter into them will do it under the same system as now, knowing that the shareholder is only liable to the amount of his stock. But it is in regard to the circulation that the most interest is felt. The public believes that the note holder must be better secured; that some safer system must be adopted to provide against fluctuations in the currency; such as was established by a late law in regard to the Bank of England, which separated the circulation from the deposits and discounts.

Mr. Mouton—The gentleman from New Orleans (Mr. King) says, that the substitute would defeat the free banking system. If so, I am not sorry for it. I think that the substitute ought to be adopted. The gentleman fears that its effect will be to throw a responsibility somewhere. We require full security to protect the note holder from loss, but we do not wish to throw any risk on the stockholder. If there is any fear that this will turn out to be a bad system, let the loss fall on those who associate themselves together to make money under it. It is better that any loss which may ensue should fall on the stockholders than on the honest third parties who contract with them. If there is no danger in the system, there can be no objection to the amendment. If there is danger in it, the loss ought to fall on the stockholders. Therefore, I am in favor of making them responsible in solido.

Mr. Kenner—I had no idea that a long discussion would arise on this subject. I am not one of those who think that free banking means abundance of money. We had all better get rid of that chimera as quickly as possible. But to come to the point. The system by which all the stockholders of a bank are made liable in solido, is copied from the Scotch law; but that is the only security that the law requires. Therefore, if you adopt it here, strike out all the other securities which you have incorporated into the bill. Strike out that part making it necessary to keep one-third specie constantly on hand. In fine, strike out all the other securities—all the other guarantees that the bill affords, and then, if you please, make the stockholders liable in solido. But do not adopt this Scotch system and add on the Yankee securities besides. That would be going too far. What debts can a bank incur? It may purchase property; but its power to do so is limited. Then it is indebted for its circulation. That is provided for by ample security. Then for its deposits. These three comprise all the debts that a bank can contract. We have provided for the purchase debt by limiting the power to buy. We do not wish to go further than this. How have we provided for the deposits? By compelling banks to keep constantly on hand, an amount of specie equal to one-third of the circulation, and one-third in bills maturing. Unless, therefore, we suppose that the banker himself is a robber and a swindler, there is no possibility of any injury to any one.

Mr. Short—I move that the section requiring every bank note to bear endorsement on its face, stating that it is secured by pledge of public stock, be so amended, that the class of stock be specified. Suppose the holder do not know the class of stock by which the note is secured, he will not feel so much confidence, nor can he be on his guard if any of the stock should give way in the market.

Mr. Kenner—It is to be supposed, that as these kinds of stock are received, one-third would be secured by each class.

Mr. McCay—It appears that this is provided for in the bill. The monthly statement, which must be published in the newspapers, will be as good a way as any of extending information to the public.

The twelfth section was taken up.

Mr. Short—I was opposed to incorporating the bonds of New Orleans into the bill as a basis for banking operations. I understand that the city has bonds out to the amount of $9,000,000. At least, her whole debt is about $7,500,000. I never can vote for a bill which has municipal bonds as a basis of circulation. There is some difference between the House and the Senate bill. The House bill contemplates the interference of the courts of justice, before the forfeiture on refusal to pay a note becomes final. The difference consists in this: The House bill says the note must be protested for non-payment. This evidently contemplates that the party must go before a notary, in order to go through the form; for when it says that a protest must be made without specifying the manner, it means that it must be done in the same way as a protest of notes of hand. Then six or eight days must elapse before the assets of the bank become liable. In the meantime, the bank may dispose of its assets, and leave the note holder to whistle for his money. This notary business costs two dollars, which is an object to poor people. Would it not be better to make the banker endorse his refusal on the note, and let that operate as a protest, and so put an end to this system of running to a notary?

Mr. King—I should prefer that this first protest be accompanied with all the forms and solemnities known to the law. The object is to give as much publicity as possible to the circumstance in order to prevent third parties being injured. I would make the protest as public as possible.

Section 24 was taken up.

Mr. King—The Senate had 12 per cent. in its bill. I think that is enough; as in case such a thing should happen, the Bank would not be solvent and therefore the damages would operate as an assessment on the depositors. If it came out of the Bank alone, I would be perfectly willing to make the damages as high as 50 per cent.; but, inasmuch as it will come out of innocent third parties, I think 20 per cent. is too high.

Mr. Short—I do not think we ought to contemplate the contingency of the insolvency of a bank.

The section was amended.

Section 34 was taken up.

Mr. Kenner—This has the same object as section 34 of the Senate bill, but is not as well expressed. Under the New York system banks of circulation were established, which were banks neither of discount or deposite. They kept their doors closed, and persons could not get access to the counter to get their bills cashed. This gave rise to a great quantity of bad paper. The Superintendent of the New York banks, in his recent report, called the attention of the Legislature to this evil and begged that it might be reformed so as to compel banks to be of deposite and discount as well as of circulation.

Mr. Kenner moved to strike out section 40.

Mr. McCay—It is necessary to have a provision of this kind. If the stock has to be inventoried and de-ivered over to the heirs, the note-holders will not be secured.

Digitized by Google

Mr. King—I am opposed to the section. It seems to me that when a man dies who owns a large amount of stock, it will dissolve the corporation ipso facto.

The section was stricken out.

A point of order here arose as to whether the bill had passed finally, or only on its 3d reading.

Mr. Wickliffe—I want to record my vote against this bill.

Mr. Kenner—We have adopted the bill section by section and are done with it so far as we have concurred with the House. I am sorry that the gentleman who has recorded his vote eleven or twelve times already cannot have an opportunity to record it a thirteenth.

Mr. Short—I think this bill is on its 3d reading. It is a new bill from the House and has not passed through the stages here that are required.

Mr. Nicholls—There are the same reasons for reading this bill three times here, as in the House where it originated—that is for the purpose of placing it fully before us. So far as we are concerned, this is an entirely new bill and it should go through all the forms and be subjected to all the tests that are imposed on a new bill.

Mr. Rivers—The principle of the thing is very easily understood. The House concurred in the Senate bill by substitute. It is therefore not a new bill; it is our bill amended, and all we have to do is to concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. Wickliffe—There is nothing before the Senate to lead us to any such conclusion. The bill comes here as an original bill from the House, and consequently must go through three readings.

The bill passed—14 yeas and 7 nays.

The title was then put.

Mr. Nicholls moved to strike out "Free Banking," and insert "Free Shaving."

On motion of Mr. Taylor, the amendment was laid on the table.

THE REGISTRY LAW.

The bill for the registering of voters in the city of New Orleans came up.

Mr. Wickliffe moved to recommit the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Nicholls—This is a bill which should be acted on at once. The Constitution makes it the duty of the Legislature to pass such a one at this session. The Judiciary Committee has already worked hard on this bill, and it has more before it now than it can attend to.

The motion to recommit was carried, with instructions to report on Wednesday next.

The bill to divide the State into Congressional Districts was taken up.

Mr. Todd—There has been a minority report prepared on this bill.

Mr. King—I should not like to see any pledge given that the minority report will be let in

Mr. Rivers—If we act on the bill now, we do it in the absence of the gentleman who has the minority report. If we do so, he has a right to have it spread on the minutes. I give notice that such a report has been prepared and will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. Short—When the bill was referred to the Committee, it was discussed fully. The question is, or should be, whether the Senate will adopt the majority report or that of the minority. But how can two ideas be compared when one is wanting; and how can we decide between two reports when one is absent?

Mr. Todd—When the bill was referred, the Senator from Jefferson (Mr. Burthe) and myself agreed on a report which I presume he has prepared. Out of courtesy to him I should like to have this subject postponed till Wednesday.

Mr. Nicholls—As I understand the subject, the object of referring the bill was that it might be discussed in committee, in order that the views of the committee, or its member, might be laid before the Senate. What do gentlemen propose to do? They wish to pass the bill immediately and give to the minority a right of explaining and justifying themselves afterwards. But the minority do not want simply to justify themselves. They have done nothing that needs justification. They wish their views to be placed before the Senate when they can have some effect. If we defer the bill till Wednesday the majority will still have power to pass it, and I suppose will do it, in spite of anything we can say. They can suspend the rules, or if not that, can take it up the next day, and pass it over our heads. It is all cut and dried, and we know it. They can then send it to the other house, where they have more than 20 majority: and who can doubt that it will pass there. All we ask is, that they hear us before they strike us.

Mr. Wickliffe—If gentlemen are so well convinced that they will have to swallow this bill on Wednesday, they might as will take it now I am opposed to postponing it any longer. It has already been postponed once and that is enough.

Mr. Todd—As the Senator from Jefferson, one of the Committee to which this bill was referred, is now absent, I hope that, in justice to him, the bill will not be passed without his being afforded an opportunity to place his views before the Senate.

Mr. Wickliffe—Does the gentleman think they would alter the case?

Mr, Todd—No doubt if the gentleman were to listen to the elaborate arguments of the report it would greatly influence the result.

The motion to postpone was lost.

The bill was then passed.

ELECTION OF PARISH TREASURERS.

Mr. Evans called up an act for the election of Parish Treasurers.

Mr. Wickliffe—I am not aware, sir, that the people of Louisiana have expressed, or that they even feel any desire to elect their Parish Treasurers. The office is not one of so much importance that the people feel anxious to make it subject to the exercise of their right of suffrage. In some of the richest parishes of the State, the fees do not amount to more than $300 a year, and scarcely a competent man can be found who is willing to take the office. Moreover, the people are surfeited with elections. They have enough of them already to occupy their spare time. If this bill pass, I wish my parish exempted from its operation. If we elect our Treasurers, is it natural to suppose that we can get a competent man for $300 a year? Why, it would require at least a thousand. The Police Juries now choose the Treasurers. No complaint is made of the system, and there is no reason why it should be changed.

A motion was made to postpone the further consideration of the bill to the third Monday of July.

Mr. Nicholls—If the motion do not prevail, I shall move to have my parish exempted from the operation of the bill. It is certainly not in accordance with the views of my constituents.

Mr. Short—In the mind of the Senator from West Feliciana, the principal objection to this bill seems to be that the office of Treasurer is not sufficiently respectable to authorize a person to canvass for it.

Mr. Wickliffe—I did not say so. I said the emoluments were not enough to induce a competent man to run.

Mr. Short—I differ with the gentleman in opinion on that point. I have always, in my parish, seen competition for that office among competent men, and I must confess that I have been surprised at it. Under the bill, respectable men will fill the office. The people will take an interest in it. There are great complaints in my section, that the school teachers, persons engaged in the respectable occupation of instructing youth, have to come or send here to get their accounts settled. One of the objects of the bill is to keep the school funds in the parishes where they belong.

Mr. Wickliffe—That is done by the school bill. It has no connection with this bill.

Mr. Short—There is no hardship involved in this bill. The people will take a greater interest in the office if they have the election of the officer. Are not the people sufficiently interested in the school fund to wish to keep it in responsible hands? The same objections that are urged now might be brought against the election of any other officers by the people. Are they capable of electing a Governor, a Chief Justice, a District Judge? If so, may they not cast their votes for a Parish Treasurer? That seems to be the objection—that they are not capable of electing a Treasurer.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Wickliffe—I did not say so; I said the people of Louisiana were surfeited with elections.

Mr. Short—I suppose the people of Louisiana are found in the parishes of Louisiana. If they are surfeited let them take an emetic. But the principle has not been touched, that if they are capable of electing a Governor and other important officers, they are capable of electing parish treasurers. If there is anything in the argument that the people are surfeited with elections, it must apply to the whole principle. Why not let them elect parish treasurers? It is to be supposed that they will vote for competent men. Is there any objection to leaving it to them?

Mr. Wickliffe—I shall have but few remarks to make. I am surprised that the gentleman in the remarks he has made, should misquote me. (Mr. Short—I had no intention of doing so.) The argument I made cannot be construed against the right or capacity of the people to elect their own officers. What did I say? Why, simply that the emoluments of the office are so small that a suitable man can with difficulty be found to run. The gentleman speaks of the complaints of school teachers. Has this bill any connection with school teaching? Is there any complaint that the Police Juries do not perform their duties faithfully. He says the people feel an interest in having the School Fund in the hands of responsible parties. Are not the Police Juries responsible? Are they not interested in the matter? The gentleman pretends to think that I am opposed to the elective principle. He is mistaken. I have simply said that there is no complaint made against the Police Juries, and that the emoluments of the office of Parish Treasurer are so small that it would be difficult to induce a competent man to run for it. There is nothing in this that can be tortured into opposition to the principle of elections by the people. The gentleman says the people have been considered capable of electing a Governor and a Chief Justice, just as if I had denied it. But I believe they are sick of being called to intervene in such small affairs, particularly where they can safely delegate the power to others. If any gentleman says that his parish is dissatisfied with the present system, I will yield the point in regard to that parish.

Mr. Short—The bill came from the House where each parish is represented. For this reason I think it is entitled to some consideration.

Mr. Wickliffe—The gentleman has not replied to me. Will any gentleman say that his parish is tired of the present system?

Mr. Evans—My people would desire a change.

Mr. Todd—I am in favor of the bill. I am surprised that gentlemen who favor the elective principle should oppose it in this instance, simply because it is a small office.

Mr. Wickliffe—I state again, for the last time, that my objection is that competent men cannot be got to run.

Mr Todd—It makes no difference whether they canvass or not. The people are as competent as the Police Juries to select good officers, even if no one come forward to solicit their suffrages. The gentleman says there is no dissatisfaction with the present system. I think there is, and moreover it is the general desire that all these officers should be elected by the people.

After a few remarks, the bill was laid on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Rivers, on behalf of the Committee on Lands and Levees, made the following report:

To the Honorable W. W. Farmer, President of the Senate.

The Committee on Lands and Levees, to whom was referred the report of the State Engineer in reference to the contemplated cut-off at Cole's Creek Point, in the parish of Tensas, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report: That they deem the session now too far advanced to take any definite action on said report: but in view of the partial benefit that would be afforded to that region of country lying above, by making the said cut-off, compared with the certainty and extent of the injury that must of necessity result to the lands and levees below; in view of the numerous claims and applications for relief that would be pressed on the consideration of the Legislature by persons injured by said cut-off, added to the necessity they deem the State is under, whenever it can, to interpose timely and efficient aid to avert such calamities, your committee beg leave to return the report herewith, and ask its adoption by the Senate as the basis of such future action as the Legislature may think proper to take thereon.

Respectfully submitted,
D. L. RIVERS,
On behalf of Land and Levee Committee.

Mr. King, from the Committee on Internal Improvement, made the following report, and reported the following bill:

To the Honorable W. W. Farmer, President of the Senate:

The Committee on Internal Improvements, to whom was referred the memorial of the Hon. Samuel Ricker, chairman of the committee appointed by the Senate in the session of the year 1850, having, by the resolution, full power during the recess of the Legisture to act and collect information relative to the present laws regulating the making and repairing the Levees, the present system of draining throughout the State, and all matters connected therewith, and to suggest such amendments as they may think proper and advisable for the better protection from overflows by the river of the alluvial lands of the Mississippi, and the drainage of the same; and to report by bill or otherwise—beg leave to report that they have given such examination to the subject as their limited means of information would allow.

The Committee are of opinion that the chairman of the Senate Committee of 1850, exercised a very doubtful power in incurring the very heavy expenses for which claims have been presented against the State. But as that committee appears to have acted in good faith, it is but reasonable that the persons employed by them should have some compensation for the services rendered.

From a reference to the memorial, it will be seen that a large number of the claims have been altogether disallowed by the committee, and many of the claims have been greatly reduced.

The annexed is a list of the claims which the committee thought should be paid. For the payment of these claims the committee report the accompanying bill, the enactment of which they recommend.

(Signed) W. W. KING,
Chairman

LIST OF THE CLAIMS.

To reimburse Samuel Ricker for the disbursements made by him,	$787 85
Owners of steamer Persian, chartered for seven days,	800 00
Owners of steamer Creole, chartered for fourteen days,	1,200 00

H. and N. G. Wallar, Civil Engineers,	350 00
Benj. Buisson, Civil Engineer,	75 00
Thos. Lafarelle, Civil Engineer,	200 00
Thos. J. Burke, copying documents in the State Library,	100 00
Henry Droz, do.,	100 00
Total,	$5,512 82

An act to provide for the payment of claims of services rendered to the State, under the employment of a committee appointed by the Senate in the year 1850, of which Hon. Samuel Ricker was chairman.

On motion, it was made the order of the day for Thursday next, the 21st inst.

MESSAGES TO THE HOUSE.

The messenger of the Senate requested the concurrence of the House to the bill entitled—

An act to appropriate a sum of money for the purpose of erecting works at the mouth of the Bayou Plaquemine.

The special messenger of the Senate informed the House that the Senate adhered to the amendment in the 14th section, disagreed to by the House; and that the Senate concurred in the additional section of the House; and that the Senate requested the appointment of a Comittee of Conference.

The Senate appointed on said committee Messrs. King, McCay, and Short.

And he informed the House that the Senate insisted on the amendment to the bill relative to the Judiciary of the State—the First Judicial District excepted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following bills:

An act to provide for the manner of giving the aid of the State to Railroad and Plank Road Companies.

An act relative to the election of Clerks of the District Courts—the Parish and City of Orleans excepted.

An act relative to the election of Sheriffs and Coroners.

An act to define the dividing line between the Parishes of Iberville and West Baton Rouge.

An act to refund to Joseph Walker a sum of money in the Treasury due him.

An act to incorporate the New Orleans Female Collegiate Institute.

An act to provide for the election of Parish Treasurers, and define the duties of the same.

An act authorizing the Auditor to cancel the bonds given to John T. Sterling and James A. McHatton, as Commissioners for the purchase of slaves and boats to be used in the internal improvement line of the State.

An act relative to the distribution of books and statutes.

An act relative to the duties and powers of the Police Juries of this State, and the constituted authorities of incorporated towns.

Resolution instructing the Secretary of State to notify delinquent returning officers of the late election for Judges, to make returns forthwith.

An act to amend the 10th section of an act to provide for the organization of corporations in this State; approved March 16, 1848.

An act to provide for the sale of the undivided half of a tract of land in the Parish of St. Landry, claimed by the State,

An act to amend and re-enact the 20th section of an act entitled an act to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and to provide for the government and administration of its affairs.

The special messenger from the Senate requested the signature of the Speaker to the following enrolled bill:

An act explanatory of an act entitled an act to provide for deficiencies of appropriations in criminal prosecutions up to the 31st of March, 1853.

And reported as signed by the President the following enrolled bill:

An act to refund to Henry Scott, of Catahoula, the proceeds of the sale of a runaway belonging to him.

And requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following bill:

An act to exempt the Parish of Catahoula from further taxation to build levees in the Parish of Madison.

TUESDAY, APRIL 19, 1853.

Mr. Kittridge called up—

An act to amend an act entitled an act relative to the Charity Hospital, approved the 21st March, 1850.

Mr. Palfrey—If the bill does not require every person over the age of ten years to give bond and security, I am incapable of understanding the English language.

Mr. Short—I move to lay the bill indefinitely on the table.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Derbes moved to refer the bill to a special committee.

Mr. Kittridge—There is no necessity to refer the bill again It has been already referred once. If gentlemen wish to form an opinion respecting the bill, let them examine it. It devises the only mode of supporting the Hospital. On consultaion with the Directors, we found, that by imposing this additional tax, we could support the Hospital without any further appropriations from the State. Almost all the inmates of the Hospital are foreigners, and as the institution is beneficial chiefly to them, there can be no peculiar hardship in passing the bill.

On motion of Mr. Derbes, the bill was postponed till to-morrow.

Mr. Boatner—In the early part of the session a committee was appointed to revise the digest, and perform other duties. One member of that committee has been absent some time, and I should think another member ought to be appointed in his place

The President appointed Mr. Todd on the committee.

Mr. Kenner, from the Finance Committee, to whom was referred—

An act providing for deficiencies of approbations for the year ending 31st March, 1853—reported favorably.

The bill passed.

Mr. Wickliffe moved a reconsideration of the vote on the bill giving the election of Parish Treasurer to the people, for the purpose of making an amendment giving to the Police Juries the right, as at present, of selecting the Parish Treasurer.

The motion to reconsider was carried.

On motion of Mr. Wickliffe, the bill was then laid on the table, subject to call.

A bill providing for surrounding the State House grounds with a iron fence was taken up.

Mr. Kenner—I think a picket fence ought to be substituted, as nothing less will suffice to keep the members in.

Mr. Boatner—I feel very much obliged to the gentleman for the allusion; but I can tell him, that when I undertake to retreat from the embraces of a miserable rotten bank, neither a picket nor an iron fence can keep me in.

Mr. Derbes—An iron fence would cost, at least, $40,000.

Mr. Kenner—When I made the suggestion, I did it because I thought it ought to be done. It was estimated last year that an iron railing would cost about $10,000. Now, sir, we have here a magnificent building, grand in design, elegant in architecture, and yet the grounds around it are enclosed by a common board fence. For us to make a picket fence would be no improvement. It would be hiding our light under a bushel. I am sure that no one would be willing to see our fine State House surrounded by a miserable picket fence. I would, however, be willing to make a proviso that the iron railing is not to cost more than $10,000.

Mr. Derbes—An iron fence in the city, not so large as will be required here, cost $35,000.

Mr. Mouton—If we commence by giving $15,000, when that is expended we shall have to give $15,000 more.

Mr. Boatner—According to that argument, we ought not to build any kind of an enclosure. I inserted "picket fence" in the bill, because I thought objections might be urged against anything more expensive. But I think it would be cheaper, in the end, to make an iron fence, as it will last longer, and not have to be repaired so often as one made of wood.

Mr. Kenner—I want to show our constituents that we are willing to put something besides a miserable wooden fence around the State House. Now the cows and other animals have full entrance and make a common pasturage of the grounds. Ladies can scarcely come to listen to our debates for fear of getting their dresses soiled. We certainly need a railing, and one more in consonsance with the character of the building than a common fence would be.

Mr. Mouton—I am not opposed to this motion because I am against enclosing the grounds, but because I think we cannot afford so large an outlay at present. I think the gentleman from Ascension will acknowledge this himself when he reflects on the bankrupt condition of the Treasury. When we get richer we can appropriate money to build iron fences But for present purposes, I think a picket fence sufficient to keep animals out and Senators in.

The amendment providing for an iron fence, to cost not more than $10,000 was carried.

Mr. Kenner—The Commissioners for building the State House were Messrs. Avery, Brashear, and Maunsel White. Most of the labor fell on Mr. Avery. In discharging his duties, he gave greater satisfaction than was ever before given in the erection of any public building in the United States. The care and labor which were imposed on him were immense, and became the subject of general remark. If he had been erecting a building for himself, he could not have bestowed more attention on it. As a matter of compliment to him, I move that his name be inserted as that of one of the Commissioners for this work.

The motion was carried, and the bill passed.

An act relative to the election of clerks of District Courts, (the parish and city of New Orleans excepted.)

Mr. Mouton—By this law the Clerks of Courts now existing, will continue in office till new Clerks are elected. Now under the old law, the parishes of Lafayette, Vermillion and Calcasieu composed the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State. The new law changes the number of the districts. Lafayette, instead of being in the fifteenth Judicial District, is now in the fourteenth. It appears to me that the clerk of the fifteenth district cannot act as clerk of the fourteenth, because the constitution says they shall be elected, and we have no right to make them act as clerks of these new courts.

Mr. Short—The Clerks are officers of parishes and not of districts. They are elected by the parishes. The 143d article of the constitution, I think, settles the difficulty. (Reads article.) The next is still more emphatic. (Reads.) The clerks elected under the new constitution will not be chosen till December. In the meanwhile, the existing order of things continues. For instance, take the clerk of the parish of Carroll, he is the clerk of the parish and not of the district; and as soon as a new clerk is elected, he steps into office. Till this occurs, the old clerk holds on under the article of the constitution which I have quoted. I do not see that there is any difficulty in the matter.

Mr. Palfrey—The objection of the Senator from Vermillion (Mr. Mouton) is a real, not an imaginary one. The clerk commissioned for the fourteenth district cannot act for the fifteenth. It would be a ridiculous incongruity. There is, however, a way to settle the matter. When the Judge is elected, he can be given power to appoint a clerk till the new ones are chosen.

Mr Mouton—These offices are extinguished by the operation of law the moment the new Judges are elected. They cease to exist because the government is reorganized. The constitution provides that they shall continue till the organization of the government, and no longer. Under the constitution of 1845, the clerks were elected, not as the gentleman from Carroll (Mr. Short) contends, for the parishes, but for the courts in the parishes. As soon as new courts are established, their office expires. The constitution says that a clerk shall be elected for each inferior court. The bill provides that we shall take the old clerks, and make them clerks of the new courts. This is a clear violation of the constitution, which says they shall be elected. The clerk in my district is commissioned for the fifteenth. That court is extinguished. It has no longer an existence. Can the clerk of that court serve as clerk of the fifteenth? I contend that he cannot, as the constitution says the clerks must be elected. The gentleman from Carroll relies on the 144th article of the constitution, which says that the old officers shall hold on till the organization of the government. Well, is the government not organized? The old courts have been extinguished, and the law cannot turn the clerks over to the new courts.

Mr. Short—The Senator misapprehends my construction of the article referred to. We have not created new courts. They stand as they did before. We have only in some cases altered the numbers and the parishes. Their jurisdiction remains the same. The only difference is that the Judge is appointed in a different manner. Then he was appointed by the Executive with the advice and consent of the Senate. Now he is elected by the people, and the district of country for which he is elected is defined by law. In some cases the parishes are the same; in others they are different. Tensas, Madison and Carroll formed the tenth district; now they are the ninth. The only difference is in the title of the district, and in the fact that the Judge is elected by the people. There is no change in reference to the clerk. The only point is: To what extent have we gone in organizing under the new constitution? First, we have provided for the election of Judges—that is one step. When we provide for electing clerks that will be another step. Till then, the difficulty is provided for by article 144 of the constitution. Till the organization is completed, things remain as by article 144. Take the clerk of any court, first, second or third, I care not which, he is entitled to hold on till his successor is elected. We have provided for an election on the third Monday of December We have the authority of the old and new constitutions that the courts are not completely reorganized till then. It has been suggested that the new Judges have power to appoint their clerks. Such a construction is not tenable. They have power to fill vacancies, not to make them. No vacancy can occur till the new clerk is elected, and the old one must hold on till then.

Mr. McCay—It strikes me that Art. 84 of the Constitution provides for this. I would suggest an amendment to the bill, providing that the present clerks should hold office until the new ones are elected. If there be a vacancy, this will provide for it. If not, then the amendment can do no harm.

Mr. Mouton—There is certainly a discrepancy in this bill. Suppose a clerk formerly in the 7th District, now in the 18th, what shall he style himself? How can he continue to act? His commission does not empower him to act as clerk of the 18th, and he has not been re-elected for that district.

Mr. Short—I do not see that there is any discrepancy. It makes no difference what the name of the district may be. A clerk of a court in Caddo parish, is a clerk for whatever district that parish may be placed in, till his successor is elected. I cannot see any ambiguity in this.

Mr. Mouton—I will state the question more plainly. Suppose in Madison parish a man is indicted for murder, and the clerk signs himself as clerk of that court for which he holds a commission. The attorney of the accused would move to quash the indictment on the ground of irregularity. He looks at the law, and finds he is clerk of the 14th, and not of the 15th.—would not this be good ground for quashing the indictment?

Mr. Short—All that makes no difference. Suppose the clerk finds his district divided, and his parish thrown from the 9th into the 10th. He is not evicted because the style of the court is changed, any more than the sheriff is. The office itself and its duties must be changed before the officer can be evicted. The idea that a mere change of the location of a mathematical line can affect the tenor of an office, must have sprung up with those novel ideas which supposes that the new Constitution is a revelation from Heaven; that it not only upsets everything past, but does everything for the future.

Mr. Mouton—The comparison with the sheriff is not in point. He is a purely parochial officer, which the clerk is not

Mr. Boatner—I have a profound respect for the opinions of the Senator from Carroll, and I must acknowledge that he generally comes to correct conclusions. But I must be guided by the dictates of my own reason in this case. The question, it appears to me is a very plain one. What evidence has a clerk of his right to his office? It is his commission as clerk of such a court, for such and such a parish or parishes. The law has made new districts, not previously recognized, and not known to the clerks in any parish.—Has a clerk who has been officiating as clerk of the 17th district, a right to officiate as clerk of the 18th? He certainly has not. The article of the Constitution has nothing to do with the case. It refers to officers whose offices are not changed. But the law has changed these offices. It creates new districts and new courts. I think it becomes the Legislature to make some provision for this case. A clerk can only act under one commission, and that cannot empower him to act as clerk of the 17th district, when he is clerk of the 18th. The reason of this is plain. I think with the Senator from Vermillion that we ought not to exchange our old lights for new with undue precipitancy. I do not want to tear up everything simply because it is old. But it is absolutely necessary that some provision should be made for this difficult case The Judges cannot appoint because there is no vacancy; and the Constitution says they may appoint when a vacancy occurs.

Mr. Short—I thank the Senator for the compliment

he has done me the honor to utter in regard to me, as I presume it was intended as such. For my part I am willing to be guided by any lights, whether old or new. But it is human to err—humanum est errare. The difficulty in point in this case seems to be in the change of the boundaries and of the names of some of the districts. If the district be changed, all process issued from the court in that District, is issued under the title of that Court. The fact that the district has a new name is nothing The clerk is clerk of a court in and for a certain district. There is no inconvenience in the clerk issuing process for a court under one name, when he was elected as clerk of a court under another name. The change of name is the only change, and is the only incongruity.

Mr. McCay—Suppose a parish be divided.

Mr. Short—The gentleman ought not to suppose an extreme case, or one which has not happened.

Mr. McCay—It has happened. For instance where the parish of Jefferson was divided, part being attached to the parish of Orleans.

Mr. Short—That case could easily be provided for by letting the Clerk issue process from one Court under one title and from the other Court under another title.

Mr Mouton—When the bill comes up on its 3d reading. It is an important subject, and I am sure will be productive of incongruity and trouble which, I think, ought to be avoided.

Mr. McCay—I shall vote against the bill for the reasons which have already been assigned in opposition to it. The Senator from Carroll (Mr. Short) has assumed the whole point in question by assuming that the old Courts still exist. This Legislature has organized new Districts, and when the new Courts are organized the old Clerks must necessarily go out of office. Their office is vacant now, or at least will be as soon as the new Judges are elected.

Mr. Short—The Clerks will hold their office till new ones are elected, as there can be no complete organization till that time. There can be no organization till an election takes place, and there can be no disorganization till there is an organization. If we do not pass the bill we will stand on the old order of things.

Mr. Mouton—We will not be in that position, because then the Judges will have the power of appointment, as there will be a vacancy.

Mr. Short—I doubt that.

The yeas and nays being called, Mr. Mouton offered the following, which was spread on the journal:

My opinion is, that the offices of the several Clerks are vacated by the adoption of the new Constitution, and the new division of the State into new Judicial District Courts. That the Clerks of the new Courts must be elected, and that the Legislature has no power to constitute the old Clerks, or the present Clerks, the Clerks of the new Courts, or the Courts lately organized. C. H. MOUTON.

The bill then passed.

Mr. Nicholls—Having voted in the majority I move a reconsideration in order to let the Senator from St. Mary move an amendment.

The bill was reconsidered.

Mr. Palfrey offered an amendment, providing that the present Clerks shall remain in office till their successors are elected.

The amendment was adopted and the bill passed.

The bill for the regulation of mortgages and privileges, and to prevent Syndics, Executors, &c., from raising the same, was taken up.

Mr. King—I am prepared to vote for this bill now, but I am not particularly anxious to press it to-day. However, I will briefly explain its object. It is intended for the purpose of giving additional security to persons who lend money on mortgage, by increasing this security, cheapening the rate of interest, and making money more abundant; and raising the value of real estate. These will be the effects of the bill. The evils of the present system very much resemble those of the tacit mortgage system, and consequently this bill is of a similar character to the one in relation to that subject. It will operate in the same way, and is free from the objections urged against that bill. As an instance of the evils which it is intended to rectify, I will state a case: Some years ago, John Jacob Astor lent $60,000 to a person in New Orleans and took a first mortgage on his property as security. The person afterwards went into bankruptcy. A syndic was appointed. He was not as honest as he should have been. He raised the mortgage, pocketed the funds, and Astor lost his money. He of course informed everybody of the character of our laws in this respect, and a consequent loss on the part of foreign capitaliste was the result. Now in case of bankruptcy, a mortgage may be raised on the mere ipse dixit of a syndic, and the same in case of a man's death. There is no necessity for this. It is a well known fact that the real estate banks of Louisiana were in the habit of inserting a clause in their contracts by which Executors and Syndics were prevented from raising the mortgage in case of the death or insolvency of the person contracted with. The system worked well. Gentlemen need not be frightened by the imaginary notion that the bill will not work well in practice. Louisiana is the only State where such powers are placed in the hands of Executors and Syndics. The whole system is based on a false theory. When a man borrows money he gives certain rights to others. By a fiction of law, when he dies, or becomes insolvent, the property belonging to him only is carried into his succession and becomes liable for all expenses. It is within the experience of many that when the property of an insolvent is cumulated in this way, when the Syndic's commissions and lawyer's fees are paid, the man who had advanced funds, and thought himself secured by a mortgage, in the end grasped a shadow, and found his money gone to pay the expenses of a bankruptcy or a succession, when he, in fact, was the real beneficiary owner of the property. These are the evils which the bill is intended to remedy. After much study and reflection I found considerable difficulty in applying it to all cases. I finally made a bill by which the first general mortgage will not be interfered with by any general mortgage. I would have preferred to take entirely from Syndics the power of this kind which they now possess. But I could not frame a bill by which I could provide for certain cases where it is necessary for Syndics to have power to raise some mortgages in order to settle a succession. I have therefore drawn the bill so as to prevent Syndics and Executors from raising a first mortgage. Now if the bill pass I think it will raise the value of real estate in ninety-nine cases in a hundred. But if it only reach seventy-five in a hundred, it ought to recommend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. Mouton. I should like to know whether the bill provides that in case of succession sales the mortgage follows the property into the hands of third parties.

Mr. King. Certainly, as in other States.

Mr. Short. The bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee, and I had no time to make a report of my own in relation to it, though it was a bill in which I could not concur. When it comes up, I shall take occasion to express my views on it.

Mr. King. I will state that the gentleman seemed to concur in the general object of the bill, though he thought it might embarrass the settlement of successions. But since then the bill has been remodeled, and is not the same one as that to which he expressed so much objection. If the gentleman will examine the bill, he will find that many alterations have been made in it—such as, I think, will relieve it from the objections urged against it.

On motion, the bill was made the order of the day for Thursday next.

Mr. McCay called up the bill to tax Insurance Companies for the benefit of the Fire Department of New Orleans.

The bill was taken up and passed.

The bill to fix the compensation of Jurors for the Parish of Orleans, was taken up.

Mr. Kenner moved to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Short. I am opposed to the motion. It is now late in the session; the Committee has had much to do, and it does not want this bill to be imposed on it now.

Mr. Monton. I think it is the law now to pay jurors in Orleans $1 50, but no appropriation has been made to carry the law into effect.

Mr. Short. If we pay the jurors in the city by the State, we in the country must have ours paid by the State likewise.

Mr. King. I am opposed to the payment of jurors by the State, whether in the city or country. But if you wish yours in the country paid by the State, we ought to have ours paid in the same way.

The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Kenner, from the Finance Committee, to whom was referred

An act to allow to the several Tax Collectors in the city of New Orleans the amount deducted from their commissions on the collection of State licenses for the years 1850 and 1851, reported unfavorably, and recommend that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. Taylor, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred

An act for the relief of the heirs of Patrick Flinn, a veteran of 1814 and '15, reported favorably.

And an act for the relief of Henry Forno, of the Parish of Orleans.

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, it was read the third time, and it was concurred in.

Mr. Neal, from the Special Committee, made the following report, which was read and adopted:

The Special Committee, to whom was referred

An act to improve the navigation of Sabine River, respectfully report:—

That the object of said act cannot be carried out by an appropriation of the funds designated in said act, for the reasons heretofore stated in the report made on this act upon its reference to the Committee on Lands and Levees.

The only fund that could be used for the purpose specified in the act, is the internal improvement fund, or it might be carried out by the internal improvement hands, and one of the boats under the charge of the State Engineer. We, therefore, recommend the passage of the following resolution:

Be it resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the State Engineer be, and is hereby, authorized to make a survey of the Sabine River, to ascertain what improvements can be made in the navigation thereof; and if, upon such survey, it be deemed practicable materially to improve the navigation thereof, to detail such portion of the internal improvement force to that point as he may deem necessary to carry out the work contemplated in this resolution; Provided, that the internal improvement force be not detached from any work now in progress.

On motion, the rules were dispensed with, it underwent its several readings, and it passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the House informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the following bills:

An act for the relief of J. Johnson, master of steamer Sydonia.

An act to emancipate Jane Mary, slave and daughter of Patsy, f. w. c.

An act to prevent the spread of contagious or infectious diseases by vessels arriving in the Atchafalaya Bay and its tributaries.

An act to provide for the trial of recused cases.

A joint resolution in relation to a Post Office in the parish of Livingston.

An act for the relief of Pierre Gellousseau, late School Superintendent of the Parish of Iberville.

And that the House has concurred with amendments to

An act to transfer certain school funds from the 3d to the 1st and 2d school districts in the Parish of St. Charles.

And the Speaker has appointed Messrs. Ranney, Sandidge, Day, Sterling, and Pearce, a committee of conference relative to

An act relative to the Judiciary of the State, the First Judicial District excepted.

And Messrs. King, of St. Landry, Wilson, Nixon, Wheat and Marks in relation to

An act to organize District Courts for the Parish and city of New Orleans.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate reported to the House the following bills concurred in by the Senate:

An act authorizing the Auditor to cancel the bonds given by John Y. Sterling and James A. McHatton as commissioners for the purchase of slaves and boats to be used in the internal improvement service of the State.

An act to change the name of George Ross of the Parish of Plaquemine.

An act to create an additional Justice of the Peace and Constable in and for the parish of St. Bernard.

And requested the concurrence of the House to the following bill of the Senate:

An act to provide for the uniform representation of the Parish of St. James in the Police Jury of said Parish.

And requested the signature of the Speaker to the following enrolled bill:

An act for the relief of Emile La Sere, State Printer.

And informed the House that the President had signed the following enrolled bill:

An act to amend and re-enact the 20th section of an act entitled an act to consolidate the city of New Orleans, and provide for the government and administration of its affairs.

And requested the concurrence of the House to the Resolution in relation to an iron railing to be around the State House and its grounds.

And informed the House that the Senate concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill entitled

An act to incorporate the Grosse Tete and Baton Rouge Plank Road Company.

The special messenger of the House asked concurrence of the Senate to the following bills:

An act for the relief of H. Labat.

An act defining the boundaries of the Parish of Jefferson.

An act providing for the improvement of the Holmesville road.

An act to authorize the Recorder of the Parish of Morehouse to appoint a deputy.

An act authorizing Minor W Sherwin, of the Parish of Claiborne, to remove certain obstructions to the navigation of the bayou Dauchette, etc.

An act supplementary to an act entitled an act forming a Levee District, to be composed of the Parishes of Carroll, Madison and Catahoula, for the better protection of the same from inundation—passed March 18, 1852, amended March 25, 1853.

An act authorizing a survey of the shoals in the Ouachita river, near Harrisonburg.

An act to equalize representation in the Police Jury of the Parish of Jefferson.

An act to incorporate the town of Mount Lebanon.

An act to tax the insurance companies of the city of New Orleans for the benefit of the fire companies of that city

An act to provide for the organization of the militia of the State of Louisiana.

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 1853.

The bill defining the boundary line between the parishes of West Baton Rouge and Iberville, was taken up.

Mr. Slack—I move to lay the bill on the table indefinitely, and I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a short time, while I explain the reasons which induce me to make the motion. In the first place, the bill is of direct interest to my constituents. My position in reference to the matter, is rendered peculiarly delicate, from the fact that I represent two parishes, whose interests directly conflict under the bill. In order to understand the subject, it is necessary to refer to past legislation. The act of 1826 fixes the boundary between the two parishes in the following words:

SECTION 1. That from and after the passage of this act, the southern boundary line of the parish of West Baton Rouge shall be, and is hereby made to be a line drawn south-west from the present point of division between the parishes of West Baton Rouge and Iberville, to the Atchafalaya river.

Digitized by Google

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, the Atchafalaya river, and the several water courses thereof, shall be, and is hereby made to be the western boundary line of the parish of West Baton Rouge.

This supplemental act was afterwards passed:

That an act entitled an act, to determine the southern and western boundary line of the parish of West Baton Rouge, approved on the eighth day of April, shall not go into operation until the end of the next session of the Legislature. Provided, however, that in the meantime the Commissioners appointed by the aforesaid act shall make, or cause survey to be made, agreeable to the provisions of said act, and report on the same to the next Legislature.

The present boundary is fixed under the provisions of that act. Before going farther, it is necessary to state, that the Atchafalaya and Mississippi run parallel with each other, at a distance of thirty miles apart. There are two settlements—Grosse Tete and ———. At that time, there was no connection between them and West Baton Rouge, though they were actually nearer to the centre of that parish than to the centre of Iberville. The inhabitants of these settlements petitioned for admission into Iberville. The petition was referred to a special committee, which made the following report:

Reference to journal of 1827.

"The committee to whom was referred the bill entitled 'An act to fix the boundary line between the parishes of Iberville and West Baton Rouge,' has the honor to report that they have examined the bill with great attention, and they find on the one hand, nature appears to have included the Bayou Grosse Tete within the parish of West Baton Rouge, but on the other hand, the impossibility of any communication between the settlement on Bayou Grosse Tete and the parish of West Baton Rouge, has induced them to recommend the adoption of the bill which accompanies this report, the whole of which is respectfully submitted."

The following is the act referred to in Committee report:

Be it enacted, &c., That Messrs. Wm. Joyce, Joseph Osillion, and Horsey P. Swindler be, and they are hereby appointed Commissioners for the purpose of ascertaining the practability of opening a road leading from Bayou Grosse Tete to the Parish of West Baton Rouge, at three miles distance from the Court House in said parish.

SEC. 2. Be it enacted, &c., That the aforesaid Commissioners shall be bound to make a report on that subject to the Legislature at its next session, wherein they shall estimate the probable cost of said road."

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That, until the adoption of the report contemplated by this act, the settlements on Bayou Grosse Tete shall be included in the parish of Iberville.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That the act entitled an act to determine the Southern and Western boundaries of the Parish of West Baton Rouge, approved April 8, 1826, be, and the same are hereby repealed.

The report of the Committee was adopted, and the act accompanying it passed the Legislature.

I find in the Journal of 1828, that the Commissioners appointed under that act, presented a petition which was referred to a Committee. The Committee reported the following act:—That all that portion of territory situated between the Bayou Grosse Tete and Bayou Maringouin, is hereby made a part of the parish of Iberville; and all proprietors of land within the aforesaid space, shall be hereafter subject to all the public regulations of roads and levees, and to all other burdens in the same manner as if they had been included in this act, to which the present is a supplement; Provided, however, that no portion of the parish of Pointe Coupée shall be included in the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c, That, until a good and practicable road be made between the settlements on the Bayou Grosse Tete and some point in the parish of West Baton Rouge, which shall not be more than three miles to the right or to the left of the Court House of the last mentioned parish, all such persons as are now or may hereafter be settled on the Bayou Grosse Tete, as above mentioned, shall continue to be within the limits and jurisdiction of the parish of Iberville.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That any acts or parts of acts contrary to the provisions of the present act be, and the same are hereby repealed.

This was an act passed in 1828. It was based on the report of the commissioners, and was a contract entered into between the Legislature and the parties interested. On the side of West Baton Rouge every effort has been made to comply with the terms of the contract. The Police Jury of the parish appropriated $1500, and at various times other appropriations were made, which, together with the private subscriptions amounted to $20,000. These efforts have been made by West Baton Rouge with a view of lessening her taxation by extending her territory. For us to interfere now would be in direct contravention of the 105th article of the constitution, which says that no expost facto law shall be passed, etc.

It seems to me that there has never been any real conflict of jurisdiction between the two parishes; that there has never been any difficulty in this matter; yet the bill presumes that, under the act of 1828, there will be some. While I am disposed to do everything that I can do consistently, for the parish of Iberville I am not willing to sacrifice the rights and interests of West Baton Rouge. I therefore move that the bill lie on the table in order to give West Baton Rouge an opportunity to maintain them. This cannot effect either parish injuriously. Iberville has possession of the territory now. That is nine-tenths of the contest. Let us then leave to the Courts to decide to which parish it will fall under the provisions of the act of 1828.

Mr. Short—That is a question which cannot be so easily settled by the Courts. As I understand the act the territory in question once belonged to West Baton Rouge. Because, however, from certain topographical peculiarities no communication could be had between this district and West Baton Rouge, the inhabitants petitioned to be added to Iberville, which was granted by the Legislature. Afterwards in accordance with the act of 1828, commissioners were appointed to lay off the road from the Mississippi to Grosse Tete, My vote on this question will be guided by the fact whether West Baton Rouge has complied with the provisions of the act referred to. As I understand the case, it is not contended that West Baton Rouge has complied with them. Has the road ever been built? The people do not like to have this thing in doubt forever. Till the road is built the district in dispute must, by the law, remain attached to Iberville. But the question is how long shall the subject remain unsettled? The people do not like to be kept in doubt.

It is said that subscriptions have already been made and money collected for the purpose of building the road. But that is not a part of the contract. The contract calls for a road on which people can travel at all times free of charge; not a plank road or a railroad, but one of those old-fashioned roads on which a man can travel from the Mississippi without being subjected to expense. West Baton Rouge has no right to deprive Iberville of the benefit of having this boundary question settled; she has no right to keep it in abeyance. The people wish to know on what they have to depend; what are the limits of their parish, and what will be their capacity.

Mr. Slack—The act does not specify any particular time within which the road is to be constructed, nor is any particulnr time to be understood from it. I wish it distinctly understood, that I represent both parishes equally, and that I have, in this matter, no partiality for either of them. What I wish, is, that, if West Baton Rouge has any claims, and I think she has, she may have an opportunity of establishing them. We are here to make laws, and not to decide on claims. Give West Baton Rouge the right and the privilege of fulfilling her contract. She may not be able to do it for years; but she may do it in sixty days. Do not cut us off from any opportunity of asserting our rights. In order to show what would be the effect of the bill, I will state that in 1844, the disputed teeritory—disputed here, but nowhere else—contained taxable property to the amount of $400,000, now it has increased to a million and a half. This is certainly worth contending for.

The bill was laid on the table indefinitely.

Mr. Kenner, without previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce

An act fixing the compensation of the Auditor of Public Accounts for the duties imposed on him by the free banking laws of this State.

Mr. Kenner—A word will suffice to explain the object of the bill. The free-banking bill imposes many new duties on the Auditor, and it is but fair that he should receive some increase of compensation commensurate with the augmentation of his labors. I do not propose that this should come out of the pockets of the people of the State of Louisiana, but out of the pockets of these corporations.

The bill passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Claims, made the following report:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate.

The Committee on Claims beg leave to report as follows:

B. C. Winfer, late Sheriff and State Tax Collector for the parish of Morehouse, has absconded from the State, owing a balance to the treasury of $1873 37. His securities, eighteen in number, now ask to be relieved from the payment of said sum. They allege that said Winfer never received that amount, as charged against him in the books of the Auditor of Public Accounts; that that deficit is made up of the amounts charged in the tax rolls to persons of notorious insolvency, from whom nothing could in any manner be collected, and from the amounts assessed upon lands claimed by absentees; which last species of property were not in reality the subject of taxation, as all being portions of the so-called Bastrop Grant, within the limits of which nearly the whole parish of Morehouse is included.

The undersigned consider that this is a proper subject to be left to the decision of courts of justice of this State, inasmuch as questions of fact only are therein involved, and inasmuch as your committee have had before them no other proofs than the allegations of parties interested, they beg leave to report adverse to said claim, and to be discharged from further consideration.

A. DERBES, Chairman.

Mr. Boatner, from the Joint Committee, made the following report:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, Lieutenant-Governor and President of the Senate.

The Joint Committee of the two Houses, on whom was imposed the duty of examining the consolidation and revision of the Statutes of the State, by Levi Pierce, Miles Taylor and William W. King, appointed for that purpose under the act of 20th December, 1848, and 21st March, 1850, beg leave to report, that the immense magnitude of the work before them has made it impossible for them to make a thorough and accurate examination of the subject. We find, however, that the matter has been before a committee appointed by a previous Legislature, and that committee recommended an appropriation of five thousand two hundred and fifty dollars. Your committee recommend the passage of an act which is herewith submitted, appropriating the aforesaid sum of money as a full and complete compensation to the aforesaid Commissioners.

BOATNER,
Chairman of Senate Committee.

Mr. Kittridge, from the Committee on Charitable Institutions, to whom was referred the petition from the Female Orphan Asylum of Baton Rouge, made the following report:

The Committee on Charitable Institutions would respectfully report, that they have duly considered the within petition, and unanimously concur in recommending the same appropriation as was given by the last Legislature for the support of this institution.

(Signed,) E. E. KITTRIDGE, Chairman.

On motion to take up a bill entitled—

An act to provide for the recording of mortgages in favor of minors and married women,

Mr. King called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Boatner, Burthe, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Kemp, Kenner, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Taylor and Todd—20 yeas;

And Messrs. Dupre, Griffin, Mouton, Neal and Nicholls—5 nays.

Consequently the bill was taken up.

Mr. King, from the special committee, made the following report, which was read:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, President of the Senate:

The special committee, to whom was referred the act to provide for recording the evidence of mortgages in favor of minors and married women, beg leave to report, that one of the committee, Mr. Kenner, suggested an amendment, the effect of which was to remove the penalty of nullity of the mortgage, if it should not be recorded.

The chairman was opposed to the amendment. Mr. Smith was opposed both to the amendment and to the bill. The committee, not having agreed upon any amendment, report the bill back to the Senate without amendment.

(Signed,) WM. W. KING, Chairman.

Mr. Kenner—I do not pretend that the report does not express the opinion of the gentleman from New Orleans, but it does not correctly represent the views of the other members. In the committee, there was a sort of triangular duel. The gentleman from Natchitoches shot at me, I shot at him, and the gentleman from New Orleans shot at me both. It seems to me, therefore, rather strange that the gentleman should report the bill back without amendment. If he persist in doing so, I shall offer a minority report, in order to bring before the Senate the amendment offered in committee.

Mr. Lewis introduced a bill authorizing riparian proprietors in towns to bring suit for the accretions on their lands.

Mr. Derbes moved to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Short—There is no necessity to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee. It is now late in the session, and the committee has no time to consider the question.

Mr. King—It is true the bill is of an important character; but it is also extremely simple. It merely declares the rights of riparian proprietors in towns. In the rural districts, these are well defined and understood. In the city, on the contrary, they are involved in doubt. The towns need something of this kind, and they are entitled to it just as much as the rural districts. There are instances where town corporations have forced owners to give up a portion, in order to secure the remainder. The object of the bill is, among others, to remedy this state of things.

After a few remarks from other gentlemen, the bil was referred.

The bill to provide for the recordation of mortgages &c., came up.

The President remarked that each member of the Committee had made a report. One member reported an amendment to the bill.

Mr. King—I understand that one member of a committee cannot report an amendment; I believe it requires a majority to do so. I do not wish this bill to be thrown back on its second reading. That would be to procure its defeat. Those in favor of the amendment would fight against the bill in any event. Those opposed to the amendment would support the bill. I cannot, therefore, see any use in putting the bill back on its second reading.

The Secretary read the report.

Mr. Short—I now understand the position of affairs. The bill comes back in the same form as that in which it went to the Committee. One member suggests this thing, another that, the third something opposed to both the others. We then have the bill in the same shape as before. No amendment has been made by the Committee. The report of the majority is the report of the Committee. If they do not recommend any change, it comes back to us in the same shape as it left. The Committee, that is the majority of the Committee, has not recommended any amendment. This regulates the form in which the bill returns to us; but the minority, of course, had the right to make a minority report.

Mr. Mouton—I hope this bill will be put on its second reading, in order to permit amendment, even if the amendment recommended by one member of the Committee be not received. Gentlemen on the other side may think this so perfect a bill that amendment is superfluous; but others may differ with them in opinion on that point. I hope an opportunity for amendment will be given. I cannot see what harm can result from it. I think at least this small privilege ought to be granted to us. One member reports a bill. Another reports the bill with an amendment, and a third declares himself opposed to both. The bill therefore cannot be said to be reported back without amendment, as the majority is not in favor of the bill as it went to the Committee. The Chairman has no more right than any other member to report his opinion as that of the Committee. I hope gentlemen will not consider the bill so perfect that no amendment will improve it. I hope they will give us an opportunity of offering our suggestions in a tangible shape.

Mr. Kenner—The gentleman from Carroll, with his usual desire to be facetious—

Mr. Short—I did not wish to be so at the expense of the Committee; but when a gentleman gets up and tells us that he has been engaged in a triangular duel, he must admit that he places himself in a very funny position.

Mr. Kenner—I was proceeding to say that I show, that so far from attaching ridicule to the committee, he has only succeeded in throwing it on the Chairman and his report. What does he say? He attempts to show that, because the Senator from Natchitoches, (Mr. Smith,) voted with the Chairman against the amendment, therefore the amendment falls. But he also voted with me against the bill. Now the rule is as applicable one way as another. According to his argument, therefore, there is no report at all. The gentleman from Orleans has no right to report back the bill without amendment. I thought it was the understanding that the bill was to be reported with the amendment as offered by me, stating, at the same time, that the gentleman from Orleans was opposed to the amendment. I contend that my minority report is before the Senate.

Mr. Short—The gentleman has not met the issue as to whether the bill is on its second reading. I contend that it comes back as it went to the committee. As to the question of ridicule, I am willing to let the members of the Senate be the judges.

Mr. King—I should like to state my understanding of this matter. I understood the gentleman to say that we would report back the bill. When writing the report, I was at a loss what to say; but I do not see that I could have said more than I have. The bill certainly comes back without amendment. A minority has no power to report an amendment.

Now, sir, we have discussed this bill so often, that I look on further argument as useless. Yesterday, I gave notice in a full Senate that I was ready for any amendment. No one offered any, except the gentleman from Ascension, in committee, and his is of such a character that it would defeat the bill. The bill has already passed its second and third reading. It has been opened twice in order to give gentlemen a chance to offer amendments. Have they done it? Have they manifested a disposition to improve the bill, or to support it in any form whatsoever? If the bill is to be defeated, let the responsibility rest on those to whom it properly belongs. The question is very simple. Shall the bill pass now, or must it run the gauntlet of amendments, which, if adopted, will defeat it, and which, if rejected, can only have the effect of causing delay. It is now late in the session. We have but little time before us. To postpone the bill would be to defeat it. I hope the Senate will sustain what I am confident is the opinion of the Chair, that the bill comes back without amendment, and is not put back to its second reading.

DEATH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. Kenner—Mr. President, I rise to perform a most melancholy duty, in announcing to the Senate the death of one of our most distinguished citizens. After long suffering, he has at last departed this life, and sunk to that eternal rest which follows our earthly pilgrimage. He was not, it is true, one of our most shining lights; he was not one of those brilliant orators, whose matchless eloquence has thrown an imperishable lustre on the American name; but he was what is better—an honest man, a good citizen, and a faithful representative. It has not fallen to the lot of our people in these latter days, to mourn the loss of a man so universally beloved and esteemed for all those qualities which adorn humanity, as William R. King. Review his life—see him as a member of Congress from North Carolina, his native State; see him representing his country at the Court of the Russian Czar, and then as a Senator from Alabama; view him in all these capacities, discharging his duties with mingled ability and fidelity: and you cannot find an act which a patriot could wish to be blotted from the record of his life. This is a rare attribute in a public man; but it cannot be denied to our lamented Vice President

I do not intend, sir, to pass upon him a studied eulogium. Words of mine would be superfluous or inadequate to paint his character. I shall therefore only offer a resolution; not one of mere formality, but a resolution expressing the feelings of the Senate on this melancholy occasion.

And he submitted the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Resolutions of the Senate of the State of Louisiana:

Resolved, That this Senate has heard with feelings of the greatest regret, the death of the Hon. Wm. R. King, Vice President of the United States.

Resolved, That in the death of this distingnished statesman, the Republic has lost one of its worthiest and most cherished sons, a long tried and faithful counsellor in the public service, a citizen of devoted patriotism, and a man of rare virtues and of unblemished purity of public and private life, which had won for him the unbounded esteem and confidence of the country.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect to his high official station, and of pride and affection for his personal excellence of character, the two Houses of the Legislature do now adjourn.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect, the members of this body will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr Easton, special messenger of the House, informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the following bills:

An act for the relief of the Charity Hospital.

An act to amend article 1264 of the Civil Code.

An act to amend an act for the expropriation of land by railroad and other corporations.

An act to provide for the removal of all cases now pending in the Supreme Court of the State under the Constitution of 1845 to the Supreme Court to be established under the new Constitution.

An act to authorize District Attorneys to recuse themselves in certain cases.

An act authorising proceedings in rem to recover loss or damage caused by any carelessness, neglect or want of skill in the direction or management of any steamboat, barge, flatboat, craft or raft.

And requested concurrence of the Senate to the following bills:

An act relative to public roads and highways.

An act supplementary to an act to divide the State into judicial districts—approved April 12th, 1853.

An act to amend an act No. 120, entitled an act to incorporate the town of Clinton—approved March 9, 1852.

An act to authorize the emancipation of certain slaves.

An act to redistrict the parish of Pointe Coupée, and to limit the number of the members of its police jury, and restrict their powers.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

An act to tax the insurance companies of the city of New Orleans for the benefit of the fire companies of that city.

An act to provide for deficiencies in appropriations for the year ending 31st March, 1853.

An act to incorporate the New Orleans Female Collegiate Institute.

An act relative to the election of sheriffs and coroners.

An act to recharter the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce.

An act to repeal on act entitled an act to appoint commissioners to lay out a road from Trinity to Whatley's Ferry, on Lake Catahoula.

An act to change the name of Leonard M. Bradford to Harrison Bradford.

An act for the relief of Henry Forno, of the parish of Orleans.

An act relative to the elections of Clerks of the District Courts (the parish and city of Orleans excepted.)

An act concerning the city of New Orleans.

And that the Senate had concurred in a

Resolution instructing the Secretary of State to notify delinquent returning officers of the late election for judges to make returns forthwith.

And requested concurrence of the House to a Resolution to communicate with the reporter of the recent Convention to frame a Constitution, and for other purposes.

THURSDAY, April 21st, 1853.

BILL RELATIVE TO JUDICIAL ADVERTISEMENTS.

An act relative to judicial advertisements.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in general assembly convened, That in all cases in which advertisements are required to be made in relation to judicial proceedings, or in the sale of property under judicial process, such advertisements shall be published in a newspaper printed in the parish in which such judicial proceedings are carried on, or in which such sale is to take place, and if there be no newspaper published in such parish, such advertisements shall be published by posting the same on the door of the court house and two other public places in different parts of said parish; provided, that it shall be the duty of the Sheriff or other officer publishing such advertisements, to publish the same in the English language only, except where the defendant in the judicial process, or the person directing the sale, shall request the said advertisement to be published in the French language also.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted &c, That when there are two or more newspaper published in the parish where such proceedings are had, or such sale is to be made, the person directing the sale, or the defendant in the judicial process, shall have the right of selecting the newspaper in which said advertisement is to be made; provided, said selection be made within three days after the notice of such proceeding, or the seizure made under said process.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted &c, That the cost of publishing advertisements required by law as herein before provided, shall not exceed the rate of one dollar for every hundred words for the first insertion, and at the rate of fifty cents for every subsequent insertion; provided, that in case the said advertisements cannot be published at the rates herein stipulated, they shall be published by posting the same on the door of the court house and two other public places in the parish wherein such publication is to be made.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, &c, That the 3d section of this act shall not apply to the city of New Orleans, and all laws contrary hereto are hereby repealed.

The above bill was taken up.

Mr. Mouton—I move to strike out the proviso under which advertisements may be published in French or English at the option of either party. There are some parishes in which the inhabitants speak little else than French, while there are others in which only English is spoken. and where the advertisements should be published in English only. There are others, also, where the character of the population is such as to require that publications be made in both languages. The object of the advertisement is to give information to the public as well as to benefit the parties.

Mr. Palfrey—To strick out the proviso wold defeat the bill.

Mr. Todd—I move to lay the motion on the table. There is nothing in the bill prohibiting the publishing of advertisements in French. They may be published in either language. We had better pass the bill without amendments.

Mr. Mouton—As I said before, the object of advertising is to give information to the public. In some parishes there is little else than French spoken. But if this were the case in only one, we should not disregard its rights. We all know that some times parties do not wish the time and day of sale known publicly, as they desire to buy in the property themselves. I say that it is only just that all classes of our population should have an oportunity of understanding the advertisements. This is all I ask and I hope the Senate will grant it.

Mr. Nicholls—The only reason the Committee reported this bill was because they wanted to have a general law passed. I offer an amendment excepting certain parishes.

On Mr. Nicholls's motion to strive out the following provisoat the end of the first section, Mr. Mouton called for the yeas and nays:

"And provided further, That this proviso shall not apply to the parishes of St. Landry, Calcasieu, Lafayette, Vermillion, St. Martin and St. Mary."

Messrs. Clifton, Dupre, Griffin, Kemp, Lacoste Lauve, Lacey. Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Short, Slack and Taylor—17 yeas.

And Messrs. Boatner, Evans, Kittridge, Patterson, Reeves and Todd—6 nays.

Consequently the proviso was adopted.

The first section was then adopted as amended.

On motion of Mr. McCay, the words "and if the defendant neglect to select them, the plaintiff shall have the right to do so," were inserted at the end of the 2d section, and the words, "the person directing the sale of," were striken out of the 2d section. The bill was then concurred in as amended.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate informed the House that the President of the Senate had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to provide for and regulate the office of Attorney General.

An act for the relief of Henry Parrish and John Moore Norman, of the parish of Orleans.

An act to give to the Mayor of the town of Port Hudson certain powers.

And requested signature of the Speaker to the following enrolled bills of the Senate:

An act for the relief J. Johuson, master of steamer Sydonia.

And informed the House that the Senate had substituted the following entitled bill as a copy of the original bill, it having been mislaid in the House of Representatives.

An act to amend the second section of an act entitled an act providing for the subscription by parishes and municipal corporations of this State to the stock of corporations undertaking works of internal improvement, and for the payment and disposal of the stock so subscribed.

An act to emancipate Jane Mary, slave, and daughter of Patsy, f. w c.

And that the President of the Senate had signed the following enrolled bills of the House:

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

An act to authorize the purchase of a new edition of the Civil Code and Code of Practice, and a new edition of the Louisiana Reports.

An act to incorporate the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company.

An act to provide for the manner of giving the aid of the State to Railroad Companies.

And informed the House that the Senate had adopted the report of the Committee of Conference upon the the bill entitled—

An act relative to the judiciary fof the State, (the First Judicial District excepted)

An act for the relief of Ambroise Lacour, of the parish of Vermillion.

An act to provide for the payment of the persons appointed under the act of 20th December, 1848, and March 21st, 1850, to consolidate and revise the statutes.

And requested the concurrence of the House to the following bill:

An act to provide for the recording of mortgages in favor of minors and married women.

And that the Senate had concurred in the House amendment to

An act to authorise the Pontchartrain Railroad Company to construct a railroad to Mobile.

Mr. Derbes having reported the following bills as being correctly enrolled, the messenger of the Senate reported them to the House, and asked the signature of the Speaker:

An act for the relief of the Charity Hospital.

An act to amend article 1264 of the Civil Code.

And requested concurrence of the Senate, also, to a Resolution to improve the navigation of the Sabine river.

And informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act granting compensation to Charles Fitz of New Orleans.

An act to redistrict the parish of Pointe Coupée to diminish the number of the Police Jury, and to restrict their powers.

And the substitute for

An act, number 288, incorporating the stockholders of the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad Company.

And requested concurrence to the following bills:

An act supplementary to an act to incorporate the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company.

An act to divide the State of Louisiana into Congressional Districts

Mr. Todd called up the bills for the improvement of Bayou Bartholomew and Bayou Bœuff.

Mr. Todd—I will state the objects of the bills. At various times bills have been passed authorizing improvement of these bayous; but the engineers have always been there at a season when their efforts did more harm than good. They generally went there during high water, when they could not pull out any snags. They could merely cut down trees, of which they let the stumps stand, thus injuring navigation of the rivers instead of improving it.

The bills passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES—THE JUDICIARY.

The report of the Committee of Conference on the Judiciary bill was taken up.

Mr. Short—For my part, I should insist on the Senate adhering to its amendment. I am willing, indeed I am anxious, to encourage economy and reform; but I have no idea of economising and reforming in our section and not in another. Another reason is, that $3000 per annum is as little as can be got along with in accordance with that idea of respectability depending on the amount of salary, which was urged in the early part of the session. In other States we find that the State officers become so contemptible as to occasion a rush for the federal offices, which is entirely adverse to the dignity of the States, according to our ideas of State rights.

Mr. Boatner—As a member of the Committee, I voted with the majority, and I think I was right in doing so. I certainly admire the consistency of the gentleman. The great argument made use of is the difference between the city and country judges He had an opportunity of reducing salaries of the city judges. I made a motion with that object myself. He says the country judges earn three times as much. It is not so. When the Judiciary was first reorganized under the Constitution of 1845, the courts were compelled to hold four terms a year. Even then, persons, amply qualified, could be found to take them at $2500 per annum. Two of these terms were abolished at the instance of the lawyers. It was found that there was no necessity for them. The amount of business did not justify them. I am told by a gentleman who says, that in his district, there is more business than in any other in the State; that twice as much could be done. Yet gentlemen rise here, and ask for an increase of salaries, in the face of the fact that in the district where there is most business, twice as much could be done. In the city, we are told the judges earn their money. We are told that they sit nine months in the year. We have passed a law reducing the time to make judgments final only because we have been told that the courts have not enough to do to keep them employed.

The Senate receded from its amendment.

The following report from the Committee of Conference was read and adopted:

The Committee of Conference, to whom was referred the disagreement between the two Houses on the 14th section of an act entitled,

An act to organize District Courts for the parish and city of New Orleans, recommend that the Senate recede from its amendments so far as to retain all the words of the 14th section to the word "causes," at the beginning of the 12th line, stricking out the balance of the section; and that the House agree to the section thus amended, so that the section will read as follows:

Section 14. Be it further enacted, That all of the said District Courts organized under this act shall have and exercise concurrent jurisdiction of all civil cases whatever, which are not hereby specially referred to the particular jurisdiction of special courts, except the First District Court, the jurisdiction of which shall be confined exclusively to criminal cases.

Senate Committee—H. SHORT,
TOM, J. McCAY,
J. E. KING.

House Committee—J. W. NIXON,
C. B. WHEAT,
S. F. MARKS.

Mr. King submitted the following report, which was read:

To the Hon. W. W. Farmer, President of the Senate.

The undersigned, appointed a member of the Committee of Conference upon the subject of the disagreement of the two Houses, upon the bill organizing the Judiciary of the city of New Orleans, begs leave to present the following minority report:

The difference between the two Houses was in regard to the jurisdiction of the First District Court. The House of Representatives was in favor of making that Court one of criminal jurisdiction only—the Senate had passed the bill making it a court in which the criminal business should have a preference, but the Court should have a concurrent jurisdiction with the other courts in civil business.

A majority of the Committee of Conference were in favor of receding from the amendment of the Senate, giving the Court concurrent jurisdiction with the other courts.

The undersigned objected to this course, principally upon the ground that in the law now in force, the salary of the clerk of the Court, viz: fifteen hundred dollars per annum, was wholly inadequate. That the clerk of the Court was now paid principally by the civil business. If all civil business was taken from the Court, a salary for the clerk of the Court must be provided for by an appropriation.

That a clerk was indispensable for the organization of the Court. Without a clerk no business could be done in the Court. From the evidence before us, at least three persons were necessary to discharge the duties imposed upon the clerk of that Court. One person must be employed as minute clerk; one to issue subpœnas, attachments for witnesses, &c.; another to attend to making out records of appeal; that the salary at present allowed by law was insufficient to secure the services of competent persons to perform those duties. Without some provision, is, therefore of opinion that the Senate should not recede from the amendment to the House bill until some suitable salary for the clerk has been first fixed upon.

The idea of giving the Court jurisdiction of criminal cases only, is one of doubtful propriety, especially as the Judge of that Court has stated that he has ample time in which to try many civil cases in addition to the criminal business. It is certainly inexpedient to attempt to organize the Court without providing the necessary compensation for the clerk, who is an indispensable part of the Court. If no adequate compensation should be allowed the clerk, the Court could not proceed with its business. The whole criminal business of the city would, therefore, be made to depend upon the contingency of an adequate compensation being allowed by the Legislature to the clerk of the Court.

The undersigned is of opinion that, but for the adequate compensation of the clerk, the Court could not transact the important business assigned to that tribunal by law.

The organization of the Court was, therefore, incomplete and imperfect. It was suggested that the salary of the clerk might be provided for by a separate bill, which might fail, or that the salary might be so low that no competent person could be found to fill the place, in which case the organization of the Court would be incomplete. and the criminal business of the city, consequently, neglected. The undersigned is of opinion that the compensation of the clerk, who is an indispensable element in the organisation of the Court, should not be left to the uncertain contingency of the enactment of a separate bill fixing the amount of his salary.

The Joint Committee, as a condition of their agreement, should have reported a bill providing a suitable compensation to insure the indispensable services of a clerk of the Court.

(Signed,) WM. W. KING.

Mr. Mouton submitted the following minority report:

The undersigned of the select committee, appointed to examine the book entitled "The consolidation and Revision of the Statutes of the State of a general Nature," prepared by Messrs. Levi Pierce, Miles Taylor, and William W. King, beg leave to make this his minority report:

By an act of the Legislature, approved December 20th, 1848, the Governor was requested to appoint 3 commissioners to revise the Codes, and to consolidate and revise the Statutes of the State of a general nature, and to compile the Statutes of a local character. The sum of twelve thousand dollars was appropriated for the payment of these commissioners—but the act provides that the last payment could not be made without a certificate from the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate that the work has been approved by the Legislature. The confusion in which our laws are, renders a work of this description a very desirable object; how far this highly desirable object has been accomplished by the work published by the aforesaid commissioners, the undersigned will not undertake to say. Without pretending to be able to judge of the merit of this work, the undersigned will observe that, considering the limited time he had to examine the book it cannot be expected that he will report favorably on the same, and recommend its approval by the Legislature. But he deems it his duty to submit to the Senate the following facts, which may serve to govern its action upon this claim.

The act of December 20th, 1848, contemplated the revision of our Codes with the amendments placed immediately after the original text, as well as the consolidation of the Statutes It appears that a revision of the Codes was prepared by the commissioners, and was submitted to the General Assembly of the year 1850—but the undersigned has not seen this work; the publication of the same was dispensed with at the suggestion of the commissioners. See the report of said commissioners to the Legislature of 1850, and the report of the Hon. W. B. Philip, chairman of the select committee of the House, to whom the matter was referred.—Journals of the House of 1850, p. 145.

On inquiry made at the office of the Treasury, the undersigned found that the sum of eight thousand two hundred and fifty dollars has been paid to the aforesaid commissioners, leaving a balance of three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars of the original appropriation of twelve thousand dollars.

The undersigned is of opinion that, under the act of 1848, this balance of the $12,000 cannot be paid before the General Assembly approves the work published by the aforesaid commissioners, and he cannot recommend the passage of any law authorising them to receive this balance before their work is approved by the Legislature.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) C. H. MOUTON.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Kennedy, clerk of the House, asked concurrence of the Senate to the following bills:

An act to grant the aid of the State to the New Orleans, Jackson, and Great Northern Railroad Company, by a subscription to the stock thereof.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company by a subscription to the stock thereof.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company by subscription to the stock thereof.

Mr. Easten requested the concurrence of the Senate in the action of the House upon the Senate's amendments to Anact to establish a general system of banking in the State of Louisiana.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

This being the day set apart for the consideration of the following bill, entitled

An act to amend an act entitled an act relative to the Charity Hospital—approved the 21st March, 1852, said bill was taken up.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in general assembly convened, That the 2d and 3d sections of an act entitled an act relative to the Charity Hospital, approved 21st March, 1850, be amended and re-enacted, so as to read as follows:

Section 2. Every person not a citizen of the United States, and above the age of ten years, arriving and landing at any place within the limits of the State of Louisiana, from any place without the same, shall, in like manner, report himself or herself to any resident Hospital Commissioner, and give bond in the sum of one thousand dollars, with one or more joint and several solvent and sufficient securities, resident in the parish where such person may have landed, conditioned that the principal in such bond, shall not, at any time within five years from the date thereof, be, or become from any cause, chargeable or dangerous in any manner to the State, to its citizens, or to any charitable institution within its limits, unless such institution be voluntarily supported by foreigners, or citizens of foreign birth, and every person who shall refuse, or wilfully neglect, for twenty-four hours after his or her arrival and landing, to make report and give bond as by this section required, shall incur a penalty of fifty dollars; provided, that persons arriving and landing in the parishes of Plaquemines, St. Bernard, Orleans or Jefferson, shall report themselves in New Orleans, and furnish bond with security resident in the said city of New Orleans.

Section 3d to read thus: It shall be lawful for any person referred to in the foregoing section, who may be unable or unwilling to furnish bond as thereby required, to commute, therefor, by paying, within twenty-four hours after his or her arrival, the sum of two dollars and fifty cents.

Mr. Palfrey—I had supposed that when this bill should come up again, it would be stripped of those objectionable features which were alluded to when it was before the Senate previously. By this bill even children of tender years are compelled to give security. We all know that under our system of law these persons are not capable of contracting; they are supposed not to know the difference between right and wrong, yet we would compel them to give bond and security.

Mr. Kittridge—Whatever may be said of this bill, it is the concentration of the wisdom of several other States which have legislated on the same subject. When the Committee examined the Hospital they found that the present law worked well. Bonds are never required from these minors of whom the gentleman speaks. The tax is paid willingly, as it ought to be. It comes out of that class which is chiefly benefitted by the institution. In fact 17-18 of the persons admitted into the Hospital are emigrants. The existing law is amended by the bill in two particulars, first, persons over ten years of age instead of 14, are subjected to its operation, and second, the tax is increased fifty cents. In framing the bill our own experience and the wisdom of other States have been consulted. New York once attempted to secure the same result, in another way—by taxing the owners of vessels, the consignees, and passengers. She found that she could not do it in that way. $60,000 is raised now. Could we afford to give that amount from the general fund? If so, we had better abolish the whole law at once. This bill does not differ in principle from the law now in force, it varies only in degree. If we are not prepared to appropriate $60,000 or $70,000 we must pass the bill. If we pass the bill it will not only save us $14,000 or $15,000 this year, but hereafter also. We will be relieved from the necessity of making annual appropriations which tend to exhaust our already impoverished treasury.

Mr. Mouton—I will not cast my vote for any law which has a tendency to prevent emigration to any extent, into our State. On the contrary it is the interest of the State to encourage rather than to retard emigration. What does the law contemplate? It levies an indirect tax on foreigners coming into the State. I am not disposed to that indirectly which the law does not permit to be done directly. If I am not mistaken a resolution was recently passed requesting our Senators and Representatives to get a law passed allowing us to impose certain taxes for this very purpose. When we ask the reason for this we are told that it is unconstitutional for us to do it without the consent of Congress. The bill before us contemplates levying a tax on the foreigners of $2 50. We cannot do this directly, and so we try to do it indirectly by saying that they must give a bond. They are generally poor strangers in the country, without friends or even acquaintances. The State tells these foreigners "We ask of you to give a bond in the sum of one thousand dollars, but if you pay two dollars and a half we will let you off. This is doing the thing indirectly. If you cannot do it do it directly, do not do it at all. Moreover, as I have said, I shall not vote for any law which interferes with emigration.

Mr. Short—I do not wish to change the law if it operates as well as it is said it does. I see no necessity for changing it. I will not vote to extend the operation of a bill which I think absurd. The law will operate severely on those poor people who come to New Orleans from foreign countries. The State has provided them with the means of alleviation in sickness and distress to a greater extent than any other city has done. Not even London can vie with New Orleans in this respect. The gentleman tells us that the present law produces $60,000. Well then let it alone. Do not force children to give a bond which they cannot get, or pay a sum which they may not have.

Mr. Kittridge—I admit that the institution has received $60,000—that is $18,000 a year; but that is not enough. A larger sum is required. New buildings are necessary and must be erected. If we do not pass this bill we must appropriate a sufficient sum out of the general fund. Are gentlemen prepared to do that, when they know the exhausted condition of the Treasury? The giving of bonds is all humbug. I doubt if a single foreigner has ever been compelled to do it.

Mr. McCay moved to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was lost.

Mr. McCay moved to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Nicholls—I am opposed to the reference. It is now late in the session. To refer the bill would be equivalent to defeating it. It is absolutely necessary that we should support that Institution and this is the only feasable method.

Mr. McCay—I also think it necessary to support the Institution; but it is not necessary, in order to achieve that object, however desirable it may be, to pass an unconstitutional bill. We have proper committees to which we are in the habit of referring such subjects in order to get their opinions on delicate questions of this nature. If it is not right to refer this bill, why did the gentleman move to refer the tacit mortgage bill? This bill should be referred if only to get it properly amended. It has been acknowledged that the bill contains a device to get around a constitutional difficulty. I will never consent to that.

Mr. Palfrey—My position in regard to the bill has been misunderstood. I am opposed to the section which compels children over ten years of age to give bond.

Mr. Kittridge—If that were stricken out it would defeat the whole bill. There is no use in trying to levy this tax unless we ask a bond in the first place. There is no use in talking about unconstitutionality; that is a question which can be settled by the Courts. We must support this Institution. We must pass this bill or make a large appropriation.

Mr. Short—The question is not how much money we may be compelled to give, but whether we shall do a ridiculous thing.

Mr. Mouton—I should like to make a few more remarks on this subject. It is unbecoming in Louisiana to levy a tax on foreigners when we have reason to believe it to be unconstitutional. As I have stated, it is not more than a few days since we passed a resolution asking Congress to pass a law authorizing us to tax these people. If there is nothing unconstitutional in this bill, the Senate has taken a ridiculous position; because we do indirectly what we admit that, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, we have no right to do directly. We ask a poor man who comes a stranger to our shores, seeking an asylum from the oppression which prevails in his native land—we ask him to give a bond in a thousand dollars, or in default of furnishing it, to pay $2 50 to the Charity Hospital. This institution is called the Charity Hospital of Louisiana. By the act of 1852 we are making it not of Louisiana, but of all countries in the world. If we cannot support the institution ourselves, let us give it away—or abandon it, but not resort to subterfuges like this. I think the Senate ought not to pass the bill. I even think we ought to repeal the law of 1852, which has placed the State low enough. It is bad policy to adopt any measure which will check emigration, and my position as a representative on this floor precludes me from giving my sanction to any such law.

Mr. Short—The person must pay $2 50 or forfeit his bond. I have not examined the subject attentively, but I think it will be seen by Howard's reports that it has been decided in South Carolina that a State cannot exercise such a power

Mr. McCay—As a gentleman has said that 17-18ths of the admissions into the Charity Hospital are foreigners, I have procured information on the subject, which I will read to the Senate.

The number of admissions into the hospital has been—

From other States	7,559
Foreign countries	73,156

After a few words from other gentlemen the bill passed with an amendment.

The bill to grant a certain sum to the Medical College came up.

An amendment had been made by the House to insert the word indigent in place of meritorious.

Mr. Mouton—I object to the amendment. In many parishes there are young men who are not, strictly speaking, indigent, and who would not consent to ask aid from the State. They are, however, meritorious and deserving of assistance. The police juries, upon which devolves the duty of recommending students, would not recommend any who they might think could pay. They are the proper judges, as they have discretion in any case. At the same time we cannot expect that these youths or their parents should come and beg for assistance. A just and natural pride would prevent them from doing so.

Mr. Rivers—I think that the amendment covers the very objection urged by the gentleman.

Mr. Short—When a young man wishes to go to the college, the question would be in regard to his worthiness, not his poverty. But there might be meritorious, rich young men, perfectly able to pay, yet desirous of taking advantage of this law. Then a poor young man, meritorious as well as poor, might be deprived of admission because a rich one might want the endorsement of the police jury as being meritorious.

Mr. Mouton—I desire to do everything in my power to assist poor young men, but I am satisfied that the police jury always gives preference to the poor over the rich.

Mr. Todd—I can see no use of so much delicacy in the use of terms. Let us call things by their right names.

The Senate concurred in the amendment.

Mr. Beatner called up

An act to exempt the parish of Catahoula from further taxation to build levees in the parish of Madison. And

Mr. Short offered the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall in no way affect the collection of the taxes levied on the said parishes, and that the Levee Commissioners in the parishes of Carroll and Madison, shall have the discretionary power of directing the Sheriffs of the said parishes of Caroll and Madison what amount of the taxes they shall collect under the act amendatory of the act entitled, &c.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Short—I can state the whole subject in a few words. By the law of 1852 the Parishes of Madison, Catahoula and Carroll constituted themselves into a Levee District. Three Commissioners were appointed in each parish; many persons paid the tax, but others enjoined the collection of it, on the plea of unconstitutionality. This objection I think has been already answered in the report made to the Senate. A general system has been adopted. I do not think that this parish will have to be taxed any more. The only object of opposing the bill is that it might enable those persons who have enjoined to maintain their injunction. I have no objection to the section exempting Catahoula from further taxation, I am willing to let Catahoula out. But so far as the bill gives a pretext to those who have taken out injunctions, I cannot support it; all contracts under this bill can be paid by taxes levied already, provided these individuals have their injunctions dissolved and are made to pay what they ought to have paid long ago. Some persons have paid in advance and they should not be made to be the only ones to suffer.

Mr. Boatner—I have great respect for the legal opinion of the gentleman who has just spoken. But his fears are purely imaginary. He fears that some of his constituents will be sustained in a certain course. That issue is made up. The parties are ready for trial, and the judgment of the court cannot be affected by this bill. There is nodifficulty in the case. The gentleman says he is willing to exempt the bill from future taxation. When he reads the bill, he will find that is all we want. If the subject were left to the citizens of Catahoula, who are certainly the best judges of their own interests, there would not be five votes given in favor of retaining the law which the Senator now contends for. I will read a letter from one of the wealthiest planters on Tensas river, who would be benefitted by it if any one would. (Reads.) In regard to Roundaway Bayou, which is the only one that affects Catahoula, I will state that it is not closed, simply because it happens to have its mouth in Madison parish, which is not affected by it. Catahoula is compelled, by a majority vote of three parishes, to pay for building levees which are of no use to her. This is the real position of the case. Equity requires the passage of this bill. No doubt the gentleman, with that ingenuity which characterises him, could frame a better bill than this, but this one suits the people of Catahoula.

Mr. Short—I hope the Senator will understand my position. In the early part of the session, the representatives from Catahoula were anxious to obtain the repeal of the law making a levee district of the three parishes mentioned. The representatives of Carroll and Madison opposed it till a general law should be formed, when there could be no objection to letting Catahoula out for then Madison and Carroll, for the same reason, would wish to get out also. But they are willing to pay their shares of taxes as long it is necessary for self protection. They were also unwilling to let Catahoula out before that time, as any overflow that injures them, also injures her.

Mr. Boatner—I am opposed to the proviso offered by the gentleman because all that it contemplates is embraced in the bill which refers not to the taxpayers of Madison and Carroll, but only to those of Catahoula.

The proviso was rejected and the bill passed.

The bill to authorize married women to dispose of their dotal and paraphernal property, &c., was taken up.

Mr. Todd—There is no subject so confused as that which relates to the liabilities of married women. There are conflicting decisions on the subject which tend still more to embarrass it. In some cases persons have contracted with married women, and the Courts decided that they were not liable, so that the creditors have been defrauded. With intelligent men the credit of married women has been much impaired by this state of things. It is necessary that something should be done to rectify it.

Mr. Lacey—The bill is a good one. It alters no principle of our jurisprudence. I had a case in point myself which illustrates the evils complained of. A woman borrowed a sum of money and gave a special mortgage and a security. I could not prove in what manner the money had enured to her benefit, and though it had been lent to her, I could not recover. I ask to alter no principle—not to make wives liable for their husband's debts, but for their own. It will benefit married women by doing away with the uncertainly which now exists, in regard to their liabilities, and thus raising their credit. It interferes with no rights, and only does what is just and proper.

FRIDAY, April 22d, 1853.

BILL TO REGULATE MORTGAGES, PRIVILEGES, ETC.

The following bill, being the special order of the day, was taken up:

SEC. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That Syndics of insolvent estates, Executors, Curators, and Administrators of successions, and all other Administrators of estates or property appointed by judicial authority, shall no longer have the power of raising special mortgages or privileges, recorded against immovable property or slaves, except as hereafter set forth.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, etc., That if the person holding a special mortgage the privilege first in rank on the property, consent to the raising of such mortgage or privilege with a view to the sale of the property, then all the subsequent mortgages or privileges may be raised, as now provided by law, with the view of distributing the proceeds of the sale of the property according to the rank of the mortgages and privileges. If any person holding a special mortgage or privilege which is not the first in rank, consent to the raising of his mortgage or privilege, with a view to the sale of the property and distribution of the proceeds amongst the creditors according to the rank of their privileges or mortgages, then all the subsequent mortgages or privileges of inferior rank, shall be raised and the property sold, subject to all mortgages and privileges of superior rank. If the property sell for more than enough to pay the prior mortgages and superior privileges, the excess shall be divided amongst the inferior creditors, according to their rank and privilege. If the sum bid for the property at the sale does not exceed the amount of the prior mortgages and privileges then there will be no sale; and the property will continue to be administered for the benefit of the estate, until the prior privileges or mortgaged creditors subject it to the payment of their demands.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, etc., That if the mortgage recorded against any such estate or property, be a general one, and such estate or property be effected by special incumbrances of a higher rank, the person administering such estate or property, can only sell, subject to such incumbrances, applying nothing but the excess of the price over the prior special incumbrances, to the payment of the general mortgage.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, etc., That if the settlement of the aforesaid estate should be rendered impossible, or greatly embarrassed by the existence of a general mortgage, the Judge, if it be deemed necessary, may authorise the representative of such estates, to proceed to the sale of such property, and to raise such mortgages and all subsequent mortgages, whether general or special in the manner heretofore allowed by law, in order that the administration may be settled and the proceeds be distributed amongst the creditors, according to their respective rights.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That any person holding a mortgage or privilege may prevent the raising of his mortgage or privilege, in consequence of prior claimants having consented to the raising of their mortgages and privileges, by tendering to all such prior claimants the amount of their claims; in which event he shall be legally subrogated to their rights.

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That if a person claims a privilege which the law does not require to be recorded, he will not be allowed to coerce the sale of the property affected by his privilege, to the prejudice of privileged or mortgaged claims, until he has notified all the mortgaged and privileged creditors, whose claims are recorded, of his desire to have his property sold, and not until they have refused or neglected to pay, or tender to him the amount of his claim, as provided for by the previous section of this act.

Digitized by Google

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted &c., That whenever a party has a mortgage or privilege on, or interest in two funds for a debt, and another party has a mortgage or privilege on, or interest in one of such funds, for another debt, the latter shall have the right to compel the former to resort to the other fund, in the first instance, for satisfaction, if the course be necessary for the satisfaction of the claims of both parties, whenever it will not operate to the prejudice of the party entitled to the double fund.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That when a person holding a privilege or mortgage, recorded as before mentioned, against such estates as are contemplated by this act, refuses to consent to the sale of the property effected thereby, he may be compelled by summary process to discuss the property on which his rights exist, in order that the amount which may be due to him as an ordinary creditor may be ascertained.

If his demand be not due at the time, there shall be a rebate of interest, at the rate drawn by the debt, and if no rate be specified, at the rate of eight per cent.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That mortgaged privileged creditors of the estates mentioned in the first section of this act, shall be allowed to proceed against the property for their demands in any competent court, by making the representatives of said estates a party, in the same manner as if the deceased would have been were he living, or the insolvent would have been had he not failed; and if there be no representative in the estate, a curator ad hoc may be appointed to represent said estate.

Mr. King—I believe the Senate understands this bill. It is one, I need scarcely say, of great importance, and will, if passed, have the effect of making money more abundant.

Mr. Burthe—The gentleman told us before that the bill would prevent syndics, &c. from raising mortgages. It seems to me that the second section bears a different interpretation.

Mr. King—I should have been glad to prevent syndics from doing so in every instance, but owing to the peculiarities of our Louisiana law, we found it impossible to do so. We were obliged to give up some of our objects. But even as it is, the bill will be of great benefit. Scarcely one case in ten is covered by a general mortgage. The first special mortgage cannot be raised, and the creditor who has advanced on a first mortgage is sure of his money. We should be glad to extend this relief to all classes of mortgages; but if we had done so it would be found impossible to settle successions and insolvencies.

It has been the law of Louisiana ever since she had any law, that if, for instance, a man had a claim of $5000, and the property to which it attaches is sold by the sheriff for a subsequent claim, the sale is null unless the property brings more than $5000. If for instance, it sells for $7000, the purchaser pays $2000 to the sheriff, and takes the property, subject to the first claim of $5000. It is strange that this provision, having looked so well, the law should give to syndics the power of raising all mortgages. The best security becomes involved in uncertainty when a syndic can go to the mortgage office, and by a single line raise all mortgages. Louisiana is the only State where the property of an insolvent can be sold without reference to the mortgages existing on it. Every business man knows that the liability of a certain, to be converted into an uncertain security, is very injurious. While in England and New York property is security for almost its full cash value, in Louisiana it is scarcely any. I venture to say that the wealthiest planter in the State, possessed of an unincumbered property could not raise more than 5 per cent. on it. Why is this? It is on account of the tacit mortgage system, and the general insecurity of mortgages arising from the cause I have specified. This bill will have the effect of making money more abundant, and will enhance the value of real estate. I cannot imagine what injury it can produce, while blessings almost innumerable will flow from it. Examine the bill attentively. Do not read it as you would a newspaper or a romance, but peruse it with care; and I am sure your conclusions in regard to it will be favorable.

Mr. Nicholls—Did I understand the gentleman to say that scarcely one case in ten was covered by a general mortgage.

Mr. King—Yes.

Mr. Nicholls—I understand the great argument against tacit mortgages to be that they covered up so large a proportion of the property of the State.

Mr. Short—This is a bill to change the manner of settling successions and insolvencies. When a man dies every creditor is placed on a tableau, and they are then called together according to rank, and the estate divided against them. The settlement is very simple in cases of death of insolvency. The idea of this bill is not new to me I have seen it tried in a neighboring State, and I do not wish to see it adopted here.

Mr. Lacey—I think it is my duty as a senator to express some opinion on this point. I regret to see in many a disposition to approve certain measures, simply because they involve a change. For my part I am not wedded to the ancient law, merely because it is ancient. If I find it embarrassing I would sweep it away as a cobweb; I care not where or when it had its birth. When the tacit mortgage bill was before the Senate, the gentleman from Lafayette, and others, opposed it merely because it was a change from the established system. I am not surprised that the same argument should be used now. If the bill be calculated to benefit the State; if it will increase our resources and our prosperity, we ought to pass it without reference to the antiquity of the law or system which it attacks.

Mr. Mouton—The gentleman is mistaken when he says that I opposed the tacit mortgage bill simply because it was a change. I opposed it because I think the change a bad one; because the bill did not afford a full guarantee for the rights of minors. I have always been in favor of recording mortgages, and I would vote for a bill abolishing tacit mortgages in favor of married women.

Mr. Lacey—Why then did not the gentleman vote for the bill? He said that he was in favor of imposing the penalty, not on the minor but on the person representing him. Why such a provision would be as worthless as the paper on which it is written.—The gentleman says he is in favor of abolishing tacit mortgages, but he does not want to effect those now in existence. Why, sir, the gentleman might live through a long and useful life, and go down to to the grave with the honors of the State clustering thick upon him before such a bill could produce any appreciably beneficial effects. If I were in favor of a measure, I should be practically its friend. I wish to permit the expansion of the great interests of commerce and to break the trammels which now bind it. One gentleman has drawn for us an affecting picture of the State writhing beneath the iron heel of commerce; he has referred all our ills to commerce; commerce! and this because a necessary and beneficial change was proposed.

Mr. Nicholls—If the gentleman refers to me, I can tell him that I was opposed to a change in the system to which the people were accustomed unless a wiser and better plan were proposed. This was the change which I opposed.

Mr Lacey—There must then be some mistake. I thought that the mere facts of change was made one of the principle arguments against the bill. The tacit mortgage system, which allows a mortgage to be swept from the record, prays on the vitals of the State, diminishes the value of our property, destroys confidence in us and keeps out foreign capital. Are not these things the effects of the present system?—Who can deny it? It causes sales of mortgaged property at a heavy expense, and when the mortgagee thinks he is well secured, the death of the mortgager sweeps away his rights. Such is the system which I trust the present Legislature will obliterate from the statute book? What does this bill propose? When we look at it, we find equity and justice written on every line. We propose to secure the mortgage creditor in such a manner that death itself shall not interfere with his right. Is there injustice in this? Is there danger in it? The property banks operated in this way and no one complained of it. Is it not fair that when a mortgage is given, it shall not be raised till the debt is paid?

Mr. Short—That principle in the conduct of the property banks, was adopted for the benefit of the State and not of individuals.

Mr. Lacey—Very well—No evil effect resulted from it. The imagination can conjure up no valid obligation. We see, then, two conflicting principles; one weighing heavily on our property, and the other calculated, if adopted, to be of great benefit to the State, and to individuals, by inviting capital hither and enhancing the value of real property. At present a man may scarcely have recorded his mortgage, and left the office, when death or insolvency may rob him of his rights and his security. I hope this system will be changed, I hope the bill before the Senate will pass; it will be productive of immense benefit, and can do no harm.

Mr. Short—A word by way of explanation. I do not wish my position on this bill to be mixed up with my position on the tacit mortgage bill, I cannot confound the two together, unless they entirely assimilate. But I would have the gentleman to know that the long existence of a thing is no conclusive argument in in favor with me, though I must admit that it ought to have some weight. It is reasonable to suppose that a system would not remain in operation so long a time had it not some merit; something to commend it. In reference to my position on the tacit mortgage bill, I will say that I was in favor of it because I thought it would bring order out of chaos, but this bill acts in a contrary manner, it introduces confusion where before were simplicity and order. The very reason that induced me to go for the one is the reason that prompts me to go against the other. The principal object of the bill is to destroy, or alter the present simple manner of settling the estates of deceased persons and insolvents. At present there is a positive and certain system about which there can be no mistake.

But under this bill it is entirely a different thing. You are to call in two appraisers and they say when is the remaining interest of creditors after these incumbrances are paid off. Then if the amount of the sale does not exceed the amount of the prior mortgage it is null. You talk of taking property out of the market. If that is not doing it, I should like to know what is? It would give an opportunity for bringing in all manner of factitious and fraudulent claims, and thus prevent the ordinary creditors from getting their rights. I agree with gentlemen in regard to some of the demerits of the present system; but I do not think this bill will remedy them. I therefore order a substitute providing that instead of the Syndic selling the property, it be sold on the order of the Court by the Sheriff, &c.

Mr. King—I am happy that the views of gentlemen who have spoken correspond so nearly with my own. I am not surprised that a bill, the length of this one, is not thoroughly understood. Everything contained in the substitute is provided for in the bill. The only change it makes is that the Sheriff is to sell instead of the Syndic or Executor. We make the Syndic sell in the same manner as the Sheriff. The object the gentleman has in view is the same. Let me remind him of one difficulty in adopting the substitute. Suppose the first mortgage to be a general mortgage—he will find that he has not provided for that contingency. I do not think it judicious to make the proposed change in the bill. I think the system provided for in it is better. It is certainly cheaper, which is a great merit. I think the bill is a necessary one. Let me remind gentlemen of the case of Astor, which I alluded to before, where he lent a man $60,000 which were pocketed by a Syndic, who himself became insolvent, and thus Astor lost his money. Such occurrences cause capitalists to loose confidence in us. They will not send their money here to be invested on mortgage security. Thus real estate here is scarcely considered as security at all, while it ought to be the best, and enable a man to get money at the lowest rate. Every one knows the expense of an insolvency, that it is in proportion to the nominal amount of property. Though a man may be a hundred thousand dollars worse off than nothing, all the expenses come out of the mortgaged property. In my own practice I have known a mortgage creditor to loose all his claims by the exorbitant expenses. I cannot see what objection there can be to this bill. I cannot see how it will render succession cases more difficult. I do not see how the Syndics' sales can be embarrassed when they are made the same as Sheriff's sales. The gentleman from East Baton Rouge has referred to the Property Banks. I never heard that any embarrassment was occasioned by this system in that case, and if made general it would necessarily be productive of good effects.

Mr. Nicholls—I am opposed to the bill, not because it makes a change, but because that change is no improvement, and because it will impede the settlement of successions.

On motion of Mr. Lacey, to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking up the railroad bills, Mr. Clifton called for the yeas and nays.

Messrs. Dupre, Evans, Kemp, King, Lauve, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Slack and Todd—18 yeas; Messrs. Barthe, Derbes and Clifton—3 nays.

Consequently, the rules were suspended and the railroad bills were taken up and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. Easten, special messenger, requested the concurrence of the Senate to the following bills, entitled

An act to emancipate Robert Scott Pyburn, of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the Grosse Tete and Baton Rouge Plankroad Company.

And he informed the Senate that the House had concurred with an amendment in a bill entitled

An act for the relief of Purvis and Dugue.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills:

An act to enable married women to contract debts and mortgage their property.

An act authorizing Henry F. Bennett and wife to adopt Georgiana C. Kimball.

An act for the improvement of the navigation of Boeuf river.

An act for the improvement of the navigation of Bayou Bartholemew.

And he informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act to enable Baptiste Dupeyre, or his legal representatives, to emancipate the slave Zoe, without removing her out of the State.

An act relative to judicial advertisements.

An act to provide for the performance of the duties of parish recorders in case of vacancy.

An act to exempt the parish of Catahoula from further taxation to build levees in the parishes of Madison and Carroll.

An act making appropriation out of the swamp land fund for the purpose of completing the Grand Levee in the parish of Point Coupee.

An act authorizing Minor W. Sherwin, of the parish of Claiborne, to remove certain obstructions to the navigation of Bayou Dauchitte, &c.

An act authorizing the improvement of certain streams in the parish of Bossier.

An act for the relief of H. Labat.

An act to authorize the recorder of the parish of Moorehouse to appoint a deputy.

An act to amend the act No. 120, entitled an act to incorporate the town of Clinton—approved March 9, 1852.

An act supplementary to an act entitled an act forming a levee district, to be composed of the parishes of Carroll, Madison and Catahoula, for the better protection of the same from inundation—passed March 18, 1852, and amended March 25, 1853.

And informed the House that the Senate had adjusted the report of the Committee of Conference, to whom was referred the disagreement of the two Houses on the 14th section of

An act entitled an act to organize District Courts for the parish and city of New Orleans.

And that the Senate had adopted the report of the Committee of Conference upon a bill entitled

An act relative to the Judiciary of the State (the First Judicial District excepted.)

And that the Senate had concurred, with amendments, to

An act relative to judicial advertisements.

And requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills:

An act to grant the aid of the State to the New Orleans and Baton Rouge Railroad Company, by subscription to the stock thereof.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the Pontchartrain Railroad Company.

And that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act to grant the aid of the State to the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Texas Railroad Company.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad Company.

An act to grant the aid of the State to the Grosse Tete and Baton Rouge Plankroad Company.

An act to emancipate Robert Scott Pyburn, of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

MONDAY, April 25th, 1853.

Mr. McCay introduced a bill for the relief of the securities of William K Stiles.

Mr. McCay—I will as briefly as possible explain the object of this bill. In the year 1848 these gentlemen become securities for William K. Stiles, a State tax collector in the city of New Orleans. Stiles subsequently became a defaulter; the securities had repeatedly warned the Auditor that he must proceed against the principal, as they suspected that everything was not right. By law the Auditor is authorized on a defalcation, to proceed immediately against the principal and securities. This he did. The securities got out an injunction, which was confirmed by the court. The Auditor appealed—the case remained undecided for 18 months, when suddenly, without notice being given, without any attorney for the securities being present, the decision of the lower court was reversed, and the injunction dissolved. The object of this bill is only to quash the execution, and to give the sureties an opportunity of showing what defence they have.

Mr. Hodge—Is the object of the act to do away with the judgment?

Mr. McCay—No, only with the execution.

Mr. Hodge—I do not see how the parties are to derive any benefit from the bill unless it affects the judgment.

Mr. McCay—Do we, by quashing the execution, destroy any of the rights of the State? Not at all. The judgment was recorded at the time, and a mortgage remains on all the property of the securities.

Mr. Hodge—It seems to me that the bill would be equivalent to doing away with the judgment as it makes it inoperative, at least for the time being. It seems to me a better plan to submit the whole subject to the Legislature, and let it judge whether the parties are entitled to any relief. It is clearly unjust that they should seek to be relieved from the stringent rules of the law of 1847, and take advantage of the law of 1850. If by mistake their counsel were absent when the case came to trial, that was their fault. I am not willing to set aside the judgment unless it is erroneous. It would be the same thing as setting aside the execution.

Mr. Derbes—As I understood this case, the parties signed a bond for Mr. Stiles. He became a defaulter. Proceedings were taken against them. An injunction was granted and made perpetual. The auditor appealed and the injunction was dissolved. What would be the position of affairs if we pass the bill?

The case would simply be where it was before the Supreme Court rendered its decision. The only thing that the sureties ask, is to be permitted to go before the Courts and show their defence against the execution issued by the Auditor. The bill can not have the effect of destroying the mortgage existing against the property of the sureties. Of course that stands good.

The only thing they ask is to be allowed to make their defence before a Court.

Mr. McCay—I had thought of the plan suggested by the Senator from Caddo, but on reflection, I considered it better that the case should go before a Court. The bill merely provides that the parties shall have the right of going before a Court of Justice, to show what defence they have.

Mr. Mouton—I am not disposed to take advantage of an accident in order to oppress these gentlemen.

But the relief asked is for a very large amount. I agree rather with the Senator from Caddo; I am fearful that the bill may impair the rights which the State has against the sureties. The case it appears, was argued in the lower Court; it went up, and owing to negligence on the part of counsel, the judgement was reversed. I have no doubt the facts are as stated. But it is strange that any counsel should have neglected so important a case; a case involving $28,000.

The sureties have recousre against the counsel if they suffered from their negligence I am not prepared to vote now for this bill, though, as I have said, I do not want to take advantage of an accident.

Mr. Burthe—I am not prepared to vote on this bill. All the facts are merely hearsay. I have asked for the record and could not see it.

Mr. Lacoste—What harm can there be in granting to these persons a new trial. If the judgment be right the result will be the same; if not, they will be enabled to get their rights.

Mr. Hodge—That is all very true; but gentlemen forget this important consideration. The act of 1850 differs from the act of 1847 under which these proceedings were had. I do not think that they can justly ask to be exempted from the operation of the act of 1847, with reference to which the bond was made. I am willing to do anything that is right. I wish to do justice to all parties; but I am not willing to go as far as this. I feel it my duty to vote against the bill.

Mr. McCay—I did not suppose there would be any opposition to the bill The State will lose none of her rights by it. She has a judicial mortgage on all the property of the sureties, by the law under which the bond was made. The bill will merely give the gentlemen an opportunity to show their defence, which, I believe is a good one. They repeatedly warned the Auditor that the principal was spending the money of the State and requested him to call for the accounts which he neglected to do.

The bill passed.

The bill regulating mortgages and privileges was taken up and passed.

Mr. Hodge—I move a reconsideration of the vote just given. I think the bill involves too sudden a change in our jurisprudence and will be productive of more evil than good. As the gentleman who introduced the bill must be aware it is one of great importance. It affects the laws and the settled policy of Louisiana. From a cursory examination of the bill I am led to believe that, although it may do much good, it will certainly do much evil. I confess that it will draw into the State a large amount of capital; that it will give confidence to capitalists; but still I am not prepared to admit that it will be the best interests of Louisiana. While I am anxious to induce capital to come into the State, I am not willing to sacrifice the interests of Louisiana for the protection of foreign capitalists. I understand that the gentleman from New Orleans cited the instance of Mr. Astor, who loaned to a man a large amount of money; the man afterward becoming insolvent, and Astor being compelled to take the personal security of the syndic, and consequently lost his money.

While I admit that this particular case was a hard one, I do not see, that in consequence of it, we ought to change our system of law and put our mortgaged property entirely under the control of capitalists. If I understand the object of the bill, it is to enable parties who have made loans on real estate security to hold the real estate till the loan is discharged. What would be the effect of this? It would tie up all the property in the State till the foreign capitalists are paid. It is an acknowledged principle with me, that the debtor's property is the common pledge of all his creditors, and that when he becomes insolvent it should be divided equally. When he dies the same is the case, and the property is not held, for all time, in order that foreign capitalists may enjoy the interest. Suppose a man worth $300,000 goes into Wall st. and borrows $100,000 at 8 per cent. He becomes insolvent and has creditors equally as well entitled to be paid as the one in Wall street. You could not find any one who would buy the property and take the risk of the mortgage. What would then become of the property? Are you willing to sustain our insolvent laws? You cannot do it, and pass a law like this; because till the mortgage creditor either renounces his claim or chooses to exercise his rights of mortgage the property is tied up. This would be the effect of the bill. While I am willing to do any thing honorable to encourage the principle advocated by the gentleman from New Orleans, I am not willing that all the interests in the State should be made to bend to those of commerce. I am not willing by my vote, to sanction a law which does everything merely for the benefit of foreign capitalists. I told the same thing to a gentleman who made strong appeals to me on the subject. Reflect what is the policy of the laws of Louisiana. When I came here I found a radical difference existing on these subjects. By our votes we are to decide whether we will adhere to our old and long-settled policy, or adopt a new one. When a person dies, by a humane principle engrafted on the laws of Louisiana, those persons are protected, who thus become deprived of their natural protector, and are unable to protect themselves.

I do not wish to linger on this theme; it has already elicited sufficient debate. However, the property must be appraised, and it cannot be sold for less than its valuation. Was this a mere arbitrary provision of the law? No! on the contrary, it was intended to prevent the sacrifice of the property of those who was unable to take charge of their own affairs. As long as I am living it is supposed that I can pay if I contract a debt, but if I die, the law humanely provides that my property shall not be sold for less than its appraised value. This is a wise and human law, and I hope it will be maintained. I trust it will not be repealed. If you mortgage, your property, and die, a curator is appointed. He does not take an interest in it. The mortgagee comes and asks payment. The curator does not borrow money to pay it and so the property would be sacrified. I blush to say that the curator frequently goes into collusion with the creditor in order to make something for himself. I hope gentlemen will reflect; think that the gentleman from New Orleans himself will agree with me when he considers the subject maturely. These are my opinions in regard to the bill before the Senate They may not be entitled to much weight but such as they are I think myself bound to give expression to them.

Mr. King—This question has been discussed with great elaborateness. Argument has been exhausted before the Senator, who has last spoken, came into the field. The gentlemen speaks of mature reflection. If he had given the subject as much reflection as I have, his own reflection would have been much more mature. He thinks the bill involves a great departure from existing forms. He will find that the sales are to be made in the same manner as heretofore. The general policy of this bill is such as to produce the most beneficial effect. It will relieve the State of a great incubus which now hangs over it. It will increase the value of real estate, and accelerate that influx of capital which the gentleman himself acknowledges to be so desirable. In short its benefits are so vident that they scarcely need enumerating, and as they have already been sufficiently described, I shall not waste the time of the Senate by expatiating on them.

The motion to reconsider was lost.

Mr. Lewis introduced a bill for the emancipation of certain slaves and to permit them to remain in the State.

Mr. Martin—I shall not vote for the bill.

Mr. Lewis—These slaves are well known in New-Orleans. They belonged to an aged gentleman whom they served faithfully. When he died he bequeathed to them their liberty and some means, and asked that they be permitted to remain in the State. We have passed other bills of the same nature and I do not see why we shoul not pass this one.

Mr. Martin—I am opposed to the bill unless the provisions of the law of 1852, under which the slaves would be sent to Liberia, be applied to them.

The bill passed.

Mr. Lacey introduced a bill of the same nature.

Mr. Hodge—Several bills of this kind have passed already. I have been inclined to let them go through without opposition, but this is such a gross infraction that I can not vote for it. We have too many free negroes now in these State. In those States where there are a great number they cannot be tolerated. This should be a strong suggestion against our permitting the wholesale emancipations. I would prefer a general law. I know we have one now, but it is so stringent as to be virtually inoperative. That is the reason why we have so many applications for acts of this kind.

Mr. Lacey—I hope the gentleman will not oppose the bill. The lady who asks this favor is a person of high and unblemished character, and I know she would not seek it if it were not right. I am confident the negroes will never be a charge on the State, and that we incur no risk in permitting their emancipation.

Mr. Hodge—I withdraw my opposition.

Mr. Martin offered an amendment requiring a bond of $1000.

Mr. Lacey—I would have no objection to the amendment, were it not so late in the session that the bill, if amended, may not be reached.

Mr. Martin—This is the settled policy of the State. I never heard of slaves being emancipated without a bond being required.

Mr. Derbes—The gentleman from East Baton Rouge is doubtless right in his objection. There is good reason to believe that the bill, if amended here, would not be reached in the House, and would thereby be defeated. We ought not to jeopardize the success of the bill by insisting on the amendment.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman's remarks are based on the idea that all negroes of good character ought to be emancipated. There is no evidence that these slaves had rendered any extraordinary service to their owner. Nine out of every ten negroes in the State bear just as good a character.

The amendment was lost.

Mr. Burthe moved to amend by requiring a bond of $150.

Mr. Lacey—The same objection exists to this amendment. The bill, if amended at all, may not be reached in the House.

Mr. Burthe—I can tell the gentleman that a bill which passed here on Friday passed the House this morning

Mr. Hodge—The bill ought not to pass in its present shape, except in case of absolute necessity. The gentleman from Jefferson has told us that a bill which passed here on Friday, passed the House to day. No other bill of the kind has passed in this shape. Let the bill be amended even at the risk of defeat, and take its chance; otherwise a bad precedent might be set.

Mr. Lacey—I am not certain, but I think no bill of this kind has passed the Senate, requiring the negroes to give bond.

Mr. Martin—I move that the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee in order to give the learned chairman time to find out what the law is.

Mr. Lacey—We certainly shall not go to the parish of Assumption for light.

The bill passed.

ORDER OF THE DAY.

The bill to amend the law in relation to the Charity Hospital was taken up.

Mr. Hodge—I wish to vote against this bill. I am opposed to an additional tax on foreigners

Mr. Millard—Objections have been made to this bill on the ground of unconstitutionality. I understand there have been decisions of the Supreme Court in favor of the law. Mr. Moise, who, I believe is the father of the present law, informs me that it is perfectly constitutional.

The bill passed.

The bill to organize a Board of Public Works was taken up.

Mr. Hodge—I should like to have the bill referred. The districts can be better formed in committee than in open Senate. The constitution requires that the districts be formed according to population. This can only be done by referring the bill to a committee. For instance, the Fourch District is very large, it runs from the Gulf to the Arkansas line. Now this is not fair, and I want to have justice done.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Nicholls—The only reason that I am opposed to the bill is because I am firmly convinced that the Legislature intends to adjourn without acting either on the Registry law or this bill; two things which the constitution requires. There will be opposition in the House, and if it goes back it will fail. I believe it will fail in any event, but I want gentlemen to show their hands. This is the last week of the session, and if we intend to act on the bill, we should do it now. I should myself like to have a change made in it. My district contains a very large amount of overflowed lands. It requires attention, and that soon. It ought to be added to the Baton Rouge district, or if justice were done. to the Attakapas district either. I believe the division made in the constitution is much better and juster. I do not believe that the bill does justice. But I am not disposed to make political capital out of it. I should desire to have the divisions made with reference to the labor to be done. It strikes me that the clause with reference to population is unjust.—According to that division, New Orleans would form a district by herself. But as we must make the divisions in this way, we should take labor into consideration also. I desire the bill to do justice to all parts of the State; but as it is so late in the session—taking into consideration the manifest and open opposition to organizing this Board, I am convinced that if the bill is laid over, even for a day, the Legislature will adjourn without acting on it.

Mr. Hodge—I wish to show the Senate the great injustice done to my district on account of this bill making the districts correspond with the Congressional districts which were formed years ago. I am not however going to make a strenuous opposition. I shall come down gracefully. I suppose it is the object of the Democratic majority to form the districts so as to secure the election of their partisans To the victors belong the spoils. But we will teach them a lesson as we did last year in my district, when the people took a man who represented their feelings and wishes, in spite of gerrymandering.

Mr. King—This bill forms the districts on the same plan as that on which they were made by the whigs years ago. Last year they undertook to do the work over again, and gerrymandered the State beautifully. Now they want us to adopt their gerrymander.

After some further remarks the bill passed.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills:

An act for the relief of Hugh Y. Waddell of the parish of Natchitoches.

An act to provide for the removal of certain public records from the Fourth District of the city of New Orleans to the Parish of Jefferson.

An act to manumit or emancipate Marie Melaney, slave of Moise Hebert, of the parish of St. Landry.

An act to regulate the holdings of the District Courts.

An act to prevent obstructions to navigable streams, bays and lakes within the State

And he informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act to emancipate George Millette.

An act to regulate and define the duties of Parish Treasurer.

An Act to incorporate the Opelousas Fire Company.

An act relative to the election of Clerks of the District Courts for the parish and city of Jefferson.

An act to emancipate William, Desdemona, and Elizabeth Robertson, children of George Robertson, f. m. c. of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act to amend an act to provided for supplying the loss of the public records and other papers consumed by the burning of the Court House in the parish of Claiborne, on the 6th day of November, 1849,

And requested concurrence to

An act to regulate the holding of the District Courts.

An act to emancipate the slaves belonging to the estate of the late J. B. Cazus, of the parish of Orleans.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The special messenger from the House requested the concurreoce of the Senate to the following bills:

An act to amend and re-enact article 2700 of the Civil Code.

An act for the relief of Wm. Long.

An act to regulate the salary and contingent expenses of the State Engineer.

An act to authorize the construction of boats for the Internal Improvement Department of this State.

An act for the relief of B. L. Hodge of the parish of Caddo.

Resolution concerning a survey of bayou Plaquemine.

And he informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the following bills:

An act to provide for the payment of the persons appointed under the acts of 20th December, 1848, and March 21st, 1850, to consolidate and revise the statutes, &c.

And that the House had disagreed to the first amendment of the Senate, and concurred in the second amendment of the Senate to the bill entitled:

An act to regulate the terms of the District Courts, the parish of Orleans excepted.

And that the House had concurred in, by substitute, to

An act amending an act relative to the powers of Clerks of District Courts, the parishes of Orleans and Jefferson excepted—approved March 18th, 1852.

And concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill entitled

An act relative to Judicial Advertisements.

And concurred in with an amendment to the bill entitled

An act for the improvement of the navigation of Bœuf River.

And concurred in, with amendments, to the bill entitled

A resolution to improve the navigation of the Sabine River.

And concurred in, with amendment, to

An act for the improvement of the navigation of Bayou Bartholomew.

And he further informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate changing the terms of Court in the parish of Calcasieu.

And that the House had refused to concur in the amendment changing the terms of the Court in the Twelfth District, composed of Ouachita, Union, Morehouse and Jackson.

TUESDAY, April 26, 1853.

Mr. Lacey introduced a bill for the relief of certain persons who had irregularly purchased lands.

Mr. Lacey—A bill has already passed with this view, but it seems that the amount appropriated was insufficient. This is a bill to provide for the surplus. I ask for a dispensation of the rules in order to introduce it.

Mr. Rivers—It was supposed that the amount already appropriated was sufficient. I am not prepared to vote for this bill now.

Mr. Lacey—I am informed that it is not sufficient.

Mr. Martin—I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Lands.

Mr. Lacey—That would be equivalent to killing the bill. I hope it will not be done. We have already recognized the justice of these claims, and I do not see why we should make any distinctions.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman is no better judge of the amount necessary than the committee was. There will be plenty of time yet, and referring the bill will not be equal to killing it.

M. Lacey—I do not think there will be time. I hope the Senate will assent to his own bill. These parties cannot obtain relief in any other way as the Supreme Court has decided that they must look to the Legislature for it.

Mr. Marrin—I wish to know wether these parties have presented their claims to the Register and wether he has made a report. He was authorised by an act of the last Legislature to make publication calling on all persons having claims of this kind to come forward and make them known.

Mo. Rivers—What I want to know is wether these claims are included in the report of the Register.

Digitized by Google

He reported some thing more than a thousand acres.

Mr. Slack—I hope the bill will be referred. I was on the committee myself. The chairman carefully examined the subject and said that the amount reported would be sufficient for all just claims. I do not mean to say that all just claims were provided for, but let these be examined in the same way as the others were.

Mr. Martin—The Senator from E. B. R. has not answered any question. Were these claims included in the report of the Register? He said that $3,000 was sufficient.

Mr. Lacey—I do not know anything about the Register.

Mr. Martin—Then I have no hesitation in saying this is a suspicious claim.

(Here the debate assumed an entirely personal character between Messrs. Martin and Lacey.)

The bill was finally referred.

Mr. Hodge called up a bill to relieve a person named William Shaw from the operation of the law of forced heirship.

Mr. Hodge—It is true, that the bill does not exempt a person from the operation of the general law of the State; but when I state the circumstances of the case, I am sure the Senate will not refuse to pass the bill. The father is an aged man. The forced heirs are all grown. Some died, leaving children. When the minors come of age they will be possessed of a considerable property. There are four of them. It is the desire of the old man to be exempted from the law of forced heirship, so as to put his grandchildren on a footing of equality.

Mr. King—Though I could not be persuaded to support this bill, I should certainly insist that the old man leave his property to his grandchildren, in whose behalf he solicits this exemption: for, non constat, when he gets the law passed, that he would not marry a young wife and leave all his property to her. Individually, I am opposed to this species of special legislation. I am opposed to interfering with what the law regards as vested rights. I do not wish to make these distinctions. I do not wish to exempt individuals from the operation of the general law. The law here and in other States differs. There may be discussion as to which is superior; but I avow my preference for our own law. But whatever opinions we may entertain, we ought to abide by the law which we have. No doubt there are a thousand persons in Louisiana who would like to make preferences among their children. If we pass this law, we shall have a swarm of applicants at the next session, and we will never know where to stop.

Mr. Lacey—As Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I can state that, on the statements of the Senator from Caddo, I was willing to view this bill on its merits, and was willing to vote for it. I am willing to vote for it now.

Mr. Mouton. I regret that I cannot support the bill. I am not disposed to go against the settled policy of the State by any vote of mine. I am forced to vote against the bill, though it is local in its character.

The bill passed.

A bill to transfer the Deaf and Dumb Asylum to Opelousas, was taken up.

Mr. Mouton. This bill was reported as a substitute by a committee of which I was a member. In the year 1831 an appropriation was made, and an institution called Franklin College was established. The buildings are large, commodious, and well adapted to the purposes for which this bill designs them. Reasons of economy should prompt us to make use of them. The location is good; the place is healthy, and situated on the line of the Opelousas Railroad.

Mr. Lacey. I do not think it is good policy to remove the Asylum. The Superintendent tells me that it would not be judicious to remove it. We do not know whether the State has a good title to the buildings in Opelousas. At all events, I am informed a large outlay would be required to fit them for the purpose. I am informed by the Superintendent that he came here from Indiana with the express understanding that the Asylum was to be located at the seat of Government. Would it be just to ask Mr. Brown, the Superintendent who came from Indiana with this understanding, to give up his associations, who gave up a flourishing establishment there—would it be right to ask him to remove now to Opelousas? It would not be right. And are you going to do this, which is in opposition to our settled policy? Are you going to enter on an experimental policy? I hope not. I hope the small appropriation necessary will be made, and that this institution will be continued here at the seat of Government.

Mr. Millard. The title, on which the gentleman lays so much stress, is as good as that of any property belonging to the State. The whole question resolves itself into one of dollars and cents. The buildings already erected in Opelousas are large and salubrious. The location has the advantage of the Railroad, and is in all respects desirable.

Mr. Mouton—In answer to the gentleman from East Baton Rouge, I will state that the object is not to undo what the last Legislature did, but, on the contrary, to carry out its wishes. It is to prevent the expenditure of $20,000 more for buildings when we have them ready. They are large enough for 200 students. The question is not whether we shall please the Superintendent; it is, as the gentleman has said, a question of dollars and cents; whether we shall expend $25,000 more or transfer the Asylum to Opelousas. The Board can remain as now, if the members wish; if not, the Governor can appoint another. The object is only to carry out the wishes of the Legislature.

Mr. Millard—The buildings are new, but not having been used for two or three years, may need some repair; but the expense will be trifling.

The bill passed.

Mr. Hodge called up

An act relative to the duties and powers of the police juries of the State and the constituted authorities of incorporated towns.

Mr. Hodge—I have some remarks to make which will detain the Senate but a few moments. The bill is so correct in principle that I hope it will meet with no opposition. It is only incorporating into our parish system the principle enumerated in the 118th art. of the Constitution. If the Constitution makes it necessary for the State to provide means to meet its liabilities when they are incurred, the same thing should hold good in regard to the parishes and towns. The bill was at first voted down in the House, but after discussion it met with no opposition. Though the committee reported against the bill, yet after the report was made, Mr. McCay, a member of the committee, told me he was in favor of it. Mr. Rivers, also, when I explained it to him, told me he would not oppose the bill. The gentleman from New Orleans even assured me he should advocate it.

Mr. Patterson—I shall offer no opposition to the bill provided East Feliciana be excluded from its operation.

Mr. Hodge—If the gentleman insists, I will agree to that, though I should prefer a general law. I think it will peril the bill to amend it. But if I cannot get more, I should like it to be applied to my own parish. In the first bill New Orleans was excepted, but at the request of her representatives New Orleans was subsequently put in. Pass this bill, and corporations will hereafter be more careful how they run in debt. If they are forced to provide ways and means to meet their liabilities they will look before they leap. The principle of the bill is the same as that contained in the New Orleans consolidation bill, and in the 118th article of the Constitution. Its effect will be to make the bonds of our parishes and towns more valuable, and to raise their credit. The creditor will then have a guarantee that he will be paid.

The bill passed.

MESSAGE TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills:

An act entitled an act to organize a Board of Public Works.

An act to emancipate the slave Eulalie, belonging to Amadee Landry, of the city of New Orleans.

And he informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act supplementary to an act to divide the State into judicial districts—approved April 12th, 1858.

An act to amend an act entitled an act to increase the number of jurors in the parishes of St. Bernard

An act for the relief of H Labat.

Resolution requiring the State Engineer to make a thorough examination of the channel in Old river, between the mouth of Red river and the Mississippi, and that of Grand Point, on Red river.

He informed the Senate that the House had concurred in the following bills:

An act to authorize the Church Wardens of the St. Louis Church of the city of New Orleans to dispose of certain property.

An act to emancipate John J. Croft.

An act to regulate the holding of the District Courts.

An act to amend the act entitled an act to incorporate the city of Jefferson—approved March 9th, 1850.

WEDNESDAY, April 27th, 1853.

Mr. Kenner asked a suspension of the rules, to enable him to introduce a bill to provide for counting the votes for Judges.

Mr. Kenner—We are now within two or three days of the end of the session. It is impossible to tell who are elected Judges of the Supreme Court. It is to provide for counting the votes that I offer this bill. If, as a gentleman says, a bill has been prepared, with this object, why does he not call it up?

Mr. King—I was told that a bill to that effect had passed the House.

ORDER OF THE DAY

The Registry bill was taken up. The following is the bill:

An act to provide for the registering of voters in the city of New Orleans, in pursuance of article 11 of the Constitution.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That the Board of Aldermen of the city of New Orleans, on or before the second Monday of December, in each and every year, shall nominate and appoint three suitable and discreet persons, for each and every one of the four districts into which New Orleans is now divided, who shall reside in the districts for which they are respectively appointed, who shall be known as "the Board for the examination of the qualification of voters."

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Board aforesaid in the several districts of the said city, shall immediately after their appointment, give public notice in the State paper, and in other prominent newspapers published in the city of New Orleans, that they will meet in their respective districts, in said city, on the second Monday of January next after their appointment, for the purpose of examining and deciding upon all applications of persons residing in the said city, for the registry of their names as qualified voters in the city of New Orleans; and in said notice, the said Board shall designate the places of their respective meetings.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, &c., That the several members of the Boards to be appointed as provided in the 1st section of this act, shall, before entering upon the discharge of the duties of their office, except that of giving notice as herein above prescribed, make oath as provided in article ninety of the Constitution; which oath may be administered by any Judge or Justice of the Peace in the aforesaid city of New Orleans; and having been subscribed by the members of the boards aforesaid, and signed by the Justice before whom such oath is taken, it shall be returned by the aforesaid boards of examination to the Board of Aldermen of the said city of New Orleans, with the lists of voters as hereafter set forth.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall be the duty of the several boards for the examination of the qualification of voters to meet on the day, and at the respective places set forth in the notices published by them; and when so met, the said boards, having taken the oath above prescribed, shall examine into and decide upon all applications of persons residing in the city of New Orleans, to be admitted to the privileges of a voter, and the said boards shall continue in session for that purpose, and for the purposes hereinafter prescribed, from ten o'clock of the forenoon, until 6 o'clock of the afternoon of said day, if so long a time be necessary; and they may adjourn said meetings from day to day (Sundays not included,) until the objects of the meeting shall be accomplished.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, &c., That in case any person residing in the said city of New Orleans, claims to be a legal voter, and requires his name to be registered upon the lists of voters, and such person is not known by the board before which he may appear, to be a legal voter, or should his right to be recognized as a legal voter be challenged by any person whomsoever, it shall be the duty of the said board for the examination or the qualification of the voters, by and through any of the members thereof, to cause the person, so unknown to the board as a legal voter, or whose right is challenged as aforesaid, to make and subscribe the following oath, which shall be prepared for the purpose, and be returned, with the list of voters, as hereinafter provided for, to the First District Court of the city of New Orleans, to be carefully kept and preserved:

"I (A. B.) do solemnly swear or affirm that I am a citizen of the United States, (and if he be a naturalized citizen, he shall state in his oath the place at which he was naturalized;) that I have attained the age of twenty-one years; that I have resided in this State twelve months next preceding the election, and the last six months thereof, in the parish, and now residing in the city of New Orleans; and I do further solemnly swear, (or affirm) that since the adoption of the present Constitution, I being a citizen of this State, have not fought a duel, with deadly weapons, within this State nor out of it, with a citizen of this State, nor have I sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel, with deadly weapons, with a citizen of this State, nor have I acted as a second in carrying a challenge, or acted, advised or assisted any person thus offending. So help me God!"

SEC. 6. Be it further enacted, &c., That should any person not be naturalized at the time of claiming to be registered as a voter, and should his right to be naturalized accrue, and he expect to be duly naturalized within one year from the time that such board first commenced its sitting, or should such person, at the time of applying, not have attained the age of twenty-one years, or have acquired the six and twelve months residence prescribed by the Constitution, and should the time for his majority be reached, or the period necessary to give him a legal residence, expire within one year from the time the board to which application is made, first commenced its sittings, then and in that event, the oath prescribed in the preceding section of this act, shall be varied to suit the facts; which oath, when taken, shall be returned in manner and form, as prescribed for the oath required for such preceding section; provided, however, that in all cases in which the party may make affidavit, as set forth in this section, it shall be the duty of the commissioners of any election, at the time such party offers to vote, to require of him the usual oath, provided by law, to be administered to voters, whose votes may be challenged.

SEC. 7. Be it further enacted, &c., That the respective boards aforesaid, when met for the purpose of examining into, and deciding upon the qualification of the voters, or to hear and determine challenges as hereinabove provided, shall not only hear the applicant in the manner and form prescribed, and in such cases as are provided for in sections 5 or 6 of this act, but they may, by and through any member thereof, examine witnesses under oath; and the applicant, when sworn as aforesaid, or any witnesses so examined, who shall be guilty of wilful and false swearing, shall be liable to the penalties of perjury.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, &c., That it shall furthermore be the duty of the said city of New Orleans, at the time of the meetings, and before closing the same, to keep a perfect and complete list of the names of all persons who reside in the said city, and who have been held and decreed by the several boards aforesaid to be qualified voters in the aforesaid city of New Orleans, together with the residence of such persons; to set forth upon the list aforesaid, all those who expect to become voters, according to the meaning and extent of section six of this act, together with their residence and the contingency upon their citizenship depends, to designate those whose right to vote has been challenged, the grounds for such challenge, and the decision of the board in the premises; and such statement of facts as will enable a future examination to be made as set forth in the succeeding section, and it shall furthermore be the duty of the said boards, to cause two copies of such lists, duly signed and certified by the members of such board, to be made, one of which the respective boards aforesaid, shall return forthwith to the office of the clerk of the District Court of New Orleans, and another to the Board of Aldermen of the said city of New Orleans, to be lodged in the office of the said clerks, and with the clerks or secretary of the said board, and to be kept filed and carefully preserved.

SEC. 9. Be it further enacted, &c., That if any person unknown to the respective Boards aforesaid, should be recognized as a voter, or the qualifications of any person claiming to be recognized as a legal voter, should be challenged, the name of such person should be placed on the list of voters; or should the name of any person whomsoever be rejected therefrom, any person or persons who may desire to have the matter inquired into, shall have the right at any time before the Board, which rendered the decision appealed from, is dissolved, to have the same referred to to any court of competent jurisdiction; which Court shall, as soon as may be, proceed by preference to examine into the decision of the Board in the premises, and render its opinion and decree therein, with the utmost promptitude and dispatch, with due regard to the merits of the question submitted; and the judgment of the Court when rendered, subject to the right of appeal, as may be provided by law, shall be the rule by which the commissioners of election shall be governed in the matter; and the lists returned to the Commissioners shall be considered, in that respect, as amended.

SEC. 10. Be it further enacted, &c., That the Board of Aldermen of the aforesaid city of New Orleans shall, within ——— days after the lists of voters are returned to such body, make out, or cause to be made out, a correct alphabetical list of all the voters returned by the several Boards for the examination of the qualification of voters, to the Board of Aldermen aforesaid, with the notes and remarks of the said Boards accompanying such lists; and which alphabetical list must be kept and preserved by the said Board of Aldermen; and it shall also be the duty of said Board of Aldermen to furnish the commissioner of election for each election precinct, as often as an election shall be held in any of the precincts of such city, and at the time of the opening of the polls, a certified copy of the alphabetical lists hereinabove required to be made; furthermore, to deposit a certified copy of such alphabetical lists in the office of the clerk to which the Board for examination of the qualifications of voters have returned their lists, as required in section eight of this act; and when the Board of Aldermen of the said city of New Orleans shall have so deposited in the office of the clerk aforesaid such alphabetical list, it shall not be added to, nor the name of any person stricken therefrom, unless by order of the Court, hereinabove provided for; and no person shall, during one year from the time the several Boards for examination of the qualifications of voters commence their sitting, be allowed to vote at any election whatever, unless the commissioners of election be satisfied of the identity of the person offering to vote and find his name returned on the alphabetical list above referred to.

SEC. 11. Be it further enacted, &c, That if any of the members of the Board of Aldermen of the city of New Orleans, or any of the several persons mentioned in this act, and who are charged therein with certain duties, shall wilfully neglect or refuse to perform any of the duties required as aforesaid, shall wilfully authorise or permit anything to be done in opposition to the true meaning and intent of this act, the said members of the said Board and all other persons whomsoever herein above referred to, shall severally, for each offence, forfeit a sum not less than ——— dollars, nor exceeding five hundred dollars—one-half thereof for the benefit of the State, and the other for the benefit of the informer, and, moreover, be condemned to pay the costs of prosecution; and the party offending shall also suffer imprisonment in the parish jail for a period not exceeding nor less than thirty days.

SEC 12 Be it further enacted, &c., That the several members of the Board of Examination shall, in consideration of the services contemplated by this act, receive the following compensation, to be paid out of the Treasury of the aforesaid city of New Orleans.

Mr. Palfrey—I move to strike out from the first section of the bill the words "second Monday of December," and insert "first Monday of June." My object in offering this amendment is to give time to the Board to prepare their lists for the election in November next.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. Palfrey moved an amendment to the second section, providing for the meeting of the Board on the second Monday of October, instead of the second Monday of January. Adopted.

The bill passed to its second reading.

Mr. Hodge—I move to dispense with the rules and take the bill upon its third reading.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. Derbes—I am forced to vote for the bill, because the Constitution declares that it must be passed; not because I approve of it. I am convinced that it will deprive a large number of voters in New Orleans of the right of suffrage.

Mr. Lacey—I cannot vote for the bill now. I think the article in the Constitution was intended to guard against frauds between the time of registry and the time of election. The bill as amended cannot effect this. The time is too short—eight or nine months would be required.

Mr. Palfrey—The gentleman ought to have stated his objections when the amendments were before the Senate. He might then have induced the mover to withdraw them.

Mr. Mouton—I do not approve all the features of this bill, but as an article of the Constitution makes it imperative on us to pass something on the subject, and as no substitute is offered, I feel constrained to vote for it.

The bill passed.

Mr. Todd called up the bill for the improvement of Red River.

Mr. King—Why, sir, the bars are the only things that keep the water in the river. All the dredge boats in the world could not do that.

Mr Hodge—The gentleman is such an admirer of science that he ought to leave the Senate and devote himself to it. He may sneer at the bill, but I can tell him that it was drafted by one of the most distinguished and scientific men in the State—a gentleman who will probably be one of our State Engineers. I have observed in the Senate frequent sneers at North Louisiana when anything is proposed for the benefit of that section. We ask but little. We think this bill will benefit us, and we are willing to take the risk.

Mr. King—The gentleman has adopted a peculiar line of argument. He has mistaken personality for reason. I do admire science; and though I do not pretend to be profoundly versed, I think I can understand some of its principles. And, sir, if any feeling of miserable sectional jealousy, to which the gentleman has alluded, ever crossed my breast, I am ignorant of it. I wish to do full and equal justice to all sections of the State. I have the interest of the whole at heart. In respect to this bill I will say that I think it would be injurious to remove all the sand bars in Red River and the Ouachita. The system has been tested. In high water these bars are not useful, because then there is water enough. In low water when there is little, they keep it in Virginia tried this system without success in the Kanawha. She spent a million dollars in the undertaking without avail. We ought to learn something by experience. I say again that all the dredge boats in the world could not do what is proposed by the bill. I do not pretend to be a luminary of science; but I think science points to the truth of what I say.

Mr. Todd—I disagree with the gentleman. It is the first time I have heard that removing bars would result in an impediment to navigation. In the Ouachita there are but few bad bars, and they, being removed, would make it navigable from one end to the other. At all events we wish to try it.

Mr. Hodge—I have a few words more to say. Men of science frequently differ so much on these subjects as to leave the world in the dark. Mr. DeRussy spoke to me on this subject and approved the bill. He is a man of science. I believe the bill is also approved by the State Engineer. He certainly ought to be good authority, as the gentleman has complimented him highly on this floor. I am certain that Col. DeRussy expressed approval of the bill, and the gentleman cannot say that he is not a man of ability and science. I believe the State Engineer said the plan was practicable, and that Major Ranney said the same. It is not liable to the objections urged by the gentleman.

And let me say to the gentleman that if I spoke tartly, I could not help it. I do not wish to detract from his scientific reputation, acquired by his management of such subjects while here. But to return to the bill. I doubt whether the gentleman can tell what causes the bars in the Red and Ouachita rivers. They are produced by trees falling in, by which the water is turned off. From Shreveport to Alexandria, say 400 miles, there are many such obstructions. I have heard persons say that removing the falls at Alexandria would let the water run out, just as if that could affect the river to its source. The gentleman, however, seems to sustain that view. I have common sense enough to know that no such effect could be produced. If the bed of the river were an inclined plane creating a great velocity of current, the theory might be correct. But such is not the case. North Louisiana has sprung into existence as if by magic. Where was once the desert, now is to be seen the blooming garden. The gentleman has not known the difficulties and perils that beset the wanderer in the twilight of civilization, or he would not be so backward in supporting this bill.

I say again that North Louisiana is a new country; it is enterprising and prosperous; but in low water it is cut off from communication with the rest of the world. The consequence is, that in such seasons prices rise to a ruinous point. Flour, for instance, brings $15 a bl., while people in the city can get it for $5. The inhabitants ask to be relieved from this state of things. They ask that those bars which obstruct our navigation be removed, and facilities for commercial intercourse given to them. This bill is intended to effect that object. I hope the Senate will view it favorably.

Mr. Kenner. I do not want to take part in a scientific discussion, as it is well known that I am not a scientific man. I would ask the gentleman what science is? He does not answer. I am forced, therefore, to draw an unfavorable conclusion, and to take for granted that he does not know what science means. It is an easy matter, when one cannot answer a question, to stand on his dignity; but if he had been able, he would have answered. Now, what are we asked to do by this bill?

We are simply asked to give the use of one of our boats, for a certain purpose, which will not take a dollar from the treasury. The boat is merely to stir up the sand and let the current carry it away. This will give a free channel and open navigation. If our boats were not employed doing this in Red River, they would be doing it somewhere else. If we cannot do it all in a year, let us begin at the mouth and do as much as we can. The bars in Red River are getting to be a serious obstruction. They ought to be removed so as to give the people in that section the requisite facilities of communication. The best informed men, though probably not so scientific as the gentleman, say that the way to improve the navigation of the river, is by removing obstructions; by stirring up the sand and letting the current carry it off. The boat may be detained some time; probably during all the low water; but what does that amount to? As so little is asked, as no additional expense would be incurred, I think we ought to pass the bill.

Mr. King—It is not expense to which I object; but to the employment of our force in an impracticable enterprise; without surveys and without the opinion of proper persons. Now, as to the unfortunate use which has been made of the word science, I did not use it. The gentleman from Caddo first brought it up. I do not pretend to be a scientific man; but I do profess to be an admirer of science. I do not attempt to ornitiate vulgar prejudices by ridiculing science, of men of science. I cannot stoop so low as that. I should not be surprised if some one were to introduce a bill making it an indictable offence to use the word science in these halls.

Mr. Boatner—The objections of the gentleman are founded on a misapprehension as to the character of these streams. Science is a very good thing; but it sometimes comes into opposition with practical knowledge. Then the one must yield and the other prevail. I know the Ouachita river well. I have travelled it in skiffs and steamboats. There are only three bars to Monroe and removing them will not have the effect the gentleman fears. I hope the bill will pass. The gentleman from Caddo has justly depicted the inconvenience to which we are subjected during low water, and the enormous price we have to pay for necessary articles of consumption. I say, again, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objections and let the bill pass.

The bill passed.

THURSDAY, April 28, 1853.

The Revenue bill was taken up.

Mr. Nicholls called for the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill. He wished to vote against it.

The bill for the relief of the securities of William K. Stiles, again came up.

Mr. Nicholls. I object to the bill on principle.—These gentlemen were securities, and ought to be bound There would be no use of security at all, if at every session of the Legislature we step in and release the sureties. We might as well repeal all our security laws.

Mr. McCay. As I said before, the bill does not propose to do away with any security. That will remain just as perfect as at present. But the circumstances of the case seem to call on the Legislature to grant this favor. These gentlemen were security to the amount of $23,000 on the tax collector's bond. Under the law of 1848, the Auditor had authority to issue execution immediately against the sureties, without giving any opportunity for defence. The law required the tax collector to make a return within the first five days of every month, in default of which, execution was issued. The sureties got out an execution on the ground that the law was unconstitutional. They had previously notified the Auditor to make Stiles comply with the provisions of the law. The District Court decided in their favor, and made the injunction perpetual. The State appealed. The Attorney General frequently declared that he had no hope of obtaining a judgment. Nevertheless, one summer, in the month of June, the case was taken up and decided against the sureties.

Now, what is the object of the bill? It is to quash the execution of the Auditor, and let the case go to trial in such a way as to permit the sureties to show their defence. Does this involve a loss to the State? Not at all, because the mortgage on the land remains The mortgage resulting from the record of the bond is still in full force. We only want to give the sureties an opportunity to show their defence.

There is still another feature of this case. It is on record that the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to examine the question of fact. The contest seems to have been in regard to the power and right of the Auditor to issue execution. The facts show that the Auditor was notified in writing, and requested to exact the return which the law required within the first five days of every month. If this had been done, the defalcation would have been very small. If the liabilities of the sureties have been increased through the neglect of the Auditor, they ought to have an opportunity of showing what defence they have now, if they be not entirely released. I cannot think that the Senate will take advantage of a technicality in order to bind these parties. The security, by a technicality, might get an advantage; but surely a sovereign State should be above it. I, as an individual, might do it; but as a Senator, I cannot.—Individuals may plead prescription; we do not.

Take the case of a negro who had been imprisoned 20 years ago—and yet we granted relief. I ask you not in this case to take advantage of that fiction of law which says that an attorney must be in court, because his name is on the calendar. We may say that, in law, his absence was the fault of the sureties; but in fact, the attorney alone was to blame. In strict law, I admit that the State has a judgment; but the question is whether we ought to hold on to it because we have it?

Mr. Hodge—As I was a member of the special committee to which this bill was referred, and differed with the majority, I think it is my duty to state my reasons. I was in hopes that I should be able to present the decision of the Supreme Court, but as I am not, I will content myself with briefly stating the grounds. I read the decision a few days since in order to guide my course on this bill. It appears that in 1847 this person, W. K. Stiles, was appointed a Tax Collector and gave this bond. Under an act of 1847, the Auditor had the right on ascertaining, by striking a balance in his office, that any officer was a defaulter, to issue execution against such defaulting officer and his securities. It seems that Stiles was slow in making his returns. The Auditor issued execution. Nulla bona was returned. Execution was then issued against the sureties. They took out an injunction. So far as I recollect, the injunction was not opposed at the moment, because the execution had not been issued in time. The District Judge decided in favor of the sureties on the ground that the execution should have been issued against them and the Collector at the same time. The gentleman should not have spoken so much of technicalities when the sureties themselves escaped by means of a technicality. The District Judge spoke of the extraordinary and tremendous power which this law vested in the Auditor and expressed some doubt about its constitutionality. But, nevertheless, he decided the case on the technical point. From reading the decision of the Supreme Court, I have no dobut that full justice has been done. The decision is very long; but it seems to me that, on the facts, it is sufficient to satisfy the Senate that if there is any justice in the claims of the sureties, the Court would have decided in their favor. The opinion was delivered by Judge Preston, who was a kind-hearted man. He reviews at length the position of the District Judge and shows that it is untenable.

Mr. McCay—The gentleman will find that no counsel for the sureties appeared.

Mr. Hodge—The opinion does not state that the case was argued in Court, as the gentleman says. I have no doubt it was not. But, it appears to me it had been argued by brief. But I should vote against the bill if the Attorney had never said a word. It is not the duty of the State to furnish Attorneys to parties whom it is trying to make responsible.

I am sorry these gentlemen are on the bond; but I know the law, and I know the Auditor had power to do as he did. Now, they ask to be relieved from the operation of the law of 1847. That it was an extraordinary law I do not deny. The Collector was a defaulter. The only defence the securities set up was that the Auditor did not issue the execution in time. We have the opinion of the Supreme Court that he was not found to issue it at the same time as the execution against the Collector. That very question was decided by the Supreme Court

Mr. King—Suppose everything that has been said in regard to the legal liability of these gentlemen to be proven; shall we, like Shylock, exact the last penalty of the bond? Even if the law be as stated—though the parties do say that their rights were not secured before the Supreme Court, shall we now act the part of Shylock, and demand the last drop of blood? The sum is very large. It is $34,000, an amount the loss of which might bring desolation into many a family.

If there had been the slightest suspicion that these securities connived at, or benefited by the defalcation, then I would say go on. But from their high character, from the fact, that, like good citizens, they warned the Auditor of the danger, when that functionary slept on his post, no such suspicion can be entertained for a moment. This fact ought to have great weight. Take for granted the legal objections urged; yet when the securities come forward and ask for a very simple measure of relief, not for a discharge, but simply that the case be tried before a court of justice, how can we, in justice, refuse? This is not without precedent. We have, on several occasions, released the sureties of persons accused of serious crimes. It is within my personal knowledge that this man, Stiles, suffered a long imprisonment. Shall we now persecute innocent parties who had nothing to do with the crime? I remember a case bearing on this point When Morgan was Collector of the port of New Orleans, he became a defaulter to the amount of $100,000. The Government was satisfied that there was no evil intention on the part of the securities, and therefore granted them relief. This appears to be a good precedent. It is true the sum in this case is large; but that is only an additional reason why relief should be granted.

After a few more remarks the bill finally passed.

The bill restricting the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in civil cases to questions of law, only was taken up.

Mr. Hodge—This bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and underwent a thorough examination. It was drawn up under the advice of an eminent lawyer, who has recently been elected to the Supreme Bench. I can safely say that nine-tenths of the bar of Louisiana are in favor of it. The principle of the bill was argued in the Convention, and failed being incorporated into the Constitution by only a small majority. It was thought better to leave the power discretionary with the Legislature. One objection to the present system is that it is found difficult for the judges to make themselves acquainted with the facts so as to decide with that certainty which is desirable. It is the opinion of every jurist in the State that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court should be restricted to cases of law, and that the facts should be confined to juries. Their judgment, on the facts, should be final. While in civil cases, the Supreme Court is invested with the extraordinary power of reversing the verdict of juries, yet that power is denied to it in criminal cases. If it be better to give to the Supreme Court the power of revising questions of fact, and if it be true that juries are not to be trusted in civil cases, why should they be trusted in criminal cases? If it be important that the Supreme Court should have this power where the rights of property are concerned, should it not have it also where the life and liberty of the citizen are involved? No one can doubt that juries are more competent to decide on questions of fact. They see the witnesses; they observe his manner, and those indications from which inferences can be drawn. When the testimony is reduced to writing by the clerk, these safeguards, the Judges of the Supreme Court, have no opportunity of seeing the witnesses, and of observing his manner, which is, in many cases, an index to his credibility.

If we give to the Supreme Court the right of judging of questions of fact, we virtually do away with the trial by jury, because the testimony in writing would not be weighed with that certainty which attendant circumstances afford to a jury. In addition to this, the present system entails a heavy expense on parties litigant. There is almost always a large amount of irrelevant testimony which must all be taken down, and when a transcript is made, large fees are charged. If compelled to take down so much, the clerk must wait for some time before he can complete the task, and consequently much time is consumed. Not unfrequently, the Court is compelled to remain in session nine times as long as it would otherwise be. The bill is a good bill, it has undergone the scrutiny of able lawyers. If it do not work well, if it prove to be impracticable after a fair trial, it will be an easy matter to repeal it. I hope the Senate will pass it. It will save time and expense, and tend to make our decisions uniform, and that they will never be, as long as the Supreme Court has power to decide on questions of fact. It is a reflection on our juries to say that they are so incompetent, or so prejudiced, as not to be able to decide questions of fact properly.

Mr. Kittridge—I hope the bill will not pass. It would render it impossible in my section to get a decision. The case would come up fifty times, and the parties would incur more costs by the sending of these cases backwards and forwards than they are subjected to by the present system.

Mr. Hodge—Does the gentleman mean to say that the citizens in his section are so prejudiced as to be incompetent to render a verdict?

Mr. Short—I agree with the gentleman from Caddo that it is absolutely necessary to make some change in the law of Louisiana in this respect. I have myself seen some of the hardships resulting from the setting aside of the verdicts of juries in questions of fact. If the Supreme Court had the same lights before it there would be no difference. The Judges are more in the habit of giving legal opinions, and undoubtedly, have clearer notions of law, and therefore they might decide a case better. But the value of testimony frequently depends on the manner of a witness in giving it. If it were possible to file the witness on the record, or to furnish to the Supreme Court a copy of his countenance, with all its varying shades of expression, the Court would have the same lights as the jury But the testimony is all written out, and one part in writing is worth as much as another. The testimony of a bad witness can thus produce as strong an impression as the testimony of an honest witness with an honest countenance. Another argument in favor of the bill, is the time and expense it will enable us to gain. I shall support the bill.

Mr. Nicholls. I am opposed to the bill. Its adoption would amount almost to a denial of justice. It must be remembered that our whole system is different from that of the other States. The issues are so blended with each other, that it is almost impossible to separate them. It is almost impossible for justice to be done in civil cases before a jury. My experience leads me to the belief that if this bill pass, in many sections the costs will be augmented, and no good effect produced.

Mr. Kenner. I desire to mention one fact. In the Convention, this question was discussed with ability. Any gentleman who doubts, has only to read the report of the Judiciary Committee, of which Randal Hunt was chairman, and Messrs. Roselius, Richardson, &c., members. Every argument advanced by the gentleman, was laid before the Convention with a force and clearness which it is not disrespectful in me to say, was far superior to anything that has been said here, because time was taken to consider the question. It was not brought up at the end of the session, when members were anxious to get home. On the contrary, it was discussed when there was time for mature reflection.

Mr. Hodge. Did not the committee report in favor of the proposition?

Mr. Kenner. I can say that the report of Mr. Hunt passed unanimously, as offered. There may have been a minority report, but I recollect nothing of it. I merely state these facts to show that the subject has been discussed; and if I make no argument against it now, it is not because I am unwilling to detain the Senate; not because good arguments do not exist.

The bill was laid indefinitely on the table.

MESSAGES TO THE HOUSE.

The special messenger of the Senate informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the bills entitled

An act to refund to Joseph Walker a sum of money in the Treasury due to him.

An act to emancipate Joseph Ard and John F. Ard, minors, of the Parish of Washington.

An act to authorize and direct the State Engineer to clear from the channel of Red River and Ouachita River such sand-bars as obstruct their navigation.

An act to authorize Asahel Curtis to construct a turnpike road from Point Pleasant to Boeuff river.

An act granting certain powers to the Mayor of the city of Baton Rouge.

An act to provide for the recording brands, marks of cattle and other animals.

other lands to protect them from inundation; approved 18th March, 1852.

And concurred in with amendments to

An act to provide for the support of the Government of the State.

And that the Senate had concurred in the following bills:

An act to authorize the Auditor and Treasurer of the State to place certain school moneys to the credit of the parishes which are entitled to the same.

An act to regulate the salary and contingent expenses of the State Engineer.

An act relative to the safe keeping and preservation of the arms of the State in the public arsenals of New Orleans.

And he requested the concurrence of the House to the following bills:

An act making compensation to J. N. Carrigan, State Superintendent of Public Education.

An act for the relief of the securities of William K. Stiles.

An act relative to public advertisements.

And Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Enrollments, having reported the following bills of the House as being correctly enrolled, which the special messenger immediately reported to the House as signed by the President of the Senate:

An act to regulate and define the duties of Parish Treasurer.

An act supplementary to an act to divide the State into judicial districts.

An act for the relief of Wm. Long.

An act to incorporate the town of Mount Lebanon.

An act concerning the city of New Orleans—title amended so as to read,

An act to extend the laws of the city of New Orleans over her present limits.

An act to emancipate Robert Scott Pyburn, of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act relative to the election of clerks of the District Courts for the parish and city of New Orleans.

An act to amend an act entitled an act to increase the number of jurors in the parishes of St. Bernard and Plaquemines from forty-eight to seventy—approved March 11, 1852.

An act to emancipate William, Desdemona and Elizabeth Robertson, children of George Robertson, f. m. c., of the parish of East Baton Rouge.

An act to provide for the sale of the undivided half of a tract of land in the parish of St. Landry, claimed by the State.

An act for the relief of B. L. Hodge, of the parish of Caddo.

Mr. Derbes, from the Committee on Enrollments, having reported the following bills as being correctly enrolled, the special messenger reported them to the House, and requested the signature of the speaker:

An act giving the police juries jurisdiction over wards, levees, roads and other public works.

An act for the improvement of the navigation of bayou Bartholomew.

An act to amend the act entitled an act to incorporate the city of Jefferson—approved March 9th, 1850, and

An act to incorporate the city of Jefferson—approved March 11, 1852.

An act to regulate the holding of District Courts.

An act to incorporate the Grosse Tete and Baton Rouge Plank Road Company.

And he informed the House that the Senate had concurred in the following bill:

An act to amend an act entitled an act providing for the organization of corporations in this State—approved 30th April, 1847.

The following communication from the Governor was received and read:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,

BATON ROUGE, April 28, 1853.

To the Hon. the Senate of Louisiana:

I hereby transmit to you a copy of the letter of resignation of Mr. Pierre Soulé as Senator in Congress from the State of Louisiana.

Very respectfully, yours, &c.,

(Signed) P. O. HEBERT,

Governor of the State of Louisiana.

[COPY.]

WASHINGTON, April 11, 1853.

His Excellency P. O. Hebert,

Governor of the State of Louisiana:

SIR: Having this day accepted the appointment conferred on me by the President of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Court of Spain, it becomes my duty to resign, and I now resign in your hands, the seat which Louisiana assigned me in the National Senate.

Deeply impressed with the obligations I am under to my beloved State for all of political importance I ever enjoyed, I withdraw from her service with unaffected regret, and ask leave to tender her, through you, my grateful acknowledgements for the favors she has bestowed on me, and my ardent wishes for her honor, prosperity and greatness.

With profound respect, your obedient servant,

(Signed) PIERRE SOULE.

JOINT SESSION.

The special messenger from the House informed the Senate that the House was now ready to receive the Senate in their hall for the purpose of going into an election for United States Senator.

The Senate proceeded to the hall of the House of Representatives.

The roll having been called, there appeared to be present seventy-eight members of the House of Representatives, and the following Senators answered to their names:

W W Farmer, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate; Boatner M, Burthe V, Clifton C W, Derbes A, Dupré A, Evans J R, Griffin W E, Hodge B L, Camp P H, Kenner D F, Kittridge E F, King W W, Lacoste C, Lauve N, Lacey G S, Lewis J L, Martin R C, McCay Th, Millard E M, Mouton C H, Neal Michel, Nicholas T C, Palfrey W T, Patterson W, Rivers D L, Short H, Slack C A, Taylor W R, Theriot A—29 Senators.

Mr. Marks nominated Hon. John Slidell, and

Mr. Burthe nominated Hon. T. G. Hunt as candidates for Senator of the United States Senate to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Hon. Pierre Soulé.

On counting out the votes given on joint ballot, the Hon. John Slidell received 70 votes; Hon T. G. Hunt received 37 votes.

The President of the Senate proclaimed the election of the Hon. John Slidell as Senator of the United States Senate for the unexpired term of the Hon. Pierre Soulé, resigned.

Mr. Kenner called up the following resolution:

Resolved, That the sum of five hundred dollars be paid to J. B. Walton, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as compensation for his services in acting as Secretary at the opening session of the Senate. And that the sum of three hundred dollars, out of the contingent fund of the Senate be paid to Jules Cæsard, for acting as Assistant Secretary at the same time.

In reply to a question as to what were the services for which remuneration was asked—

Mr. Kenner said:

I cannot specify the particular services, but I know that it is the custom to grant a certain sum to officers of the Senate who have faithfully performed their duties. I can testify to the faithfulness with which they were performed in this instance, and I do not feel inclined to break the precedent.

Mr Mouton. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this claim in particular, but I am determined not to sanction any claim for extra compensation. It may be the custom, but it is not a good one. Our salaries are fixed; they are known to the person when he takes the place. The argument that the duties of the office have been faithfully performed, is not a tenable one. Louisiana expects, as a matter of justice, that all her officers will be good and faithful. She appoints her officers with that understanding. It is not a good reason for giving extra compensation that an officer has done his duty; he must have performed extra labor. But the salary being fixed by law, and he knowing its amount at the time he accepts the office, he cannot, in justice, make a claim for any thing more These arguments are not intended to apply specially to the gentleman for whose benefit the resolution is introduced; they apply to all claims of the same character They are all wrong in principle. We might just as well vote extra compensation to our District Attorneys and Judges, because they have been good attorneys and judges. I hear the gentleman from Caddo ask how I voted on the bill increasing the salary of the Attorney General? That, sir, is not a parallel case; the principle is very different. If I did vote for the bill, it was not a vote in favor of extra compensation; it was not because the Attorney General had not performed his duties faithfully and well, but because extra labor had been imposed on him.

Yesterday a bill to increase the salary of the Surveyor General was introduced. I opposed it, because I believed it wrong to select particular officers for this thing; it might give cause of complaint to other officers and their friends, to whom a like favor has not been extended. I am in favor of a general bill to increase the salaries of all officers who are not paid enough.

Mr. Kenner. The gentleman lays great stress on extra compensation. This resolution says nothing about extra compensation. It is a remuneration for coming here and opening the Senate,

Mr. Hodge. There is another reason why the gentleman should receive this compensation. By the general appropriation bill of the last session, $2,000 was appropriated to pay his salary. This, of course, he lost. He came up here to open the session, lost his time, and interfered with his business arrangements.

After a few more remarks, the resolution was adopted.

A resolution was introduced by Mr. Millard, granting $500 extra pay to A. Levison, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. Kenner moved to insert $700 for Horatio Davis, which amendment was accepted.

Mr. Mouton. I regret that I am compelled to oppose this resolution; but if we give this to these officers, we shall have to give something to the other officers; we shall have to give extra pay to our clerks, translators, doorkeeper, sergeant-at-arms, &c. Are they not good and faithful officers? Why should they not also be remunerated? This thing would be an entering-wedge for giving away the money of the State with a liberal hand. I denounce this whole doctrine of extra compensation. If the salaries we pay are too small, let us increase them at the time, or for the future. We expect all servants of the State to do their duty faithfully; and this cannot, certainly, be urged as a just reason why they should receive extra pay. Look at the report of the last State Treasurer—a gentleman who stands high in his party; see what he says; how he denounces the practice. I myself have heard it denounced. I care not whether my course be approved or not, so long as I think I am right. I call for the yeas and nays, as I want to record my vote against the resolution, though the gentlemen are my own political friends.

After some further debate, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. Lewis called up the bill to increase the salary of the Clerk of the First District Court.

Mr. McCay—I will explain the nature and object of this bill. The salary of the clerk of this court has hitherto been $1500 a year. The court had concurrent jurisdiction with the others in civil cases. The fees arising from these cases added to the $1500, supported the clerk and the two deputies, whose services are absolutely necessary.—In addition to these he has to employ a minute clerk and a subpœna clerk. This Legislature has taken away the civil jurisdiction of the First District Court, consequently there are three individuals, the clerk and his two deputies, to be supported on $1500 a-year.—We took away the civil jurisdiction of the court for the reason that we thought it had as much as it could attend to. We ought to give, at least, $4000; $2500 for the clerk and $750 for each of his deputies. This would be a very moderate payment. If we do not give it, we shall destroy the efficiency of the court. I was opposed to withdrawing the civil jurisdiction from that court, because I knew the State would have to pay so much the more. I agree with Judge Larue, whose letter I have here, that no competent man can be found to do the duties of this office for the $1500 heretofore given. We must allow additional compensation.

Mr Mouton—I intend to vote against this bill.—When the Judiciary bill was first introduced New Orleans asked an additional court. That has been granted. She asked a salary of $3500 for her Judges. That too was given. When the bill for organizing the courts in the different parishes came up, I advocated $3000 for the salary of the judges. It was refused and the salaries cut down to $2500. Now a clerk in New Orleans asks $4000 a-year. A Clerk of Court! Will the Legislature give to a clerk in the city $4000 when it refused $3000 to the judges in the country? I voted against taking away the civil jurisdiction of the First District Court, because, I was informed, it could do the work. Gentlemen from Orleans differed on the subject. Had they been unanimous, they would have retained the civil jurisdiction which would have given the clerk the necessary time. In other parishes the clerks are supported by their respective parishes.

Mr. Derbes—The position I took was this: I was in favor of organizing the City Courts to suit the city members, and I went with the majority of the country members on the country Judiciary bill. I was against taking its civil jurisdiction from the 1st Disirict Court. In the Senate the city delegation was unanimous against it. The effect of not passing this bill will be, virtually to shut up the court. The clerk must have deputies, and if they receive a thousand dollars a-year what will remain for the clerk. You cannot get a competent man for less than $2000, and it is sound policy to pay it, besides giving sufficient for the employee. If you do not you will leave the court without a clerk.

Mr. McCay—If I do not mistake a bill passed this session giving to the parishes the fines and forfeitures for violations of the criminal law.

Mr. Kenner—I would ask the gentleman if the clerk does not get fees in criminal prosecutions.—Great stress has been laid on the fact that we have taken away the fees in civil cases; but does not the clerk get fees in criminal matters? I have been told that they amount to $4000 per annum.

Mr. Lewis—I was sheriff for six years, and as such was entitled to the fees in criminal cases, and I can assure the Senate that they did not amount to $20 a month.

Mr. Kenner—I know the kind-hearted nature of the gentleman, and that he would rather let a criminal off than press him for the fees. If the bill is so amended as to make the city pay this clerk in the same way as Ascension pays hers, I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. Hodge—As we have given to the parishes the fines and forfeitures in criminal cases, for this purpose, it is only just they should be so applied as to serve the purpose for which the donation was made.

Mr. Derbes—It is true that the country parishes pay their clerk, but their courts have both criminal and civil jurisdiction; if it were not for that they could not do it.

Mr. Kenner—The grounds I take are these. The Judge of the First District Court came here through his friends, and stated that he had enough to do; that for several days in the week he was necessarily idle. He wanted to be employed, and for that reason desired to retain his civil jurisdiction. We did not give him this civil jurisdiction, and now we are asked to give $4000 a year to a Court which already has not enough to do.

Mr. Derbes—I have always been against taking the civil jurisdiction away. It is true the fines and forfeitures in criminal cases have been given to the parishes; but who says they will amount to enough? Who says that the city ought to pay for State cases? Why should she be saddled with this expense?

Mr. Lewis—I can safely say that the fees in criminal cases will not amount to a hundred dollars a month.

Mr. Kenner—That is because they are not collected. But if we compel the city to pay this Clerk out of her own treasury, we shall not see any more the spectacle of picking up the first worthless fellow as straw-bail, which is now so common.

The bill finally passed with an amendment.

The bill from the House to divide the State into Congressional Districts, was called up.

Digitized by Google

The Chair decided that as the bill was not in its order, a vote of two-thirds was required to take it up.

On motion the Senate went into executive session.

The doors being opened, the bill was again called up, and the President repeated his decision.

Mr McCay—I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Kenner—Is this the course to be adopted? The gentleman appeals, and why? The President has decided in accordance with the spirit and letter of the 60th rule. The gentleman now proposes to appeal because he knows he has a majority, and can overrule the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Cay—It is the object of the majority to proceed with legislation. The rules are made for the protection of legislation. When they are made use of to obstruct legislation, and to interfere with the rights of the majority, we have a right to suspend them.

Mr. Martin—The gentleman seems to think ours a factious opposition, and is reading us a lecture about it. He should have thought of all that when he took refuge in a very disagreeable place, at a time when he could not stand up and defeat us, but took that method of doing it. The rules are made for the protection of the minority This proposition is an insult to you; (turning to the President.) A proper regard for your dignity should cause you to vacate that chair. I repeat that it is an outrage on you.

Mr. Nicholls—The question is plain and palpable. The majority know Sir, that your decision is right. Will they dare to say you have decided wrong, when they know you have decided right? There is independence enough in the Democratic party here to prevent the consummation of this outrage. I know some of them well, and I feel convinced they will never sanction it. I know there are some here who refused to break a quorum, and I do not think they will engage in these proceedings now.

Mr. Patterson—Yes; and as one who did not resort to that mesure, I ask you if you are willing to do now what you condemned then? You condemned members for obstructing legislation, and you are now attempting the same thing.

Mr. Nicholls—Our course may be factious, but it is within the rule; it is according to the rule laid down. We certainly shall never break a quorum, whatever may be the action of the majority.

Mr. Short—I have a few words to say on this subject. It appears to me that gentlemen are trifling with the public business. It is now about the close of the session, and they should not be found acting thus. They ought to be willing to meet the question in a manly way. If the bill is right let them go for it; if wrong, let them go against it. But why resort to measures of this kind in order to delay legislation. I appeal to senators to say whether this is a manly course; if it will sustain them before sensible people? Can they sustain themselves before their constituents, when they tell that they defeated this measure in such a way? I am willing to let the whole thing rest on principle. If the bill is wrong, defeat it; if right, it ought to be sustained. The motion of the Senator from New Orleans is right. Desperate diseases require desperate remedies; and if this requires it, I will go for it. Where the grounds of opposition are such as these, I would be willing to take them away; where, in despair, the enemy have recourse to poisoned arrows, I would make use of the same weapons. If they poison the waters they must expect to quaff them. I will throw back the same weapons that are directed against me. I have been disposed, from the beginning, to act honorably and straightforwardly in legislation. Those who resort to a course of this kind, in order to delay legislation, act in a manner unworthy of Louisianians. I have never impugned the motives of my fellow-democrats. I have acted with whigs when I thought them right. I appeal to the intelligent portion of that party to say whether they will persist in acting in this manner. I have observed, in politics, as in other departments of life, that "honesty is the best policy."

Mr. Kenner—I forgive the gentleman for that last sentence, "honesty is the best policy." I know that he acts generally in accordance with the dictates of good sense. I can answer for the whig party. We intend to defeat this bill, because it is honest policy to do so.

There is an old French maxim—"Who knows but one bell, hears but one sound." Gentlemen call out faction, faction, hoping to produce the impression that we are wrong, when they know that we are right. Now, what is the state of the case? Last year an apportionment law was passed by the Legislature. What do we see in it? We see the districts so divided, as to represent, as nearly as possible, the distinct interests of the State; the sugar, the cotton, the commercial and the grazing interests. We thought the districts ought to be homogenous in their character; so that, when a man rises in Congress from Louisiana, he can make a speech for his district. We gave a representative to Orleans. We made a sugar district, a cotton district, and, from necessity, a district combining the sugar, cotton and grazing interests. We divided them with reference, of course, to population, but not losing sight of the principle of giving every interest a representative. The democratic party came into power. It re-established the old districts. Every gentleman will understand me when I say that they divided the city of New Orleans, giving half to the sugar interest below.

Mr. Derbes—I rise to a point of order. Does the gentleman debate the point before the Senate?

Mr. Kenner—If I am not in order, I will stop. But I am satisfied the gentleman has too much honor to wish to prevent my discussing this question. If he is not willing to hear my argument the quicker the public know it, the better, and not talking for the sake of talking, or to kill time. I only wish to put myself and my party right before our constituents. As I was saying, the democratic measure cuts New Orleans in two, adding one portion to the sugar region below, and the other to Lafayette, and the sugar parishes above, thus losing sight of the great principle I have referred to, and making it necessary either for the commercial interest of New Orleans to swallow up the sugar interest, or the reserve. The bill passed. It entirely ignored members; in the rush for power the authors of the bill never thought of that part of the subject. The First Representative District would have a population of 65,000; the Second would have 120,000. See how they consulted numbers and interests; justice and equality. They say to the people in the First District, one of you is as good as two in the Second. It was intended as a ladder to help certain distinguished gentlemen to creep into Congress, regardless of anything like equality or justice. But even thus it was not bad enough for the lower House. In the old Fourth District, known as Morse's from the fact of that gentleman having represented it for six years, the people at last took an old man to represent them who was on the side of the laws and the Constitution. It was thought that he might get in again. What was to be done? Why, it was decided to take off St. Mary and St. Martin and add them, not to the lower District with 60,000 inhabitants, but to the upper District with 120,000. And, opposition to a measure like this is called factious. It is a bill of abominations sought to be defeated. We know the rules and how to interpret them; though the gentleman does rise in his place and with dignity, or indignation, call us factions. Thank God there is nothing factious in our conduct. I say to the whig party here, you are right. Stand to your position, and by the Eternal God, you cannot be condemned. Go home, tell your constituents what has happened, explain the position you took and they will approve your conduct. Stand firm, I repeat, for if you do not you are unworthy to be Senators of Louisiana. Stand firm; I tell you that you have right on your side; if you stand by your position you will be sustained. I will take my share of the responsibility.

Mr. Derbes—I voted for the resolution to adjourn to-morrow; but gentlemen did not tell us then it was their intention to oppose this bill. The gentleman says it is the intention of the majority to add St. Mary and St. Martin to the Second District. There is no one who is more violently opposed to that measure than I. The fact is this is, a factious oppsition

Mr. Martin. I would ask the gentleman if he did not leave the Senate and break a quorum on one occasion? That was making a more factious opposition than we can make by remaining in our seats.

Mr. Derbes. When the subject comes up for discussion, I will show the gentleman that I was right. I would do it again.

Mr. Kenner. I move to take up an important bill—the bill to count the votes for Judges of the Supreme Court.

The President. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. Kenner. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and shall proceed to advocate ——

The President. The merits of the bill are not before the Senate. The business now on hand is the point of order.

Mr. Kenner. I should like to know who can say what I am going to say, before I say it. Well, sir, according to rule 30 ——

Mr. Derbes. I should like to know if the gentleman is in order.

Mr. President. It is not in order to discuss the merits of the bill.

Mr. Kenner. I want to discuss its demerits. I want to show that the Chair is wrong. This bill provides that the Secretary of State, the Treasurer and Auditor shall proceed at a given time ——

Mr. Derbes. I am sorry, but I must call the gentleman to order. Till the Chair decides against me, I must insist on the point.

Mr. Kenner. The gentleman must make his point in writing; I do not understand what it is. Well, sir, as I was saying, according to the Constitution, the Secretary of State ——

Mr. Derbes. I call the gentleman to order again.

Mr. Kenner. I do not see how the gentleman can know what I am going to say. The moment the word 'Secretary of State' is out of my mouth, he calls me to order. Well, sir, the Secretary of State ——

Mr. Derbes. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. Martin. Let the gentleman state his point in writing.

Mr. Derbes. I do not know how I am compelled to state my point of order in writing, when I refer to the matter itself.

Mr. Hodge moved an adjournment. Lost.

Mr. Mouton. I shall to-morrow give notice that I shall introduce a resolution to repeal the resolution to adjourn to-morrow, and to fix the adjournment for Thursday, the 4th.

Mr. Martin. The gentleman is out of order. The Senator from Ascension has the floor.

Mr. Kenner. As I was proceeding to say, when I was called to order, Art. 66 of the Constitution ——

Mr. Derbes. I call the gentleman to order. Art. 86 has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. Kenner. I am sorry the gentleman does not understand me. I did not mention article 86—it was 66. Does not this show that he does not understand the question? He calls me to order, when he does not know what I have been saying. Where is the faction now? On what side is the factious conduct? As I was saying, when I was so grossly misunderstood by the gentleman from New Orleans. Art. 66 says: (Reads.)—Well, sir, this bill says ——

Mr. Derbes. I am constrained to call the gentleman to order again. He has appealed to Democrats not to vote against the decision of the Chair. Is his conduct any different now?

Mr. Kenner. I assure the gentleman that I cannot show how wrong the Chair is, unless I go a little—not much, perhaps—into the merits of the question. I like to appeal from a lower to a higher tribunal.—If the gentleman is not satisfied, I move to adjourn.

Mr. Short—That was the gentleman's last word, was it, "to adjourn?"

Mr. Kenner—I made a motion to adjourn with the intention of resuming the floor to-morrow. It is a courtesy usually extended to members when fatigued with an argument which they have not concluded.

The motion to adjourn was lost.

Mr. Derbes—I move the previous question.

Mr. Martin—I move to adjourn till half-past nine to-morrow, and call the yeas and nays on the motion. Lost.

Mr. Hodge—I move to adjourn till half-past eight.

Mr. Short—I rise to a point of order. When a motion is made to adjourn, and is lost, is another motion of the same kind in order, unless other business has intervened?

Mr. Martin—Where is the rule? Read the rule.

Mr. Short—The rule is founded on the highest rule on earth—the rule of common sense.

Mr. Martin—Common sense does not govern here. The rules govern.

Mr. Short—I have seen that common sense has not governed here, but I hope to see it begin soon.

The motion to adjourn was lost.

Mr. Hodge—If in order, I move to take up the revenue bill.

Mr. McCay—That bill has already passed the Senate and become a law.

Mr. Hodge—Well, then, the general appropriation bill. That is the one I meant.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Hodge—I move to adjourn. Lost.

Mr. Derbes—I give notice that to-morrow I shall introduce a resolution to rescind rule — of the Senate.

On motion, the Senate went into executive session.

The doors being opened, Mr. Hodge moved an adjournment. Lost.

Mr. Derbes—I move to proceed with the regular business; because, as long as the gentleman is in doubt, I shall consider it my duty to remain in my seat. The consequence will be, that about a hundred bills will be left behind and not enrolled at the adjournment.

Mr. Hodge—I move to take up the general appropriation bill. We are trying to fight off a certain bill; they are trying to pass it. There are other important bills. Let us pass them now. This will be no concession on either side.

Mr. Derbes—Well, I give notice to the Senate that we shall pass this bill.

Mr. Hodge—We shall see.

Mr. Martin—I move to take up the general appropriation bill.

Mr. Boatner—I would inquire whether there is any such bill on the Secretary's table.

The Secretary—The general appropriation bill is not here There is a bill for the relief of the Treasurer of the State.

Mr. Martin—Well, that is the bill I mean.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Derbes—I move to proceed with the regular business.

Mr. Kenner—Before proceeding further, I contend that I have a right to move the rejection of a bill which was read this morning, and I do——

The Chair—The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. Kenner—I appeal from the decision of the Chair. The 38th rule says: (reads rule.) I think I am fully entitled to make the motion, and I cannot, without referring to article 66 of the Constitution, tell the reason why I appeal. Art. 66, says——

Mr. Derbes—I call the gentleman to order. I call his attention to rule 12. I have read it already; but it seems I have not been understood. I may succeed better this time (reads.)

Mr. Kenner—I call the gentleman's attention to the rule which says that exceptionable words shall be taken down in writing.

Mr. Martin—I do not understand the point of order. I want it written down.

Mr. Short—I do not understand the point of order to be in regard to exceptionable words. I hope the Senator would not use such.

Mr. Nicholls—I move an adjournment till to-morrow at nine o'clock. Lost,

The appeal of Mr. Kenner from the decision of the Chair was lost.

Mr. Nicholls—I move to take up the bill for the relief of the Treasury of the State.

The President—I now give notice that I will put frivolous motions, or motions which have been already decided.

Mr. Martin—The motion is not frivolous; it is not intended to be disrespectful to the Chair. We have no such intention. The bill is of great importance and ought to be passed without delay.

The motion was lost.

The bill to define the boundaries of the cemeteries in Canal street, New Orleans, came up in order.

A motion was made to adjourn. Lost.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Martin moved to reject the bill.

Mr. Kenner moved to lay the motion on the table. Carried.

Mr. Martin—I ask a suspension of the rules, in order to take the bill on its 2d reading. I am in favor of it and wish to vote for it.

Mr. Kenner moved to lay the motion on the table. Carried.

Mr. Derbes—I move to take up the Congressional District bill, and call for the previous question.

Mr. Martin—I move an adjournment till 5 o'clock, in order to give the Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Reporter and other gentlemen attached to this body time to rest. Let us take that time to get our dinners and to rest, and then, if necessary, we can bring our beds here.

The motion was lost.

Mr. Derbes—I now insist on my motion, to take up the bill.

Mr. Kenner—I want to know the question—as a member of the Senate I have a right to know it

The President—The question is on the suspension of the rules.

Mr. Derbes—The Chair is mistaken. That was not my motion. I asked to take up the bill.

Mr. Kenner—I contend that the motion is not in order. We cannot take it up without a suspension of the rules.

The President—That is the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Short—I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Kenner—Well, I ask that the question be put in writing, in order that we may know what we are voting on; that the Senator moves to take up a bill out of its regular order, that the President decided a dispensation of the rules to be necessary; and that a Senator appealed from the decision of the Chair. I want to see these facts placed on the record.

The Secretary read the question.

Mr. Kenner. I insist that it be said that the gentleman moved to take up the bill out of its regular order. It is not in its regular order; consequently it requires a vote of two-thirds to take it up. I want to place the President right on the record.

Mr Derbes. I did not move to take it up out of its regular order. I simply moved to take up the bill.

Mr. Kenner. I move to lay the appeal on the table. I will state at once to the gentlemen on the opposite side, that if they are determined to do this thing—to overturn a decision so palpable correct, so plain that a child can construe it, they can only do it in one way. The gentleman moved to take up the bill out of its regular order. The President decided it could not be done without a suspension of the rules which requires a vote of two-thirds. No gentleman on that side of the House can say the decision was not correct. I defy any gentleman to get up in his seat and say it was not correct. Now, if you are determined to vote in opposition to your judgments, there is no hope for us! We must bend to the yoke. If you are determined to do it, if you wish only to gratify the ambition of two or three persons who desire to go to Congress, why then you will vote to reverse the decision of the Chair. I repeat, no gentleman can say that decision was not correct. Now, to what will this course lead? I appeal to the sober second thought. I appeal to those who think before acting; and I am proud to know there are some such. I am proud to know there are two or three on the other side who have some regard for the right. I appeal to them to exercise their judgment. If they are determined to do this thing, then the rights of the minority are gone—they are not longer worth protecting, and the quicker they leave this floor the better. I do not wish to break a quorum. I am willing to show my submission to law, but I protest against this high-handed measure.

Mr. Derbes. The gentleman is very solicitous for the inviolability of the rules; but he has several times to-day knowingly violated them. He has spoken out of order when the President reminded him of it, and has persisted in doing it even after being called to order.

Mr. Kenner. I take issue with the gentleman on a point of fact. I say, as a man of honor, that I did not do anything I knew to be out of order. I have endeavored to keep my party in order. I have endeavored to keep them within the rules, because I know the rules are the only panoply on which they can rely for protection against the aggressive spirit of the majority. I thought the President did me injustice when he decided I was out of order. I could have shown I was in order had I been allowed to proceed.

Mr. Short. When the gentleman said that no man of honor or justice would act as the majority acts, he uses but a slender argument.

Mr. Kenner. I did not say so. I said the majority appeared to act as if regardless of the dictates of honor and justice.

Mr. Short—I understood the gentleman so; if I was in error I am glad of it. I acknowledge the force of the rules as well as he does; but the rules are under the control of a majority. When they are perverted from their legitimate uses, the majority which made, has a right to suspend or rescind them. We have now but a short time before us; we have many bills to pass. We should meet each other in a friendly spirit, and, under the circumstances, this kind of warfare is surprising. When we consented to adjourn, we knew we could pass this bill, and the minority knew it.

Mr. Martin—I ask the gentleman if there was any understanding?

Mr. Derbes—Yes, there was an understanding.

Mr. Kenner—Does the gentleman say there was an understanding?

Mr. Short—I do not know.

Mr. Kenner—Does he not know there was no such understanding?

Mr Short—I do not say there was an understanding to pass every bill before the Senate, but when we consented to shorten the time of the session, we did not suppose it would have been used for delaying instead of expediting business. We thought each bill would have been taken up on its merits, and considered without reference to other bills, or to technicalities of rule. All the complaint we have to make is of this kind of opposition; that this kind of warfare should be resorted to. There is a certain maxim that there are exceptions to all rules. It is unlawful to take life; but when it is taken in self-defence the act becomes justifiable by the laws of God and man. If gentlemen resort to a savage warfare, even under the rules they must expect to be met in the same way. There are circumstances which can justify setting aside the rules, particularly where a course of this kind has been adopted, when the day of adjournment was fixed in a friendly spirit.

Mr. Hodge—I will correct the gentleman right here, I will inform him that there was no such understanding so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Kenner—I will tell what did take place. When we were in the House engaged in electing a United States Senator, the Speaker called to me by name, and asked me if we would pass a resolution in the Senate to adjourn on Saturday. I answered "I am a Whig, and may be suspected of some ulterior motive if I attempted to get it done." But I said distinctly I would tell my own political friends who, I had no doubt would vote for the resolution. That is all. If the gentleman says there was any understanding I say it is not so. If there was an understanding with others I know nothing of it; I never heard of it. If there is any trick, lay it at the right door, accuse the Speaker of the House, do not accuse me.

Mr. Short—I did not say there was a positive understanding. There was none as far as I am concerned. I only say that when we consented to the adjournment, we expected the bills yet to pass would be taken up on their merits, and not fought off by a recource to rules which would prevent any action being had.

Mr. Kenner—No, but the gentleman said "as far as I am concerned." Is not that a hint that there was an understanding with some one?

Mr. Short—No one, except he be gifted with superhuman faculties, can tell what takes place in another man's mind. The good book says, "judge not others lest ye be judged." I therefore do not undertake to say what passed in the minds of other members. I did not say—though I am sometimes unhappy in making myself understood—that, as far as I know, there was no understanding. But I supposed the period of adjournment had been fixed in a friendly spirit, and that there was a disposition to get through business, and that there would be no resort to such tactics as have been adopted this morning. That is what I meant. I do not think exception can be taken to that. I thought we were to get through in a friendly spirit; that local bills were to be tested by their merits, and political ones by the strength of parties. If you had the power, do you suppose I would call the yeas and nays twenty times, move to go into executive session when we had nothing to do, and to adjourn when we had business on hand! When I condemn such acts as these I hope it will not be said that I do it with unworthy motives — I have appeals to Senators to go home to their constituents, and they would be sustained. But if I know the people—if a man were to go home and say that he had made motions to go into executive session, to adjourn, &c., and called the yeas and nays on every question merely to waste time in order to defeat a bill, he would not be sustained. Do the people understand this kind of legislation? When they understand that a majority has instituted certain rules in order to accelerate business; that those very rules have been resorted to in order to defeat and prevent action, and that I broke through them as I would break through a cobweb. I am confident I shall be maintained in doing it. That is the reason I go for the appeal.

Mr. Nicholls—Do I understand the gentleman to say that the question is on a recision of the rule?—There is no such question. The gentleman knows the decision of the Chair is right. The question now before us is whether that decision is correct, and whether it shall be sustained.

Mr. Short—When there is a power in the Senate to rescind the rules it makes no difference whether they be rescinded, or whether the decision of the Chair be reversed.

Mr. Nicholls—I want to know whether the gentleman says the decision of the Chair is right or wrong.

Mr. Short—TheChair may be governed by the written rules, and I by the necessity of the case. There is certainly a power in the Senate to rescind the rules.

Mr. Derbes—I have to say a few words of explanation, as a gentleman and a Senator. When I stated that there was an agreement, and was interrupted in a not very parliamentory manner, I was going to say that it was not with the Senator, who has since so strenuously denied it, but with another, whom I told that, should we adjourn to-morrow we could not get through. He said there was plenty of time; that we could get through all our business. Is not this bill among our business?

If it be true that we can finish all, and this is among it, ought it not to be done? If gentlemen persist in their opposition, they will only induce a delay which will present many bills from being enrolled. Of these there are about one hundred and fifty. I ask, was it not the gentleman from Ascension himself, who said we could get through all? I make this explanation because it is due to myself. I have endeavored to be courteous to all Senators, and I hope I shall never be otherwise.

Mr. Martin. I had no intention of impugning the gentleman's word; I only deny that there was any understanding on my part.

Mr. Derbes. The gentleman's explanation is satisfactory.

Mr. Hodge. I shall endeavor to show the fallacy of the arguments of the gentleman from Carroll As he seems to have become so conscientious, and that no doubt may be thrown on our motives, I wish to shw that he is wrong on the question of propriety. I will show the argument to be fallacious, that what is wrong on the record may, by a combination of circumstances, be made right. And I wish him to understand that it is not my desire to do violence to any thing that, by tacit agreement, I might have engaged to support. It is my wish that the rules be sustained. They are the expressions of our will at the beginning of the session. I do not say that no man of honor or justice would act as the majority are acting—but I ask, can any Senator violate his compact and agreement without doing violence to honor and justice? The rules are an agreement which Senators have entered into with each other; they are, in fact, a compact. I would as soon have thought that violence would have been done to the Constitution of Louisiana, as to this solemn compact. It is not for one of my limited fancy to picture the results of this act—the evils for which it will be a precedent; but let me tell them it will end in making the will of the majority of the moment to govern, without regard to the rights of the minority. I will refer to the case of the Mechanics' and Traders' bank bill. The gentlemen made motions to adjourn; to go into executive session; they called for the reading of bills on their first reading; and they did all these things in order to delay and defeat a particular bill—though the gentleman thinks it so horrible to go home and tell these things to one's constituents! But we knew they were not violating the compact. So far, they were acting in accordance with rule.

We did not wish to break the stipulation we had entered into with the minority by the adoption of the rules We sat patiently under the infliction, although we felt more interested in that measure than the gentleman can possibly feel in this. We felt that it interested the people in the city and the country; that it affected the prosperity of the State, whereas this is only a political question, and affects only the interests of a party. I acknowledge this rule, that at the beginning of the session, we agreed that no bill should be taken up out of its order without a vote of two-thirds. Gentlemen cannot deny that such was the agreement, and that the rules are the expression of the agreement. They cannot deny that the President decided the question correctly. There it stands in characters so large that he who runs may read. But the gentleman finds that the rules are not effective—in other words, they do not enable him to carry out his objects; they are not complete; they do not bind the enemy hand and foot, and therefore he will rescind them because he has the power. This is not my interpretation of the law of contract and agreement. We have entered into a certain compact with each other; we have made an agreement, and we have agreed not to repeal it except under certain conditions. These have not happened, yet the gentlemen wish to rescind the compact. Did you make it a part of the contract that if it should not suit you, you should have liberty to rescind it. I made no such contract, because I saw that such a case as this might happen, and that we might have to appeal to the agreement for protection.

Mr. Short—If the gentleman asks me I will tell him; when a motion to adjourn is made and lost, and then repeated immediately afterwards, that I made no such contract.

Mr. Hodge—The merest tyro in politics knows that such a course is very common. If he does not know it, he has not paid attention to the congressional debates. I have practised in courts of law, and there I have learned that if there were no rules, everything would be thrown in to disorder and chaos. You may violate the laws, you may violate the constitution, and when the morals of Louisiana are so loose that you violate your contracts, the courts are not worth the parchment which makes them. I could not go home and tell my constituents that I had violated my contract. I would as soon violate a law of the legislature. But I am not afraid to say that I voted for an adjournment; that I called for the yeas and nays; that I moved to go into Executive session, in order to defeat an unrighteous measure, because I would be sustained in it. But I feel with pride that I have violated no contract into which I entered. The rules of the Senate are law. The sense of justice which prompts an adherence to them is not earth-born, but heaven-born. I would as soon give way to those who wish to trample them under foot, as I would yield to the armed hand of tyranny and power, and no sooner.

The question, "shall the decision of the Chair be sustained," was then put, and the Senate refused to sustain the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Kenner—I now ask the Chair if it does not require a two-thirds vote to take up the bill.

The President—According to the decision of the Senate, only a majority is required.

Mr. Kenner—I ask the Secretary to read the 14th rule.

Digitized by Google

The President—I wish it distinctly understood that my action now is not based on my own judgment, but on the decision of the Senate.

Mr. Kenner—I ask if this bill is not out of its regular order?

Mr. Short—We have rescinded that so far as it is applicable to this bill.

Mr. Kenner—I ask the Secretary to read the 60th rule.

The Secretary reads:

Mr. Kenner—That says that no rule can be rescinded or amended without at least one day's notice. Has the required notice been given? I ask the President if he can sit there and see this bill taken up out of its order in violation of the rules of the Senate.

The President—I had already decided that a vote of two-thirds was necessary. The Senate decided otherwise.

Mr. Kenner—Then a give notice for myself and those acting with me that we shall enter a protest against this action of the majority—this unheard of violation of the rules of the Senate; this monstrous outrage on right and justice

The question was then put on taking up the bill. Carried 16 to 10.

The President—According to the decision of the Senate the bill is before them.

Mr. Kenner—I appeal from the Senate to the chair. Will be sit in the chair and see this palpable violation of rule and our rights on this floor? He has the right to protect the rights of the minority when he sees them outraged. He ought not to see this thing done. He knows it is wrong; he knows itis an outrage, and he ought not to suffer it.

Mr. Patterson—The democratic party on this floor calls on the President to maintain his place and the dignity of his position.

Mr. Kenner—That is what we wish. We do not call on the President as a whig or a democrat; but we wish to place him on high ground; the ground of truth and justice. We wish him to protect the right of the minority, and then he will be acting in accordance with the dignity of his position.

The President—The Chair is determined not to be misunderstood in this matter. The Chair has decided that it is out of order to take up the bill without a vote of two thirds. The question has been decided by the Senate, against the Chair, and therefore, in accordance with that decision the bill is before it.

The vote was then taken on the bill.

Mr. Kenner—If I vote yes and give notice that I shall move a reconsideration to-morrow—will I be protected in my rights? I ask this in all defence as I feel convinced that gentlemen have now done an act which in their cooler moments they will not adhere to.

The President—The gentleman has right to give notice that he will move a reconsideration.

The bill then passed.

Mr. Kenner then gave notice that to-morrow he should move a reconsideration.

SATURDAY, April 30th, 1853.

The bill prescribing judgments after ten years, wa taken up.

Mr. King—Though I am too unwell to argue this question at length, I will briefly state the reasons which induce me to believe that it ought to be rejected by the Senate. In the first place, the bill is to take effect instanter. This is a great objection. It admits no appeal. This is a great injustice. It bars judgments which, perhaps, could not have been previously executed, and may effect existing rights to the extent of a million of dollars; it may ruin or seriously injure many who are now reposing in fancied security, not dreaming of such a law.

A bill to pay for levees, made since 1852, was taken up.

Mr. Martin—In my opinion this is a very proper measure.

Mr. Kenner—I disagree with the gentleman. He fixes in his own a period after which some parishes may receive benefit from the swamp land fund. We, who were sorely taxed in '51—we are not to have any thing. But those parishes which have made levees since '52 are to pay for them. This bill is made to embrace particular cases—it will benefit some sections, and not others which have just as valid claims. Why cannot it be made to benefit all?

The bill was laid on the table.

The bill to fix the salary of the Clerk of the District Court came back from the House with amendment striking out the amendment of the Senate making the salary of the Clerk payable from the fines and forfeitures.

Mr. Kenner—That is equal to annulling the amendment of the Senate altogether. It is equivalent to saying that the salary shall be paid out of the State Treasury. The fines and forfeitures amount to $50,000. They lie on the table of the Clerks of Courts and are never collected. One of the objects of this bill is to compel clerks and officers of Courts to do their duty by having these fines and forfeitures collected [illegible] because they go into the Treasury of the State not into the pocket of an individual, that [illegible] has hitherto been manifested in collecting [illegible]

Mr. Lewis—I beg pardon of the gentleman. The District Attorney has a large percentage

Mr. Kenner—Why, then, does he not

Mr. Hodge—I wish to explain the [illegible] vote I am about to give on the bill gentlemen from New Orleans that the [illegible] feitures are not enough, and that if we [illegible] amendment the Court may be left without [illegible] I am sorry that Orleans cannot pay for [illegible] ness as other parishes of the State do [illegible] circumstances I am willing we should be [illegible] year more; but when the question comes up [illegible] shall insist that they pay themselves. However, I am unwilling to incur the risk of leaving them without a Court, especially as part of the fines and forfeitures are paid to the Charity Hospital.

The amendment of the House was concurred in.

A bill concerning the Barataria and Lafourche Canal was taken up.

Mr. Martin—A contract has been made by which the State undertook to finish this work for the sum of $53,000. This bill appropriates $33,000 to complete the work. The Commissary has expended upwards of $300,000 on it already. It is a valuable work, and the State has the first lien on it.

Mr. Kittridge—I have another remark to make.—The State has already expended much money on the work, and if she do not finish it she will lose all she has invested. As far as completed it nets a profit of 4 per cent.

Mr. Martin—This is a contract. If we do not comply with its terms we lose what we have already paid out. That is the question for the gentleman who guards the Treasury so closely.

Mr. Mouton—I hope I do not guard it any more closely than the gentleman from Assumption; I hope I have no more interest in guarding the Treasury than he has. If it is so I am sorry for it. But I shall vote against his Barataria Canal concern; because I have heard of it, and nothing else for fourteen years, and my constituents are hostile to it.

The bill passed.

The bill to restrict the charge of Judges in criminal cases to an opinion on the law, was taken up.

Mr. Mouton—I am not prepared to vote for this bill. I do not see how a judge can make his charge to the jury without examining the facts

Mr. Short—That is the very evil to be remedied.—The judge may so repeat the evidence, in his charge to the jury, as to substitute the judgment of the Court, for the decision of the jury. The Senator thinks it would be difficult to make a charge without a statement of fact. There would be no difficlty. If the judge says, he believes so and so, from the testimony; if he says that from the facts this man could not have believed himself in danger, that he could not have acted in self defence; if he go over the testimony and from it deduce the law applicable in the case, he goes beyond his duty. It is an encroachment on the privileges of the jury.

Mr. Mouton Can he do so by the law now?

Mr. Short—Now he simply cannot tell the jury on which side the weight of testimony lies. That is the old English law. But if he recapitulate the testimony, and in that he says what the law is, he substitutes the judgment of the Court for the verdict of the jury, because the jury will almost alway take the opinion of the Court. This bill will act as a very good remedial statute and will obviate an evil.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Nicholls—It cannot prevent a hypothetical statement of fact by the judge.

Mr. King—I am opposed to this bill. It will make the judge a mere menial officer and will impede the operations of justice. It will produce many mistrials and other inconveniencies. The judge is the guiding spirit, and he should not be degraded to a mere machine. The present system has been in vogue for centuries; our ancestors used it without complaining of it. The charge proposed will be disastrous to the administration of justice. We ought to let well enough alone. It is better to bear the ills we have than fly to those we know not of.

Mr. Short—I am surprised that so old a member of the bar should argue in such a manner. The gentleman says the result of the bill will be to cause many mistrials; that that judge is now ruling spirit. Why sir, that is the very best argument in favor of the bill. If the jury is to swallow down the opinion of the judge as if it were Gospel, if they were to be guided in all things by his ruling spirit, we might as well have no jury all. The gentleman has caused me to be in favor of the bill than I was before.

The bill passed.

The General appropriation bill was taken up.

Mr. Kenner. My opinion is, that a general appropriation bill should make appropriations for salaries already fixed by law; that in a general appropriation bill salaries cannot be increased. I wish to examine the record in order to see to what extent these changes have been made. If gentlemen wish to follow the act of 1852, I do not see why they cannot follow it all the way through. But by this bill we would be doing what is not contemplated by a general appropriation bill. It should only provide for salaries already determined by law. Now, sir, this bill was originally prepared by the Finance Committee, and every salary was provided for according to law. Every alteration from that, must have been made in the House. I contend that this is not a legitimate way to do the thing. If there be an increase made in the salaries, I shall move to refer the bill to the Finance Committee. I shall not do this in order to gain time; but I do not wish to countenance such a method of legislation. If we want to increase salaries, let us make a law for that purpose, and not slip it through in this way. That is not the object of a general appropriation bill.

A motion was made to strike out $2000, and insert $1500 as the salary of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Mouton. I think there is a law fixing the salary of the Secretary of State at $1500. I therefore conceive it to be my duty to vote for the salary as fixed by law.

The motion was lost.

The section appropriating $1,000 for the Clerk of the Secretary of State, was read.

Mr. Kenner. I should like to see the law for that. We have just given the Secretary of State an augmentation of salary of $500, and now we must give his clerk a thousand. Then, here is an appropriation for the "copying Clerk" of the Secretary of State, besides. I do not know what this means.

Mr. Mouton. I believe there is an old law which authorizes the Secretary of State to employ a person to copy all the acts of the Legislature for the printer. The amount appropriated is certainly little enough.

Mr. Kenner. If this is law, I should like to see it in the general appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. McCay. I think this can be explained. Last year the Secretary of State had a contingent fund of $2000. This year it has been cut down to $500. It has, therefore, been thought proper to allow this sum.

Mr. Kenner. This seems to be only a bill to increase salaries—not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. King. It amounts to the same thing as a separate bill for the same purpose. I wish it understood that I am in favor of increasing salaries.

Mr. Kenner. If this bill be really a bill to increase salaries, and not a general appropriation bill, I do not see why the Adjutant General has been overlooked. I move to increase his salary to $1000.

Mr. King. This subject has already been discussed in the House. I do not think the amendment could pass there.

Mr. Kenner. If we cannot alter a word in a bill—dot an i, or cross a t—without the consent of the other House, I do not see what use there is for the Senate of Louisiana. We had better go home, and save the State the expense of paying our salaries of four dollars a day.

Mr. Martin—It is no unusual thing to have Committees of Conference about the general appropriation bill on the last day of the session. These committees arrange matters in a few moments.

The item to pay arrearages of salary to the Clerk of the First District Court was taken up.

Mr. Kenner—This is the first time that claims have been allowed in a general appropriation bill without being previously decided on. The thing ought to be known, and I state it for the satisfaction of Senators. I do not think I can change their minds, but I want them to know the fact.

Mr. Derbes moved to insert $4500 for the Louisiana Legion and the Washington Battalion.

Mr. Derbes—I make this motion because I know I am right in doing it. These companies are always called on in time of danger. Their usefulness cannot be exaggerated; yet if the State do not come to their aid they will be broken up. They are subjected to very heavy expense amounting to $10 or $15 a year for each man. When the State comes to the relief of other associations I do not see why it should not assist these military companies which are of such vast benefit. In addition to their ordinary character, I may say that the Legion and the Battallion are organized as charitable institutions. Even with this grant the gratuity will not amount to $2 a head, which certainly is not a very large sum. It is needless for me to enumerate all the advantages which are derived from the presence of these organized military companies. In times of danger, when there is a mob, they are always called on and are ever ready to respond to the call. In case of insurrection or invasion they would be our only rallying point, and our only recourse. It is therefore not sound policy to let them be broken up.

Mr. Nicholls—I concur heartily in all that the gentleman has said. I think these will be two of the best items in the bill. The State should look with pride on these two corps. It should be our policy to encourage them, as to them in times of danger the citizen looks for protection. I shall move in addition an appropriation of $500, for the cannoniers of Donaldsonville, a fine corps, which is always mentioned with praise.

The amendments were adopted, and the bill passed.

Mr. Kenner offered the following protest:

The undersigned, believing that there was a flagrant violation of the rules of the Senate, by the action of the majority of this body on the bill under discussion on yesterday, to "Divide the State into Congressional Districts," beg leave to enter this, their protest on the Journal of the Senate, against the proceedings on that occasion.

In order to understand the extent of the injustice done to the rights of the minority on this occasion, it is necessary that the facts, as they transpired, should be set forth. Pending the reading of the orders of the day, a motion was made by Mr. Derbes of New Orleans to take up out of its regular order the bill "To divide the State into Congressional Districts," and to proceed to the discussion and passage of the same. The effect of this motion was to give this particular bill precedence over all the other bills on the Secretary's table.

The fourteenth rule of the Senate is in the following words: "No motion to call up a bill out of its regular order shall be allowed, unless by the consent of two-thires of the Senate present."

Under this rule, as plain in its language as it is unmistakable in its meaning, the President of the Senate, Lieutenant-Governor Farmer, decided that the motion of Mr. Derbes to take this bill out of its regular order, would require two-thirds of the votes present. The Senate proceeded to vote by ayes and noes, when it appeared that sixteen senators voted in favor of Mr. Derbes' motion, and ten senators voted against it. The requisite number of two-thirds not having been obtained, the President of the Senate decided that the motion of Mr. Derbes was lost. To this decision of the Chair, so consonant to the letter and spirit of the fourteenth rule, Mr. Short took exception and an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Digitized by Google

The Senate again voted by ayes and noes, on Mr. Short's appeal from the decision of the Chair, when it appeared that sixteen senators, viz., Messrs. Boatner, Clifton, Derbes, Evans, Griffin, Kemp, Lacey, Lacoste, Lewis, Millard, Mouton, McCay, Neal, Patterson, Short and Thériot, voted to reverse the decision of the Chair; and that ten senators, viz., Messrs. Dupré, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Martin, Nicholls, Palfrey, Slack and Taylor, voted to maintain that decision.

Consequently, the Senate, by this last vote, overruled the decision of the President, and decided that it did not require a two-thirds vote to take up a bill out of its regular order, in the face of the fact that the fourteenth rule expressly says that "no motion to take up a bill out of its regular order shall be allowed, unless by the consent of two-thirds of the Senate present."

The effect of this last vote was to suspend the fourteenth rule and enable a majority to take up and pass a bill exceedingly obnoxious to a large minority in this body, and that, too, in positive violation of the rules, which had been adopted by this very majority in the early part of the session, and which the minority in good faith had hoped would protect them from any arbitrary exercise of power by the majority.

We feel constrained to say, that so positive, open and palpable a violation of the rules of any legislative body does not exist in the annals of the legislation of our country. There exist no instances in either our Federal Congress or in our State Legislature, where a majority, in order to force a bill through the Legislature, have so totally disregarded the rules imposed upon themselves for their government.

Nor can it be said, that the Senate have an inherent right, at any time, or under all circumstances, to repeal their rules by a majority vote; for the sixteenth rule of the Senate is in these words: "Nor shall any rule of the Senate be suspended, except by a vote or at least two-thirds of the members present." Consequently, it was as impossible to suspend the fourteenth rule by a simple majority, as it was to take up a bill out of its regular order by a simple majority.

But the bill "to divide the State into Congressional Districts" needs be passed if not under the rules, then over them. This was done on yesterday by the Senate, and against this arbitrary exercise of power—this most palpable violation of our rules—we enter our most solemn protest.

We would beg leave, further, respectfully, to call to the minds of the majority the following words from the manual of Mr. Jefferson, on the importance of adhering to rules:

"Mr. Onslow, the ablest among the speakers of the House of Commons, used to say 'It was a maxim he had often heard when he was a young man, from old and experienced members, that nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of the administration, and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons, than a neglect of, or departure from, the rules of proceeding; that these forms, as instituted by our ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of the majority, and that they were, in many instances, a shelter and protection to the minority against the attempts of power.'"

On these words of Speaker Onslow, Mr. Jefferson comments as follows:

"So far, the maxim is certainly true, and is founded in good sense; that, as it is always in the power of the majority, by thin numbers, to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves against similar attempts from those in power, are the forms and rules of proceedings, which have been adopted as they were found necessary from time to time, and are become the law of the House; by a strict adherence to which, the weaker party can only be protected from those irregularities and abuses which these forms were intended to check, and which the watonnesss of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and succeseful majorities.

"And whether these forms be in all cases the most rational, or not, is really not of so great importance. It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by, than what that rule is; that there may be a uniformity of proceeding in business, not subject to the caprice of the speaker, or captiousness of the members. It is very material that order, decency and regularity be preserved in a dignified public body."

With these remarks of Mr. Jefferson as a comment on the conduct of the majority on yesterday, we beg respectfully to sign, &c.

The Senate then took a recess.

On re-assembling several bills were passed, without debate.

The Secretary informed the House that the Senate had no further communication to make to the House of Representatives, and was now ready to adjourn sine die.

Mr. Boatner offered the following resolution, which underwent its several readings, and was adopted.

Resolved, That a joint committee of the two Houses, consisting of three members of the Senate and ——— members of the House, be appointed to wait on the Governor to inform him that the Legislature is now ready to adjourn sine die, and to inquire if he has any further communications to make to the Legislature.

The President appointed on that committee Messrs. Boatner, Nicholls and Hodge.

The Secretary requested the concurrence of the House therein.

By a message from the House, through their chief clerk, the Senate was informed of the concurrence of the House in the above resolution, and was also informed that the Speaker of the House had appointed of said committee, on the part of the House, Messrs. Heard, Sandidge, King, of St. Landry, Texada and Le Blanc.

On behalf of the joint committee appointed in accordance with the above resolution, Mr. Boatner reported that the committee had performed their duty, and that the Governor had no further communication to make to the Legislature.

By a message from the House, through their special messenger, the Senate was informed that the House had no further communication to make to the Senate, and was now ready to adjourn sine die.

The President of the Senate, Hon. W. W. Farmer, delivered the following valedictory address to the Senators:

GENTLEMEN: You have so repeatedly placed me under obligations of gratitude during your session, for not complaining of the errors of the Chair, that I must return you my thanks before we separate, for your leniency in overlooking them. For the resolution complimentary to the Chair, you have passed, I return you my thanks, though I feel that I merit, to a very limited extent, the compliment.

You are, after a protracted session, about returning to your constituents, to give an account of your stewardship. That it will be satisfactory, you have every reason to hope. Although frequent complaints have been indulged in, in many places, of the inaction of the present Legislature, I have no doubt that when your labors are collected in a volume, it will be found that but few Legislatures have ever passed more acts than the present, at a session of the same length. When the acts on the judiciary, schools, internal improvements, banks, swamp lands, militia, &c., which have been passed, are recollected and compared, none have excelled in importance of measures acted on. I repeat, therefore, that the represeneatives now about to deport to their homes, have every reason to expect the approbation of their constituents.

This night witnesses, for the last time in this hall, the assemblage of the first Senate under the Constitution of 1852. In a few moments you turn your steps homeward. God speed you thitherward in safety to the embraces of your expectant families, and the congratulations of friends.

In all human probability you may never all meet again. In view of this, I ask of you one favor in your parting, viz: should ill feelings exist between any of you, individually, forgive and forget them as political differences, and recollect each other in after years as friends—not enemies.

I pronounce the Senate adjourned sine die.

RAPPORTS OFFICIELS

DU

DE

L'ÉTAT DE LA LOUISIANE.

MARDI, 25 janvier 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement.

Après la lecture du journal, le rapport des directeurs de la Banque des Citoyens lui est soumis.

M. Kenner fait la motion qu'on se dispense de la lecture de ce rapport, attendu qu'il est très long et qu'il contient des chiffres et des statistiques qui ne peuvent être bien compris qu'après une lecture attentive ; mais puisque le rapport est relatif à une question qui est du plus grand intérêt pour une grande partie de ses constituants, il demande que 500 copies en soient imprimées à l'usage du Sénat.

Il fait aussi la motion qu'outre les comités permanents ordinaires que le Sénat a formés, il en soit créé un autre sous le titre de « Comité sur les Banques » et que le rapport soit soumis au dit comité.

ANNONCE DE BILLS A PRESENTER.

M. Clifton annonce un acte accordant l'appropriation d'une partie des fonds provenant de la vente des terres en marais à la reconstruction de la Grande Levée dans la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée.

M. McCay, un acte pour la révocation de la loi d'Exemption.

M. Evans, un acte pour l'émancipation de Judson Overton, mineur, de la paroisse de Bienville.

M. Short, un bill pour amender l'acte organisant un district de levée dans les paroisses de Madison, de Carroll et de Catahoula.

Un bill appropriant une partie des fonds provenant de la vente des terres à l'achèvement de la Levée à Point Lookout, dans la paroisse de Carroll.

M. Hodge, un acte relatif à la proscription des jugements.

Un acte pour annuler certaines entrées de terres faites en vertu de l'acte du 17 mars 1852, consignées prématurément aux bureaux des terres des Etats-Unis.

BILLS PRESENTES.

M. Lacey dit que conformément à l'annonce qu'il en a faite, il présentera maintenant plusieurs bills.

Pendant que le secrétaire s'occupe à les lire, M. Short se lève et dit qu'à son avis, les Sénateurs n'en apprendraient que bien peu sur l'objet de ces bills en les entendant seulement lire, et que le meilleur moyen à prendre serait de les référer aux comités auxquels ils reviennent. L'article 33me des réglements impose à l'officier présidant le Sénat le devoir de nommer des comités permanents dans les premier et second jours de la session. Il croit que ces bills devraient être référés à des comités spéciaux et qu'un rapport en doit être dressé ; alors seulement les membres du Sénat pourront s'en former une opinion correcte.

M. Wickliffe fait la remarque que la règle ordinaire est de lire d'abord les bills et de les référer ensuite.

M. Kenner pense que le Président n'a encore eu qu'à peine le temps de choisir les comités.

M. Short fait la motion que dispense soit faite des règles et que les bills soient lus une fois par leurs titres.

La motion prévaut et les bills sont lus par leurs titres.

M. Kenner demande la dispense des règles afin qu'il puisse présenter un bill pour que les sommes appartenant aux fonds des Ecoles publiques soient déposées au Trésor d'Etat au lieu d'être laissées comme elles le sont maintenant, sous le contrôle du Surintendant de l'éducation publique. Le bill autorise en même temps le Trésorier à payer des mandats tirés par le Surintendant en faveur des professeurs et comptrôlés par l'officier auquel ce droit appartient.

M. Kenner expose quel est son but en présentant ce bill. Il dit que dans le bill général d'appropriation de la dernière session, il se trouve une section susceptible d'être mal interprêtée et mal appliquée. En vertu de cette section une forte partie de l'argent appartenant au fonds des Ecoles est maintenant déposée à la Banque de Cité, sans aucune sécurité. et placée à l'ordre du Surintendant de l'éducation publique. La loi veut que des $240,000 composant le fonds des écoles, un quart doit être payé tous les trois mois au Surintendant d'Etat, et en vertu de cette loi, environ $60,000 sont maintenant à l'ordre du Col. Nicholas. L'argent devrait être déposé au Trésor d'Etat, et mon seul but, ajoute-t-il, en présentant ce bill est d'amener ce résultat et d'empêcher les difficultés auxquelles pourraient donner lieu une fausse interprétation de la loi de l'année dernière.

M. Wickliffe pense que l'interprétation de la loi dans le sens auquel M. Kenner vient de faire allusion est tout à fait fausse et qu'elle n'est pas celle que le Sénat avait intention de lui donner.

M. Kenner répond que la loi telle qu'elle est conçue, explique l'interprétation erronée à laquelle il a fait allusion. Il lit la section dont il s'agit et soutient qu'elle justifie la fausse interprétation qui en a été donnée, quoique ce n'eut jamais été celle que voulait lui prêter la législature.

M. Lacey demande si le surintendant d'Etat n'a donné aucune sécurité Il croit, si tel est le cas, que l'argent doit être déposé au Trésor de l'Etat.

M. King se lève pour demander une information. D'autres sénateurs, dit-il, sont plus familiers que je ne le suis avec les lois de cette nature et l'effet qu'elles peuvent avoir ; je désirerais apprendre d'eux quel serait l'effet de ce bill. C'est une simple information que je voudrais obtenir. Il me semble que d'après la phraséologie du bill, le surintendant de l'éducation publique n'est que simplement autorisé à tirer des mandats en faveur des professeurs. Je voudrais savoir si cet officier ne peut tirer de mandats d'aucune autre nature. S'il en est ainsi, je demande que la phraséologie de ce bill soit rendue plus explicite.

M. Kenner n'a aucune objection, si tel est le cas, à ce que la phraséologie du bill soit amendée de la manière qu'il plaira à ses collègues de lui suggérer.

Ordre du Jour.

La résolution accordant une gratification à J. B. Walton, secrétaire et à Jules Cassard, assistant secrétaire du Sénat est prise en considération, et, sur motion de M. Griffin, déposée sur le bureau sujette à l'appel.

M. Kittridge présente une résolution conjointe recommandant à nos sénateurs et à nos représentants au Congrès de tenter tous leurs efforts pour obtenir que le gouvernement fasse enlever certaines obstructions qui se trouvent dans le Bayou Lafourche et qui y ont été placées par des personnes agissant sous l'autorité du gouvernement des Etats-Unis.

La dispense des règles est accordée, la résolution est lue trois fois, est acceptée puis envoyée à la Chambre.

Message de la Chambre.

M. Kennedy, greffier de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que la Chambre donne son concours à l'acte qui place le fonds des Ecoles dans le trésor de l'Etat.

Il demande en même temps le concours du Sénat au bill de la Chambre pourvoyant aux dépenses de l'Assemblée Générale.

Sur motion, la dispense des règles est votée, le bill est lu trois fois et adopté.

M. Rivers, annonce son intention de présenter un bill amendant l'acte maintenant en vigueur et qui a trait aux impressions de l'Etat.

Le Sénat entre ensuite en séance exécutive et immédiatement après, il s'ajourne.

MERCREDI, 26 janvier.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement, 26 sénateurs sont présents.

Après la lecture du journal, le président soumet au Sénat la liste des différents comités et le secrétaire en donne lecture comme suit :

Comité judiciaire—MM. Lacy, King, Short, Nicholls et Hodge.

Commerce et manufactures—MM. Derbès, Neal et Martin.

Relations fédérales—MM. McKay, Wickliffe et Burthe.

Pénitentiaire—MM. Lacoste, Short et Rivers.

Milice—MM. Lewis, Martin et Lacoste.

Finances—MM. Clifton, Kenner, McKey, Palfrey et Griffin.

Institutions charitables—MM. Patterson, Lacoste et Kittridge.

Amendemens à la Constitution—MM. Mouton, Lacy et Tood.

Affaires de paroisses—MM. Griffin, Hodge, Boatner, Taylor et Millard.

Terres et levées—MM. Short, Theriot, Millard, Rivers et Slace

Banques—MM. Kenner, Clifton, Lewis, Palfrey et Wickliffe.

Dépenses contingentes—MM Kemp, Burthe et Mouton.

Elections—MM. Boatner, Dupré et McKay.

Réclamations—MM. Millard, Taylor et Derbès.

Affaires non terminées—MM. Neal, Patterson et Slack.

Education—MM. Wickliffe, Lewis, Evans, Lauve et Smith.

Améliorations intérieures—MM. King, Griffin, Tood, Kittridge et Kemp.

M. Palfrey se lève et présente une résolution donnant des instructions à nos sénateurs et à nos représentants au Congrès, pour qu'ils emploient tous leurs moyens à l'effet d'obtenir une appropriation pour nettoyer et border des canaux dans la baie de Vermillon, d'Atchafalaya et de Côte Blanche et y placer des bouées; pour la construction d'un phare à Baccoon Point et pour transférer la douane du District de Têche, de Franklin, dans la paroisse Ste-Marie, à Petersonville, dans la même paroisse.

M. Palfrey dit, qu'avant de soumettre cette résolution au Sénat, il voudrait, s'il lui est permis de le faire, adresser quelques observations à ce sujet, attendu qu'il est d'une haute importance pour une grande partie de l'Etat.

L'Atchafalaya est le canal par lequel le commerce et les produits d'une des parties les plus riches et les plus fertiles de l'Etat parviennent jusqu'à la mer. D'après la loi des Etats-Unis, toute cette section est désignée sous le nom de District Têche. La douane de ce District est située dans la ville de Franklin, sur le bayou Têche. Le commerce de cette région est déjà grand et progresse rapidement tous les jours.

Le nombre des entrées et des sorties du port de Franklin, s'élève annuellement à 200 et les exportations de sucre s'élèvent de 30 à 25,000 boucauts. Mais sa prospérité est retardée et son commerce interrompu, par les difficultés de la navigation de la baie, qui est obstruée par les coquilles et autres obstacles. Les difficultés sont encore augmentées par le fait que les pilotes ont l'habitude d'arracher les poteaux qui marquent la ligne du chenal, ce qui laisse les navigateurs dans une perplexité et force les capitaines de vaisseaux qui entrent dans ces baies à payer un pilotage entier dont ils pourraient sans cela se dispenser.

Il est question de construire un chemin de fer qui traverserait l'Atchafalaya, à un point où s'élargissant de plus en plus il a presque les proportions d'un lac. Il n'y a pas le moindre doute que sous peu il ne s'élève à ce point une ville, qui deviendrait l'entrepôt de toute cette région et le point où serait embarqué une très grande quantité de produits.

La construction d'un phare à Baccoon Point, est aussi d'une absolue nécessité et réclame toute l'attention du Congrès. Baccoon Point est de la plus grande importance pour les navigateurs qui longent les côtes de la Louisiane, attendu que c'est le dernier point visible sur la ligne le plus généralement suivie pour se rendre de la Nouvelle-Orléans à Galveston. C'est en quelque sorte un second point de départ, pour les vaisseaux qui font ces voyages. Baccoon Point est aussi directement sur la ligne des vaisseaux allant de ces baies, que j'ai nommées plus haut, à la Nouvelle-Orléans ou à tout autre port.

D'après tous ces faits on verra que Baccoon Point est de la plus grande importance aux intérêts des navigateurs et nul ne peut contester la nécessité de ce phare.

Quant au transfert de la Douane du District de Têche, de Francklin à Pattersonville, M. Palfrey fera encore quelques observations. Comme il l'a dit déjà, le commerce et la navigation de ce port sont très étendus. C'est à Franklin qu'est maintenant située la Douane : les vaisseaux éprouvent souvent beaucoup de difficultés à y entrer, et les capitaines de navires sont souvent obligés d'aller jusqu'à 18 miles dans l'intérieur pour obtenir l'entrée et l'expédition de leurs navires.

Il est donc bien évident que Franklin est trop éloigné de la mer pour continuer d'être le port du District. Pattersonville est à 18 milles plus bas et tout près de la mer, c'est donc le meilleur emplacement pour la Douane. Il n'y a pas plus de raison à ce qu'elle reste à Franklin, qu'il n'y en aurait à ce que la Douane de la Nouvelle-Orléans fût située à Donaldsonville.

M. Palfrey demande la suspension des règlements et les deux dernières lectures du bill.

Ces réglemens sont donc suspendus. Le bill est lu une seconde, puis une troisième fois et est ensuite adopté.

Bills présentés.

M. Wickliffe—Un acte pour l'émancipation de Murdoch Marion Shaw. Lu deux fois par son titre et référé au comité judiciaire.

Un acte pour l'émancipation de Laure Anna Ruff—Référé au comité judiciaire.

M. Evans—Un acte pour l'émancipation de Judson S. Hoverton.

M. Derbes annonce son intention de présenter un bill autorisant les juges de paix à nommer des curateurs ad lites dans certains cas.

W. Griffin fait la motion que le comité sur les terres publiques et les levées soit augmenté de deux membres.

Le Sénat entre ensuite en séance exécutive et s'ajourne immédiatement après.

JEUDI, 27 Janvier, 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble, conformément à l'ajournement.

Le Président nomme MM. Griffin et Kenner, comme membres du Comité sur les Terres publiques et les Levées.

Le Sénat reçoit un message de la Chambre, donnant avis que l'Orateur a signé le bill qui autorise le Gouverneur à employer un messager spécial, et demandant que le Président du Sénat appose sa signature an bill qui alloue $50,000 pour les dépenses de l'assemblée générale.

Lecture est faite du rapport suivant du surintendant:

Rapport du Surintendant de l'Education Publique.

Aux Honorables Membres de l'Assemblée Générale de l'Etat de la Louisiane

Il est de mon devoir de soumettre à la Législature un tableau de l'etat des écoles et des fonds qui leur sont alloués. L'acte de la dernière session a jeté beaucoup de confusion et d'embarras dans tout le système. En supprimant la place de surintendant de paroisse, et en reportant sur les directeurs de District la besogne qui était confiée à ce fonctionnaire, la loi a fait disparaitre les agents les plus utiles, et les a remplacés par d'autres qui sont complètement inconnus à ce département. Le premier devoir qu'en traçait la nouvelle loi était de connaitre quels étaient ces directeurs. Un temps considérable s'est écoulé avant que je pusse obtenir ces renseignements. Il n'y avait que les surintendants de paroisse qui pussent les fournir, et ces fonctionnaires, au grand déplaisir de plusieurs d'entr'eux, venaient d'être déplacés par la loi.

Des lettres leur ont été immédiatement adressées à tous, les renseignements demandés nous ont été transmis par la plupart; mais par suite des lenteurs et des irregularités de la malle ils ne nous sont arrivés que lentement, et nous avons eu à déplorer la perte d'un temps precieux. Si l'on ne s'était pas tellement hâté de mettre la loi en vigueur, si l'on avait laissé les surintendants achever l'année, pour laquelle ils avaient été nommés, les électeurs du District auraient pu aux élections de septembre,et en votant pour les directeurs,faire leur choix en vue des nouveaux et importants devoirs que ces fonctionnaires avaient à accomplir. Si l'on avait ainsi retardé l'action de cette loi, elle serait venue remplacer l'ancienne loi, sans secousse, sans lacune.

Nous pensons que si les surintendants avaient été maintenus dans leurs fonctions jusqu'à la fin de leur première année, on eût été plus à même de leur faire rendre leurs comptes. D'après l'interpretation donnée aux deux actes relatifs aux surintendants de paroisse, ceux qui étaient en fonctions au moment où ces actes ont été adoptés, ont été requis de rendre tous leurs comptes à ce bureau, ou de régler pour tout le montant dont ils avaient eu le maniement depuis leur dernière élection, le réglement pour le montant reçu antérieuremeni à cette époque, ayant eu lieu avec les recorders des paroisses. Les pièces à l'appui des comptes reglés ici ont été examinées avec soin, et l'on a rejete les articles qui ne sont pas autorisés par la loi. Tous ces documents sont en liasse dans ce bureau. Les comptes présentés pour construction, achat, loyer ou mobilier de maisons d'écoles, ont été rejetés, comme n'étant pas autorisés par la loi antérieure à l'acte de la dernière session. Nous sommes, cependant, très fondé à croire que l'argent des écoles publiques a été en différentes occasions employé à ces objets et que ces dépenses ont été allouees dans les réglements qui ont eu lieu avec les recorders.

La dernière loi a rendu si laborieuses les fonctions du Surintendant, le forçant à recevoir et à debourser les fonds des Ecoles, à tenir des comptes ouverts aux différents districts d'Ecoles, dont le nombre s'élève à sept ou huit cents, ainsi qu'à chacune des paroisses, qu'il était, peut-être physiquement impossible à un seul homme de faire toute la besogne. La Législature ayant tracé le travail qui etait a faire, sans avoir fait d'allocation pour l'emploi d'un commis ou les dépenses casuelles qui doivent nécessairement être encourues par un bureau tel que celui-ci, il fallait, de toute nécessité, ou appliquer une partie des fonds des écoles à ces dépenses, ou ne pas faire le travail ordonné par la loi. J'ai pensé que mon devoir me commandait l'emploi des moyens nécessaires à l'accomplissement de la volonté de la Législature. Il n'y avait aucun meuble dans mon bureau, pas un endroit où mettre les papiers en ordre ou en sûreté; il fallait acheter de nouveaux livres pour ouvrir les comptes nombreux et compliqués que la loi exige. Je me résolus à employer un commis, auquel j'accordai un salaire très faible, beaucoup trop faible pour décider un homme capable à accepter les devoirs de la place. Très peu versé dans l'art de la tenue des livres, et craignant à chaque instant de commettre des erreurs, qui sont si faciles lorsque l'on pas une grande habitude de la comptabilite, j'ai été tellement absorbé par un travail qui est plutôt du ressort de l'auditeur et du trésorier, que je n'ai pu donner l'attention convenable à ce qui constitue, à proprement dire, les devoirs de cette place. Malgré tout le soin et l'attention qu'il a été en mon pouvoir d'apporter à ce travail, des erreurs ont pu se glisser à mon insçu. Chargé d'un travail aussi laborieux que n'importe quel bureau de la maison d'Etat, ayant des frais de poste, de papéterie, d'impression, de mobilier, aussi considérables, les dépenses de ce bureau pour le seul salaire du commis et les dépenses casuelles n'excèderont pas de beaucoup, si elles excèdent, la moitié de ce qui est accordé à la plupart de ces bureaux pour les dépenses casuelles seulement. Je ne me suis pas dissimulé la responsabilité que j'encourais en faisant cet emploi d'une partie des fonds des écoles, sans y être expressément autorisé par la loi; mais il fallait, de toute nécessité, adopter cette mesure, sous peine de voir le système entier cesser de fonctionner. Il est bon d'ajouter que cette mesure n'a créé aucun embarras dans nos écoles, qu'on a fixé le pro rata intégral qui revenait à chaque district, que les mandats qui ont été tirés par leurs agents autorisés ont toujours été payés sans retard jusqu'à concurrence du montant pour lequel ils avaient le droit de tirer.

La dernière loi tout entière, en tant qu'elle a trait aux opérations fiscales de ce bureau demande une révision. Le paiement des sommes appartenant aux écoles devrait être confié aux officiers comptables régulièrement employés au Trésor Des commis parfaitement compétents et familiers avec la comptabilité sont employés dans ce département et ils répondent de leurs fautes ou erreurs par des sécurités qui sont pleinement satisfaisantes.

Mais une des plus importantes améliorations serait de renommer des Trésoriers de paroisse. Que le résultat demandé soit obtenu par le rétablissement des places de surintendants de paroisse, il importe peu. Je suis encore d'opinion que des surintendants de paroisse, soumis à de judicieuses restrictions, auraient un excellent effet sur l'avancement et le progrès de notre système d'Ecoles Publiques; je pense aussi que les devoirs de Tresorier de paroisse pourraient fort bien être rempli par les shérifs.

On pourrait leur faire retenir les taxes de capitation perçues par eux respectivement et payer des mandats à l'ordre des professeurs, approuvés et contrôlés ici, jusqu'à concurrence de la somme qu'ils auraient ainsi entre les mains. Ces mandats, entre les mains des shérifs, seraient comptés comme argent dans le Trésor. La portion au prorata qui revient à chaque paroisse sur les deux tiers du MILLGAX, collecté dans tout l'Etat pourrait fort bien aussi être établie par les shérifs. Tant de justes plaintes nous sont journellement adressées par les professeurs au sujet de la difficulté qu'ils éprouvent à obtenir leur salaire, et des frais que ces retards leur occasionnent, nous font un devoir de leur assurer toutes les facilités que comporte notre système actuel.

Vous recevrez, en même temps que ce rapport, un tableau indiquant les montants répartis entre chaque paroisse, les montants qui ont été payés et ceux qui ne l'ont pas été, et aussi le montant du fonds des Ecoles déposé à la Branche Banque de cette ville.

Vous recevrez aussi un tableau indiquant les montants payés au Trésor par les surintendants qui ont réglé leurs comptes à ce bureau.

Il parait d'après ce tableau qu'ils ont eu en mains de fortes sommes, alors même qu'on se plaignait le plus du manque d'argent pour le maintien des Ecoles Publiques. Tout cela aurait sans doute pu être évité, si l'on avait exigé d'eux des réglements de comptes à des époques rapprochées. Il est également certain que leurs devoirs auraient été plus fidelement remplis s'ils avaient eu à en répondre devant quelqu'un.

L'argent ainsi payé au Trésor a été la source de grands mécontentements de la part des professeurs et des directeurs. Ils voyaient que l'intention de la loi était qu'il fut mis au crédit des paroisses respectives et ils ne comprenaient pas pourquoi il ne leur serait pas paye tout de suite. Mais on s'aperçut que l'appropriation n'était pas suffisante pour répondre au but qui l'avait fait faire. Ne s'attendant pas sans doute à ce que les sommes à payer dussent être si considéra-bles, la Législature a pensé que l'appropriation du 29 janvier 1852 serait suffisante. Telle était ma propre opinion et voyant que l'appropriation était faite dans le but spécial de payer aux paroisses de l'Etat et à la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans les sommes non encore payées et qui leur revenaient des collectes de l'année dernière, je ne doutai pas un seul instant qu'elle ne fut pleinement suffisante. Telle n'était pas cependant l'opinion de l'Auditeur ; mais l'Avocat-Général partageant la mienne, $11,294 24, seul reste de l'appropriation du 29 janvier 1852 qui n'eut pas encore été dépensé, furent reçues en à compte des sommes payées par l'ex surintendant de paroisse, à la date du 15 juillet. Cette appropriation s'élevait à cent trente-huit mille piastres ($138,000), et de cette somme, la répartition pour le quartier échu le 31 décembre 1851 et s'élevant à $38,820 41, devait nécessairement être payée ; mais beaucoup de paroisses n'ont jamais réclamé et n'ont rien reçu, cet arriéré leur est donc dû. Il est de la plus haute importance pour ces paroisses qui n'ont pas reçu ce qui leur était dû, ou à qui il est encore dû sur les sommes payees par les ex-surintendants qu'une appropriation soit faite au plus tôt, afin qu'elles puissent être payées. Dans l'acte du 18 mars, il m'a semblé voir qu'une injustice est faite, sans doute sans intention, aux différents districts. Il porte que l'argent payé au Trésor par les ex-surintendants doit être porté au crédit de chaque paroisse respectivement, tandis que d'après la teneur des actes précédents c'est aux districts qu'il doit être porté. S'il va aux paroisses, il sera également réparti entre les districts, et de la sorte les districts qui n'ont reçu qu'une partie de la somme qui leur revenait ou qui n'en ont rien reçu, sont mis sur le même pied que ceux qui ont reçu tout ce à quoi ils avaient droit. J'ai peine à croire que l'intention de la Législature ait jamais été telle et j'espère que cet acte sera amendé au moins dans cette partie.

Avant de terminer ce rapport, je présenterai quelques suggestions qui, à mon avis, aideront beaucoup à l'avancement et à l'efficacité des Ecoles publiques. Le grand nombre des Districts est d'abord une grave erreur : il en résulte que les sommes revenant à une paroisse sont divisées de telle sorte, que la compensation des professeurs n'est pas uniforme. Un but important, le plus important peut-être que nous devions nous imposer, est de donner de la dignité à la profession du professeur. Et pour y parvenir, le meilleur moyen est de faire que son salaire soit suffisant pour qu'il tienne à sa place, ce qui en même temps évite de continuels changements. Qu'on les choisisse avec plus de soin : il faudrait qu'un bureau, désigné sous le titre de « Bureau de l'Education, » fut composé dans chaque paroisse, dont le devoir serait d'examiner les professeurs et de leur accorder des certificats, s'ils sont jugés capables ; mais qu'il lui soit expressément défendu de donner un certificat à un professeur immoral, intempérant ou incapable. Un tel bureau pourrait fort bien être composé des professeurs les plus capables et les plus respectables de la paroisse, et il pourrait être requis d'avoir des assemblées à des époques précises, dans le but que j'ai indiqué plus haut. Nul, plus que les professeurs eux-mêmes, ne serait intéressé à voir expulser de la profession, les ignorants, les hommes immoraux et intempérants qui s'y trouvent maintenant et qui sont une honte pour elle.

Sans le moindre doute, le moyen le plus sûr de se procurer de bons professeurs est de créer une école normale. Il n'en existe pas une seule dans tous les Etats-Unis, et la seule qui se trouve sur ce continent est dans le Canada. On parle dans les termes les plus favorables des bons resultats quelle amène. Un professeur formé de la sorte est, dit-on, égal à deux qui n'ont pas joui des bienfaits d'une telle instruction. Les besoins de l'Etat ne justifieraient peut-être pas ni ne rendraient nécessaire les frais d'une institution spécialement et uniquement consacrée à ce but ; mais il ne peut exister de bonne raison pour laquelle ceux qui sont éduqués à Jackson, aux frais du peuple, où pour l instruction de qui l'Etat peut pourvoir à l'avenir par la création d'autres institutions, ne recevraient pas une instruction telle qu'ils fussent initiés à l'art de professeur. Une telle classe introduite annuellement dans le corps des professeurs donnerait bientôt aux Ecoles toute l'efficacité désirable ; le professorat deviendrait une profession respectable ; ce qui sauverait du temps aux jeunes gens qui suivent les cours, épargnerait l'argent de l'Etat et bénéficierait à la population toute entière. Quoique il n'existe aucune école normale aux Etats-Unis, il y a cependant plusieurs états où une partie de la jeunesse est éduquée en vue du professorat, et de la sorte elle paie à l'Etat les bienfaits qu'elle retire des institutions créées par lui. L'Etat de la Louisiane a fait jusqu'aujourd'hui et continuera sans doute de faire des appropriations très libérales à ses institutions pour l'instruction publique, il a le droit d'attendre qu'elles y répondent autant qu'elles le peuvent. L'état de la Virginie élève à son Université trente-deux jeunes gens qui se sont distingués, et qui par eux-mêmes ou par leurs parents ne pourraient subvenir aux frais de leur éducation, un est pris dans chaque district sénatorial ; ils suivent les cours pendant deux ans, après lesquels d'autres sont nommés qui, à leur tour, sont dispensés de tous frais de pension, de paiement aux professeurs ou à l'Université. En retour de ce qu'ils reçoivent de l'Etat, on attend d'eux qu'ils professeront dans quelque école particulière ou publique dans les limites de l'Etat, pendant au moins deux ans après qu'ils sont sortis de l'Université.

De tous les moyens employés pour l'avancement des Ecoles Publiques, il parait par les divers rapports sur l'éducation, publiés dans plusieurs autres Etats que le plus utile, le meilleure de tous, est la formation d'un institut destiné à former des professeurs. Les professeurs de chaque paroisse pourraient composer un semblable institut dont les assemblées se tiendraient à des époques fixes dans les limites de la paroisse, et qui s'entendraient sur les différents modes d'instruction et de discipline, et décideraient lequel est le meilleur. A ces assemblées des lectures sur l'éducation seraient faites par un ou plusieurs membres de leurs corps, ou par tout autre qui y serait invité, mais surtout par le surintendant de l'Etat, qui plus que jamais devrait être requis de visiter les Ecoles. Ces assemblées devraient être publiques et sans le moindre doute, elles ne sauraient manquer de produire ici, comme elles l'ont fait partout ailleurs, la plus heureuse influence non-seulement sur les professeurs eux-mêmes, mais sur la population de la paroisse au point de vue de la belle cause de l'éducation publique. Les bienfaits de pareilles associations s'accroîtraient encore si les différents instituts de paroisse envoyaient chacun un délégué à une assemblée centrale qui serait une fois par an tenue dans cette ville. Une délégation comme celle que je propose donnerait les informations les plus complètes et les plus correctes sur la situation et les besoins des différentes écoles par tout l'Etat. Si ces assemblées se tenaient pendant la session de la Législature, il en résulterait pour les écoles, aussi bien que pour les professeurs des avantages évidents, attendu que les plus capables d'entr'eux seraient probablement chosis pour se rendre à ces assemblées. Non seulement des lectures instructives pourraient être données par les membres de ce corps, mais aussi par les membres distingués qui composent ordinairement notre Législature.

Il est de la plus grande importance pour que les devoirs de cette place puissent être efficacement remplis qu'un commis capable soit employé, lequel aurait autorité d'agir comme assistant pendant les absences occasionnelles du surintendant de l'Etat.

Je regrette d'avoir à dire que bien peu de rapports sur les écoles ont été reçus par moi et ceux qui me sont parvenus à différentes dates ne me donnaient que des informations fort peu satisfaisantes. Je doute fort qu'à l'avenir on puisse compter avec certitude sur une plus grande régularité dans la réception de ces rapports. Peut-être si la moyenne des enfants qui assistent aux classes, et non le nombre total des résidents du district, était prise pour base de la répartition, l'envoi de ces rapports pourrait être plus sûr. Une telle base adoptée pour la répartition augmenterait très probablement le nombre des enfants qui assistent régulièrement aux écoles et empêcherait que sur le tableau des districts, le nombre des enfants résidents dans chaque district, et en âge d'assister aux classes, fut exagéré comme il l'est aujourd'hui.

Je vous transmets. ci joint l'opinion de l'avocat-général, relativement aux balances de compte payées au trésor, par les ex-surintendants de paroisse.

ROBERT CARTER NICHOLAS.
Surintendant des Ecoles Publiques de l'Etat.

Le rapport est sur motion envoyé au comité sur l'éducation publique, et le Sénat en ordonne l'impression à 200 exemplaires.

M. Wickliffe présente une résolution défendant qu'aucun comité ait le droit de nommer un secrétaire, sans y être autorisé par le Sénat.

M King présente un substitut, à l'effet d'xcepter de la règle le comité judiciaire, le comité des finances, le comité sur les améliorations intérieures et le comité sur les Lerées.

M. Wickliffe s'oppose au substitut. Il ne croit pas que les comités doivent avoir, de droit, la faculté de se nommer un secrétaire; mais lorsqu'un comité viendra demander un secrétaire au Sénat, par l'organe de son président, en alléguant que ce secrétaire lui est absolument nécessaire dans l'accomplissement de ses devoirs, le Sénat accordera toujours la demande. Il propose que le substitut soit déposé sur le bureau indéfiniment. La proposition est adoptée par 15 voix contre 14.

A la suite d'un débat de quelques instants, la résolution de M. Wickliffe est adoptée, après avoir reçu un amendement qui fixe à $4 par jour le salaire des secrétaires de comité.

Sur motion de M. King, il est résolu que le comité sur les améliorations intérieures, le comite judiciaire, le comite de finances, le comité sur les terres publiques et les levées, soient autorisés à nommer chacun un secrétaire, et que deux nouveaux membres soient adjoints au comite sur les améliorations intérieures.

Sur motion, M. Derbès est nommé du comité d'enrôlements, et M. Thériot du comité de commerce et d'agriculture.

IMPRESSIONS DE L'ETAT.

Conformément à l'annonce qui en avait été faite précedemment, M. Rivers présente un bill intitulé: « Acte à l'effet d'amender la troisième section d'un acte intitulé « Acte relatif aux impressions de l'Etat. »

Digitized by Google

Le bill est lu deux fois et renvoyé au comité judiciaire.

M. Kenner présente les résolutions suivantes :

« Attendu qu'il appert des rapports transmis aux deux chambres de l'Assemblée Générale par l'auditeur et le trésorier de l'Etat, que les dépenses courantes de l'Etat excèdent les revenus ordinaires ; de sorte que chaque année amène un déficit de près de cent mille piastres qui, avec les ressources actuelles, ne peut se solder qu'au moyen de l'emprunt, attendu qu'une somme de $300,000, faisant partie de la dette proprement dite de l'Etat, sera exigible le 1er juin 1857 ou avant, et attendu que la prudence commande dans toutes les questions financières de se mettre en mesure pour le paiement d'une dette avant qu'elle soit exigible, et que si le paiement en doit être fait au moyen de la taxe, il est bon que la taxe soit répartie sur une série d'années, afin que le fardeau, ainsi divisé, soit moins lourd pour le peuple,

Il est résolu que le comité de finances du Sénat soit requis de présenter un bill ou plusieurs bills comprenant toutes les réductions qui pourront être faites dans le budget des dépenses de l'Etat, ainsi que telles réformes dans l'évaluation de l'assiette de l'impôt, la collecte des revenus, et l'élèvement du chiffre de l'impôt sur propriétés et licences qu'il sera nécessaire d'opérer pour faire face aux dépenses courantes et à la dette proprement dite de l'Etat.

M. Kenner fait la motion que l'action du réglement soit suspendue, que la résolution soit lue une seconde et une troisième fois, et qu'elle soit votée.

M. Wickliffe propose que la résolution soit renvoyée au comité de finances.

M. Kenner.—Lorsque je présentai cette résolution, je pensais que j'avais un devoir à remplir. Le temps est arrivé où il faut absolument faire quelque chose pour tirer l'Etat de la situation embarrassée où il se trouve. Si nous ne voulons voir arriver le moment, et cela dans un avenir prochain, où l'Etat donnera au monde le spectacle d'une banqueroute dont il lui sera à tout jamais impossible de se relever, il est de notre devoir de prendre les mesures nécessaires pour conjurer ce malheur. Le seul objet que je me propose en présentant cette résolution est de mettre l'Etat à même d'adopter des mesures énergiques qui puissent le préserver de cette banqueroute qui le menace.

M. Lacey demande des éclaircissements. Il désire savoir si l'effet de la résolution serait de forcer le Sénat à adopter n'importe quel bill présenté par le comité de finances, ou si le Sénat se réserve le droit d'adopter ou de rejeter les mesures proposées.

M. Kenner réplique que l'effet de cette résolution ne serait pas d'imposer au Sénat l'adoption du bill qui serait présenté par le comité.

M. McCay croit que cette question appartient exclusivement au Comite de Finances et il ne voit pas l'utilité de la résolution, à moins qu'elle ne soit présentée dans le but de perdre du temps à ne rien faire. Il est du devoir du Comité de Finances de prendre ces questions en considération et il ne doute pas qu'en temps et lieu ce comité ne fasse un rapport conforme aux vues de la résolution.

M. Kenner.—Je suis surpris que de semblables remarques puissent être faites par un sénateur dans cette enceinte. Après que mon nouveau collègue aura siégé deux ou trois mois ici il s'apercevra d'une chose qu'il ne sait pas encore, c'est que je suis aussi peu disposé que quelque autre membre que ce soit du Sénat à parler pour ne rien dire et en pure perte de temps.

Mon seul but, monsieur, en présentant cette résolution est, comme je l'ai déjà dit, de faire bien sentir au Sénat la nécessité d'adopter quelques mesures pour tirer l'Etat de l'embarras où il est. Le cas est là évident, palpable, devant nos yeux, l'Etat est à la veille d'une banqueroute. Il ne peut y avoir de doutes sur ce fait. Ici même, monsieur, dans les rues de cette ville, dans la capitale de l'Etat, nous voyons des juges de nos cours descendre du tribunal où ils administrafent la justice, pour escompter des mandats sur le trésor public afin de réaliser leur salaire. Lorsque nous voyons de telles choses se passer, peut-on s'étonner que nou devions rougir de la position que nous occupons ! Depuis bien des années les dépenses courantes de l'Etat excèdent ses revenus et de la sorte a eu lieu un déficit annuel que l'emprunt seul a pu couvrir. Nous avons emprunté et emprunté encore, nous avons payé intérêts sur intérêts jusqu'à ce qu'aujourd'hui pas un membre de cette assemblée ne peut dire à combien s'élève l'intérêt que nous payons. Mais indépendamment de cela, pour réduire, pour éteindre cet excès de nos dépenses nous nous sommes rendus coupables de mauvaise foi en empruntant aux différents fonds qui nous ont été alloués par le Congrès, tels que les fonds des Ecoles Publiques, les fonds de la vente des terres en marais &c. &c., sans accorder d'intérêt sans prendre aucune mesure pour le paiement. C'est pour remédier à cet état de choses et pour rétablir le crédit de l'Etat que j'ai présenté cette résolution, et on me repond en insinuant que je parle pour ne rien dire !

Si c'est le devoir du comité de finances de prendre en considération cette question, n'est-ce pas aussi le devoir du Sénat ?

J'ai dit tout à l'heure que nous avons à plusieurs reprises emprunté aux fonds dont il nous a été fait donation. En ce moment même, si je suis bien informé, une proposition est devant la Chambre d'emprunter $50,000 au fonds des terres en marais ; et savez-vous dans quel but ? pour nous payer, nous membres de l'Assemblée Générale ! J'insiste donc, monsieur, à dire que ce sujet réclame impérieusement la considération de la Chambre et je ne vois pas la convenance qu'il y aurait à le référer au comité de finances Le but de la resolution est de donner des instructions à un comité pour qu'il fasse une certaine chose, pourquoi donc la referer à ce comité pour qu'il en fasse un rapport ?

M. Kenner demande que les règles soient suspendues. Sa motion est acceptée et la resolution est adoptées Un seul sénateur, M. Hodge, vote contre elle.

M. Kennedy, greffier de la Chambre, annonce que l'orateur a signé le bill qui place dans le Trésor de l'Etat certains fonds appartenant aux Ecoles Publiques.

ANNONCE DE BILLS.

M. Wickliffe annonce son intention de présenter un bill faisant des appropriations aux différents districts d'école de toutes les sommes déposées au Trésor par les surintendants de paroisses, conformément aux sections 2 et 5 de l'acte de 1852 qui abolit la place des surintendants de paroisse.

M. Nichols.—Un acte pour la nomination de peseurs de sucre et de coton dans et pour la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Hodge annonce son intention de présenter un bill restreignant la juridiction de la Cour Suprême, dans les affaires civiles, à la question de droit seulement.

BILLS PRESENTES.

Conformément à l'annonce qu'il en avait faite, M. McCay présente un bill pour l'abrogation de la loi d'exemption.

Ce bill est référé au comité judiciaire.

M. Mouton.—Un acte pour l'émancipation de Susan Cittell, femme mineure du Dr Vincent Bouqui, de la paroisse de St-Landry.—Adopté.

M. Kittridge. — Un acte pour l'émancipation de Eliza Moran—Adopté.

M. Martin.—Une résolution requérant l'Ingénieur de l'Etat de faire enlever les obstacles qui se trouvent dans les bayous Pierre Pont et l'Ours—Adopté.

M. Short.—Une résolution demandant que le Trésorier de l'Etat soumette au Sénat, dans le plus bref délai possible, un tableau indiquant le total des sommes reçues au Trésor, et provenant du produit à cinq pour cent des terres publiques de l'Etat, en vertu de la 5me section de l'acte du Congrès, approuvé le 16 février 1811 (statuts révisés, page 19) quelles sommes provenant de ce fonds ont été payées pour des chemins ou des levées, quelles sommes ont été payées pour d'autres objets, et aussi un tableau des sommes payées pour des travaux d'améliorations intérieures depuis l'établissement du fond pour les améliorations intérieures en vertu de l'acte de 1833 (statuts révisés, page 327) en même temps que l'usage qui en a été fait, le montant des sommes payées pour les dépenses du bureau des commissaires pour les améliorations intérieures, antérieurement à lépoque à laquelle la direction des améliorations intérieures fut confiée à un ingénieur (statuts révisés, page 327, sections 3 et 8) ainsi que les dépenses annuelles pour l'administration de ce fonds, depuis la nomination d'un ingénieur—Adopté.

voirs des notaires hors de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, est référé au comité judiciaire.

Le Sénat entre ensuite en séance exécutive et s'ajourne immédiatement après.

VENDREDI, 28 janvier 1853.

Immédiatement après la lecture des minutes, M. Mouton, du comité des dépenses casuelles, présente un rapport relatif à un compte de papeterie présenté par MM. Carson et Armstrong, pour achats faits par le sergent d'armes de la dernière session. Le comité fait un rapport contre le paiement intégral du dompte ($900.)

A la suite d'une courte discussion, la question est renvoyée au comité, avec faculté laissée au comité d'agir comme il le jugera convenable.

M. Mouton présente une résolution défendant au sergent d'armes de faire aucun achat pour l'usage du Sénat, sans y avoir été autorisé par le comité.

La résolution est adoptée.

Compagnie du Télégraphe de la Nouvelle-Orléans et de la Rivière-Rouge.

M. Lacey rappelle qu'il y a quelques jours il a présenté un bill à l'effet d'accorder une charte d'incorporation à la Compagnie du Télégraphe de la Nouvelle-Orléans et de la Rivière-Rouge. Lorsqu'il a présenté ce bill, il ne l'avait pas lu avec attention. Plus tard il s'est aperçu que la rédaction du bill ne rend pas l'idée de l'auteur. Il demande donc la permission de retirer le bill, afin d'y faire les corrections nécessaires.

Cette permission est accordée.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Reinhart, greffier-assistant de la Chambre, fait savoir au Sénat que M. E. Solomon a été nommé greffier en chef de la Chambre, par intérim, pour remplacer M. Kennedy qui a obtenu un congé.

M. Griffin, d'un comité spécial, rapporte qu'il a examiné le compte des dépenses casuelles du trésorier et qu'il l'a trouvé correct.

La résolution de M. Martin, défendant d'introduire des vins ou des boissons fortes dans les antichambres de la salle du Sénat, est mise en discussion.

M. Martin en demande l'adoption.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il est heureux d'avoir l'occasion d'exprimer son assentiment aux principes émis par la resolution, bien que, dans son opinion, cette résolution soit inutile cette année. Il est persuadé que le comité sur les dépenses casuelles est inflexiblement opposé à ce que l'on consomme ainsi, aux frais du trésor de l'Etat, des vins et des liqueurs, abus qui se continue depuis quelque temps et qu'il est résolu à ne faire aucune appropriation pour le paiement de semblables dépenses. L'année dernière surtout, il y avait lieu à l'adoption d'une semblable résolution, ainsi qu'il va le faire sentir en présentant le rapport du comité sur les dépenses casuelles pour la dernière session, duquel document il appert qu'il a été payé à

E. J. Hart & Co., pour divers,	505 90
B. B. Hart, " "	593 75
H. W. Bell & Co., " "	200 00
Hiriard (commis), pour dépenses casuelles,	150 00
Hart & Co, pour lampes, chandelles, &c.,	394 65
Bonnecaze, pour chandelles, verres, &c,	122 30
Total,	$1,966 60

Par ce tableau, le Sénat comprendra la necessité de la résolution qui a été presentée. Non qu'elle doive avoir aucun effet à cette session; car, comme il l'a déjà dit, le comité sur les dépenses casuelles n'acceptera pas de comptes pour liqueurs, et en cela il approuve la détermination qu'il a prise; mais parce qu'il est nécessaire qu'il soit établi un précédent pour l'avenir.

D'après le tableau qu'il vient de lire, le Sénat verra que plus de $1,900 ont été dépensées l'année dernière, et dans ce total est compris le compte des liqueurs. Il ne dit pas que $1,900 aient été dépensées pour liqueurs seulement; il dit que les comptes de liqueurs sont compris dans ce total et puisque le comité n'a pas séparé les différents items, il ne lui est pas possible à lui de le faire. Il ne peut donc par conséquent établir exactement le montant qui a été payé pour les liqueurs en particulier, mais les sénateurs peuvent se faire, par eux-mêmes, une idée de la somme qui a dû être payée de la sorte, par cette législature de réductions et de réforme. A cette session qui vient de commencer la résolution proposée n'aurait aucune utilité pratique, puisque le comité ne consentira à aucune dépense de cette nature; mais il est convenable que le peuple sache ce qui a été fait à la dernière session. Il espère que la résolution sera adoptée.

M. Burthe, dit que le sénateur qui vient de parler commet une erreur. Qu'il est venu à lui (M. Burthe) comme président du comité sur les dépenses casuelles à la dernière session du Sénat, et l'a prié de lui indiquer quelles sommes avaient été dépensées en liqueurs. Que lui (M. Burthe), a répondu qu'il ne pouvait pas le faire, mais qu'il a referé M. Wickliffe aux titres sous lesquels étaient inscrites ces dépenses; qu'en les consultant il pouvait obtenir les informations qu'il demandait. Si mon collègue, ajoute-t-il, avait pris la peine de se rendre au bureau et d'examiner les comptes, il aurait pu facilement s'assurer au juste de la somme qui a été dépensée en liqueurs.

Je voterai néanmoins en faveur de la résolution présentée par le sénateur de l'Assomption, parceque mon avis est qu'il est temps que le cabinet du coin soit enfin fermé.

M. Wickliffe fait la remarque qu'il n'a nullement affirmé que la somme entière de $1900 ait été dépensée en liqueurs seulement ; il a seulement dit que le montant payé pour les liqueurs était compris dans ce total

M. Barthe—Il est vrai que ce montant est compris dans ce total, mais il est loin de le composer seul.

M. Lacoste est opposé à la résolution. Il ne pense pas que les dépenses de liqueurs faites par les sénateurs doivent être payées par l'Etat ; mais en même temps, il ne croit pas qu'on doive priver les sénateurs individuellement du droit d'avoir des liqueurs pour leur usage particulier. Une autre raison pour laquelle il s'oppose à la résolution est que les buveurs d'eau ne sont jamais bons.

M. Derbès présente un substitut par lequel le comité sur les dépenses casuelles est requis de ne rien accorder pour frais de vins et de liqueurs.

M. Mouton dit qu'il ne voit pas l'utilité de ce substitut, attendu que le comité tout entier est oppose à ce qu'il ne soit rien accordé pour frais de vins et de liqueurs et rien ne pourrait l'affermir davantage dans l'inflexible résolution qu'il a prise.

M. Martin fait la proposition de déposer le substitut sur le bureau et demande que sa motion soit mise aux voix.

M. Kenner déclare qu'il ne pourra voter pour le dépôt sur le bureau, attendu que ce serait consacrer en principe qu'il désire que le comité paie des comptes de cette nature.

M. Martin retire sa motion à l'effet de prendre le vote du Sénat.

M. Derbès fait en son nom la proposition retirée par M. Martin.

Le vote est pris et la motion du dépôt sur le bureau est rejetée.

M. Martin propose un amendement défendant au sergent d'armes de laisser introduire des liqueurs fortes.

M. Griffin pense qu'une semblable résolution aurait un effet nuisible sur les sénateurs attaqués de dyspepsie.

M. Martin déclare qu'il est disposé à faire subir à sa résolution un autre amendement qui permettra à tout senateur de se soustraire à la règle, en faisant inscrire son nom dans le journal, et de lui donner, la faculté d'avoir, cette formalité une fois remplie, une bouteille de liqueur forte dans son pupitre.

L'amendement de M. Martin est deposé sur le bureau.

La motion est faite d'adopter le substitut.

M. Kenner espère que le Sénat, après y avoir réfléchi, n'adoptera pas la résolution ; attendu que ce serait un manque d'égards pour les membres du comité, qui ont declare qu'ils n'alloueraient aucun compte pour liqueurs fortes.

Le substitut est adopté par 20 voix contre 10.

BILLS PRESENTÉS.

M. Lacoste.— Un acte pour autoriser William Bridges et Elizabeth McRien, sa femme, à adopter Minerova Jane Campbell.—Adopté.

M. Derbès.—Un acte pour amender la 3me section d'un acte intitulé « Acte relatif à la vente d'une partie des terres marécageuses et des terres submergées qui ont été accordées à l'Etat par les actes du Congrès approuvés, l'un, le 2 de mars 1849 et l'autre le 28 de septembre 1850, et relatif à l'emploi du produit de cette vente.»—Renvoyé au comité judiciaire.

M. Shart.—Un acte intitule « Acte pour confirmer la vente des terres, situées sur le Raccourci.»—Adopté.

BILLS VENANT DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Solomon demande que le Sénat donne son concours a un acte relatif à un emprunt, dans le but de payer les dépenses de l'Etat.—Renvoyé au comité de finances.

Il demande aussi son concours à une résolution requérant nos représentants et enjoignant à nos sénateurs au Congrès de faire leurs efforts pour obtenir l'établissement d'une malle hebdomadaire entre Winnsborough et le point de traverse de la Rivière-aux-Bœufs, à la traverse de Columbia.—Adopté.

Aussi, un acte créant une appropriation des sommes payées au trésor de l'Etat, par les surintendants de paroisse des écoles publiques.—Référé au comité sur l'éducation publique.

M. Solomon rapporte que la Chambre à donné son concours aux résolutions du Sénat, ayant pour but de faire enlever les obstructions qui se trouvent dans le bayou Lafourche.

MESSAGE DU GOUVERNEUR.

Sur motion de M. Wickliffe, le message du gouverneur est mis à l'ordre du jour, pour vendredi, et la Chambre ordonne que ce message et les documents y annexés soient imprimés et tirés à 5000 exemplaires.

BILLS APPROUVÉS.

Le messager spécial du gouverneur donne avis au Sénat que le gouverneur a signé le bill relatif au versement de certains fonds des écoles dans le trésor de l'Etat et la résolution autorisant le gouverneur à nommer un messager officiel.

Le président du Sénat adjoint MM. Dupré et Evans au comite sur les améliorations intérieures.

Le Sénat se réunit en séance exécutive et s'ajourne immédiatement, après l'ouverture des portes.

LUNDI, 31 janvier 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement. 23 sénateurs sont présents.

ANNONCÉ DE BILLS.

M. Todd.—Un acte relatif à la décision des causes dans les cas de récusation.

M. Burthe.—Un acte pour autoriser Antoine Garantier et Adelaïde Banère, sa femme, de la paroisse de Jefferson, à adopter Edward Pierre Louis, fils de Geneviève Bounère.

M. Lacey présente une résolution faisant une allocation de $300 pour ports de lettres, attendu que le maître de poste a signifié qu'autrement il ne délivrerait plus de lettres, qu'il a eu à payer lui-même les frais de port de la dernière session. Cette résolution est adoptée.

M. Wickliffe, du comité sur l'éducation publique fait un rapport en faveur du bill allouant aux écoles publiques les sommes versées dans le Trésor par les surintendants de paroisse, en vertu de la loi approuvée le 18 mars 1852.

Sur motion, l'action du réglement est suspendue, et le bill est adopté.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, son rapport sur les dépenses casuelles du bureau des Ecoles Publiques est référé au comité auquel appartient cette question.

Le président soumet au Sénat la communication suivante, transmise par le Secrétaire d'Etat.

M. Griffin.—Un acte pour l'établissement d'un séminaire d'instruction dans la paroisse des Rapides.—Référé au comité sur l'éducation publique.

Le Sénat entre ensuite en session exécutive et s'ajourne aussitôt l'ouverture des portes.

MARDI, 1er février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement; 25 sénateurs sont présents.

Immédiatement après la lecture des minutes, M. Martin demande que, conformément à l'usage qui a été suivi jusqu'ici, le Sénat élise un président intérimaire. La motion est adoptée.

M. Martin propose M. Wickliffe.

Aucun autre nom n'étant mis en avant, M. Wickliffe est élu à l'unanimité.

M. Clifton, du comité des finances, auquel avait été renvoyé le bill autorisant le Gouverneur à emprunter $100,000 pour subvenir aux dépenses de l'Etat, fait un rapport favorable et demande que le bill soit mis à la discussion.

Le bill est mis devant la Chambre, lu une seconde et une troisième fois, et adopté sans discussion.

Un rapport transmis par le register du bureau des terres est soumis au Sénat.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, ce rapport est renvoyé au comité des terres et des levées, et l'impression en est ordonnée à 500 exemplaires.

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

Bills auxquels la Chambre a donné son concours :

Acte pour émanciper Susanne Little, avec des amendements.

Acte pour émanciper Judson J. Howerton.

Le greffier de la Chambre demande aussi le concours du Sénat pour les bills suivants :

Acte pour venir au secours de Thomas D. Nix.

Acte pour allouer une certaine somme pour salaires d'assesseurs pour les taxes de l'année 1852.

Après s'être formé en séance exécutive, le Sénat s'ajourne.

MERCREDI, 2 février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble, conformément à l'ajournement.

Aussitôt après la lecture du journal, M. Clifton du comité de finances auquel a été référé le bill appropriant une certaine somme d'argent au paiement des assesseurs de taxes pour l'année 1852, fait un rapport favorable avec quelques amendements par lesquels l'appropriation est réduite.

Le bill décrète que les somme pour les paiements seront prises des fonds dont les assesseurs sont eux-mêmes respectivement collecteurs.

M. Rivers désirerait savoir pourquoi cet argent serait pris des fonds spécifiés dans le bill.

M. Clifton dit que cette question est tout entière de celles que règle la loi. Il croit que le bill est rédigé dans toutes les formes ordinaires et le sénateur de l'Ascension peut dire lui-même s'il n'en est pas ainsi.

M. Kenner dit que les collecteurs du fonds général doivent être payés de ce fonds lui-même, et les collecteurs des fonds spéciaux doivent l'être de chacun de ces fonds respectivement.

Le rapport du comité est adopté et le bill passe.

M. Clifton, du même comité, rapporte un bill pour venir au secours de Thomas C. Dickham, shérif de la paroisse de Washington.

Il explique l'objet du bill, lequel est de payer au shérif les commissions qui lui sont dues, conformement à la loi; lesquelles commissions, avec le montant des collectes faites par lui, ont été déposées entre les mains de l'auditeur, quoique postérieurement au terme prescrit par la loi. Il n'est pas en défaut puisqu'il a payé jusqu'au dernier sou de la somme qu'il a collectée.

M. Hodge, dit qu'en principe il est opposé à tout bill de la nature de celui qui vient d'être présenté. La loi exige impérativement que les collecteurs fassent versement de leurs collectes à de certaines époques. Elle exige des officiers publics de certains devoirs qui devraient être remplis. Mais aussi longtemps que la Législature leur viendra en aide, lorsqu'ils auront manqué à leurs obligations, ils ne se conformeront jamais aux exigences de la loi. En conséquence, et pour le principe seulement, il demandera l'enrégistrement de son vote contre ce bill et il demande l'appel nominal sur son adoption.

M. Boatner fait la remarque que si son collègue connaissait bien toutes les circonstances de l'affaire, il ne ferait pas opposition au bill. Le principe que défend M. Hodge est parfaitement correct. Mais les circonstances qui se rattachent à cette affaire sont telles, qu'elles en doivent faire une exception. Il n'y a pas eu de la faute de la personne en faveur de laquelle le bill demande secours, si le versement n'a pas eu lieu à temps, c'est une modification introduite dans la loi qui en a été la cause. Sous l'empire de la loi qui était en vigueur l'année dernière, les collecteurs avaient donné sécurité pour le paiement de leurs collectes avant le 31 décembre de chaque année. Une loi subséquente, passée à la dernière session de la Législature, a changé l'époque de ses versements et l'a fixée au 1er décembre au lieu du 31. Plusieurs collecteurs n'ont pas pu cette année se conformer à la nouvelle loi, et ils ont agi en toute conformité à leurs cautions et aux obligations contractées par eux, quoiqu'ils n'aient fait leurs paiements qu'un peu après le 1er décembre, terme fixé par la loi. Ils ne sont en défaut pour aucune somme.

M. Burthe corrobore le rapport du sénateur de Caldwell.

M. Hodge dit que si les circonstances sont telles, il retirera sa motion et votera en faveur du bill.

Le bill est alors adopté.

Le même membre, du même comité, présente un rapport favorable au bill pour venir au secours de G. C. Nix, collecteur de taxes d'Etat pour la paroisse de Catahoula, et aussi un rapport favorable au bill pour venir au secours de l'ex-shérif de la paroisse des Rapides.

Les deux bills sont adoptés.

M. Kenner, du comité des banques et maisons de banque, présente un rapport accompagné d'un bill par lequel les qualifications requises pour être nommé directeur de la Banque des Citoyens, sont changées par un amendement à la 17me section de la charte, de telle sorte que toutes personnes qui sont citoyens de l'Etat et possèdent à l'époque de l'élection 50 actions du fonds capital de la Compagnie, deviennent éligibles. Le bill doit être mis en vigueur lorsqu'il aura été accepté par une majorité des directeurs, en nombre et en actions.

Le bill est lu une fois et référé.

M. Lacey, de la part du comité judiciaire, présente un rapport défavorable à plusieurs bills pour l'émancipation de mineurs. Le comité ne croit pas qu'il soit convenable d'encourager une législation exceptionnelle de cette nature, et il ne voit rien dans les cas qui lui ont été référés qui justifie une déviation de la règle.

Sur motion de M. Griffin, le rapport est déposé sur le bureau, sujet à l'appel.

M. Palfroy présente un bill faisant une appropriation pour le paiement de la balance due par la dernière Convention d'Etat.

M. Palfrey explique qu'une appropriation de $25,000 a été faite pour défrayer les dépenses de la convention ; mais cette appropriation a été épuisée quelque temps avant l'ajournement de la convention. Avec toute l'économie possible, car en économisant le temps elle économisait l'argent, la convention n'a pu se tenir dans les limites de l'appropriation. Il devient donc nécessaire d'effectuer un emprunt au nom de l'Etat.

L'obligation contractée s'élevait à $7,000 et le montant total du déficit laissé par la convention est de plus de $8,000. C'est pour faire face à cet arriéré encore dû, qu'il présente ce bill.

M. Burthe désire savoir si l'intention du sénateur est que le bill soit adopte immédiatement ou s'il préfère qu'il soit référé à un comite.

M. Palfrey croit que l'urgence et que la nature de la dette exigent la passation immédiate de ce bill.

M. Slack présente une résolution enjoignant à l'ingénieur de l'Etat de faire le relevé du Bayou Plaquemines et de faire un rapport sur la convenance qu'il y aurait à construire des travaux à l'embouchure du dit bayou dans le but d'empêcher que le bois de dérive n'y puisse pénétrer.

M. Short désire savoir si cela occasionnera aucune dépense du fonds des améliorations intérieures.

M. Martin répond que non.

M. Slack dit que des travaux de la nature de ceux auxquels il est fait allusion dans la résolution ont été déjà faits une fois à l'embouchure du Bayou Plaquemines ; mais il y a plusieurs années qu'ils ont été détruits par le feu. Depuis lors de grands inconvénient et de graves dommages aux propriétés ont été occasionnés par la destruction de ces travaux. La résolution suggère seulement de quelle importance il serait qu'ils fussent reconstruits et que de la sorte les inconvénients actuels fussent évités. Le bois de dérive qui entre dans le bayou s'accumule en très grande quantité et obstrue l'écoulement de l'eau dans le golfe. Il en résulte presque tous les ans de désastreuses inondations.

Comme la résolution n'a en vue rien de plus qu'un simple rapport de l'Ingénieur de l'Etat sur la convenance qu'il y aurait à refaire les travaux en question, il espère qu'elle sera adoptée.

M. Short pense que ce travail exigera que certaines sommes soient tirées des fonds alloués aux améliorations intérieures. Dans cette partie de l'Etat qu'il représente, on a beaucoup entendu parler des fonds consacrés aux améliorations intérieures, mais jamais un sou n'en est parvenu jusque là. Les Sénateurs ne devront donc pas être étonnés si les constituants montrent une curiosité assez excusable dans l'examen de ce sujet, et s'ils désirent avoir aussi quelques unes des miettes qui tombent en si grande abondance dans d'autres parties de l'Etat. Les Sénateurs doivent donc, il le répète, leur pardonner de désirer savoir l'emploi que l'on fait de cet intéressant crédit ouvert aux améliorations intérieures, dont pas un sou ne s'est jamais montré dans sa localite. Ses constituants ont entendu parler d'allocations faites au Bayou Plaquemines et au Bayou tel et tel, mais c'est là tout ce qu'ils en ont su. Ils desirent savoir au plus tôt ce que tout cela coûte.

M. Slack dit que c'est précisément dans ce but qu'il a presenté cette resolution.

L'objet qu'elle se propose est d'arriver à la connaissance du montant que coûteraient les travaux proposés.

M. Short fait observer que s'il ne s'agit que du salaire ordinaire de l'Ingénieur de l'Etat, il ne fera aucune opposition, mais que si ces travaux doivent empieter sur les fonds destinés aux améliorations intérieures, il n'y consentira pas.

M. Martin explique que la résolution n'a nullement pour but de toucher à ces fonds. Elle requiert simplement l'Ingénieur de l'Etat de faire un travail qui rentre strictement dans ses attributions.

La résolution est définitivement adoptée.

Election d'un Sénateur pour les Etats-Unis.

M. Griffin présente une résolution conjointe à l'effet de procéder à l'élection d'un Sénateur au Congrès, vendredi prochain, en remplacement de M. S. W. Downs, dont le terme expire.

M. Martin demande si le Sénateur a annoncé son intention de présenter cette résolution. Le réglement exige que cette annonce soit faite, et il insistera sur l'application du réglement.

M. Griffin ne connait l'existence d'aucun réglement pareil.

M. Martin réplique qu'une résolution conjointe est de la même nature qu'un bill. Le Sénateur devrait connaître les réglements aussi bien que lui-même. Ces réglemens exigent l'annonce préalable, et il s'oppose à ce que la résolution soit présentée de cette manière.

Le président décide que la résolution n'est pas à l'ordre.

M. Griffin désire que le règlement en question lui soit indiqué. Il n'en connaît pas l'existence.

M. Martin dit que le président a déja décidé que la résolution n'est pas à l'ordre et il s'oppose à la présentation de la résolution, quant à présent.

M. Griffin annonce alors qu'il présentera les résolution demain.

M. Hodge présente une résolution requérant l'ingénieur d'Etat d'examiner s'il est nécessaire et possible de faire un canal à écluses, près des chûtes de la Rivière Rouge à Alexandrie, de faire disparaitre ces chûtes ou de les rendre moins rapides, de calculer le cout probable des traveaux nécessaires à cette fin et de faire son rapport sur le tout.

La résolution est adoptée.

M. Palfrey demande et obtient la permission de présenter un bill intitulé : "Acte pour autoriser les opérations de Banque dans l'Etat de la Louisiane, et il fait la motion que cet acte soit renvoyé au comité des Banques.

M. Palfrey dit que le bill qu'il présente est en tout semblable à un bill qui est maintenant devant l'autre chambre, ayant pour objet l'établissement des institutions connues sous le nom de « Free Banks », et qu'en faisant cette motion, son but est de donner au comité des banques le temps d'étudier, avec le soin et l'attention que le sujet demande, le bill qu'il soumet à la considération du Sénat. C'est un sujet qui embrasse d'importantes questions sur les finances, et le système de banques, et l'influence du bill qui sera adopté, pernicieuse ou salutaire, sera immense sur la circulation du pays. Il ne voudrait pas que l'on inférât de ce qu'il présente ce bill qu'il désire le voir adopter ou qu'il s'engage à l'appuyer. Il n'a pas encore examiné le sujet avec assez d'attention pour dire qu'elle sera sa ligne de conduite à cet égard. C'est pour que les dispositions de ce bill puissent, sans perdre de temps, être mûrement étudiées par le comité des Banques, qu'il fait sa motion, laquelle consiste à renvoyer le bill à ce comité.

Sur motion de M. Palfrey, le bill est lu deux fois et renvoyé au comité des banques.

M. McCay annonce qu'il a l'intention de présenter un bill dans le but de canceller certains bons émis par des officiers publics, et ayant pour objet la radiation d'hypothèques résultant de l'inscription des dits bons.

Le même membre présente une résolution ayant pour objet la nomination d'un comité réuni, chargé d'examiner les livres du Trésorier.

BILLS RENVOYES A DES COMITES

M. Mouton.—Acte pour venir au secours de Piere Onézéime Broussard ancien surintendant de la paroisse de Vermillon,—Comite judiciaire.

Acte pour venir au secours de Alexander McDonald, résidant à l aparoisse de Vermillon—Comité des réclamations.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

Une résolution demandant un bureau de poste aux établissements français dans la paroisse de Livingston est adoptée.

Sur motion de M. Short, cette partie du rapport du register du bureau des terres publiques est renvoyée au comité judiciaire.

Sur motion, le Sénat s'ajourne.

JEUDI, 3 février 1853.

Le Sénat se réunit conformément à l'ajournement.

Après la lecture du journal M. Kenner demande et obtient la permission de présenter sans avis préalable le bill suivant :

« Acte pour interdire la circulation de petits billets. »

Section 1re.—Il est décrété par le Sénat et la Chambredes Représentants réunis en Assemblée Générale,

Qu'à dater de la promulgation de cet acte, il ne sera plus permis à aucun individu ni à aucune association d'individus autorisés ou non autorisés à faire des opérations de banque, non plus qu'à aucune corporation politique ou autre dans les limites de la Louisiane, de de créer, émettre ou faire émettre, de payer ou recevoir en paiement aucune lettre de crédit, billet de banque ou billet à ordre ou autre papier destiné à la circulation comme représentatif d'espèces, d'un montant ou d'une dénomination moindre que cinq piastres.

Section 2me.—Il est de plus décrété, etc. Qu'aucun individu ou aucune association d'individus ou aucune corporation politique ou autre qui contreviendra aux dispositions du présent acte, sera passible, pour chaque contravention, de la somme de dix piastres recouvrable avec les frais d'instance au nom et pour le bénéfice de toute personne qui intentera et suivra l'action en recouvrement jusqu'à jugement définitif pardevant toute Cour de juridiction compétente.

Section 3me.—Il est de plus décrété, &c., que la pénalité décrétée par la 2me section de cet acte ne sera pas recouvrable avant six mois, à dater de la promulgation de cet acte, d'aucun individus ou association d'individus autres que ceux qui émettront ou feront émettre les dits petits billets, qui donneront ou recevront en paiement aucun des billets dont la circulation est défendue par la première section de cet acte.

Le bill a été référé au comité sur les Banques.

M. Griffin, ayant la parole, déclare qu'il se lève afin d'obtenir des informations sur un certain sujet. Il avait été, dit-il, nommé, par le président du Sénat, membre du comité des améliorations intérieures, et s'était rendu à la réunion de ce comité à l'heure fixée, et qu'à cette réunion une élection d'un commis de ce comité avait été faite, et que M. Coco avait été élu par une majorité des membres. Il avait compris que l'on avait pris exception de ce fait du comité, et par conséquent il désirait être informé, quant au droit du comité, de nommer son propre commis.

M. King dit qu'il avait l'intention d'appeler, en temps opportun, l'attention du Sénat sur ce fait, et qu'à cet effet il avait rédigé un rapport des actes du comité à cette séance, et qu'il allait lire ce rapport afin que les sénateurs sussent exactement ce qui s'était passé à cette séance.

Il a donc lu le rapport suivant :

Le président du comité des améliorations intérieures, en son propre nom, demande à soumettre le rapport suivant :

Le sujet sur lequel je demande à appeler l'attention du Sénat, est exposé dans la copie suivante des délibérations du dit comité.

Comité des Améliorations intérieures.

Séance du 2 de février.

Tous les membres du comité sont présents.

M. King, président, annonce au comité qu'il a nommé, le 28 de janvier, M. Louis Castren, greffier du comité ; que cette nomination lui a paru nécessaire.

M. Griffin fait la motion suivante :

Je fais la proposition que M. Bienvenu Coco soit élu greffier du comité des améliorations intérieures,

Le président décide que la motion n'est pas à l'ordre, attendu, qu'en vertu de la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée par le Sénat, aucun comité ne doit avoir le droit d'employer plus d'un commis ; que M. Louis Castera a été nommé par le président, le 28 du mois dernier, greffier du comité, qu'il remplit actuellement ces fonctions ; qu'aussi longtemps qu'il n'a pas été déplacé il n'y a pas de vacance, et qu'il ne saurait y avoir d'autre greffier élu.

M. Griffin appelle de la décision du Président et l'appel est maintenu.

Avant que l'on mît aux voix la proposition de procéder à l'élection d'un commis, M. Griffin proposa d'amander sa motion en désignant M. Coco comme greffier du comité.

A ce moment, je lus au comité le procès-verbal des délibérations et y appelai l'attention des membres, je compris qu'ils en reconnaissaient l'exactitude.

Je signifiai alors au comité que je protesterais contre toute action postérieure du comité sur cette question et que je ferais mon rapport au Sénat et lui demanderai de décider la question, sur quoi je me retirai. Je dirai de plus qu'en nommant M. Castera j'agis conformément à ce que j'ai compris avoir été l'usage invariablement suivi en pareilles matières par les deux branches de la Législature.

Il m'a paru que le président du comité avait jusqu'ici toujours choisi le greffier du comité, et qu'une élection de greffier par un comité était une chose jusqu'ici inconnue.

Dans ces circonstances, j'ai cru qu'il était de mon devoir d'en référer au Sénat pour qu'il décide si j'ai transgressé les pouvoirs qui appartiennent en propre aux fonctions de président.

Soumis respectueusement,
W Wm. KING.

M. Griffin prétend que le rapport qui vient d'être lu ne peut être reçu comme le rapport du Comité. Il se peut que ce soit le rapport du président, mais ce n'est pas le rapport du Comité. Il lit alors le rapport suivant de la majorité des membres du comité.

Conformément à un avis préalable, le Comité des améliorations intérieures s'assemble le 2 de février 1853. Sont présents les membres suivants, MM. King, Griffin, Todd, Kittridge, Kemp, Evans et Nicholls. Le Comité se trouvant organisé et prêt à commencer ses travaux, le président M. King, donne avis au Comité qu'il a nommé M. Louis Castera, greffier du Comité.

M. Griffin fait alors la motion que M. Bienvenu Coco soit élu greffier du Comité des améliorations intérieures.

M. Kittridge seconde la motion.

Le Président décide que la motion n'est pas à l'ordre.

Sur quoi M. Griffin appelle de la décision du président, et, le président ayant posé la question : la décision du président sera-t-elle maintenue ? MM. King, Kemp, Evans votèrent dans l'affirmative et MM. Nicholls, Todd, Kittridge et Griffin dans la négative. L'appel ayant été maintenu, et le résultat du vote proclamé, M. King se retire sans mettre aux voix la résolution originaire. M. Nicholls, appuyé par M. Kittridge, désigne M. Kemp comme président intérimaire du Comité.

M. Kemp ayant pris le fauteuil, la motion originaire présentée par M. Griffin est mise aux voix.— Sur quoi MM. Nicholls, Todd, Kittridge, Griffin, votent pour M. Coco, et MM, Evans et Kemp, sont dispensés de voter.

Le president annonce alors que M. Coco est dûment élu greffier du comité.

Sur motion le comité s'ajourne.

Signé : P. H. KEMP,
Président intérimaire.

M. Wickliff, déclare qu'il a écouté avec beaucoup d'attention les deux rapports qui ont été présentés l'un, par le président du comité des améliorations intérieures, l'autre par le sénateur des Avoyelles, qui a cherché par-là à se tirer du mauvais pas où il s'était jeté.

M. Griffin.—Pardonnez-moi, monsieur, le rapport que j'ai présenté n'est pas mon rapport ; c'est celui du comité, c'est à ce titre que je le présente. Je ne le soumets pas comme une justification de ma conduite. Je suis simplement l'organe par lequel le comité fait connaître au Sénat le resultat de ses travaux.

M. Wickliffe.—Alors, monsieur, le rapport aurait dû être présenté et lu par le président intérimaire du comité.

M. Kemp.—Mais, puisque le sénateur le désire, je changerai l'expression dont je me suis servi. Je dirai donc que j'ai écouté avec beaucoup d'attention les deux rapports qui ont été présentés, l'un par le président du comité, et l'autre, par le sénateur des Avoyelles, au nom de la majorité et dans le but de justifier sa propre conduite. Dans ces deux rapports, je vois que le président du comite des améliorations intérieures, s'appuyant sur un droit établi, a nommé un greffier, que le sénateur des Avoyelles et d'autres membres du comité désiraient voir nommé une autre personne, et qu'après la nomination d'un greffier par le président du comité, le sénateur des Avoyelles, d'accord avec les membres du côté opposé a fait procéder à l'election d'un autre greffier, en violation d'un usage établi et d'une résolution expresse du Sénat, qui déclare qu'aucun comité n'aura pas plus d'un greffier. Le président du comité a agi d'une manière régulière, il s'est tenu dans les limites de son droit et il est du devoir du Sénat de le soutenir.

M. Hodge desire présenter quelques observations à ce sujet. Il y a au fond du débat une question sérieuse. Il s'agit de décider si les comités ont le droit de nommer leur propre greffier, où si le président a le droit de faire la nomination contrairement aux vœux formellement exprimés de la majorité du comité. La question ne peut plus, à son avis, être débattue. Elle a déjà été résolu par le Sénat. Le représentant lui même (M. Hodge) a précédemment présenté une résolution permettant aux présidents de comité de nommer des greffiers chaque fois que, dans leur opinion, les circonstances l'exigeraient. Cette résolution a été repoussée ; et le Sénat a, par là, refusé expressément le pouvoir réclamé par le comité des améliorations intérieures.

Digitized by Google

M. Griffin exprime son adhésion aux observations présentées par le sénateur de De Soto.

M. Wickliffe pense qu'il y a erreur. Il ne se rappelle pas qu'on ait jamais agi sur une pareille résolution.

M. King croit que le sénateur fait confusion. Il demande la lecture de cette partie du journal qui a trait au sujet.

Le sénateur lit la partie en question.

M. Rivers, croit qu'un débat déjà bien inutilement long, a eu lieu sur cette question, et tout annonce qu'il se prolongera indéfiniment encore si l'on n'y met un terme. Il offre donc, pour tout concilier, une résolution qui réfère toute la question à un comité avec instructions de choisir ses propres commis.

M. Rivers retire plus tard cette résolution.

M. Wickliffe présente une resolution qu'il retire ensuite, laquelle autorise le comité à nommer ses commis lorsqu'il y aura unanimité entre ceux qui le composent.

Une discussion de quelques instants a lieu; après quoi M. King se lève et dit qu'en faisant la nomination à laquelle s'est opposée une partie des membres du comité, il n'avait pas agi inconsidérément. Membre tout nouveau, il a cherché avant de se décider à faire aucune nomination, à obtenir toutes les informations qui pouvaient satisfaire son esprit à ce sujet, et il avait agi, non d'après ses propres idées, mais en s'éclairant de l'experience des autres. Au nombre de ceux avec lesquels je me suis consulté, dit-il, se trouve le sénateur de l'Ascension. Ce sénateur m'a dit que le droit de nommer les commis des comités, appartenait, d'après la coutume, au président de chaque comité. Plus tard, il est encore venu à moi et dans une conversation que nous avons eue à ce sujet, il m'a dit, qu'à sa connaissance, jamais difficulté de cette nature n'avait eu lieu entre un comité et son président, et qu'en conséquence il ne pouvait me dire quelle était la coutume en pareille occurrence. J'ai aussi consulté M. Moise, M. J. E. King et plusieurs autres anciens membres de la Législature dans les deux Chambres et dans les deux partis, et tous exprimèrent la même opinion que, d'après la coutume établie, les présidents des comités nommaient toujours les commis. Tous les présidents de ce corps ont nommé leurs propres commis, dans cette session. Je suis moi-même membre d'un autre comité dont tous les membres, d'un cummun accord, ont concédé au president le droit de nomination. Le président du comité de finances a nommé le commis de ce comité. Le président du comité des terres et levées en a fait de même; et pour faire voir comment les choses ont eu lieu je vais lire le mandat d'élection donné dans cette occasion :

« J'ai nommé M. Edwin Floyd, commis du comité des terres et levées.

» H. Short, président. »

M. Floyd a agi depuis en vertu de cette nomination, et c'est encore en vertu d'elle qu'il attend son salaire de commis.

En nommant M. Castera, j'ai agi de la même manière que tous les autres présidents. Je n'ai fait qu'exercer un droit qui leur a toujours été concédé. Si le Sénat désirait les en dépouiller, il aurait dû le faire par l'introduction de quelque règlement ou de quelque résolution exprimant bien son intention; mais dans les circonstances actuelles, je ne désire pas être accusé par le Sénat d'avoir outre-passé mes pouvoirs, et cette accusation existerait de fait si la nomination que j'ai faite n'est pas reconnue.

M. Wickliffe présente la résolution suivante :

Résolu que l'action du président du Comité des Améliorations Intérieures dans la nomination qu'il a faite d'un commis était en tout conforme à l'usage établi dans le Sénat.

M. Griffin dit qu'il ne comprend pas très bien la résolution qui vient d'être présentée, et du reste il doute que celui qui l'a offerte la comprenne lui-même.

M. Wickliffe répond qu'il n'a pas l'habitude de voter sans savoir ce qu'il fait ou de présenter des résolutions qu'il ne comprend pas. Lorsqu'il aurait besoin d'être éclairé sur ce point ou sur tout autre par le sénateur des Avoyelles, il ne manquerait pas de s'adresser à lui.

M. Todd dit qu'étant membre du Comité des Améliorations Intérieures, il jugeait nécessaire de présenter son opinion sur la question qui se débattait.

On avait nié que le président eut agi conformément à ce qui s'est fait jusqu'ici en nommant un secrétaire du comité. Même en admettant cette doctrine, l'usage ne fait pas loi. Mais il craignait qu'après avoir examiné la chose, on ne découvrit que l'usage qui lui donnait ce droit exigeait aussi que la nomination se fit avec le concours des membres du Comité et après les avoir consultés.

Il est peut-être d'habitude que le président présente un candidat à cet égard; et si le comité ratifie ce choix d'une manière expresse ou par son silence, alors cette personne a le droit d'être regardée comme secrétaire ; la nomination n'etant valable qu'après cette ratification. Mais si le comité réuni se décide à élire son secrétaire, alors il repousse le choix de son président dont il annulle le pouvoir sur ce point. Et notre président s'est à tel point écarté de l'usage établi qu'il est le premier qui ait tenté de nommer un secrétaire contre l'opinion de la majorité d'un comité.

Il n'y a pas de droit mieux établi que celui d'un comité de nommer son secrétaire. On est même d'accord pour dire qu'un comite a le droit de nommer son président, bien que ce président soit nommé par le président du Sénat. S'il en est ainsi, comment peut-on nier que le comité n'a pas le droit de nommer son secrétaire. Les pouvoirs du comité en faisant une nomination pareille sont les mêmes que ceux du Sénat. C'est par convenance que le président du Sénat peut nommer les divers comités, mais le Sénat, s'il le juge à propos, peut lui enlever ce droit pour l'exercer lui-même, ainsi que nous avons eu dernièrement l'occasion de le voir.

Donner à un comité le droit de choisir son secrétaire serait établir un odieux principe. Cela serait dire qu'il a été établi d'une manière isolée et lorsque la doctrine démocratique n'avait pas le dessus a une époque ou la majorité ferait la loi et soumettrait pourtant un comité a la tyrannie d'un homme.

Bien que le motif que nous discutons soit peu important, le principe qui le domine vaut la peine d'occuper le Sénat.

En faisant ces observations et dans la part qu'il a prise dans la discussion, il protestait de son intention de ne blesser en aucune façon le président du comité. La préférence que ce dernier a accordée et que l'orateur signale n'est pas un motif pour manquer d'égards à l'honorable président.

La motion étant faite par M. Rivers de déposer toutes les résolutions sur le bureau, le vote est comme suit :

Oui.—MM. Burthe, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd.—13.

Non.—MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans Kemp, King, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Patterson, Short, Theriot, Wickliffe.—Total, 13.

Les oui et les non étant du nombre égal, le vote du président a fait rejeter la question.

La question portant ensuite sur les résolutions mêmes, M. Lacey propose d'y substituer les suivantes :

Il est résolu que le Sénat donne son concours à l'acte du president du comité des améliorations.

Cette proposition a été accepté par M. Wickliffe.

M. Kenner se lève pour presenter une observation. Le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans a, dans ses observations, fait allusion à lui (M. Kenner) et comme le sénateur semble être sous l'influence d'une erreur, il se croit tenu de donner, au sujet de ce qui s'est passé, des explications satisfaisantes. Il y a quelque temps le president du Comité des Améliorations Intérieures vint le trouver et lui demanda s'il pensait que les présidents des différents comités avaient le pouvoir de nommer des commis. Il répondit qu'il pensait que la coutume du Sénat était de reconnaître, par déference pour les presidents, les nominations de commis qu'ils auraient pu faire. Plus tard, cependant, il avait été trouver le sénateur et lui avait dit qu'à sa connaissance il ne s'était jamais présenté un cas où, sur cette question, le comite et le président fussent divisés. Quant à lui il avait été nommé président du Comité des Banques, dans lequel la majorité des membres lui est opposée en politique. Dans ces circonstances, il avait immédiatement exprimé sa résolution de laisser à ces messieurs tout pouvoir de nommer le greffier, attendu qu'il considérait que, bien que par déférence le Sénat eût jusqu'ici approuvé les nominations faites par les présidents des comites et que ce fût pour ainsi dire un usage établi, il pensait qu'il serait inconvenant à lui de profiter de la position qu'il ne tenait que du bon plaisir et de la courtoisie du comité, pour faire une nomination contraire à ce qu'il savait être les vœux de la majorité des membres. Telle est la substance de ce qui s'est passé entre le président du Comité des Améliorations Intérieures et moi.

Digitized by Google

M. King se lève pour présenter des explications en sens contraire. Il dit qu'il ne s'était nullement mépris sur la nature des rapports qui ont eu lieu entre le Sénateur et lui. Le langage du Sénateur ne se rapportait pas à lui (M. King), mais à lui-même, attendu qu'il avait été nommé d'un comité dont la majorité lui est opposée en politique. Quant à lui il a nommé un commis suivant ce qu'il comprend être l'usage du Sénat ; et il a fait cette nomination avant que le Comité se fût réuni et avant qu'il eût aucune chance de savoir qu'elle était son opinion ou son désir. Il avait nommé un greffier en croyant faire pour le mieux, et parce qu'il pensait qu'il en avait le droit. S'il avait ce droit, le Comité n'avait aucun droit de faire ensuite une election, attendu que le Sénat avait expressement déclaré qu'aucun comité n'aurait pas plus d'un greffier.

M. Griffin propose de remplacer le substitut de M. Lacey par le substitut suivant :

Resolu que le comité des améliorations intérieures en élisant un commis avait le droit d'en agir ainsi.

M. Derbès demande la question préalable sur le substitut. La question préalable est adoptée par le vote suivant.

Oui. — MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans, Griffin, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Mc Coy, Mouton, Neal, Palfrey, Patterson, Short, Taylor, Thériot, Wickliffe.—Total, 19.

Non.—MM. Hodge, Kenner, Lauve, Nichols, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Todd.—Total, 8.

Le substitut de M. Griffin est alors mis aux voix, et le résultat est ainsi que suit :

Oui.—MM. Barthe, Clifton, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd.—Total, 14.

Non.—MM. Boatner, Derbès, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Patterson, Short, Thériot et Wickliffe.—Total, 12.

M. Mouton fait observer qu'au moment où la question préalable a été demandée, il allait faire remarquer qu'il serait intéressant de rechercher combien d'argent cette discussion avait déjà coûté. Il en a fait le calcul pendant qu'il écoutait le débat, et il a trouvé qu'elle coûtait déjà au bon peuple de la Louisiane un peu plus de $53. Il pense qu'il est bien temps d'en finir.

M. King offre sa démission de président du comité des améliorations intérieures.

M. Kenner espère que le sénateur voudra bien retirer sa démission. Il pense qu'après réflexion, le sénateur ne persistera pas à se démettre de ses fonctions, attendu qu'il est certain que le comité, en agissant comme il l'a fait, n'a entendu nullement manquer aux égards qu'il doit au sénateur. A coup sûr on ne pourrait trouver aucune personne plus capable de remplir la place de président, aucune dont l'aptitude parfaite à ces hautes fonctions soit plus complètement appreciee.

M. Lacoste dit qu'il pense que M. King a raison de se démettre de ses fonctions, après le manque de respect dont le Sénat, de propos délibéré, s'est rendu coupable envers lui.

M. Kenner répète qu'il est persuadé que le comité n'avait aucune intention blessante pour son président. S'il pensait qu'un seul membre de ce comité eût eu la moindre idee de ce genre, il demanderait de réconsidérer le vote par lequel le substitut de M. Griffin a été adopté.

M. Todd espère que le président gardera ses fonctions. Pour sa part, il ne voulait certainement rien faire qui pût le blesser, et il croit qu'une pareille intention était loin de la pensée de ses collègues.

M. Nichols présente quelques observations dans le même sens.

M. King dit qu'il persistera dans sa détermination. Sa dignité l'empêche de conserver les fonctions de président du comité, lorsque le Sénat a refusé de ratifier ses actes en cette qualité, actes conformes à un usage antérieur. Ces messieurs peuvent dire qu'ils n'avaient aucune intention blessante, que tout ce qu'ils ont dit ou fait doit être pris dans le même sens que Pickwick l'eût pris ; quant à lui il ne saurait faire de pareilles distinctions. Il regarde les actes du comité comme une censure virtuelle de sa conduite, et comme impliquant qu'il avait transgressé ses pouvoirs. Il ne consentira pas à conserver sa position de président sous le coup d'une pareille censure.

M. Clifton prie le sénateur de retirer un moment sa démission pour qu'il puisse demander une reconsidération.

M. King y consent.

M. Clifton qui avait voté dans l'affirmative, demande une reconsidération du vote par lequel le substitut de M. Griffin avait été adopté.

La reconsidération est mise aux voix et le résultat est ainsi que suit :

Oui.— MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McCay, Mouton, Patterson, Short, Thériot, Wickliff.—13.

Non.—MM. Barthe, Griffin, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd.—13.

Le président vote dans l'affirmative et la motion de reconsideration est emportee.

Le substitut de M. Griffin est remis devant la chambre,

M. Wickliffe en demande le dépôt sur le bureau.

M. Short dit que jusqu'ici, le malheur a voulu qu'il n'ait pas pu expliquer sa manière d'envisager la question. D'abord il a pensé qu'on ne devait pas permettre que ce sujet prît le temps de la Chambre ; mais la question avait donné naissance à un debat intéressant auquel il eût désiré prendre part. Il n'a pu le faire par suite de la demande de la question préalable, manœuvre parlementaire qu'il n'avait jamais bien comprise jusqu'ici, c'est ce qui l'a empêché de parler jusqu'à ce moment. Dans la décision de cette question nous n'avons à recevoir aucune impression du passé; on a dit qu'on ne pouvait trouver l'exemple d'un cas semblable ni dans l'histoire ni dans aucun livre. Puisqu'il en est ainsi, espérons que ce qui se passera ici ne sera pas de nature à créer une facheuse impression dans le peuple. Pour sa part, il est d'avis que, même si le président avait le droit de nommer le greffier, il aurait dû hésiter à exercer ce droit contrairement aux vœux de la majorite du comité.

En pareil cas, il ne saurait y avoir harmonie entre les membres du comite, et le spectacle qu'il présenterait serait celui d'une voiture attelée de deux chevaux qui tireraient de toutes leurs forces en sens inverse. Néanmoins il lui semble que laissant de côté la question de droit, la simple courtoisie avait jusqu'aujourd'hui fait un devoir de laisser au président le choix des comis du comité. S'il y a là une question de courtoisie, ne doit elle pas être réglée suivant les règles de la courtoisie, les plus puissantes qui puissent être invoquées dans cette circonstance. Il votera donc pour que le Sénat soutienne l'action du président.

L'appel nominal est fait alors, sur motion de M. Wickliffe, de déposer sur le bureau le substitut de M. Griffin, et il résulte comme suit : 13 oui, 13 non. Le président vote dans l'affirmative, et conséquemment la motion de deposer est emportee.

M. Lacey demande l'adoption de son substitut.

M. Todd demande qu'il soit amendé par l'insertion des mots : «quoique cette nomination fût en opposition avec le desir de la majorité du comité.»

M. Wickliffe demande qu'il soit suramendé par l'addition des mots : "laquelle opposition n'a été connue du président qu'après qu'il eût fait la nomination.»

M. Hodge demande pourquoi deux membres additionnels ont été ajoutes au comité.

M. Wickliffe répond que le représentant qui adresse cette question a fait voir déjà qu'il sait mieux que lui (M. W.) les choses qui se passent derrière le rideau.

Quant à moi, ajoute-t-il, je ne sais rien de cette augmentation et n'ai rien à y voir

M. Lacey prend la parole.—L'action du président, en nommant un commis, dit-il, était bien certaine-

Digitized by Google

ment en parfait accord avec la coutume établie. L'exercice de ce droit a toujours été concédé au président, et le Sénat ne peut pas, ne doit pas répudier ses actes lorsqu'ils sont d'accord avec la coutume. Quant à la question soulevée par les amendements, elle n'a aucun rapport avec celle qui nous occupe. Il est impossible que le Sénat pense à discuter quelles peuvent avoir été les vues du comité sur une question de cette nature. Je voterai donc contre ces amendements et tous les autres qui pourront être présentés, jusqu'à ce j'aie obtenu que le vote soit pris sur la première résolution que j'ai soumise.

M. Kenner dit qu'en votant sur ces amendements, le Sénat vote sur une question de fait et non de théorie. Chaque sénateur doit donc être dirigé dans le vote qu'il donnera, par la connaissance des faits sur lesquels repose cette affaire.

M. Wickliffe dit que le sénateur de l'Ascension devrait se souvenir que dans sa propre affaire, «lorsqu'il avait fait abandon de son privilège de nommer un commis, il [M. K.] l'avait fait parce qu'il avait été nommé président d'un comité dont la majorité ne partageait pas ses opinions politiques, et que par conséquent il ne devait pas faire lui-même une nomination qu'il savait devoir être mal reçue par les autres membres du comité. Mais l'affaire du président des améliorations intérieures est bien différente. Il n'avait, lui, aucune raison de supposer qu'en exerçant lui-même son droit de nomination, il déplairait au comité.

Pour sa part, il ne consentira pas par son vote à ce qu'une résolution de blâme soit adoptée contre le président d'un comité qui n'a fait qu'exercer un juste droit toujours reconnu par le Sénat jusqu'aujourd'hui. Si le fait d'avoir nommé un commis en opposition directe au désir connu et exprimé du comité avait été porté à la connaissance du président, il aurait voté bien différemmment ; mais dans les circonstances actuelles il est certainement pour qu'on soutienne le président.

M. Kenner dit encore que la question contenue dans ces amendements qu'on propose à la Chambre, est tout simplement une question de fait. La question de courtoisie n'a rien à y faire et pourtant il demande, lui, lequel était le moins courtois, d'un comité qui nomme un commis contre le vœu de son président ou du président qui persiste à le conserver contre le vœu de la majorité du comité ? Mais sa demande reste sans réponse. Il voudrait obtenir quelques renseignements avant de donner son vote. Comment des sénateurs peuvent-ils voter sur une question de fait s'ils ignorent quels sont ces faits ? Il demande donc si la majorité du comité était opposée à la nomination faite par le président.

M. Hodge répond que la majorité y était opposée.

M. Mouton dit que toute l'affaire se trouve en détail dans le rapport du comité et dans celui du président.

L'appel nominal est alors fait sur l'amendement de M. Wickliffe, et le résultat est comme suit : 24 oui, 2 non (MM. Burthe et Griffin ayant voté dans la négative) l'amendement est donc adoptée.

M. Lacey demande alors que l'amendement de M. Todd, tel qu'il a été amendé, soit déposé sur le bureau.

M. Griffin demande l'appel nominal, lequel résulte comme suit :

Oui.—MM. Boatner, Clifton, Derbès, Evans, King, Lacoste, Lacey, McKay, Mouton, Neal, Patterson, Short, Theriot; Wickliff.—14.

Non.—MM. Burthe, Griffin Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Lauve, Nicols, Palfrey, Rivers, Slack, Smith, Taylor, Todd.—13.

En conséquence, l'amendement tel qu'il a été amendé est déposé sur le bureau.

M. Lacey fait la motion que son substitut soit adopté.

M. Kenner demande qu'il soit amendé par l'insertion des mots «par courtoisie.»

M. Boatner demande qu'il soit encore amendé par l'insertion des mots «sans qu'il revienne aucun blâme aux autres membres du comité».

Ces amendements sont adoptés et la résolution passe enfin dans la forme suivante :

Résolu, que le Sénat concourt, par courtoisie, à la décision du président du comité des améliorations intérieures dans la nomination qu'il a faite d'un commis, mais sans attacher aucun blâme aux autres membres du comité.

RESOLUTIONS ET BILLS PRESENTES.

M. Hodge, un acte pour changer le nom de James H. Shotwell en celui de Andrew Lawson Jr.

M. Lacey, une résolution enjoignant au comité judiciaire de rapporter un bill ou plusieurs bills pour l'organisation du système judiciaire de l'Etat.—Adoptée.

Un acte divisant l'Etat en districts judiciaires suprêmes, comme il est ordonné par l'article 64 de la Constitution.

M. Thériot, un acte pour émanciper Angeline, Victorine Blanchard, mineure, femme de A. W. Warren. —Référé au comité judiciaire.

ANNONCE DE BILLS.

M. Burthe, un acte pour rappeler un acte pourvoyant à la création d'un asile pour les veuves et les enfants des personnes décédées.

Sur motion le Sénat s'ajourne.

VENDREDI, 4 février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble, conformément à l'ajournement.

Sur motion de M. Derbès, M. Horatio Davis, secrétaire du Sénat, obtient un congé, et sur motion de M. King, M. Ste-Colombe Davis est nommé secrétaire pro-tem du Sénat, et prête le serment d'office.

Le secrétaire pro-tem va informer la Chambre que le Sénat a accordé un congé à M. Horatio Davis, son secrétaire, et qu'il a nommé M. Ste-Colombe Davis, secrétaire pro tem.

Il informe aussi la Chambre, que le Senat a donné son concours aux actes suivants :

Un acte pour venir au secours de Harrel McNiel, ex-collecteur de taxes pour la paroisse de Rapides.

Un acte pour venir au secours de Thomas C. Bickman, shérif de la paroisse de Washington.

Un acte pour venir au secours de Thomas D. Nix, collecteur de taxes de l'Etat pour la paroisse de Catahoula.

Et aussi, du concours du Sénat, avec amendements, à un bill faisant une appropriation d'une certaine somme d'argent, pour le paiement des assesseurs de taxes pour l'année 1852. Le Sénat demande le concours de la Chambre aux amendements qu'il a faits au bill.

Le secrétaire demande, en même temps, le concours de la Chambre aux bills et résolutions qui suivent :

Une résolution requérant nos représentants et enjoignant à nos sénateurs au Congrès, d'user de tous leurs efforts pour obtenir l'établissement d'un bureau de poste dans les établissements français de la paroisse de Livingston.

Un acte faisant une appropriation pour le paiement de l'arriéré dû pour les dépenses de la dernière Convention d'Etat.

Une résolution enjoignant à l'ingénieur d'Etat de faire un relevé des chûtes de la Rivière Rouge, et lui donnant quelques autres instructions.

Une résolution enjoignant à l'ingénieur d'Etat de faire un relevé de l'embouchure du Bayou Plaquemines, et d'en faire un rapport.

Sur motion de M. McKay, la résolution conjointe nommant des comités pour examiner les livres du trésorier, est déposée indéfiniment sur le bureau, et la résolution conjointe suivante, émanant de la Chambre des Représentants est prise en considération, Sur motion de M. McKay, les règles sont suspendues et la résolution suivante est adoptée.

Résolu par la Chambre des Représentants, sauf le concours du Sénat, qu'un comité conjoint composé de cinq membres de la Chambre et de trois du Sénat, soit nommé à l'effet d'examiner les livres du trésorier.

Les membres nommés par la Chambre étaient MM. Brenn, Ventiss, Douglas, White et McMurdo.

Le président nomme de la part du Sénat, MM. McCay, Burthe et Wickliffe.

M. Derbès présente la résolution suivante :

Résolu qu'un comité, composé de trois membres pour le Sénat, soit désigné par le président, lequel devra entrer en conférence avec un comité semblable nommé par la Chambre, pour examiner la librairie de l'Etat, et faire un rapport sur la situation de cette institution. Les règles sont suspendues et le président nomme de ce comité, MM. Derbès, King et Barthe.

Annonce de Bills.

M. Neal, un acte pour améliorer la navigation de la rivière Sabine.

M. McCay, un acte pour amender un acte intitulé : un acte pour organiser des Cours de District dans la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Theriot, un acte pour transférer la maison de Cour, le bureau du recorder et les documents qui y sont déposés, de la rive droite à la rive gauche de la rivière Nessi, dans la paroisse de St-Jacques.

M. McCay demande et obtient l'autorisation de présenter, sans annonce préalable, un bill intitulé : « Acte pour autoriser le cancellement des fonds fournis par les officiers publics. »

Sur motion les règles sont suspendues et M. Millard, du comité des réclamations, présente un rapport favorable à la réclamation de L. H. Latille, pour salaire comme témoin ; et soumet un bill en conséquence.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il existe un acte qui pourvoit à ce que chaque paroisse paie ses propres témoins. Il ne voit pas de bonnes raisons pour lesquelles une exception speciale serait faite dans ce cas, et à moins qu'il ne lui en soit présenté de satisfaisantes, il s'opposera à ce bill.

M. Millard répond qu'en 1841, année pendant laquelle ces engagements furent contractés, une loi toute différente était en vigueur, en vertu de laquelle l'Etat, et non les paroisses, payait les témoins. Le bill a été présenté, mais l'auditeur a refusé d'accepter le compte.

M. Wickliffe, dit que si le comité a examiné avec soin la question, et s'il est arrivé à une opinion bien arrêtée, qu'alors il ne s'opposera pas à l'adoption du bill.

M. Hodge désire que le bill soit mis de côté jusqu'à ce que les sénateurs puissent obtenir plus d'informations qu'ils n'en ont à ce sujet.

M. Griffin, fait remarquer que l'auditeur a refusé d'accepter le compte seulement parce qu'aucune appropriation n'avait été faite à ce sujet.

M. Derbès, dit que le comité a fait un examen approfondi du sujet, et qu'il a vu que l'Etat en 1841, payait les témoins ; c'est alors qu'ont été rendus les services qui ont motivé la présentation de ce bill. La raison qui a fait refuser à l'auditeur d'approuver ces comptes c'est, dit-il, que la dette a été prescrite.

M. Hodge dit qu'il a appris que le refus n'est basé que sur le fait qu'il n'y avait aucune somme affectée à ce paiement. Le sénateur des Avoyelles lui a dit que cette affectation de fonds aurait lieu. Lorsqu'il existe des lois générales qui règles les questions de ce genre, il ne voit pas pourquoi des lois exceptionnelles seraient faites. Il ne fera aucune motion au sujet des bills, mais il désire qu'il soit consigné, qu'il a voté contre. Tout ce qu'il demande est le temps nécessaire pour y examiner la question, pour être sûr d'être dans le vrai.

Il a pris sa place au Sénat avec la résolution de ne voter sur aucun bill sans en comprendre l'objet. Si les sénateurs jugent à propos d'emporter d'assaut les questions ils le feront sans la participation de son vote. Le sénateur des Avoyelles a dit que la seule raison du refus de l'Auditeur d'approuver le compte était l'absence d'une affectation de fonds à ce sujet; d'autres ont donné pour raison que la dette était prescrite. Si tel est le fait, cette raison suffirait peut-être pour le faire voter contre le bill. La prescription est une présomption de paiement. C'est là le principe théorique de la loi et c'est toujours considéré comme un bon moyen de défense à opposer à une reclamation. Il ne pense pas que la Législature doive se donner le tracas d'avoir continuellement devant elle de petites réclamations de cette sorte, dix ou douze ans après leur échéance. Si ses collègues désirent s'exposer à cet ennui, rien de mieux; mais quant à lui, il ne veut pas qu'il en soit ainsi et il désire avoir devant lui le temps nécessaire pour examiner la question à fond afin de ne pas voter en aveugle.

Après un débat de quelques instants, le bill est adopté.

M. Griffin présente une pétition de plusieurs citoyens des Avoyelles, demandant une affectation de fonds pour construire des levées et endoguer certains bayous dans cette paroisse.

Sur motion, cette pétition est lue et renvoyée au comité des levées et débarcadères.

M. Griffin, conformément à l'avis préalable qu'il en avait donné, présente la résolution suivante qui subit sa première lecture.

Résolu que l'assemblée générale se réunira dans le lieu des séances de la Chambre, vendredi prochain, 11 courant, à midi, pour y procéder à l'élection d'un sénateur au Congrès des Etats-Unis, laquelle élection a pour objet de remplir la vacance qui aura lieu le 4 de mars prochain, par l'expiration du terme de l'honorable S. W. Downs.

M. Wickliffe demande que cette résolution soit renvoyée au comite judiciaire. Dans son opinion, toute question d'un caractère légal doit être renvoyée au comité dont relèvent spécialement ces questions. Il pense que l'opinion du comité judiciaire sur cette matière doit être recherchée : car cette question est une de celles qui sont le plus particulièrement du ressort de ce comité. Il doit être requis de faire un examen approfondi de la question, et de présenter son rapport sur les moyens qui paraîtront fondés pour contester à M. Benjamin son siége au Congrès. Personne dans le Sénat ne peut objecter à cette proposition ; elle est faite de bonne foi, sans arrière-pensée, et il ne peut exister de doute sur la capacité des membres du comité, non plus que sur la possibilité qui existe pour eux de présenter un rapport avant le jour désigné pour la discussion de la question. Il espère que ses collègues voteront en faveur du renvoi.

M. Griffin dit qu'il a été entendu, entre M. Kittridge, Martin, d'autres Sénateurs, et lui-même, que la question ne serait pas soumise à la chambre avant Jeudi. Il désire qu'elle soit mise à l'ordre du jour spécial pour cette séance.

M. Wickliffe n'a pas d'objection à amender sa proposition de manière à ce que la résolution soit mise à l'ordre du jour spécial pour jeudi, mais il est tenu d'insister sur sa motion de renvoi au comité judiciaire. Il pense que cette mesure préliminaire est parfaitement legitime et convenable. Pour sa part il ne demande qu'une chose c'est que la discussion revête une forme palpable : il désire que ceux de ses collègues qui sont d'avis de procéder à une élection de Sénateur, veuillent bien déduire les motifs de leur opposition à l'élection qui a déjà eu lieu ; et certainement aucun d'eux ne peut avoir d'ojection à entendre à ce sujet un rapport du comité judiciaire. Le question à résoudre est d'un caractère purement légal et peut par consequent être parfaitement renvoyée au comité judiciaire. Ce rapport une fois soumis au Senat, ne liera ce corps dans aucun cas par ses conclusions. Chaque Sénateur conserve son entière liberté pour agir, ainsi que le lui dictera son jugement, mais il est hors de doute que le renvoi au comité désigné est convenable et necessaire.

M. Lacey dit que dans son opinion, le Sénat n'a aucun droit de forcer le comité à lui soumettre un rapport et il considère en conséquence le renvoi propose comme inutile et inopportun. Le Sénat à le droit de demander à un comité si son opinion est favorable ou contraire à une proposition donnée, et peut parfaitement reclamer de lui une opinion légale sur tout sujet de législation, mais il ne peut aller jusqu'à demander un rapport sur un sujet de cette nature. Je comprends le but d'un comité, le Sénateur ne le comprend certainement pas.

M. Wickliffe fait observer que s'il ne comprend pas le but d'un comité, il ne sait pas qui peut le comprendre. Pourquoi le Sénat a-t-il des comités, si ce n'est pour présenter leur rapport sur tous les sujets qui leur sont soumis. C'est là le but principal pour lequel ils ont été créés. Le sujet qui occupe le Senat est un de ceux qui méritent l'attention speciale du comité et il désire le renvoi afin que la lumière soit répandue pour éclaircir l'obscurité dans laquelle il est plongé.

M. Rivers pense qu'attendu la grande divergence d'opinion qui existe sur la question il est bon de demander à ce sujet l'opinion du comité judiciaire.

M. Mouton est en faveur du renvoi de la résolution au comité judiciaire, afin d'être éclairé par les motifs que ce comité pourra présenter. Quant à lui, il dit en toute liberté qu'il serait heureux de pouvoir éliminer M. Benjamin, s'il pouvait le faire sans blesser aucun droit ; mais il ne consentira jamais à prêter la main à cette tentative si elle implique violation du droit ou de la justice. Il désire donc voir la question renvoyée au comité et il connait certains des membres qui le composent qui désirent aussi connaître l'expression de son opinion.

Digitized by Google

M Short fait remarquer qu'il est membre du comité judiciaire et qu'en cette qualité il appuie le renvoi. Il n'hésitera pas à exprimer son opinion soit comme sénateur soit comme membre du comité. Si le renvoi est ordonné il fera plus que de se prononcer pour ou contre la résolution.

Il rendra compte de tous les faits et de tout ce qui a eu lieu jusqu'ici en y comprenant les actes de la dernière legislature qui a élu M. Benjamin. Si le comité trouvait que la question entraîne la solution d'un point de droit constitutionnel, il n'a aucun doute que le comité ne soumettrait consciencieusement au Sénat son opinion, quelqu'elle soit, à cet égard. En formant et en soumettant leur opinion, il désire avoir le concours des lumières de ses collègues qui ne peuvent lui être que d'un grand secours pour arriver à une juste décision.

En l'entendant exprimer le désir de voir la résolution renvoyée au comité, on pourra peut être penser qu'il est jaloux de voir la question tomber entre les mains d'un comité dont il fait partie lui-même: mais il est prêt à encourir toute responsabilité à cet égard, attendu qu'il est d'avis que dans une question aussi grave, l'opinion du comité, pris comme corps, doit être mise devant le Sénat. Dans une question de ce genre les motifs sur lesquels tout homme compte pour justifier sa conduite aux yeux de ses constituants doivent être consignés aux archives du pays.

M. Wickliffe insiste encore sur le renvoi à un comité. Le sénateur des Avoyelles a présenté une résolution et a demandé qu'elle fût spécialement mise à l'ordre pour un jour désigné. Il demande que le Sénat donne son concours à la motion qu'il a faite. Suivant la coutume établie, et persuadé comme il l'est ainsi que beaucoup d'autres, qu'il serait convenable que cela fût fait, il a demandé que la résolution fût référée au comité judiciaire.

Le sénateur des Avoyelles réclame maintenant la précédence pour sa motion. Cela n'est pas juste. Une motion de référer a toujours la précédence, et si elle est emportée, elle n'empêche pas la motion du sénateur. Il n'y a pas de raison pour laquelle le comité n'examinerait pas la question et n'en ferait pas un rapport avant le jour fixé. Il espère donc qu'il en sera fait ainsi, quelque desireux qu'il soit d'obtenir des éclaircissements à ce sujet. Il voudrait avoir l'opinion du comité judiciaire, car il en espère tous les éclaircissements qu'il croit si nécessaires.

M. Griffin dit qu'il a la plus haute considération pour le président du comité, et l'importance qu'il attache à cette opinion fait qu'il désire s'en éclairer avant de donner son vote. Il ne peut consentir à référer la résolution au comité judiciaire, lorsque le président de ce comité a déclaré son opposition à ce qu'il en fût ainsi disposé.

M. Wickliffe n'a nullement l'intention de manquer au respect qu'il doit au président, en insistant sur le renvoi. Au contraire, il a la plus haute opinion de ses lumières et de ses connaissances solides, et il ne doute pas qu'il ne fît un rapport fort remarquable si la question arrivait devant lui. Mais cette question est grave. Elle implique la solution d'un point légal et d'un point constitutionnel d'une grande importance, et le Sénat a le droit de demander un rapport du comité sur ce point. L'opinion du comité serait d'un grand poids, elle mettrait les sénateurs à même de décider en connaissance de cause, et il ne voit pas pourquoi aucun des membres de ce comite se montrerait peu disposé à présenter un rapport.

M. Lacey fait observer qu'il sait parfaitement que le sénateur de Féliciana n'est animé d'aucun sentiment blessant pour lui, en insistant comme il le fait. Il sait que les motifs qui font agir le sénateur sont d'une nature toute différente. Pour sa part, il déclare tout d'abord qu'il n'a aucun désir d'éluder son opinion et il exprimera son opinion sans plus tarder pour que le Sénat puisse comprendre sa position. Il croit que l'élection du sénateur, faite l'année dernière par la Législature est illégale et qu'il est du devoir de cette Législature de procéder à une élection comme s'il n'en avait pas été faite. Il pense que l'élection de M. Benjamin est nulle et comme non avenue, attendu que la loi en vertu de laquelle elle a été faite, la loi de 1846, etait contraire à la Constitution de 1845. Lorsque le moment opportun sera arrivé, lorsque le sujet se présentera devant le Sénat, sous une forme plus palpable, il soumettra plus au long les raisons et les motifs qui l'ont amené à cette opinion. Il a la plus haute opinion de M. Benjamin ;le fait est qu'il n'est pas d'homme qui personnellement il désirât plus voir tenir un siége au Sénat des Etats-Unis. Il lui est pénible que ce soit M. Benjamin qui se trouve dans cette position et qu'il soit forcé de prendre cette attitude vis-à-vis de lui. Mais jamais de sa vie il ne sacrifiera son sentiment du juste et de l'injuste, et ce qu'il considère son devoir sous la Constitution et les lois à aucune considération d'une nature personnelle ou privée. Il n'a aucune objection à faire à un rapport sur cette question, lorsqu'elle leur sera soumise, mais il doute beaucoup que le senateur de Feliciana puisse jamais être convaincu par aucun argument qui puisse lui être présenté. Il croit que la motion de renvoi est parfaitement inutile et n'a pour but que d'embarrasser la simple résolution qui avait été presentée par le sénateur des Avoyelles. S'il est oppose à la motion, ce n'est pas qu'il désire éluder la question, car, lorsqu'elle arrivera, il votera pour qu'il soit procédé à une élection de senateur.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il est vrai que son opinion est arrêtée sur cette question, mais il est un de ces hommes faciles à convaincre. Si son vote pouvait priver M. Benjamin de son siége et qu'il n'y vit point d'empêchements dans la loi et la Constitution, il donnerait ce voté avec le plus grand plaisir, comme pourraient le témoigner les membres de l'opposition dans le Sénat qui le connaissent. Son attachement pour M. Benjamin est loin d'être aussi fort que celui du membre d'Est-Baton-Rouge, au contraire, il ne pretend être influencé par aucun sentiment de cette nature. Mais il pense que dans une question de cette nature les sénateurs doivent voter conformément à leur propre jugement.

M. Griffin dit qu'il ne s'attendait à rencontrer aucune opposition à sa motion. Cette opposition est arrivée comme un nuage qui surgit dans un ciel serein. Il avait été entendu entre le général Martin, d'autres membres et lui-même, que la question serait renvoyée jusqu'à jeudi, et en consequence il présenta la motion de la mettre à l'ordre du jour spécial pour cette séance. Il était généralement entendu que ce serait la marche suivie.

M. Wickliffe fait observer que le Sénateur et lui diffèrent grandement quant à l'existence d'une pareille convention. Le Senateur n'a aucun droit acquipour la motion ; il ne peut réclamer pour elle la priorité sur une motion de renvoi. Le Sénateur dit que l'opposition est arrivée comme un nuage. M. Wicliffe espère qu'un rayon de lumière éclatrera bientôt le nuage qui semble suspendu au-dessus de la tête du Sénateur.

M. Hodge dit qu'il ne comprend pas précisément l'état de la question. La motion de dispenser du réglement n'a pas encore été décidée. Le Sénateur de Feliciana a formellement déclaré qu'à moins que le Sénateur des Avoyelles n'acceptât son amendement renvoyant la résolution au comité judiciaire il demanderait l'appel nominal sur la motion de dispenser des règlements. Il comprend que le Sénateur n'a pas accepté l'amendement, et les Sénateurs ont certainement le droit de voter sur la motion de dispenser.

M. Griffin dit que la motion était de dispenser des réglements sur la motion de placer ses résolutions à l'ordre du jour spécial de Jeudi prochain. Le Sénateur de Féliciana désire renvoyer la question au comité judiciaire, mais il ne peut consentir à accepter la motion comme amendement, à moins qu'on ne décide d'abord sa propre motion.

M. Wickliffe dit que tous les Sénateurs savent et le président sait qu'il était opposé à la motion de dispenser des réglements, à moins qu'on n'agît sur sa motion de renvoi comme amendement.

M Griffin—Je pourrais faire une motion de mettre la résolution à l'ordre spécial du jour pour la séance de vendredi prochain, sans une dispense des règles.

M. Wickliffe—C'est vrai, mais cela ne me priverait pas de mon droit de demander le renvoi.

M. Griffin—J'avais le droit de présenter la résolution sans la suspension des règlements.

Le président décide ce point dans la négative.

Sur motion de M. Griffin, les règlements sont alors suspendus.

M. Griffin—Ma résolution est-elle maintenant devant le Sénat ?

Le président—Oui, monsieur.

M. Wickliffe—Quel est le jour spécifié dans la résolution ?

M. Griffin—Jeudi est le jour fixé.

M. Wickliffe—Monsieur le secrétaire, veuilles lire la résolution.

Le secrétaire lit la résolution qui porte vendredi.

M. Wickliffe—Le sénateur veut-il faire la motion d'amender sa résolution ?

M. Griffin.—Oui, monsieur, si on le désire.

M. Wickliffe.—Oh non ! je désire seulement que le sénateur fasse la motion.

M. Griffin Alors va pour vendredi. Je n'ai pas d'objection.

La motion de renvoyer jusqu'à vendredi est mise aux voix, et le résultat est ainsi que suit : 18 non et 5 oui.

Ont voté dans l'affirmative : MM. Griffin, Kittridge, Lacey, Millard, Neal.—5.

Ont voté dans la négative : MM. Clifton, Derbès, Evans, Hodge, Kemp, King, Lauve, McCay, Mouton, Nichols, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack. Taylor, Thério, Todd et Wickliffe..

M. Wickliffe fait la motion de renvoyer au comité judiciaire. Si on fait quelqu'objection il demandera l'appel nominal.

M. Griffin.—Je fais objection. Que l'appel nominal ait lieu.

M. Short.—La motion fixe-t-elle un jour pour le rapport du comité.

M. Wickliffe.—Qu'il rapporte lorsqu'il le jugera convenable.—Mais, après tout, j'amenderai en insérant jeudi.

M. King ne voit aucune raison qui motive le renvoi au comite judiciaire. C'est une question purement politique et il ne voit pas ce que le comité judiciaire a à y voir.

M. Wickliffe regrette que le sénateur n'ait pas été présent lorsque la discussion a eu lieu, car alors sans doute il se serait fait une opinion toute différente. Cette question n'est nullement une question politique.

L'appel nominal ayant été fait sur la motion de référer, résulte comme suit :—

Oui—MM. Clifton, Derbès, Evans, Hodge, Kemp, Kittridge, Lauve, McCay, Millard, Mouton, Nicholls, Palfrey, Rivers, Short, Slack, Taylor, Thériot. Todd et Wickliffe—11. Non: MM. Griffin, King, Lacey et Neal—4.

La motion l'emporte et la résolution est référée.

Sur motion le SÉNAT ajourne à lundi 11 heures A M.

LUNDI, 7 février 1853.

Le Sénat se réunit conformément à l'ajournement.

Aussitôt après la lecture du journal, le greffier lit un message par lequel le gouverneur donne avis aux membres qu'il a mis sa signature à la résolution qui enjoint à nos sénateurs et requiert nos représentants au Congrès de faire leurs efforts pour obtenir une affectation de fonds à certains travaux d'améliorations dans la baie de Côte Blanche, Vermillion et Atchafalaya, et aussi à la résolution qui a pour but de faire disparaître certaines obstructions existant dans le Bayou Lafourche.

Rapports des Comités.

M. Lacey, du comité judiciaire, fait un rapport contre le bill autorisant les juges de paix à nommer en certains cas des curateurs AUX CAUSES.

M. Derbès dit qu'il aurait désiré entendre quelqu'argument à l'appui du rapport du comité. Il demande donc que le rapport soit déposé sur le bureau, sujet à l'appel.

M. Lacey fait un rapport sur le bill organisant et régularisant le département du secrétaire-d'Etat. Ce rapport est en faveur de l'ensemble du bill, sauf la 3me section, à laquelle le rapport propose un substitut.

Le même sénateur présente aussi des rapports en faveur des bills suivants : 1o Un bill pour organiser et régulariser le département du trésorier, sauf la troisième section à laquelle il propose un substitut.

2o Un acte à l'effet d'autoriser le maire et les échevins de la ville de Bâton-Rouge à diviser cette ville en deux arrondissements électoraux.

3o Un acte autorisant Antoine Garantier et Adélaïde Bonnère, sa femme, à adopter Edouard Pierre Louis, fils de Geneviève Bonnère.

M. Short, au nom de la majorité du comité judiciaire, auquel avait été renvoyé le bill ayant pour but d'étendre le droit de préemption accordé à certaines personnes établies sur les terres marécageuses des paroisses de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, soumet le rapport suivant :

Les soussignés, membres du comité auquel a été renvoyé le bill ayant pour objet d'étendre le droit de préemption accordé à des personnes établies sur les terres marécageuses des paroisses de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, soumettent respectueusement le rapport suivant :

Par la seconde section de l'acte de 1852, le droit de préemption fut accordé à telles personnes qui avaient fait des établissements sur les terres marécageuses concédées à l'Etat par actes du Congrès ; ce droit était subordonné à la condition que lesdites personnes présenteraient leur requête à cet effet et effectueraient le paiement exigé dans les douze mois à partir de l'adoption de l'acte

Le bill soumis propose d'étendre à douze mois de plus le terme fixé par l'acte de 1852, quant aux personnes établies sur lesdites terres dans lesdites paroisses.

Bien que, par la nature du bill, le sujet rentre plus spécialement dans les attributions du comité des terres publiques et levées, cependant le comité auquel a été fait le renvoi, n'hésite pas à en présenter un rapport condamnant en pareille matière le principe d'une législation partielle, pour une ou deux paroisses, attendu que ce précédent conduirait probablement à l'adoption de bills pour chacune des paroisses qui se trouvent renfermer des terres de cette nature, et que par là nous n'aurions fait qu'accroître la confusion qui existe déjà dans les questions relatives aux choix d'emplacements et aux inscriptions de terres.

Pour prévenir ce mal, il ne dôit être passé aucun bill qui n'établisse une règle uniforme s'étendant à toutes les terres concédées à l'Etat.

Par ce moyen nous simplifierons l'économie du Bureau des Terres ; le système en sera plus aisément compris, et le département fonctionnera à peu de frais.

La seconde section de l'acte de 1852, qui accorde ce droit de préemption permet de présenter la requête et d'effectuer le paiement exigé jusqu'au 17 de mars 1853.

Les soussignés, membres du comité, ne pensent pas devoir, en ce moment, présenter un rapport en faveur d'un bill général ayant pour but d'étendre l'exercice du droit de préemption ; attendu qu'ils ont compris qu'un bill doit être présenté ayant pour but de suspendre la vente des terres marécageuses, jusqu'à ce que l'arpentage des différentes townships ait été achevé et que lesdites terres aient été préalablement mises en vente publique.

Ce cas échéant, les personnes désignées par la seconde section de l'acte de 1852, pourront devenir l'objet d'une disposition spéciale, s'il est jugé nécessaire, question sur laquelle les soussignés ne sont pas disposés à se prononcer, ne pensant pas qu'elle soit, à proprement dire, du ressort de ce comité.

M. Lacey, du même comité, présente le rapport suivant :

A l'honorable Sénat de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Le soussigné, membre du comité auquel a été renvoye l'examen d'un acte intitulé « Acte pour étendre le délai dans lequel la requête devra être présentée et le paiement devra être fait par les personnes établies sur les terres marécageuses et inondées des paroisses de Livingston et d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, » présente le rapport suivant :

Les terres comprises dans l'acte soumis ont reçu des établissements comme terres publiques des Etats-Unis ; c'est depuis la formation de ces établissements que les dites terres ont été concédées par le gouvernement général à l'Etat de la Louisiane par actes du Congrès, approuvés le 2 mars 1849 et le 28 septembre 1852. Aux termes d'un acte de la Législature, approuvé le 17 mars 1852, les personnes établies sur les dites terres furent tenues de présenter leur requête et d'effectuer leur paiement pour l'obtention des terres occupées par elles, dans l'année à partir du 17 mars 1852, sous peine de se voir déchues des droits et privilèges accordés aux premiers fondateurs d'établissements.

Il paraît que les personnes en vue desquelles a été présenté le bill qui est soumis au comité n'ont que très peu de ressources pécuniaires ; qu'elles ne peuvent compter que sur leur industrie et les produits de la terre sur laquelle elles se sont établies pour être à même de faire face au paiement du prix de cette même terre; qu'il leur a fallu consacrer tant de temps à défricher leurs terres, à les rendre propres à la culture à tâcher de faire des routes ou plutôt des chemins pour y arriver, qu'ils n'ont pu encore réaliser les premiers fonds nécessaires au paiement de leur propriété et en définitive que le refus d'accorder la faveur qui fait l'objet du bill aura pour résultat d'expulser l'honnête, le courageux travailleur de la terre qu'il avait acquise à la sueur de son front, pour la jeter aux mains de la spéculation.

Pour ces raisons le soussigné prie instamment et respectueusement votre honorable corps d'adopter le bill dont il est question

G S. LACEY, Chairman.

Sur motion de M. Lacey, les réglements sont suspendus et les résolutions émanant de la Chambre et dont le but est d'enjoindre à nos sénateurs et de requérir nos représentants au Congrès de faire tous leurs efforts pour obtenir l'établissement d'une malle quotidienne entre la Nouvelle-Orléans, Bâton-Rouge et Bayou Sara sont appelées et adoptées.

ETAT DU CONNECTICUT.
ASSEMBLEE GENERALE.
Session de Mai 1852.

Résolu par cette Assemblée : Que l'union des Etats-Unis et la Constitution, en vertu de laquelle le gouvernement fédéral est administré, ont été le résultat d'un esprit de compromis et de concessions mutuelles des intérêts et sentiments du peuple des différentes sections du pays, et qu'il est du devoir de tout bon citoyen de continuer à exercer maintenant, le même esprit de compromis et de concessions en cas de différence d'intérêts et d'opinion, afin de conserver, pour eux et leur postérité, les bienfaits résultant de cette union et de ce gouvernement qui tient non seulement entre ses mains le bonheur futur et la prospérité du peuple de ce pays ; mais aussi en grande partie l'avenir des libertés civiles et religieuses, et du système de gouvernement libre dans tout le monde.

Résolu, Que dans un gouvernement comme celui-ci, dans lequel tous les pouvoirs politiques émanent du peuple, par qui sont nommés les gouvernants et les législateurs et envers lequel il sont responsables, il est du devoir de tout citoyen de se soumettre à toutes les lois décrétées par ses représentans, jusqu'à ce que ces mêmes lois aient été déclarées inconstitutionnelles par le tribunal qui en a le droit.

Résolu, Que la série de mesures connue sous la dénomination de mesures de compromis, adoptée par le dernier Congrès, disposant définitivement et pacifiquement d'une quantité de questions, qui avaient troublé le pays, embarrassé le gouvernement et la Législature nationale, et sérieusement menacé l'existence de l'Union, a été adoptée d'une manière sage et équitable ; et que la dite série de mesures a l'approbation pleine et entière de cette assemblée.

Résolu, que l'acte intitulé "Fugitive Slave Law" est, dans l'opinion de cette assemblée, conforme aux clauses de la Constitution, ne contenant que les détails nécessaires pour mettre à exécution les clauses de cet instrument;et qu'il est du devoir de tous les bons citoyens de soutenir, par tous les moyens légaux, l'exécution du dit acte.

Résolu, que Son Excellence le Gouverneur soit requis de transmettre une copie de ces résolutions au Président des Etats Unis, au Gouverneur de chacun des Etats de l'Union, et à chacun de nos Sénateurs et Représentants au Congrès.

DANS L'ANNÉE MIL HUIT CENT CINQUANTE DEUX.

RÉSOLUTION CONJOINTE

Sur la traite des noirs et le projet de les coloniser.

Attendu que des considérations philanthropiques et même patriotiques demandent un effort sérieux afin de supprimer la traîte des noirs si longtemps reprochée au monde chrétien, et attendu que les efforts dignes de louanges tentés jusqu'à présent à cet effet ont été impuissants;

C'est pourquoi :

Il est résolu par l'Assemblée Générale de l'Etat de l'Indiana, que la dite assemblée est d'avis que d'autres moyens plus efficaces devraient être adoptés pour cela. Il est de plus résolu, Que la dite assemblee croit qu'il est du devoir du gouvernement des Etats Unis d'Amérique, comme première nation du monde de proclamer et de maintenir la cause de la liberté civile et religieuse, d'améliorer partout le genre humain, par tous les moyens légaux, et de se servir de toute sa puissance pour écraser cette révoltante piraterie.

Il est de plus résolu ; La raison nous le dit et l'expérience nous le prouve, que cette injustice, commise par notre race contre toutes les lois divines, ne peut être renversé à coup sûr, qu'en élevant sous notre protection sur les côtes d'Afrique des états républicains, pour y établir la race noire libre des Etats-Unis et qu'il est du devoir du Congrès des Etats-Unis et de la législature de chaque Etat de l'Union, de passer telles lois, ayant pour but un système général de colonisation, non seulement, afin de supprimer le commerce des noirs, mais aussi pour séparer autant que possible, sur ce continent, la race blanche de la noire, en expédiant à nos frais où bon leur semblera, toutes les personnes de couleur demeurant aux Etats-Unis, en venant à leur appui pendant un temps raisonnable ; par là compenser les torts et l'op-pression d'une race injuste, et nous soulageant en même temps du tracas d'une population qui, quoi que demeurant au milieu de nous, ne peut-être d'aucune utilité politique ou sociale, et par cela même, pouvant devenir dans les Etats où ils résident une source de charges et de contrariétés, et être une cause de d'irritation et de mauvais voisinage entre les Etats eux-mêmes.

Il est de plus résolu; Qu'il soit recommandé à nos sénateurs au Congrès, et que nos représentants soient invités à faire leurs efforts pour qu'il soit passé par le Congrès des lois à cet effet, et que tous les Etats de l'Union soient priés d'y coopérer par la passation de semblables lois et pour l'exécution des dits projets.

Il est de plus résolu. Que le gouverneur soit invité à envoyer une copie de ces résolutions à tous les sénateurs du Congrès des Etats-Unis, aux gouverneurs des différents Etats de l'Union et aux principaux chefs des sociétés de colonisation des Etats-Unis, et qu'il soit de plus invite à ouvrir une correspondance, avec toute société qu'il jugera convenable, et toute personne s'occupant de ce projet, afin d'en tirer des informations sur ce sujet et principalement pour obtenir des plans calculés pour la réussite de ce projet.

Il est de plus requis de soumettre à la prochaine session de l'assemblée générale, les dites informations et telles recommandations qui y auraient rapport et qui aurait la colonisation pour but.

MARDI, 8 février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble à l'heure ordinaire.

M. Millard, du comité des réclamations, présente un rapport contre le bill pour venir au secours de M. Alex. McDonald.

M. Mouton dit : qu'attendu qu'il pense que le comité s'est soigneusement enquis à ce sujet, il ne présentera aucune objection.

M. Millard dit qu'en examinant la question, le comité des réclamations a vu que la paroisse de Vermillon avait, pendant les deux dernières années, reçu tout le montant auquel elle avait droit en vertu de la loi, et s'il en est rien dû à cette personne, le comité est d'avis que sans aucun doute la paroisse consentira à le lui payer elle-même.

M. Short, de la part de la majorité du comité judiciaire, lit le rapport suivant sur la résolution, ordonnant qu'il soit procédé à l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis.

Rapport de la majorité du comité judiciaire sur la résolution conjointe ordonnant qu'il soit procédé à l'election d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis.

Au président et aux membres du Sénat de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Les soussignés, membres du comité auquel a été référé la résolution conjointe relative à l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis, rapportent respectueusement :

Qu'ils ne trouvent aucune loi ou aucun article constitutionnel qui puisse autoriser le Sénat à se réunir à la Chambre des Représentants, dans le but indiqué par la résolution, et, en peu de mots, ils exposeront les bases sur lesquelles s'appuient leurs conclusions.

Ils pensent qu'il est du devoir de tous ceux qui exercent des pouvoirs ou législatifs, ou exécutifs, ou judiciaires : 1o De s'informer s'ils ont le droit d'agir ainsi qu'il est proposé, et 2o, au cas où ils auraient ce pouvoir de le faire, si le moment est arrivé où ils peuvent l'exercer conformément aux lois et à la Constitution.

La proposition étant faite que le Sénat se réunisse à l'autre branche de l'assemblée générale, pour procéder à l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis, la première question que l'on doive se poser est donc : « Avons-nous les pouvoirs nécessaires pour le faire ?

« Secondement. Le terme au bout duquel ces pouvoirs peuvent être constitutionnellement exercé est-il arrivé ? »

Ce corps, organisé comme il l'est, tient toute son autorité de la Constitution de 1852 et des lois de l'Etat qui ne sont pas incompatibles avec la dite Constitution.

"Qu'il soit de plus décrété que le premier lundi qui suivra la première réunion de la législature à la session commençant dans l'année pendant laquelle expire le terme d'un ou de plusieurs sénateurs, choisis pour représenter cet Etat au Congrès des Etats Unis d'Amérique, ou dans le cas ou il n'y aurait pas dans cette année de session de la législature, alors dans l'année suivante les deux chambres se réuniront à la salle des déliberations de la chambre des représentants et y procèderont au choix d'un sénateur ou de sénateurs pour représenter l'Etat au Congrès des Etats Unis d'Amérique en remplacement du sénateur ou des sénateurs dont la place est vacante. Et la personne ou les personnes qui recevront le plus grand nombre de votes sera ou seront déclarés dûment élus sénateur ou sénateurs pourvu que le nombre de voix reçu par elle ou par elles constitue une majorité de tous les membres présents. »

« Approuvé le 13 février 1846. »

Cet acte n'a jamais été rappelé, au moins en ce qui concerne les actes de la législature ordinaire, et cette année-ci ne peut être celle pendant laquelle une élection régulière doit être faite pour remplir le terme commençant à l'expiration du terme de l'Honorable Pierre Soulé.

Il faut donc admettre que l'assemblée générale actuelle, qui tient ses pouvoirs de la constitution de 1852 doit procéder à une élection régulière d'un sénateur des Etats Unis en remplacement de l'Honorable S. W. Downs dont le terme expire le 4 de mars prochain.

Puisqu'il n'y a rien dans l'acte qui précède qui soit incompatible avec la Constitution de 1852, la Constitution n'ayant pas désigné l'année pendant laquelle une élection régulière doit être faite, l'assemblée générale actuelle pourrait procéder à ladite élection, pourvu qu'aucune élection n'eût été faite pour remplir la vacance qui commencera le 4 de mars prochain. Mais une élection a été faite en janvier 4852 par l'assemblée générale qui était alors en session, et l'honorable J. P. Benjamin, a été élu pour remplir ce terme.

Cela nous mène à la question :

1o L'élection qui a eu lieu alors était elle conforme à la Constitution de 1845 et à la seconde section, citée plus haut, de l'acte de 1846 ? Et si l'élection qui a eu lieu alors, est considérée valide par les lois et la Constitution alors en force, cette élection a-t-elle été mise de côté et rendue nulle par l'adoption de la Constitution de 1852, qui a ordonné une réunion de l'assemblée générale dans l'année pendant laquelle elle ne pouvait pas être régulièrement convoquée d'après la Constitution de 1845 ?

La Constitution de 1812 ne pourvoyait en aucune manière au temps, au lieu, ou à la forme, d'après laquelle devait être faite l'élection de sénateur des Etats-Unis. Elle ordonnait des réunions annuelles de la Législature et à des époques antérieures au 4 mars, de sorte que l'élection régulière de sénateur pouvait être fixée par la Législature pour l'année même pendant laquelle la vacance avait lieu.

L'article 1er, section 4 de la Constitution des Etats-Unis, dit :

1o Le temps, le lieu, et la manière d'élire des sénateurs et des représentants seront prescrits dans chaque Etat par la Législature : Mais le Congrès peut en tout temps, changer par une loi, tous ces réglements, excepté celui qui a trait au lieu où se fera l'élection de sénateur.

L'article 34 dit :

« Dans l'année pendant laquelle une élection régulière de sénateur des Etats-Unis devra être faite, les membres de l'assemblée générale se réuniront dans la salle des séances de la Chambre des Représentants, le premier lundi après la réunion de la Législature, et procédera à la dite élection. »

Par cet article de la constitution, le Sénat qui est une des branches de l'assemblée générale, possède, sans aucun doute le pouvoir qui lui est accordé de se réunir à l'autre branche dans le but indiqué par la résolution, lorsque le temps est venu où ce pouvoir peut être légalement et constitutionnellement exercé.

Cela nous conduit à la seconde partie de la question: le temps où ce pouvoir peut être exercé est il arrivé ?

Le fait que cette résolution a été présentée fait présupposer que cette année est celle dans laquelle doit avoir lieu l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats Unis ou qu'il y a une vacance au Sénat qui requiert que l'assemblée générale de cet Etat y pourvoie. Ces deux conditions existent-elles en fait ? Jusqu'à présent on ne conteste pas qu'en fait il y ait une vacance. Le terme de l'honorable Pierre Soulé n'expire que le 4 mars 1855 et le terme de l'honorable S. W. Downs, n'expire que le 4 mars 1853. Si donc le sénat est requis de se réunir à l'autre branche de l'assemblée générale pour procéder à l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats Unis, on doit admettre que cette année-ci est celle pendant laquelle une élection régulière peut être légalement faite pour le terme qui commencera à l'expiration du terme de M. Soulé ou celui qui commence à l'expiration du terme de l'Hon S. W. Downs.

La section 2 de l'acte de 1846 dit :

En vertu des pouvoirs ainsi conférés à la Législature réunie en vertu de la Constitution de 1812, elle passa l'acte suivant :

Section 1re. "Résolu que le second lundi de janvier prochain, précédant l'expiration du terme au bout du quel un sénateur ou des sénateurs pour représenter cet Etat au Congrès des Etats-Unis, sera choisi où devra l'être, si la Législature de cet Etat est alors en session, et si elle ne l'est pas alors, huit jours après qu'un quorum des deux chambres, se sera réuni au lieu où la Législature tient ses sessions, les deux chambres se réuniront dans la salle des séances de la Chambre des représentants et y procéderont par ballots réunis, à l'élection d'un sénateur ou de sénateurs pour représenter cet Etat au Congrès des Etats-Unis, &c., &c."

Cet acte resta en force jusqu'au 13 février 1846, et était la loi conformément à laquelle la Législature choisissait l'époque, le lieu et la manière pour l'élection des sénateurs, aussi longtemps qu'elle se réunit sous la Constitution de 1812.

L'article 35 de la Constitution de 1845, dit :

" Dans l'année pennant laquelle devra avoir lieu l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis, les membres de l'assemblée générale se réuniront dans la salle des éances de la Chambre des Représentants, le premier lundi qui suivra la réunion de la Législature et procéderont à la dite élection."

Cet article de la Constitution n'enlevait aucunement à la Législature le pouvoir de désigner l'année pendant laquelle doit avoir lieu l'élection de sénateur des Etats-Unis. Mais dans l'année pendant laquelle elle doit être faite conformément à la loi, (et la Législature avait le droit de fixer l'année conformément à la 4me section de l'article 1er de la Constitution des Etats-Unis) les membres de l'Assemblée Générale sont requis de « se réunir dans la salle des séances de la Chambre des Représentants le premier lundi qui suivra la réunion de la Législature, et procéderont à l'élection. »

Par la Constitution de 1845, article 5, l'Assemblée est requise de se réunir tous les deux ans, le troisième lundi de janvier après l'élection ; mais la première session de la Législature, en vertu de l'article 153, devait être ouverte le second lundi de février 1846. Mais plus tard, aucune session régulière ne pouvait être tenue sous la Constitution de 1845, excepté dans les cas prévus par la seconde section.

L'Etat de la Louisiane se trouva alors dans une ère toute nouvelle d'existence, et il fallut pourvoir aux exigences que réclamaient les changements introduits dans loi organique. Voyant qu'on ne pouvait se réunir tous les ans et que le terme régulier de sénateur des Etats-Unis devait nécessairement expirer dans l'année, pendant laquelle il n'y avait pas de session régulière conformément à la Constitution, on remplaça la section 1re de l'acte de 1812, par la 1re section de l'acte de 1846, conçu en ces termes :

« Résolu, etc., etc., que la première section de l'acte intitulé : « Acte prescrivant le temps, le lieu et la manière dont doivent être faites les élections de sénateurs pour représenter cet Etat au Sénat des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, » approuvé le 1er septembre 1812 est et demeure par la présente abrogée. »

La première section de l'acte de 1812 ayant cessé d'être applicable et de présenter une règle qui pût diriger la Législature dans l'élection d'un sénateur, on établit la règle consignée dans la 2me section de l'acte de 1846, précitée, en vertu de laquelle, lorsqu'il y a une session commençant dans l'année où expirent les fonctions d'un sénateur, l'Assemblée Générale peut procéder à une élection cette année. Mais si ces fonctions expirent dans l'année suivante, pendant laquelle il ne peut y avoir de session sous l'empire de la Constitution, la loi alors veut que l'election ait lieu avant l'année dans laquelle ces fonctions expirent. C'est en vertu de cette règle que M. Benjamin fut élu en janvier 1852, qu'il fut reconnu duement élu sénateur des Etats-Unis pour six ans, à partir du 4 mars 1853. Cet acte est l'œuvre du peuple de la Louisiane, agissant par l'organe de l'Assemblée Générale, réunie sous l'empire de la Constitution de 1845 ; et suivant en tout point la règle qui a été posée, en vue de cet acte même, dans la seconde section de l'acte de 1846.

Si l'élection de M. Benjamin ainsi accomplie, est contestée, elle ne peut l'être que sur le motif :

1o. Qu'elle est nulle et l'était à l'époque où elle eût lieu, en vertu de quelque disposition de la Constitution des Etats-Unis, de l'Etat, ou de quelque loi existant à l'époque où l'élection eut lieu, ou que le changement qui s'est opéré dans le gouvernement par l'adoption de la Constitution de 1852 l'a frappée de nullité, ou enfin, que M. Benjamin n'a pas les qualités ou capacités requises par la 3me section du premier article de la Constitution des Etats-Unis, ainsi conçue :

« Nul ne sera sénateur s'il n'a atteint l'âge de trente ans, s'il n'a été neuf ans citoyen des Etats-Unis, et si, au moment de son élection, il n'habitait l'Etat pour lequel il a été choisi. »

Nous n'avons pas la preuve que M. Benjamin soit dans aucun des cas d'exclusion posés par cette section; et le fait de son élection est par elle-même, en l'absence de toute preuve contraire, une présomption qu'il possède les qualités requises par la Constitution. Et que l'on ne s'y méprenne point, les soussignés sont loin de concéder que l'Assemblée Générale actuelle peut se poser juge de cette question, car la 5me section de l'article 1er de la Constitution des Etats-Unis déclare que chacune des chambres sera juge de l'élection, du certificat et de l'éligibilité de ses membres.

Digitized by Google

Nous passons donc aux deux autres motifs de nullité :

1o. Au point de vue de la Constitution des Etats-Unis, l'élection est-elle nulle aux termes d'aucune de ses clauses. L'article 3, section 1ère de la Constitution des Etats-Unis déclare que « le Sénat des Etats-Unis sera composé de deux sénateurs de chacun des Etats, choisis par la Législature des dix Etats pour un terme de dix ans, et chaque sénateur aura droit à un vote. » Le Sénat des Etats-Unis est un des trois grands pouvoirs du gouvernement fédéral, la dignité de sénateur est un des éléments qui entrent dans la composition de ce corps, son existence ou sa non existance n'entre pour rien dans l'organisation particulière du gouvernement de l'Etat. Ce ne sont point des fonctions créées par le gouvernement de l'Etat. Elles ne résultent pas, elles ne dépendent point d'aucun changement qui peut survenir dans la loi organique de l'Etat. Aussi longtemps que l'Etat existe, quelle que soit la forme de la Constitution intérieure, aussi longtemps qu'il fait partie de l'Union, c'est un devoir, c'est un droit pour la Législature de l'Etat de choisir ses sénateurs et de déterminer à quelle époque, en quel lieu et de quelle manière ce choix devra se faire. C'est ce qu'a fait l'Etat de la Louisiane, et c'est conformément aux dispositions de la seconde section de 1846 qu'il a élu M. Benjamin.

Jusqu'ici, rien dans la Constitution des Etats-Unis, qui puisse invalider l'élection de M. Benjamin, et comme il n'y a point conflit entre l'acte de 1846 et la Constitution de 1845, et que M. Benjamin a été élu conformément à la règle posée par cet acte, les soussignés sont arrivés à la conclusion, irréfutable à leur avis, que l'élection de M. Benjamin a été faite conformément aux dispositions de la loi alors existante.— Nous voici conduits à la dernière partie de cet examen. Y avait-il aucun pouvoir dans l'Etat de la Louisiane capable d'annuler cette élection après qu'elle eût en lieu ? Personne ne prétendra, nous le supposons du moins, que sous l'empire de la Constitution, de 1845, il fut au pouvoir d'aucune assemblée générale d'invalider cette élection.

Il a été avancé cependant que, attendu que sous la Constitution de 1845, le gouverneur eût pu convoquer l'assemblée générale aux termes de l'art. 54, la législature de 1852 a fait acte d'usurpation en s'attribuant le droit de voter à cette époque.

Il est vrai que le gouverneur, en vertu de l'article 54, «peut, dans des occasions extraordinaires, convoque l'assemblée générale, » mais les soussignés se demandent comment ce pouvoir discrétionnaire qu'il sera loisible au gouverneur d'exercer ou de ne pas exercer, pourrait paralyser l'exercice d'un droit conféré à la Législature par la Constitution des Etats-Unis, même en supposant que l'élection d'un sénateur au Sénat des Etats-Unis, soit comprise dans la signification des termes « occasions extraordinaires, » dont se sert l'article 54. Il ne semble pas aux soussignés qu'il pût venir à l'idée ni du gouverneur ni de la Législature. avant ou après la session de 1852, de considérer comme une chose extraordinaire que les fonctions d'un sénateur aux Etats-Unis dussent expirer le 3 de mars 1853 ; un événement qui se reproduit à des époques fixes ne peut être regardé comme une occasion extraordinaire. La Législature en prévision de l'événement auquel il fallait pourvoir, agit en conséquence, sans croire, nous le pensons, qu'elle empiétat sur le pouvoir discrétionnaire du gouverneur, qui pouvait, voudrait ou devrait, que savons-nous, convoquer la Législature en 1853, pour pourvoir à un événement extraordinaire.

De plus, à l'époque ou l'élection eut lieu, aucune loi n'avait été adoptée par la Législature, soumettant au peuple de la Louisiane la question de la réorganisation de l'Etat sous une nouvelle Constitution, on n'avait fixé, on n'avait en vue aucune époque à laquelle une nouvelle Constitution dût être adoptée ou commencer à fonctionner.

Et les lettres de creance de M. Benjamin n'étant point données conditionnellement, son droit n'étant point subordonné à l'adoption d'une Constitution en 1853, ne dépendent pas de l'existence d'une majorité disposée à annuler son élection, les soussignés ont peine à concevoir comment le changement opéré par la Constitution pourrait affecter un droit requis. Si sa dignité de senateur était de création d'Etat, résultait de l'organisation de l'Etat, ces fonctions pourraient se ressentir de tout changement survenu dans le gouvernement intérieur. Mais l'acte par lequel l'Assemblée-Générale a élu M. Benjamin étant indépendant de l'organisation de l'Etat, les soussignés ne voient pas comment l'assemblée de 1853 peut abroger un acte accompli par l'assemblée générale de 1852. Les soussignés sont d'opinion que de quelque manière que l'on envisage la question, l'assemblée générale ne peut prétendre au droit d'élire maintenant un sénateur, attendu qu'il n'y a pas de siége vacant, ou plutôt que la vacance qui avait eu lieu a été remplie conformément aux lois existantes. Le changement qu'a opéré la Constitution est destiné à avoir effet dans l'avenir, mais ne peut anéantir ce qui a été fait sous l'ancienne Constitution.

Et les soussignés soumettent respectueusement au Sénat les motifs qui précèdent comme militant contre l'adoption des résolutions soumises au comité.

H. SHORT,
B. L. HODGE,
THOS. C. NICHOLLS.

M. Lacey lit ensuite le rapport de la minorité du comité. Ce rapport exprime simplement une entière opposition aux vues et aux conclusions de la majorité du comité.

Rapport de la minorité.

A l'honorable Sénat de l'Etat de la Louisiane.

Les soussignés, membres du comité judiciaire, auquel a été référé l'examen de la résolution conjointe ayant pour objet l'élection d'un sénateur au Congrès, demande à soumettre le rapport suivant :

Les soussignés ne supposaient pas que le rapport de la majorité du comité judiciaire aurait été présenté aujourd'hui au Sénat, et ils se sont vus forcés de profiter de la lecture de ce rapport pour préparer le leur.

Les soussignés se voient contraints de déclarer qu'ils ne peuvent donner leur assentiment au rapport de la majorité du comité, ne pouvant adopter ni les arguments ni les conclusions du dit rapport, et recommandent l'adoption de la résolution conjointe renvoyée au comité.

GEO. S. LACEY,
WM. W. KING.

M. Wickliffe fait la motion que 5000 copies de ce rapport soient imprimées en français.

M. Lacey—Combien a-t-il été ordonné de copies du Message du Gouverneur ?

M. Wickliffe—5000, Monsieur.

M. Lacey—Je ne vois pas la nécessité de faire imprimer autant de copies de ce rapport. Y a-t-il aucun autre comité dont le rapport ait été imprimé à un aussi grand nombre d'exemplaires ?

M. Wickliffe—Oui, Monsieur, il y a eu 5000 copies imprimées du rapport de M. Griffin, du comité des améliorations intérieures.

M. Martin—Entre ce rapport et le Message du Gouverneur, il y a une grande différence au point de vue de l'importance.

M. Lacey—Je m'oppose, Monsieur, à ce qu'il soit imprimé un si grand nombre de copies de ce rapport. En ce moment où la rage d'économie est si grande, je ne vois pas pourquoi tant d'argent serait dépensé pour ce rapport seulement. Je suis disposé à voter pour qu'on en imprime un nombre raisonnable d'exemplaires ; mais, selon moi, 5000, c'est beaucoup trop.

M. Wickliffe—L'impression de 5,000 copies ne coûtera que peu de chose de plus que l'impression de 2,500.

M. Lacey retire sa motion.

La motion d'imprimer 5,000 copies du rapport, dont 2,500 en anglais et 2,500 en français, est alors emportée.

M. King, du comité des améliorations intérieures, lit un rapport déclarant que le comité a trouvé un grand nombre de documents importants des autres sessions de la Législature, et demandant qu'ils soient imprimés pour l'usage du Sénat.

M Martin dit qu'il est formellement opposé à l'impression de ces documents. Il présume que de ce nombre est le rapport de M. Ricker. Ce rapport ne serait jamais lu parce qu'on ne pourrait jamais décider les sénateurs à en écouter la lecture. Et l'entendre serait pour le Sénat une perte de temps d'un jour au moins.

Digitized by Google

M. King dit que le comité a mis le plus grand soin à choisir les documents qui lui ont semblé être de quelque intérêt public, et que tous ceux qu'il a choisis, une fois mis ensemble, ne font pas plus de 121 pages, d'écriture très courante. Ce qui n'est pas plus long que beaucoup de brefs d'avocats. Même s'ils étaient plus longs, s'ils l'étaient trop, ce serait encore là une raison pour qu'ils fussent imprimés, afin que chaque sénateur pût en prendre connaissance par lui-même.

M. Nicholls exprime l'espoir qu'il ne sera pas fait d'objection à l'impression de ces documents. Ils sont absolument nécessaires pour l'information des membres mêmes du comité. Lui personnellement n'a pas la moindre connaissance de ce qui a été déjà fait par les comités précédents ou des rapports qu'ils ont présentés. Il doit avouer que quoique membre du comite, il ignore entièrement quelles questions peuvent être soumis à son examen. Il est entré à ce comité sans avoir la moindre idée de ce qu'il y avait à faire et sans aucun moyen de se procurer les informations nécessaires. L'impression de ces documents est absolument nécessaire et il espère qu'elle sera ordonnée.

ÉLECTION D'UN SÉNATEUR DES ETATS-UNIS.

M. Lacey demande si la résolution conjointe ordonnant qu'il soit procédé à l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis n'a pas été mise à l'ordre du jour pour jeudi.

Plusieurs sénateurs répondent que non.

M. Lacey dit que quelque grand que soit le respect qu'il professe pour les sénateurs qui viennent de lui répondre, il aimerait cependant à recevoir une information un peu plus certaine. Il voudrait que l'on consulte le journal et il répète sa question « la résolution n'a-t-elle pas été mise à l'ordre du jour pour jeudi ? Il est, lui, sous l'impression qu'elle l'a été. Il a compris que le sénateur des Avoyelles qui est maintenant absent, avait dit qu'il avait été entendu entre lui et plusieurs autres sénateurs, lorsque dernièrement cette question était devant le Sénat, qu'elle ne serait pas agitée avant jeudi et il croyait qu'elle avait été mise à l'ordre du jour spécial pour ce jour-là.

M. Martin explique que la convention faite entre le sénateur des Avoyelles était d'une nature toute personnelle et que le Sénat n'avait aucunement à s'en occuper. Le sénateur était seulement convenu avec lui qu'il ne ramènerait pas la question avant jeudi, jour où les sénateurs qui étaient alors absents seraient de retour.

M. Wickliffe pense qu'il serait plus convenable que la question fut ajournée jusqu'à ce que le rapport fut imprimé et soumis au Senat. Alors il serait parfaitement disposé à ce qu'on fixât un jour, mais jusque-là il demande à s'éclairer des lumières que le comité judiciaire a jetées sur cette question.

Le secrétaire lit la partie du journal où il est consigné que la motion de fixer un jour avait été perdue.

Après quelques conversations particulières, M. Lacey dit qu'il est disposé à accepter l'autorité du journal et il fait maintenant la motion que l'examen de cette question soit fixé à jeudi prochain.

M. Wickliffe s'oppose à ce que la résolution soit présentée de cette manière : il croit qu'elle doit rester déposée sur le bureau, conformément aux réglements.

M. Lacey ne voit pas pourquoi la résolution serait sujette à la formalité de rester déposée sur le bureau conformément aux règlements.

M. King dit qu'il ne désire pas entrer dans une discussion de cette question, mais il croit qu'elle intervient beaucoup trop dans les devoirs ordinaires de la Législature.

Elle devrait être décidée une fois pour toutes, afin de couper court aux interminables et inutiles discussions auxquelles elle donnera lieu.

M. Wickliffe ne désire pas que la question soit mise de côté. Il est convenable au contraire qu'il en soit disposé le plus tôt possible. Mais le Sénat aura pour cela tout le temps nécessaire après que le rapport aura été imprimé. Il se peut qu'il convienne à un sénateur de parler sur cette question jeudi prochain, mais il se peut aussi que d'autres n'aient pas le desir de l'entendre. Quant à lui il désire attendre que ces documents soient imprimés. Il désire les avoir tous deux pour en comparer les raisonnements et les conclusions, afin de voir s'il y a entre eux quelque conflit important. Quel mal peut-il y avoir à cela ? Lui, personnellement ne s'est pas beaucoup occupé de cette question ; elle ne lui a pas causé d'insomnies, elle n'a pas empêché qu'il accomplit tous ses devoirs législatifs. Il espère qu'il en sera de même du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et qu'il n'abandonnera pas ses fonctions de président du comité des améliorations intérieures, pas plus qu'il ne l'aurait fait, si semblable question n'avait pas été devant le Sénat.

Après quelques remarques peu importantes faites par différents sénateurs, la résolution de M. Lacey est adoptée.

Bills référés.

M. Thériot.—Un acte relatif au transfert du siége de la cour de la paroisse Saint-Jacques. Référé au comité des paroisses.

Annonce de bills.

Un bill adjoignant une partie de la paroisse de Winn, à la paroisse de Natchitoches.

Ordre du jour.

Une résolution requérant le comité des banques et maisons de banque de prendre des informations et de faire un rapport sur la condition des banques incorporées de la Nouvelle-Orléans.—Adoptée

Un acte pour autoriser les juges de paix à nommer dans certains cas des curateurs ad litem.—Renvoyé au comité.

Un acte changeant les qualifications requises des directeurs de la Banque des Citoyens.—Adopté, et sur motion de M. Wickliffe, cet acte est pris une seconde fois en considération.

Bills et Résolutions adoptés par les deux Chambres.

M. Kennedy, commis de la Chambre, informe le Sénat que la Chambre a donné son concours à un acte confirmant la vente des terres sur le raccourci Cut Off.

Une résolution relative à l'établissement d'un bureau de poste aux établissements français de la paroisse de Livington.

Il demande aussi le concours du Sénat à plusieurs bills et résolutions.

Puis, sur motion, le Sénat s'ajourne.

Mercredi, 9 fev. 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement.

Bills et résolutions présentés.

M. Short, une résolution conjointe demandant une réunion du comité judiciaire des deux chambres pour définir les districts, ainsi que la juridiction des Cours de Discrict et autres Cours inférieures, afin qu'une élection puisse avoir lieu à l'époque assignée pour l'élection des juges de la Cour Suprême.—Adoptée.

M. Lewis.—Une résolution ordonnant le paiement des dépenses faites par le comité qui s'est rendu auprès du gouverneur Hébert, pour la cérémonie de l'inauguration.—Adopté.

M. Todd.—Un acte pour la construction d'un pont sur le bayou Little Bonne Idée, dans la paroisse de Morehouse.—Référé au comité sur les ameliorations intérieures.

M. Millard.—Une résolution dispensant Jérôme Tourné de la Nouvelle-Orléans de toutes autres obligations pécuniaires pour certains bonds forfaits par lui.—Adoptée.

Rapports des comités.

M. Lacey, du comité judiciaire, présente un rapport favorable au bill qui définit les devoirs des notaires hors des limites de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Bills référés.

M. Palfrey—Un acte relatif aux pouvoirs des greffiers des Cours de District.—Référé au comité judiciaire.

Vétérans de 1814 et 1815.

M. Lewis, du comité sur les milices, présente un rapport favorable à l'acte faisant une appropriation pour le paiement des pensions dues aux vétérans de la guerre de 1814-15.

M. Kenner dit qu'il est disposé à voter en faveur d'un bill de cette nature, mais qu'avant de le faire il désirerait savoir au juste quelle somme serait suffisante pour payer tous les arriérés dûs de cette manière. En vue de cela, il croit que le bill devrait être déposé quelque temps afin que les sénateurs pussent prendre des informations.

Digitized by Google

Il va exposer en quelques mots l'état actuel de la question.

La dernière législature a passé un bill faisant une appropriation de $15,000 pour venir au secours des personnes qui reçoivent des pensions pour services rendus pendant la guerre de 1814 & 15. La loi portait que :—" Toute personne ayant combattu dans les rangs de l'armée pendant cette guerre et pouvant prouver ses services et le fait qu'elle est dans le besoin, devant un bureau composé du gouverneur, de l'auditeur et du trésorier aura droit à recevoir une pension de $8 par mois. "

En vertu de cette loi, un bien plus grand nombre de personnes que la Législature n'avait pensé d'abord présentèrent leurs réclamations. Il faudrait au moins $50,000 au lieu de $15,000 pour acquitter ces réclamations.

On propose maintenant une appropriation de $5,000 pour payer les arriérages. Si le Sénat y consent, il vaudrait certainement mieux que l'on pourvut une fois pour toutes à la somme entière qui pourra être nécessaire que de faire une appropriation suffisante seulement pour solder une faible partie des arréages dûs. Ce serait, ajoute-t-il, une goutte d'eau dans la mer.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il se souvient très-bien de cet acte auquel fait allusion le sénateur de l'Ascension. A la dernière session il a fait tout ce qui était en son pouvoir pour empêcher qu'il ne fut adopté parce qu'il pensait que la loi était bien mieux telle qu'elle était premièrement rédigée. La loi précédente exigenit des pensionnés de prouver les détails de leurs réclamation, dans une pétition adressée à la Législature, et demandant des secours. Alors la pétition était prise en considération séparément et les titres individuels du petitionnaire étaient discutés. Mais la dernière Législature a adopté un système tout différent et nous devons le faire exécuter. Dans sa paroisse, à lui, il y a deux personnes, et il a appris du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans que dans ce District, il y en a un bien plus grand nombre, qui ont droit à ces secours. Elles s'étaient imaginées que les $15,000 qui ont été affectées seraient suffisantes, et ne s'attendant pas au flot de pétitionnaires qui s'est tout-à-coup présenté, elles ne s'étaient pas pressées, comme beaucoup d'autres, d'accourir ici et de réclamer ce qui leur était dû en vertu de cette loi. Lorsque plus tard elles se ront présentées, la somme affectée était épuisée et il leur fallut renoncer à l'espoir de secours que leur avait inspirés l'action de la dernière Législature.

Il est donc désireux de voir adopter ce bill. Les exemples qu'il a cités ne sont pas les seuls.

Il sait qu'il existe plusieurs vétérans, dont une bonne partie souffre des besoins les plus indispensables qui auraient droit à faire des reclamations. La somme proposée dans le bill n'est pas très grande, à peine sera-t-elle suffisante, pour payer les arrérages et si, comme l'a dit le sénateur avant lui, ce n'est qu'une goutte d'eau dans la mer, pourquoi donc ne pas l'accorder tout de suite ?

M. King dit qu'il éprouve une grande répugnance à exprimer aucune opposition au système de pensions qui a été adopté par la législature. Mais il doit avouer que lorsqu'il considère la condition où se trouve l'Etat avec un trésor épuisé, à la veille d'une banqueroute, il éprouve quelque inquiètude à un moment comme celui-ci.

Il serait disposé à donner son appui à un bill de cette nature, mais il voudrait aussi avoir du temps pour prendre des informations. Il désirerait que le bill fut de nouveau référé afin que les sénateurs eussent le temps de mieux étudier la question. Le sénateur de l'Ascension a dit que le montant nécessaire serait $50,000, ce qui certes constitue une très forte somme. Il fait donc la motion que le bill soit referé au comité sur les réclamations.

M. Wickliffe est d'avis que la proposition faite par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans est des plus extraordinaires. Ce bill a été référé au Comité de Milice qui en a fait un rapport favorable. Le sénateur voudrait maintenant que de ce comité il fut référé à un autre. Pense-t-il que le Comité de Milice n'a pas donné à cette question toute l'attention qu'elle exigeait ? S'imagine-t-il que le comité n'est pas compétent pour examiner cette question et en faire un rapport ? S'il ne le pense pas pourquoi donc alors se donner l'apparence du manque de courtoisie qu'impliquerait le fait de retirer ce bill des mains du comité auquel il avait été référé ?

M. King répond qu'il ne voit pas trop ce que le comité de milice a à voir dans des questions d'argent. C'est tout une question de piastres et de sous, et comme telle, elle aurait dû être tout d'abord référée ou au comité de finances ou au comité sur les reclamations.

M. Kenner désire soumettre quelques observations avant qu'il soit disposé en dernier lieu de cette question. Il l'a attentivement étudiée et il croit qu'après qu'il aura expliqué les vraies circonstances de l'affaire, les sénateurs se joindront à lui pour demander que le bill soit de nouveau referé pour quelque temps. Lui personnellement est parfaitement disposé à faire tout ce qui sera possible pour venir au secours des vétérans qui ont combattu pour l'Union et pour l'Etat dans la guerre de 1814 et 15 toutes les fois que le besoin les placera dans la nécessité de le solliciter. Il votera avec plaisir en faveur d'une loi qui leur soit avantageuse. C'est pour cette raison qu'il désire que le bill soit référé de nouveau afin que l'on ait le temps de préparer un amendement qui pourvoie à toute la somme rendue nécessaire par l'acte de l'année dernière.

Dans le but de faire voir au Senat quels sont les résultats de cet acte et quelle somme serait nécessaire pour qu'il pût être rempli, il va lire le passage suivant relatif à ce sujet et tiré du rapport de l'Auditeur de l'Etat :

« A propos de la suggestion que j'ai faite dans la première partie de ce rapport relativement à la loi de pension adopté à la dernière session de la Législature, je dirai que la somme de $15,000 affectée pour l'année 1852, en vertu de l'acte passe alors, a été épuisée dans les premiers six mois, de sorte que le second terme des pensionnés n'a pu être payé. Il faudrait, pour le faire, une somme au moins égale, sans compter dix ou quinze mille piastres de plus pour satisfaire aux réclamations déclarées bonnes par l'acte No. 220, que rejet maintenant le bureau des pensions. Il faudrait donc en tout $50,000 par an pour répondre à toutes les réclamations qui seront faites. L'acte donne le droit de pension à toute personne qui a rendu des services militaires en 1814 et 15 et fait du serment prêté par le réclamant et par deux autres témoins une preuve suffisante du titre à une pension. »

Nous avons passé un acte affectant $15,000 à l'accomplissement de la loi qui accorde une pension de $8 par mois à toutes personnes qui ont rendu des services militaires pendant la guerre de 1814 et 15. Puis nous avons vu que la somme affectée n'était pas suffisante et qu'il s'en fallait d'au moins $50,000 qu'elle pût l'être. Cette somme entière sera nécessaire pour repondre à toutes les reclamations dont nous avons maintenant connaissance. Si le Sénat est decidé à persister dans ce système de pensions, il ne doit pas accorder l'argent necessaire par petits à-comptes tels que serait la somme proposée dans le bill qui est maintenant soumis à notre considération. Il serait donc plus convenable de referer de nouveau le bill, afin qu'on ait le temps de mûrir un plan par lequel on puisse une fois pour toutes pourvoir à tout ce qui peut etre necessaire.

Le sénateur qui m'a précédé, a dit que dans sa paroisse il connait deux respectables vieillards qui ne sont pas accourus ici pour toucher leur pension aussitôt après la passation de la loi de pension par la dernière Legislature. J'admire ces deux vieillards, ils ont vole au secours de l'Etat à l'heure du péril, ils devraient être recompenses de leurs services. Et pourquoi pensé-je qu'ils doivent être payes ? Parce que parmi mes constituants je connais onze personnes qui sont placées exactement dans la même position. Elles non plus ne se sont pas pressées, elles ne sont pas accourues ici pour recevoir leur argent aussitôt que le bill a été passé, et pourtant elles ont droit à une part de l'appropriation tout aussi bien que les deux constituants du sénateur de West-Feliciana.

Puisque la somme proposée dans le bill n'est pas suffisante pour répondre aux réclamations présentées, il désire ou que la somme soit augmentée de manière à ce qu'elle puisse satisfaire tous les réclamants ou que le système de pensions soit entièrement aboli d'une fois.

Avant de terminer, il doit dire qu'il a attentivement écouté les remarques faites par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et qu'il les a trouvées parfaitement justes et convenables. Il est lui-même d'opinion que le fait de référer le bill au comité des réclamations serait des plus inconvenants puisque c'est tout une question de piastres de sous à laquelle ce comité n'a rien à faire. A bien considérer, cette question n'appartient pas au comité de milices, elle appartient au comité de finances ou au comité sur les réclamations.

M. Lacey. dit, que si la question est simplement une question de temps, que si le Sénat désire que l'occasion lui fut offerte encore de presenter des amendements, il accédera au désir exprime par le sénateur; mais que si le but est de retirer le bill des mains du comité auquel il avait été référé pour le confier à un autre, il s'y opposera de toutes ses forces. Il ne voit pas qu'il y ait lieu à un plus long examen que celui qui a déjà été fait de cette question, et ce fut a qui, par courtoisie envers le comité de milice, s'opposerait à ce que le bill fut référé à un autre comité.

S'il s'agissait tout simplement d'une demande de pension pour tels ou tels, ce ne serait peut-être pas sans hésitation qu'il accéderait à la demande. Quelque soit son désir d'apaiser des estomacs affamés, de soulager les souffrances en venant en aide à ces vétérans de 1815, brisés par les fatigues de la guerre, il réfléchirait avant de se lancer dans une pareille voie. Mais s'il prend comme point de départ la législation de 1852, quelle est la situation dans laquelle il se trouve placé ? La Législature de cette année a passé une loi affectant une somme de $15,000 aux vétérans de 1815. Entendait-elle faire une promesse et y manquer ? Offrir des pensions et puis les refuser ? A-t-elle prétendu dire à ces glorieux débris de la guerre de 1815, ces vétérans qui ont expose leurs jours pour la défense de l'Etat, venez et les secours ne vous feront point faute, il sera pourvu à vos besoins, l'Etat vous prendra sous son égide: a-t-elle prétendu leur tenir ce langage et puis fermer sur eux les portes du trésor ? Qu'elle est donc la position dans laquelle le placent la législation de 1852, et les conséquences légitimes de cette législation ?

La bonne foi exige que les dispositions de la loi adoptée l'année dernière reçoivent leur plein effet. Si la proposition du sénateur de la paroisse d'Ascension n'est faite que dans le but d'obtenir le temps nécessaire à l'examen de la question, il ne s'y opposera pas ; mais si le but est de transférer le bill d'un comité à un autre, il se verra contraint de combattre la proposition. En n'envisageant que le fond de la question, il se voit contraint de donner tout leur effet aux dispositions de l'acte de 1852, qui a solennellement assuré une pension aux vétérants de 1815.

M. Martin fait observer que quant à lui, président du comité de la milice, il ne se trouvera pas blessé si le bill est renvoyé au comité de finances.

M. Lacey déclare que si le président du comité de la milice n'a aucune objection à la marche proposée, il n'y fera certainement point opposition.

Le bill est renvoyé au comité de finances.

Conformément à l'avis préalable qui en a été donné, M. Kenner presente un bill dans le but d'affecter une certaine somme comme indemnité aux électeurs présidentiels—Adopté.

ORDRE DU JOUR.

CLASSIFICATION DES SENATEURS.

Sur motion de M. Mouton, le Sénat procède par la voie du sort, à la classification des sénateurs en vertu de l'article 17 de la Constitution.

Le résultat est ainsi que suit :

Première classe, dont les fonctions expirent dans deux ans—MM. Derbes, Kenner, Kemp, Lewis, Martin, Millard, Mouton, Neal, Palfrey, Patterson, Smith, Short, Slack, Taylor, Todd et Wickliffe.

Deuxième classe, dont les fonctions expirent dans quatre ans—MM. Boatner, Burthe, Clifton, Dupré, Evans, Griffin, Hodge, Kittridge, King, Lacoste, Lacey, Lauve, McCay, Nicholls, Rivers, Theriot.

M. Short demande et obtient la permission de présenter un bill dans le but de pourvoir à la vente d'une partie des terres marécageuses et inondées concédées à l'Etat par actes du Congrès, approuvés le 2 mars 1849 et le 28 septembre 1850 et régler l'emploi du produit de la vente.

La motion étant faite de renvoyer le bill au comité des terres publiques et levées,

M. Short dit qu'il est opposé au renvoi, parce que l'un des effets les plus importants que se propose le bill serait anéanti par le fait même de ce renvoi. Il va expliquer le but que se propose le bill. Dans la chambre basse, le comité des terres publiques et levées est saisi en ce moment d'un bill dont l'objet est d'adopter un plan général pour protéger toutes les terres alluviales de la Louisiane qui sont sujettes aux inondations. En vertu de ce bill, une commission qui devra être nommée plus tard, devra faire une classification de ces terres. Après cette classification, il pourra être fait une émission de certificats, (scrips) représentant la valeur des terres et répondant à la classification faite par les commissaires ; le produit de ces certificats, devra être consacré à l'érection de levées. Ce plan mettrait à notre disposition un fonds permanent pour la construction des levées. Or, aussitôt qu'il a été connu que la législature avait l'intention de passer un bill à cet effet, une grande partie des terres qui présentaient le plus de valeur a été choisie et accaparée par la spéculation. De cette façon tandis que le bill en était encore à la première des phases par lesquels il doit passer, ou a spéculer sur l'action présumée de la Législature, on s'est emparé des meilleures terres et compromis, quant à présent, l'exécution d'une des mesures les plus importantes que se propose la Législature. Le but de ce bill est de réduire en système la question des levées et des terres publiques, de créer un fonds spécial, à l'aide soit d'une émission de certificats, soit d'nu emprunt reposant sur les terres. Il croit que la Législature doit empêcher l'ajournement d'un pareil projet. En ce moment les meilleures terres sont rapidement enlevées et dans quel but ? Parce que l'on voit que la Législature a le dessein d'adopter un système qui mette à même de créer un fonds spécial, avec cette rapidité dans le coup d'œil que possèdent les spéculateurs, ils ont bien vite discerne la valeur des terres et se sont jetés sur les meilleures ; et au moment où le système commencera à fonctionner le spéculateur sera en possession. Aussitôt que la classification ser commencée, on verra que toutes les meilleures terres sont aux mains de ces personnes. C'est dans le but de déjouer ces manœuvres, c'est pour que les comités des terres publiques et des levées dans les deux chambres puissent, en se consultant, prendre des mesures capables de renverser les obstacles que les spéculateurs pourraient opposer à l'adoption du système, qu'il a présenté ce bill et qu'il en combat le renvoi. Il veut que le fonds précieux dont il espère voir la création ne soit pas enlevé à l'Etat par ces hommes à l'œil perçant, avant même que l'Etat ait pu jouir de la vue de ce fonds.

M. Griffin, dit qu'il désirerait savoir quel serait l'effet de ce bill relativement aux habitants qui désirent s'inscrire pour des terres situées dans la profondeur de leurs propriétés et qui leur sont nécessaires pour les besoins de l'agriculture. Il lui semble que le bill prononcerait contre eux une sorte d'exclusion, attendu qu'il est probable qu'ils n'iraient pas dans les marais, au milieu des moustiques et des crocodilles, pour creer le genre d'établissement requis par le bill. Il combattra le bill.

M. Hodge fait observer qu'il a un substitut à présenter qui recevra, il l'espère, l'assentiment du sénateur lequel a présenté le bill. Les Etats-Unis ont fait donation à l'Etat des terres en question par actes du Congrès de 1849 et 1850. Après l'adoption de ces actes et avant que les listes eussent été achevées et expédiées au bureau général des terres, plusieurs personnes se sont inscrites au bureau des terres des Etats-Unis pour une partie de ces terres. Le commissaire du bureau général des terres décida subséquemment que les inscriptions prises après la passation des actes de 1849 et 1850 étaient nulles, attendu que ces inscriptions avaient suivi l'abandon que les Etats-Unis avaient fait à la Louisiane de tous leurs droits à ces terres. Plus tard, sous l'empire des lois de l'Etat, d'autres personnes se présentèrent et se firent inscrire pour les mêmes terres. Le Register permet de prendre de pareilles inscriptions, s'appuyant sur une opinion de l'Avocat Général. Cette opinion vient d'être soumise au Sénat ; elle accompagne un rapport présenté par le Register du bureau des terres. Il pense que les choses étant ainsi, le mieux serait de fermer le bureau des terres, pour prévenir les manœuvres qui ont lieu à la faveur de l'opinion de l'Avocat Général. Le substitut qu'il présente atteindra ce but.

M. Lacey pense que le sénateur de De Soto ferait mieux de ne pas insister sur son substitut. Le Register du bureau des terres a tout dernièrement apporté au comité judiciaire des pièces importantes sur cette question qu'il a reçues de Washington. Ces pièces sont encore à examiner. Par suite d'un mal-entendu, les rapports du Register du bureau des terres, dont l'impression avait été ordonnée, n'a pas encore été soumis au Sénat. Les rapports ont été imprimés, mais ont été, par erreur, distribués dans l'autre chambre. Il n'y a pas lieu à présenter le substitut, attendu que toutes les mesures que requiert l'état des choses peuvent entrer dans le bill originaire. Il espère que le sénateur n'insistera pas sur son substitut, vu que les sénateurs n'ont pas encore eu le temps d'examiner ces rapports. Il espère que le Sénat statuera sur le bill sans avoir égard au substitut.

M. Hodge pensait qu'après avoir informé le sénateur qu'il avait eu sous les yeux le rapport de l'enregistreur des terres et l'opinion de l'avocat-général, son honorable collègue n'insisterait plus pour ce qu'on retirât le substitut.

Le Register dit que, dans les circonstances dont il a été parlé, il ne peut pas refuser de recevoir les inscriptions de terres. L'orateur demande au sénateur s'il trouve que cela soit juste, et s'il n'est pas d'opinion que les personnes qui, de bonne foi, sous l'empire de nos lois, prennent des inscriptions de terres, doivent avoir la préséance. C'est pour empêcher des conflits de ce genre, c'est pour venir en aide à différents citoyens de son District que l'action de l'enregistreur a mis dans l'embarras, que M. Hodge a offert ce substitut.

Il croit que d'autres embarras surviendront encore, si le bureau des terres n'est pas fermé : il y a dans cette ville bon nombre de personnes qui y sont venues, afin de se procurer de semblables inscriptions. Il est donc d'opinion qu'il serait prudent de fermer le bureau des terres. Le seul résultat qu'il attende de cette mesure, est d'empêcher la vente d'autres warrants à d'autres individus qu'aux exploitateurs actuels.

L'avocat-général a commis une erreur dans le sens qu'il a donné à la loi, et l'enregistreur général a déjà dépassé la limite de ses devoirs, en permettant, ainsi qu'il l'a fait, des inscriptions de terres L'enregistreur est évidemment disposé à reconnaître la validité de ces inscriptions, parce qu'en cela il est soutenu par l'opinion de l'avocat-général. Quand à M Hodge, il ne sacrifierait pas le sentiment de son devoir à des prévention populaires, et il ne consentira pas à défendre une législation établie expressément pour le bénéfice d'hommes qui, sans titre, s'adjugent la propriété des terres publiques (squatters).

M. Short dit qu'il serait facile de présenter le sujet en question d'une telle façon, sous une forme telle, que le sénateur de De Soto n'y aurait plus d'objection. Si la loi telle qu'on la présente n'a pas une lettre et un esprit satisfaisants, il est disposé à lui donner des modifications qui puissent en assurer l'adoption immédiate. Un acte de la dernière Législature a pris des dispositions relatives aux individus qui se sont inscrits pour des terres au bureau général. Le secrétaire de l'intérieur a décidé que les inspections des terres, faites au bureau général, postérieurement à la passation des actes de 1849 et 1850, sont nulles et sans effet, car elles ont été obtenues après que les Etats-Unis eurent déjà disposé des titres.

A la dernière session, la Législature a voté une loi disposant qu'on se ferait rembourser au bureau général des terres, l'argent reçu là pour les dites inscriptions. Si la Louisiane rentre dans ce débours, qu'en résultera-t-il ? Elle ne peut pas prendre tout à la fois argent et terres. Le Congrès a aussi devant lui un acte décrétant qu'on remboursera à la Louisiane tout l'argent encaissé au bureau général des terres, pour les inscriptions prises après l'adoption des actes de 1849 et 1850.

Cela devrait convenir à mon honorable collègue. continue M. Short, et s'il ne s'en contente point. qu'il offre un amendement au bill.

Le sénateur s'est trompé s'il a pensé que M. Short a présenté ce bill pour le seul bénéfice de ceux qui occupent les terres publiques. Ses constituants, et bien d'autres personnes demeurant sur les terres marécageuses et continuellement exposées à tous les dangers de l'inondation en tireraient les plus grands avantages. L'orateur a un autre but, c'est d'arracher les dites terres aux spéculateurs, jusqu'à ce que l'on puisse les remblayer, les exhausser. De cette façon ces terres deviendraient habitables pour ceux qui s'y sont fixés. Tel est l'objet que M. Short a en vue : il ne pense nullement, ainsi qu'on l'a annoncé, à favoriser les possesseurs sans titres.

M. King désire offrir un amendement au substitut: il débarrassera le bill de tous les détails qui rencontrent de l'opposition. Le bill ainsi que le substitut ont une seule et même tendance : c'est d'arrêter la fureur des spéculations en terres publiques.

Le substitut décrète la fermeture du bureau des terres et la suspension de toutes ses opérations. L'honorable sénateur est d'avis que ce substitut pourrait être du goût de tout le monde, si on ajoutait seulement une ligne disant que «les préempteurs ne perdraient aucun de leurs droits, par suite de cette suspension.» Il offre donc l'amendement suivant au substitut :

«Pourvu que les dispositions de ce bill ne soient pas appliquées aux privilèges de préemption que garantit la seconde section de l'acte cité plus haut.»

H. Hodge accepte l'amendement.

Le substitut est voté sous cette forme :

Il est résolu, etc , Que l'enregisteur du bureau des Terres, le Trésorier, et le Receveur des Fonds Publics sont requis de ne plus vendre de «warrants» conformément à l'acte du 17 mars 1852, pourvu toutefois que les dispositions de ce bill, ne soient pas appliquées aux privilèges de préemption que garantit la seconde section de l'acte cité plus haut.»

MESSAGE DE LA CHAMBRE.

M. Kennedy, greffier de la chambre, demande au Sénat d'adopter avec la Chambre un «Acte pour venir en aide à la Banque de l'Union, et pour opérer le réglement définitif de ses affaires.»

Sur motion, le Sénat s'ajourne.

JEUDI, 10 février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble, conformément à l'ajournement.

L'hon. W. W. Farmer, lieutenant-gouverneur, occupe le fauteuil.

Le secrétaire va demander le concours de la Chambre aux résolutions et aux bills suivants :

Un acte autorisant le maire et le Bureau des Aldermen à diviser la ville de Bâton-Rouge en deux districts électoraux, et indiquant la manière dont les élections devront être conduites.

Un acte pour l'émancipation de Murdoch Warren Shaw.

Un acte changeant les qualifications requises des Directeurs de la Banque des Citoyens de la Louisiane.

Un acte pour l'emancipation d'Angélique Victorine Blanchard, mineure, épouse de A. N. Warren.

Un acte changeant le nom de James H. H. Hotwell, en celui de Andrew Sausen Jr.

Un acte changeant le titre de l'Association Catholique de la Nouvelle-Orléans, pour venir au secours des orphelins.

Un acte amendant l'acte pourvoyant à la vente d'une partie des terres en marais ou inondées, accordées à l'Etat en vertu des actes du Congrès, approuvés le 2 de mars 1849 et le 28 septembre 1850, et pour faire une appropriation du produit des dites ventes.

Un acte créant une appropriation pour payer les dépenses de l'élection presidentielle; et aussi une résolution enjoignant au comité judiciaire du Sénat et à celui de la Chambre des Représentants de définir les districts et la juridiction des Cours de District et autres Cours inférieures; et pourvoyant aussi à d'autres objets.

Une résolution pour venir en aide à Jérôme Tourné.

Le secrétaire informe en même temps la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours à la résolution enjoignant au comité permanent sur les banques et maisons de banque, de s'enquérir de la condition des banques incorporées de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et de faire un rapport à ce sujet.

Il demande aussi que l'Orateur de la Chambre appose sa signature au bill amendé intitulé: « Acte pour émanciper Susanne Little, mineure, épouse du docteur Vincent Boagné, de la paroisse de St-Landry.

Et il informe la Chambre que le Président du Sénat a signé la résolution amendée, provenant de la Chambre, enjoignant à nos sénateurs et requérant nos représentants au Congrès de faire tous leurs efforts pour obtenir l'établissement d'une malle journalière, entre la Nouvelle-Orléans, Bâton-Rouge et le Bayou-Sarah.

Les sénateurs suivants donnent avis qu'ils présenteront demain, ou un autre jour, les bills ci-après désignés :

M. McCay—Un acte pour venir au secours de Parvis Dugué, de la paroisse de Jefferson.

M. Nichols—Un acte pour émanciper Alcide Gensolelin. Et,

Un acte pour venir au secours de Mme Joseph de Buclet.

M. Mouton—Un acte révoquant une partie de la 4me section d'un acte intitulé : « Acte pour expliquer certains articles du Code civil, maintenant en vigueur dans cet Etat, » approuvé le 1er avril 1826, et pour remettre en vigueur et amender l'article 305 du Code civil de la Louisiane.

M. Lewis—Un acte pour incorporer la compagnie connue sous le titre de « South Western Industrial Fair Company.

M. Derbès—Un acte révoquant un acte intitulé : « Acte accordant, dans tous les cas, un appel du jugement des Juges de Paix dans la ville de la Nouvelle Orléans » et amendant la 16me section d'un acte « déterminant la juridiction et le nombre des Juges de Paix qui doivent être élus dans la paroisse et la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans. » Approuvé le 1er juin 1846.

M. Mouton, conformément à l'annonce qu'il en a faite, présente :

Un acte pourvoyant à ce que les successions soient plus promptement et plus facilement administrées et réglées dans cet Etat.

Sur motion, les règles sont suspendues, l'acte subit ses deux premières lectures et est référé au comité judiciaire.

M. Kenner, du comité sur les banques et maisons de banque, auquel avait été référé un acte empêchant la circulation des petits billets, fait un rapport favorable; mais suggère des amendements audit acte.

ORDRE DU JOUR. — 3me LECTURE.

Un acte intitulé : « Acte amendant un acte intitulé « Acte organisant un district de levées comprenant les paroisses de Carroll, Madison et Catahoula, afin que lesdites paroisses soient mieux protégées contre les inondations, est lu une seconde fois et adopté.

ORDRE SPECIAL DU JOUR.

Il est midi. La résolution suivante est prise en considération et subit sa seconde lecture :

Résolu que l'Assemblée générale se réunira dans la salle des séances de la Chambre des Représentants vendredi prochain, 11 du courant, à midi, dans le but de procéder à l'élection d'un sénateur au Congrès des Etats-Unis, pour remplir la vacance qui aura lieu à partir du 4 mars prochain à l'expiration du terme de l'Hon. Solomon W. Downs.

M. Lacey se lève et prononce le discours suivant :

M. Lacey—Lorsque le sénateur des Avoyelles a présenté la resolution dont le sénat est maintenant saisi, le sénateur de Ouest Féliciana a demandé qu'elle fut référée au comité judiciaire. Je m'y suis opposé, pensant que cette résolution avait un caractère politique. Elle ne nécessitait pas d'enquête sur aucune question qui put être examinée par d'autre corps que le Sénat lui-même. Je craignais que le renvoi demandé ne fut qu'un moyen délatoire, crainte qui, je l'avoue n'a point été justifiée. Je désirais en outre voir le sénat disposer de cette résolution sans être prédisposé pour ou contre sous l'influence d'un rapport. Je me félicite M. le président qu'aujourd'hui que le sujet est soumis à notre discussion et que nous puissions nous préparer à régler sa destinée par un vote définitif.

J'entends dire qu'en soutenant cette résolution je jouerai le rôle d'un homme de parti, et qu'on m'accusera de tenter de faire entrer de force un membre démocrate au Sénat des Etats Unis en violation de la loi, et sans respect pour les droits acquis de M. Benjamin Je demanderai à mes honorables collègues du Sénat, s'il y a nécessité de renforcer le parti démocratique au Sénat ? si notre majorité y est douteuse, si le président élu, dans un moment critique n'est pas certain de son concours. Oui, sans doute, il doit l'être ! lorsque cet homme, frappé par l'infortune, se sera éloigné de la fosse où repose inanimé, le corps défiguré de son fils bien-aimé, lorsqu'il aura essuyé ses larmes brûlantes que provoquent la blessure faite à son cœur, lorsque les devoirs de la haute position qu'il doit remplir auront fait taire les cris de sa douleur, de sa tristesse, de son infortune, il trouvera de la part du corps honorable, au sein duquel je m'efforce d'envoyer un représentant de cet Etat, un concours au niveau de toutes les circonstances. Il y trouvera la prépondérance, la force nécessaire pour sortenir toutes les mesures proposées par son cabinet. En quoi servirait donc la tendence qu'on n'impute ? Mes honorables collègues considéreront, j'en ai la conviction, cette accusation injuste, peu généreuse et peu bienveillante.

On me dit aussi que cette résolution est d'avance frappée d'insuccès, que ceux qui la soutiennent sortiront du débat en déroute et épouvantés. L'opposition est forte, je le reconnais; nous y rencontrerons réuni contre nous, la force entière des sénateurs whigs soutenus, je regrette de le dire, par une partie de nos amis politiques. Unis comme nous le sommes, il eut mieux valu s'adresser à notre jugement que de faire appel à nos craintes. Nous tiendrons tête à l'orage grondant en fureur autour de nous. Et, si enfin, nous devons être faibles et sans force, vaincus par une puissance irrésistible, ce sera le fait de la fatalité et non de notre volonté.

Avant d'exposer au Sénat mes vues sur l'illégalité et l'inconstitutionnalité de l'élection de l'honorable J. P. Benjamin, je crois convenable, de rappeler les objections soulevées contre l'adoption de la résolution que nous discutons. Ces objections, ont au premier abord une apparence assez spécieuse ; mais en les examinant de près, avec réflexion, leur force s'évanouie comme le brouillard du matin, aux premiers rayons du soleil levant. Passons en revue ces objections.

On soutient d'abord que M. Benjamin étant déjà élu par une précédente Législature et en possession de sa commission, la Législature ne peut pas procéder à l'élection d'un sénateur des Etat-Unis, et que le seul corps qui a droit de connaître de la validité de cetre élection est le Sénat des Etats-Unis. Je n'ai jamais vu cette doctrine poussée aussi loin qu'on prétend le faire à cette occasion.

Si M. Benjamin a été élu en violation de la loi organique de l'Etat, l'acte de la Législature d'où cette commission découle, et cette commission elle-même, n'ont pas plus de valeur que la feuille de papier sur laquelle elle est écrite ; elle n'a point de force obligatoire. Elle ne confère aucun droit à l'élu, elle constitue enfin une complète et absolue nullité. Une commission obtenue en violation de la Constitution ne saurait protéger celui qui en est porteur, même après avoir pris son siège. Et celle qui serait obtenue en violation seulement de la loi ne saurait conférer un droit meilleur aussi longtemps que l'élu n'a point été assermenté, et n'a point commencé l'exercice des fonctions dont il se prétend revêtu. La Législature a le droit de procéder à une seconde élection avant que la nullité de la première soit déclarée. Cette question a été définitivement réglée en 1831 par le Sénat des Etats Unis, au sujet des réclamations opposées de MM. Robbins et Potter de l'Etat de Rhode Island. M. Clay soutenait que le Sénat des Etats Unis ne pouvait procéder à examiner, les qualifications M. Potter sans avoir au préalable refusé à M. Robbins le droit de siéger. Et cependant le Sénat des Etats Unis nomma un comité pour examiner la réclamation de M. Potter, choisi à la seconde élection. C'est là la reconnaissance complète par un Sénat whig du droit qu'à la Legislature de procéder à une seconde élection avant que la nullité de la première soit déclarée par le Sénat des Etats Unis. Nous devons donc en conclure que si M. Benjamin est élu en violation de la Constitution ou de la loi, il reste soumis à l'action de la Législature, et le pouvoir qui l'a revêtu de la robe sénatoriale peut la lui enlever.

On dit encore que les honorables sénateurs qui représentent aujourd'hui l'Etat au sénat des Etats-Unis ont été élus comme l'a été M. Benjamin et qu'il est nécessaire de confirmer les droits de celui-ci pour rendre valables les droits des premiers. Supposons M. le président, que si MM. Soulé et Downs aient été tous deux élus en violation de la constitution et de la loi, (point que je ne crois pas nécessaire d'examiner). Ce fait nous autoriserait-il à sauter à pieds joints par dessus la loi organique et à tourner le dos à la loi que nous avons solennellement juré de maintenir. Quant à moi je ne me rangerai jamais à l'opinoin qui consiste à soutenir que deux torts constituent un droit, et jamais je ne la partagerais.

Cela me mène à examiner l'inconstitutionnalité et l'illegalité de l'élection de l'honorable J. P. Benjamin, et je m'efforcerai de satisfaire à cet égard cette honorable assemblée. J'établirai au mieux de mes humbles et faibles moyens :

1o. Que l'acte de 1846 sur lequel s'appuie M. Benjamin pour établir son titre au Sénat des Etats-Unis est " inconstitutionnel. "

2o. Que s'il est constitutionnel, il n'autoriait pas la législature à procéder à l'élection.

3o. Que s'il autorisait l'élection celle-ci était incomplète et imparfaite et ne pouvait devenir définitive que dans le cas ou la législature n'aurait pas tenu de session cette année.

Je soutiens donc M. le président que l'acte de 1846 viole la constitution, et pour l'établir, j'appelle l'attention des sénateurs sur les considérations suivantes.

Les auteurs de la constitution de 1846 par les mots élection régulière ont eu en vue une élection faite dans l'année pendant laquelle expire le terme régulier des fonctions des sénateurs. L'acte de 1846 fixe dans certains cas cette élection à l'année précédente. Il y a là contradiction entre la loi organique et le statut de 1846 qui, en conséquence, est inconstitutionnelle.

Mais les auteurs de la constitution de 1846 en faisant usage à l'article 36 des mots élection régulière, ont ils entendu celle qui doit avoir lieu dans l'année où expire le terme régulier des fonctions de sénateur? Pour répondre sainement à cette question, nous ne devons pas nous contenter de l'examiner au point de vue que nous nous créons nous-mêmes. Remontons à l'époque où cet article était discuté par la convention, nous devons nous éclairer des lumières de cet honorable corps. Il est évident que les auteurs de la constitution ont par les mots élection régulière, ont eu en vue celle faite dans l'année pendant laquelle expire le termer égulier des fonctions des sénateur. C'est évident, par ce que :

1o Telle a été la règle invariable dans cet Etat, depuis trente-deux ans, depuis le moment où la Louisiane revêtit le manteau de la souveraineté. et fut admise comme un Etat dans cette glorieuse confédération, jusqu'à l'époque où fut adopté l'article 37 de la Constitution de 1845, il n'y a pas eu d'autre règle suivie ; cette règle a été consacrée par la poussière de trente années ; elle est restée ferme et immuable pendant cette longue période, et pouvons-nous nn moment supposer que les fondateurs de la loi organique, en se servant des mots «élection régulière» entendait autre chose que de continuer cette règle qui a grandi et s'est affermie à mesure que l'Etat grandissait et s'affermissait.

De plus, une chose qui fait voir d'une manière évidente que telle était l'intention des fondateurs de la Constitution, c'est que par-là, ils mettaient le peuple à même de placer sur le siège sénatorial un homme dont l'opinion politique réfléterait le sentiment populaire. C'est là un immense, un inestimable privilége, et l'on doit rejeter toute interprétation de la loi organique, ou des statuts de l'Etat, qui tendrait à priver le peuple du droit d'exclure directement ou indirectement des fonctions publiques des hommes dont l'opinion politique serait directement opposé au vœu du peuple, tel qu'il aurait été exprimé à l'élection populaire. Je ne puis donc m'empêcher pour les raisons que j'ai énumérés plus haut, de conclure que notre interprétation des mots «élection populaire» est juste et qu'elle était dans l'intention de ces hommes sages qui les mirent dans la constitution.

On répond cependant que les mots «élection régulière» signifie une élection dont l'objet est de remplir une vacance survenue à l'expiration régulière des fonctions et qui a eu lieu conformément aux règles drescrites par la Législature. Cet argument pose en principe que la Législature a le droit de fixer l'époque à laquelle l'élection doit avoir lieu, et que l'election, lorsqu'elle a été ainsi fixée devient par là même une élection régulière.

La tendance pernicieuse de cette interprétation montre combien elle est erronée ; car si la Législature peut fixer l'époque qu'il lui plaît, il n'y a pas de limite quant au temps, et elle peut faire que l'élection d'un sénateur ait lieu cinq ans avant que la vacance survienne. Que dis-je ? non seulement la Législature peut placer l'élection à cinq années avant l'expiration du temps de service régulier, mais une législature subséquente peut détruire la règle et s'arrêter à toute autre époque et tout autre mode d'élection également absurde. Pouvons-nous donner aux mots «élection régulière» une interprétation qui produirait un état de choses si déplorable ? Ne faut-il pas plutôt conclure que par ces mots ont doit entendre une élection survenant dans l'année où le temps de service expire ? Telle a dû nécessairement être l'intention des auteurs de la Constitution.

Ayant montré que par les mots "à élection régulière" les auteurs de la loi organique avaient en vue celle qui aurait lieu dans l'année où les fonctions sénatoriales devaient régulièrement expirer ; ayant de plus démontré la tendance pernicieuse de l'interprétation contraire, je demanderai au Sénat quelle est l'année dans laquelle, aux termes du statut de 1846, devrait avoir lieu l'élection. Je réponds : dans l'année précédente. Il y a donc conflit positif entre la Constitution de 1845 et la loi de 1846—et conséquemment cette dernière est inconstitutionnelle, nulle et sans effet.

Cependant on soutient que l'article 37 de la Constitution des Etats Unis donne à la Législature le droit de prescrire à quelle époque, en quel lieu et de quelle manière l'élection sénatoriale devra se faire ; et que s'appuyant sur la Constitution des Etats Unis, l'acte de la Législature qui prescrit à quelle époque et de quelle manière l'élection doit se faire, domine les dispositions même expresses de la Constitution de l'Etat. Cet argument me semble faux. Il est vrai que l'article de la Constitution auquel il est fait allusion déclare que la Législature réglera les questions de temps, de lieu &c, relatives à l'élection ; mais cet article loin de donner ce droit exclusivement à la Législature, avait en vue (et c'est un fait évident par lui-même) que toute législation ayant trait à cet objet fut subordonnée à la Constitution. Que deviendrait la souveraineté des Etats, que deviendrait le principe si vanté des drois des Etats, si la Constitution des Etats Unis pouvait mettre un acte législatif au-dessus de la loi organique de l'Etat ? Je ne m'arrêterai pas sur les déplorables conséquences d'un principe aussi faux et aussi dangereux, s'il était une fois admis.

J'arrive au second point que j'ai soumis à l'examen du Sénat, et vais, en quelques mots, démontrer que, en supposant que l'acte de 1846 soit constitutionnel, cet acte n'autorisait pas la Législature de 1852 à procéder à l'élection.

Je dois avouer que cet acte me semble non-seulement inintelligible, mais même absurde. Il veut que la Législature règle ses actes sur une éventualité qui est cachée dans le sein d'un avenir invisible, que ses actes dépendent d'une condition qui ne peut être connue à l'époque ou la Législature doit les accomplir. Mais peu m'importe ce tissu d'absurdités ! Je prendrai le statut tel qu'il est, et tirerai mes arguments de ses propres dispositions.

Le statut de 1846, veut qu'une élection de sénateur ait lieu dans l'année qui précède celle dans laquelle survient une expiration régulière de fonctions sénatoriales. Mais cela, seulement au cas où il n'y a pas de session de la Législature dans l'année où ces fonctions expirent. L'éventualité, la condition dont dépendait le droit de la Législature d'élire dans l'année précédente était l'absence d'une session dans l'année de l'expiration régulière des fonctions sénatoriales ; voici une session tenue dans l'année où expirent ces fonctions, et conséquemment, l'éventualité ne s'étant pas réalisée, la Législature aux termes même de l'acte de 1846, n'était pas autorisée à procéder à une élection dans l'année 1852. Il est inutile de me répondre qu'aucune session pour cette année n'était dans les prévisions des lois en vigueur à l'époque de l'élection de M. Benjamin. L'acte de 1846 ne parle pas d'un événement prévu, mais d'un simple fait, d'une session ou plutôt de l'absence de session de la Législature.

Mais je puis faire la part large à mes adversaires. Je puis admettre que l'acte de 1846 n'était pas une violation de la constitution de l'année qui l'avait précédé ; bien plus que l'election de M. Benjamin était autorisé par les dispositions de cet acte, sur quoi donc alors nous appuyer ? Je réponds : sur le point le plus fort de la thèse que nous soutenons, un point qui n'a pas été attaqué et qui ne saurait être enlevé par les Honorables sénateurs, qui combattent la résolution présentée par nous. Voici ce point : l'élection était de sa nature incomplète, imparfaite ; la validité de cette élection dépendait de l'absence de toute session de la législature pendant cette année. A ce point de vue, nous donnons force à la loi de 1846 en tant qu'elle permet une élection dans l'année précédente, et nous ne détruisons pas le véritable sens et la véritable intention du statut qui exige qu'une élection ait lieu dans l'année où expirent régulièrement les fonctions sénatoriales. Par ce moyen, nous rétablissons l'harmonie dans cette branche de notre législation et il n'y a plus de discordance entre les différentes parties.

Mais, M. le président, j'abuse du temps du Sénat, et il me faut conclure.

Avant de le faire, je demanderai aux sénateurs : quel danger y a-t-il à soumettre cette question controversée au Sénat des Etats-Unis ? Si M. Benjamin est légalement élu, ce corps honorable ne le dépouillera pas de droits acquis, mais lui permettra d'occuper la haute position dont ses brillantes qualités le rendent si digne. Cette question présente-t-elle un doute ? Si le doute existe, et je dois avouer que j'en ai beaucoup pour ma part, qui doit profiter de ce doute ? Quant à moi, je suis disposé à donner au parti démocratique le bénéfice de ce doute. J'ai toujours été un membre fidèle de ce parti ; c'est le parti qui m'a élevé à la position honorable que j'occupe, c'est ce parti qui reflète le sentiment politique du peuple de cet Etat. J'ai marché avec lui au temps de sa prospérité ; il aura le bénéfice de mes doutes et de mon appui à l'heure de l'adversité.

Mais j'en ai assez dit, M. le président. Quand je me dirigeai vers l'autel du sénat, quand je plaçai ma main sur les pages resplendissantes du livre de Dieu, j'accomplis un acte solenuel, un acte significatif et d'une haute importance. Je jurai de maintenir la constitution et les lois, et ce serment, j'y serai fidèle, sans m'inquiéter des conséquences qui pourraient en advenir.

Je pense que l'élection de M. Benjamin n'est pas fondée en loi, et mon opinion étant telle, que je doive être englouti ou doive surnager vivre ou mourir, survivre ou périr, je vote pour la résolution.

M. Short se lève et dit : M. le Président et MM. les sénateurs c'est un fait connu de quelques membres de cette Chambre, connu du moins de ceux avec les quels j'ai l'avantage d'être en rapport, que, dès le principe, je me suis opposé à l'idée qui a donné naissance à la résolution dont est saisi le Sénat en ce moment. Je regrette que cette question ait été soulevée par un parti qui a toujours commandé mon respect, un parti qui, depuis l'établissement de notre république jusqu'à nosjours a prétendu ne reconnaître pour guide que les principes.

M. Wickliffe—La mesure n'a pour elle qu'une fraction du parti.

M. Short—Une fraction du part; oui, ce n'est qu'une fraction cette fois-ci. Mais j'aimerais à n'avoir pas à me séparer de mes amis politiques. Je regrette, pour un autre motif, de voir la tentative qui nous occupe en ce moment; ce motif m'est personnel et je demande que le Sénat me permette de m'y arrêter quelques instants. Depuis un certain nombre d'années, j'ai toujours occupé comme simple citoyen, une assez bonne position dans cette partie de l'Etat à laquelle j'appartiens. Je regrette que ce soit en ma qualité de sénateur que, pour la première fois, je me voie obligé de différer à quelques egards de mes amis politiques. On a dit, et probablement le bruit en est venu jusqu'à mes constituants, que je m'étais posé à l'encontre de la Constitution. En lisant les journaux, j'ai vu, qu'en compagnie des Mouton, des Wickliffe, des Boatner, des McCay, Short lui-même, Short, du nord de la Louisiane, qui avait toujours combattu de toute la force de son bras pour la defeuse des principes démocratiques, s'était mis en révolte ouverte contre la Constitution et était passé, armes et bagages, dans le camp whig. Je regrette d'avoir ete forcé de prendre la position que j'occupe, mais je suis aise de l'occasion qui s'offre à moi de soumettre mes vues sur cette question. Il m'est pénible de différer d'un parti avec lequel j'ai toujours marché; ce n'est qu'avec peine que je me sépare d'anciens amis, sur quelque question que ce soit. Mais, quand je vois une proposition pareille, quand il s'agit non point de ce que la Législature doit ou ne doit pas faire dans l'accomplissement des fonctions qui lui sont assignées dans la Constitution, mais d'une mesure que je considère comme un coup mortel porté aux principes fondamentaux du Gouvernement, je m'inquiète peu de savoir si je marche avec des whigs ou des démocrates : je suis contraint de m'y opposer.

Je fais ce que je ferais, si l'ennemi venait à attaquer le pays. Tous alors nous irions combattre sous le même drapeau, et, après la bataille, chacun de nous retournerait aux vieux compagnons avec lesquels il avait jusque-là vécu. Envisageant la question comme je l'envisage, je demanderais quelle est la base sur laquelle repose notre Constitution ? Je considère que toute Constitution et toute loi passée en vertu de la Constutution reposent sur l'élection par le peuple, tenue à l'époque et de la manière établies par la loi. Suis-je dans le vrai ? Tout notre édifice politique n'a-t-il pas pour base le caractère sacré que nous attribuons à tout ce qui sort de l'urne électorale. J'ai assisté depuis mon enfance à bien des luttes passionnées, au milieu desquelles des masses d'hommes, le Nord, le Sud, l'Est et l'Ouest, étaient emportés comme les vagues de l'Océan, lorsque les vents se jouent sur les flots.

Eh bien, aussitôt les votes dépouillés, c'était comme «l'huile répandue sur les eaux troublées,» et nous recevions la manifestation et la volonté populaire comme un décret de la destinée. Tout américain respecte les décrets sortis de l'urne électorale. Jamais jusqu'ici, je n'ai vu la tentative faite de traiter le résultat d'une élection comme nul, de mettre de côté l'élection comme si elle n'avait jamais existé. Dès le principe, j'avais décidé que je combattrais cette mesure ; quelque faible que puisse être mon bras, bien que ma voix puisse n'avoir pas plus de force que la dernière vibration d'un écho, j'ai résolu de m'opposer à ce projet. Vous pouvez me rayer du parti democratique, si tel est votre plaisir, mais je retournerai devant mes constituants avec la conscience d'avoir accompli les devoirs auxquels j'étais tenu envers eux.

J'arrive à la question telle qu'elle a été posée par l'honorable sénateur d'Est-Baton-Rouge, M. Lacey. J'ai admiré l'urbanité charmante que le sénateur a apportée dans l'examen de cette question. J'espère ne pas rester au-dessous de lui en fait de politesse et de bonhomie. Le sénateur a dit qu'il ne pouvait adhérer aux conclusions du rapport qui a été soumis au Sénat. En collaboration avec deux sénateurs qui siègent de l'autre côté du Sénat et qui se trouvent faire partie du comité, j'ai réuni en un tout et soumis au Sénat les raisons et les conclusions auxquelles nous nous étions arrêtés ; nous avons prétendu que le Sénat n'avait de par la Constitution, ni le pouvoir ni le droit de procéder à une élection. J'espère que le fait d'avoir eu des rapports avec deux whigs, rapports de collègue à collègue, comme membres du même comité, j'espère, dis-je, que ce fait ne sera pas pour moi une cause de déchéance dans l'opinion de mes amis les démocrates. Je puis declarer que ces deux whigs sont d'assez beaux échantillons de la jeunesse américaine ; mais pourra-t-on jamais les reconnaître comme faisant partie de ce que l'on appelle la «Jeune Amérique,» c'est ce que je ne puis dire ; je l'espète toutefois.

Nous avons présenté au sénat, dans notre rapport les conclusions auxquelles nous sommes arrivés relativement à la résolution Ces conclusions sont-elles justes ? c'est au sénat à le décider. Ce que je demande, c'est qu'en répondant à cette question on le fasse avec franchise. Je ne prétends pas être infaillible. Il est dans la nature humaine de se tromper. Tout ce que je veux, c'est un examen consciencieux ; c'est que l'on réponde de bonne foi aux arguments que présente le rapport. Le sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge a-t-il répondu à nos arguments.

Le sénateur pose en fait, dès le début, que l'élection de M. Benjamin est nulle, conclusion à laquelle n'est jamais arrivé le comité. Il pose en fait, dis-je que l'élection est nulle en d'autres termes qu'il n'y a pas eu d'élection. Il cite des autorités pour démontrer que nous sommes tenus de procéder à une élection. Ce n'est pas ainsi que la question a été posée par le comité. C'est là la base sur laquelle repose toute son argumentation. Ceci me remet en mémoire une anecdote du général Putman. Il avait sous lui un jeune officier qui se vantait beaucoup de son habileté dans la science des fortifications. Pendant une absence du général il en éleva une dans toutes les règles de l'art; et lui d'admirer son ouvrage. Lorsque le général revint, le jeune officier voulut lui faire voir son chef-d'œuvre. Le général l'examina en homme de bon sens.; puis dit au jeune officier que la construction lui semblait admirable, qu'il n'avait qu'un reproche à y faire. «Grand Dieu, dit l'officier, qu'est-ce donc ?» «Eh bien, dit le vieux général, la fortification n'est pas à sa place, l'ennemi ne viendra jamais de ce côté.»

Mais, avant de déclarer qu'il n'y pas eu d'élection, et que, l'élection n'ayant das ou lieu, conséquemment nous devons en avoir une, il faudrait d'abord établir que cette élection n'a pas eu lieu. Est-ce là le fait ? S'il en est ainsi, rien ne s'oppose à une élection.—Une chose nulle est une chose qui n'existe pas. D'un autre côté il admet qu'une élection a eu lieu et pour échapper aux conséquences de cette admission, il prétend que l'acte de 1846 est inconstitutionnel. N'est-ce pas là le fond du discours du sénateur Eh bien ! monsieur, qu'entendons-nous par un acte inconstitutionnel. C'est un acte législatif qui est expressément prohibé par la constitution ou qui ne peut cadrer avec elle. Un acte ne peut être inconstitutionnel que par l'une ou l'autre de ces causes. J'arrive à ce petit embarras que le sénateur a trouvé sur son chemin et qu'il a tourné si adroitement. Voici comment il s'y est pris. La constitution de 1812 ne dit point à quelle époque, en quel lieu de quelle manière la législature devra élire un Sénateur des Etats-Unis? me trompé-je sur ce point ? La question qu'il faut se poser ensuite est celle-ci : où reside le pouvoir de déclarer à quelle époque, en quel lieu et de quelle manière doit se faire l'élection. Le premier article de la quatrième section de la constitution des Etats-Unis dit que ce pouvoir appartient aux législatures des différents etats. La première législature qui se réunit sous la constitution de 1812, passa une loi en vertu de laquelle la législature était tenue de se réunir à une époque déterminee dans l'année ou expireraient les fonctions d'un sénateur, et de proceder à l'élection de son successeur. Cette élection devait précéder le 4 de mars. La constitution de 1812 a fait place à celle de 1845. Qu'est devenue l'ancienne constitution lorsque la nouvelle a été adoptée ? Que prétendez-vous en faire ? Allez-vous après l'avoir embaumee, vous y cramponner encore ? Voulez-vous faire un hideux accouplement de ce corps plein de vie et de cette vieille carcasse qui avait été jetée à la voierie. Quand la nouvelle constitution a commencé de vivre, l'ancienne a fini d'exister. Mais il est encore une autre vieillerie qu'il nous faut conserver. Le sénateur nous dit que la loi de 1812 a servi de règle pendant 33 ans, et, ajoute-t-il, elle a été conservée si longtemps "allez-vous abandonner cette vieille relique, qui nous a eté d'un si bon usage ? Au nom du ciel, ne vous défaites pas de ce miroir fidèle de la volonté populaire ". Si la constitution de 1812 a été tuée et enterrée par la constitution de 1845, devez-vous donner plus d'efficacité, plus de puissance à la vieille loi ? Allez-vous l'attacher à la constitution de 1845, allez-vous lui donner une consécration telle que vous ne pourrez jamais vous en débarrasser ?

Mais j'ai le dessein de ne laisser aucune échappatoire sur cette partie scabreuse de la route que le sénateur a si lestement parcourue. Le sénateur prétend que la Constitution de 1845, bien entendue, a voulu s'incorporer l'acte de 1812. Je declare que je ne vois rien de pareil dans l'acte de 1845. Le sénateur entend que la loi de 1812 qui exige que l'élection d'un Sénateur des Etats Unis ait lieu dans l'année où se présente une vacance est implicitement incorporée dans la Constitution de 1845, et que par consequent l'article 37 de cette Constitution voulait que la même règle subsistât. La consequence inévitable de son discours est que l'élection sénatoriale ne pourrait avoir lieu dans aucune autre année et que par l'article 37 de la Constitution de 1845, la loi de 1812 s'est trouvée embaumée et consacrée, si bien qu'il n'était plus possible à aucune législature subséquente de la modifier ou de la rappeler. Pour montrer que sa conclusion est correcte, il doit prouver d'abord que ses prémices sont justes. Toute conclusion doit nécessairement s'appuyer sur deux prémices. Le sénateur, voyant que sa conclusion ne repose que sur un pied, cherche à la tirer de cette position embarrassante, et pour cela il fait entrer le statut de 1812 dans la Constitution de 1845. C'est une simple assertion du sénateur. Ainsi voilà un point bien établi.

Pendant que je suis sur ce point, le sénateur me permettra de faire allusion à ce qui s'est passé dans une assemblée primaire, tenue dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orleans depuis le commencement de cette session. J'ai beaucoup de respect pour ces assemblées primaires. C'est la reserve sur laquelle nous nous replions quand nous nous trouvons aux prises avec l'ennemi. Elles sont l'expression de la volonte populaire. Il est beaucoup d'hommes qui n'ont d'existence politique que par elles. Mais je veux montrer comment certaines personnes en sont venues à adopter l'opinion que je combats à l'aide de ce procédé, qui consiste à se répéter si souvent une chose qu'on finit par la regarder comme un fait, tandis qu'on n'y était arrivé qu'en torturant la logique et le bon sens.

Ici M. Short lit un extrait d'un discours prononcé par M. T. J. Durant et rapporté dans le True Delta du 3 fevrier. Dans ce discours M. Durant soutenait qu'aux termes de la Constitution de 1845, ainsi qu'aux termes de celle de 1852, l'élection de M. Benjamin était nulle, et cela nonobstant l'acte de 1846.

Ces assertions ont été si souvent répétées qu'on est parvenu à les faire avaler sans examen à certaines personnes, et qu'on leur a fait prendre des billivesées pour des faits et des principes constitutionnels. Le sénateur a déclaré dès son début qu'il ne citerait aucune autorité à l'appui de son opinion, qu'il n'emprunterait pour le guider dans sa route que les lumières de la raison. La conclusion à laquelle est arrivé le sénateur, que l'élection ne peut avoir lieu que dans l'année de la vacance, suppose nécessairement que l'acte de 1812 est incorporé dans la Constitution de 1845.

Est-ce sur cette assertion, dénuée de preuves, que vous allez annuler un acte solennel de la Législature et vous précipiter tête baissée, dans une nouvelle élection.—Le sénateur dit que la Constitution de 1845 doit être interprêtée d'après l'intention de ses auteurs, elle doit être interprêtee selon l'intention présumée de ceux qui l'ont faite.

M. Short cite ensuite des commentaires de Story sur la constitution, vol. 1, page 389, les passages suivants :

«Chaque membre ne prenant nécessairement avis que de lui-même, et tout jugement basé sur l'opinion des autres ne pouvait et ne devait pas faire loi. On sait qu'au sein des differentes conventions d'Etat une variété d'opinions s'était produite à l'infini, tant sur l'interpretation des différentes parties de la constitution, que sur la somme des pouvoirs qu'elle conférait; on sait aussi qu'elles ont gardé un silence absolu sur plusieurs objections qui depuis lors ont eté soulevées que d'autres objections qui leur avaient alors semblé d'une importance majeure ont été depuis abandonnées. Tout cela donne du poids à cette opinion.

«Le texte et le texte seul a été adopté par le peuple, et ce serait professer une doctrine bien étrange que de donner à aucun des commentaires qui ont été faits à l'epoque et à plus forte raison,à aucun de ceux qui ont été faits depuis, alors que l'opinion publique et le sentiment populaire sont entrés dans une nouvelle phase, la valeur de l'autorité suffisante pour enchaîner d'une manière absolue le sens du texte de la constitution ou pour se substituer à son interprétation juste et naturelle.

«L'interprétation donnée par les contemporains est bonne pour fournir une élucidation et une confirmation du texte, pour expliquer une phrase douteuse ou éclairer une clause obscure et l'autorité qui doit s'attacher à cette interprétation s'accroît en raison du caractère d'homogénéité et d'universalité qu'elle présente, et en raison aussi des talents et de la capacité reconnus de ceux qui l'ont donnée. Mais ces interprétations ne peuvent jamais annuler le texte ou en altérer le sens évident, en restreindre ou étendre les limites véritables et naturelles.»

Règle d'interprétation posée par Jefferson.

«Quelle règle est celle là, qui prescrit qu'une clause spéciale soit interprétée en faveur des Etats, s'il est possible, (non s'il est raisonnable) simplement parce qu'elle concerne ses citoyens et celà, sans avoir égard au sens ou à l'objet de cette clause particulière ?

La seconde règle, est l'obligation où l'on est dans toute question d'interprétation de remonter à l'époque où la Constitution a été adoptée, de garder en mémoire l'esprit des débats, et de se conformer au sens probable du texte tel qu'il a été adopté, sans chercher celui qui peut en être exprimé ou qui peut être inventé pour le continuer.

Ne voit on pas le caractère vague et incohérent de cette règle ? Qui de nous peut savoir ce qu'on a pensé de chacune des clauses de la Constitution à l'époque de son adoption ? Dans un grand nombre de cas, les débats imprimés ne rendent aucun compte des interprétations, et quand on en trouve, on y rencontre différentes personnes professant des doctrines opposées.»

On voit donc par l'autorité que je viens de citer que toutes les règles d'interprétation sur lesquelles s'appuie le sénateur, lui manquent en même temps. Celle-ci est la vraie interprétation. L'article 37 de la Constitution prescrivait seulement de quelle manière devrait être faite l'élection dans l'année pendant laquelle une élection régulière doit avoir lieu. Cet article n'enlève pas à la Législature le pouvoir de fixer l'année pendant laquelle une élection doit avoir lieu. Mais quelle est cette année ? La Constitution de 1845 fixe-t-elle l'année pendant laquelle une élection doit avoir lieu ? Non ! elle ne le fait pas. Si l'acte de 1812 est incorporé dans la Constitution, alors, je dirai que l'élection doit avoir lieu dans l'année designée par cet acte. Mais que signifie l'expression « une élection régulière » dans cet article 37 de la Constitution de 1845 ? Est-ce pour remplir un terme inachevé ? Non ! c'est pour le terme entier de six années.

L'acte de 1846 indique la manière dont l'élection doit être faite. L'action prise sous cette loi a toujours été uniforme et jamais aucune bonne raison n'a été donnée qui puisse mettre en doute la constitutionalité de cet acte. Le grand Hampden lui-même, dont la logique si subtile, si adroite, a, si je puis employer l'expression, pris d'assaut la Cour de cette paroisse, et fut sur le point de faire crouler une des ailes du Capitole, n'a jamais pu établir ce point. Il semble que le peuple de la Louisiane, en adoptant la Constitution de 1845, s'est placé dans une position ridicule, si cette Constitution, en ordonnant une chose, a laissé subsister des contradictions qui la rendent impossible.

Mais comment se tire-t-il du mauvais pas où il s'est placé ? Il dit que le mot «il y ait,» qui se trouve dans l'acte de 1846, est très ambigu par ce que la Législature doit faire l'élection, pourvu «qu'il n'y ait» pas de session pendant l'année dans laquelle expirent les fonctions d'un sénateur. Il demande s'il n'est pas absurde que la Législature s'occupe une année d'avance de ce qui peut arriver dans l'avenir, et qu'elle pourvoie à une contingence qu'il n'est pas possible de prévoir. Mais il tranche d'un coup ce nouveau nœud Gordien. «Oh ! dit-il, il faut que la Législature cherche loin dans l'avenir avant de rien faire.» Moyen admirable en vérité ! Oui, certes elle a dû chercher bien loin. C'était le devoir de la Législature de 1852 de chercher bien loin dans l'avenir, si loin qu'elle pût découvrir qu'une nouvelle Constitution serait un jour rédigée ! Elle aurait du voir jusqu'au germe d'où est sorti la plante.

O vous, législateurs de 1852, pourquoi donc n'avez vous pas fait ainsi qu'il vous en est maintenant donné avis ! Pourquoi, portant vos regards sur tout l'Etat, de la Nouvelle-Orléans à la Rivière-Rouge et à Madison, le long des bayous et des terres alluviales, n'avez-vous pas vu qu'il se préparait une nouvelle Constitution ? Vous auriez dû voir se former le germe et grandir les bourgeons qui, avant le 4 de mars 1853, devaient s'épanouir en un superbe bouquet sous la forme d'une Constitution nouvelle et toute parfaite. Non seulement cette Constitution là, mais une Constitution devait être faite qui pourvut non-seulement à tous les actes nécessaires à son existence; mais, bien plus, qui annihilât tout ce qui avait été fait avant son adoption. C'est là une glorieuse découverte dans ce siècle de progrès. J'ai essayé de suivre ce progrès, et je dois reconnaître que je m'en suis senti incapable !

J'arrive maintenant au premier argument de l'honorable préopinant, mais je dois auparavent m'arrêter un instant à la différence qu'il prétend trouver entre le texte français et le texte anglais de l'acte de 1846. D'après le texte anglais, dit-il, « l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats Unis aura lieu dans l'année où expirent les fonctions d'un sénateur, ou, s'il n'y a pas de session dans cette année là, alors dans l'annee précédente.» Mais la Législature a prévu que sous l'ancienne Constitution, il ne pouvait y avoir de session le 3me lundi de l'année 1853. Cela est un fait établi, et qu'on ne peut contester. Il est vrai que le Gouverneur a le pouvoir discrétionnaire de convoquer une session extraordinaire de la Législature. Mais quelle est la raison donnée ? Il faut que ce soit une occasion extraordinaire. Si c'est un fait extraordinaire que les fonctions de Solomon W. Downs, comme sénateur des Etats Unis, devaient expirer le 3 de mars 1853, alors il aurait fallu laisser le tout au Gouverneur, et c'est lui qui aurait dû convoquer la legislature à l'effet de pourvoir à cet évènement extraordinaire qui après tout est aussi prévu, aussi certain que les dates d'un almanac.

Si le législateur arrive à cette conclusion, alors je dois admettre que la Législature aurait mieux fait de ne pas s'occuper de cette question. La différence entre le texte anglais et le texte français est celle-ci « le texte anglais dit que la Législature fera une chose dans l'année pendant laquelle elle peut être faite le texte français requiert que cette même chose soit faite un an plus tard, lorsque la Législature ne peut plus la faire. J'ai entendu bien des naivetés, en voilà une qui certes surpasse tout ce que j'avais jamais imaginé.

J'arrive maintenaut au dernier argument du sénateur. Il dit que l'article 34 de la nouvelle Constitution, requérant qu'une élection ait lieu à n'importe quelle session de la Législature tenue pendant l'année dans laquelle survient une vacance, est obligatoire. Même en admettant la constitutionnalité de l'acte de 1846, il avance comme argument que les lettres de créance de M. Benjamin ne constituent qu'un mandat incomplet. Je ne connais pas de loi qui justifie semblable conclusion. Voici, je crois, la seule vraie interprétation. Si une place donnée par l'Etat est changée par une modification de la loi organique les fonctions attachées à cette place sont aussi changées. Mais si un acte accompli, si un titre créé sont parfaits pour un certain terme, à l'époque où ils ont été créés, alors aucun changement dans la loi organique ne peut avoir d'effet sur cette place à moins que cette place ne soit expressément comprise dans le changement de la loi organique elle-même. Le droit accordé à un sénateur des Etats-Unis prenant son siége dans l'une des deux Chambres du gouvernement général, ne peut être affecté par aucun changement dans la loi organique de l'Etat puisque sa place ne résulte pas et ne dépend pas d'une organisation d'Etat.

Le sénateur dans les observations qu'il a présentées a fait un appel aux droits des Etats et à leur souveraineté. J'ai mis moi-même toute mon intelligence toutes les ressources de mon esprit à essayer à comprendre ce que l'on peut vouloir dire par ce mot : le droit des Etats. La signification que je lui prête, moi, est celle,ci : le droit des Etats consiste en ce que cette action, sous sans la Constitution fédérale ou sous une Constitution d'Etat, soit limitée aux pouvoirs que confère chacune d'elles, et d'après l'interprétation la plus stricte, de manière que l'une n'empiète pas sur l'autre.

Mais lorsqu'une chose, légalement irrévocable, telle que l'élection d'un sénateur des Etats-Unis est faite conformément aux lois de l'Etat, s'avancer alors et dire qu'elle doit être mise de côté par ce qu'elle n'est pas conforme au vœu populaire du jour, cela, je crois n'est pas ce que l'on doit entendre par droits d'Etat. Un tel droit n'est jamais résulté d'aucune des Constitutions de cet Etat ; il n'est pas la conséquence des principes démocratiques. Si la majorité d'aujourd'hui met de côté les actes de la majorité d'hier, et sous des prétextes tels que ceux qui nous sons présentés, alors, monsieur, je dois dire que nous sommes arrivés à un point où je regrette et déplore de voir cet Etat. Si vous voulez changer la nature de votre gouvernement et qu'à une Constitution bâsée sur le respect que tout citoyen Américain a toujours pour la décision du scrutin, vous substituiez un régime de pronunciamentos et d'émeutes sous lequel le gouvernement d'aujourd'hui tombe et disparaisse devant les barricades de la nuit et les rassemblements du jour, je ne désire plus rester ici.

Quels changements ont été opérés dans l'Etat de la Louisiane par la constitution de 1852 ? Le peuple n'est-il pas toujours le même. Dans la partie où je réside, je puis assurer qu'il n'a pas changé. Je vois depuis l'adoptien de la nouvelle constitution, les mêmes amis, les mêmes figures de connaissance que je rencontrais, et j'arrive à cette conclusion que l'Etat est aujourd'hui exactement comme il était sous la constitution de 1845.

Il est vrai qu'il y a eu réorganisation dans le gouvernement, qu'il y a eu queques changements dans la loi organique, mais soutiendrez-vous pour cela que tous les droits autrefois existants ont été mis de côté ou abolis ! S'il en était ainsi vous feriez de la chevaleresque et magnanime Louisiane quelque chose comme ces insectes qui passent d'une existence à l'autre et qui ne se souviennent plus à la seconde ce qu'ils ont fait dans la première.

Il est encore une chose que nous ne devons pas oublier : si nous empêchons que la tentative que l'on fait ici ne réussisse, nous empêcherons à tout jamais pour l'avenir, qu'une législature ne tente de rendre nul ce qui aura été fait par une législature précédente.

S'il était hors de doute qu'aucune élection n'a eu lieu, alors nous pourrions en faire une. Mais tel n'est pas le fait. On nous demande seulement de défaire une chose qui a été légalement faite.

Le sénateur dit qu'il ne résulterait aucun mal de la nouvelle élection que nous ferions et que parconséquent nous devrions y procéder.

En vertu de ce principe, vous pourriez élire tous les ans de nouveaux sénateurs, leur donner des lettres de créances et les laisser parcourir tout le pays comme sénateurs de la Louisiane. Ils pourraient dire,il est vrai, qu'ils n'ont pas occupé leur siége comme tels, mais qu'importe, s'ils tiennent leur mandat de la législature. Ces mandats se multiplieraient à l'infini, et la seule chose qui pourrait nous embarrasser dans ce cas serait de trouver le temps pour les écrire et la place pour les consigner Les sénateurs eux-mêmes ne trouveraient pas où se rendre et où siéger ; mais encore une fois qu'importe !

Dès l'instant où cette question a été présentée au Sénat, je m'y suis opposé et jusqu'au bout je continuerai à le faire.

Annuler un acte aussi important que celui d'une élection faite par une Législature, sous le prétexte que nous en avons le droit d'après la dernière expression du vœu populaire, donnerait lieu aux plus dangereuses conséquences. Ce serait nous placer comme législateurs dans la même position où nous sommes, nous qui habitons des districts sujets aux inondations : — d'abord vient l'écrevisse qui perce un petit trou dans la levée, puis la lame qui agrandit le trou, puis la crevasse que ne pouvaient plus combattre ou arrêter toutes les forces humaines. Ce qui a lieu dans le monde physique, a souvent lieu aussi dans le monde moral, politique et religieux : le premier coup porté contre la loi, peut être suivi d'un second, puis d'un troisième, si bien que ce qu'un seul n'aurait pu faire, est pourtant à la longue accompli par tous, et la loi succombe. Je suis donc fermement, inébranlablement résolu à m'opposer à la première tentative qui pourrait donner lieu à de semblables conséquences.

M. Wickliffe prend la parole et dit :

Monsieur le président. L'horloge m'avertit suffisamment de l'heure avancée à laquelle je me lève de mon siége pour prendre part à ce débat. Il me faut cependant réclamer l'indulgence du Sénat pour le temps que j'occuperai en soumettant quelques observations qui ont pour but de bien définir ma position. Je regrette que mon ami, le sénateur de Madison, n'ait eu plus de considération pour moi dans cette circonstance. J'avais espéré qu'il m'aurait laissé quelque chose à quoi répondre mais il a complétement démoli les arguments du sénatenr d'Est Baton-Rouge et ne lui a laissé aucune position qu'il puisse occuper. Dans cette situation où irai-je ? Que dirai-je ? Dois-je m'adresser au rapport de la minorite du comité judiciaire ? Mais je n'y trouve rien qu'un parti pris de ne pas s'accorder avec la majorité du même comité. Mais ces messieurs n'ont avancé aucun argument qui les soutienne dans leur position. Où sont leurs raisons ? Pourquoi ne sont-elles pas données ? Ce ne peut pas être que le temps leur ait manqué, ainsi qu'ils l'insinuent dans leur rapport. Ils ont eu la résolution entre les mains pendant cinq jours ; ainsi donc ils n'ont aucune raison de se plaindre d'un manque de temps. Le sénateur d'Est Baton Rouge dit qu'il a considéré la résolution comme étant d'un caractère tout à fait politique. Je diffère entièrement d'opinion avec lui sur ce point. L'honorable membre peut envisager cette résolution avec des préventions politiques, quant à moi je ne le puis ni ne le veux. La question est tout à fait une question de constitutionnalité et de légalité. Elle implique les droits légaux et constitutionnels d'un sénateur de la Louisiane qui a été dûment élu, ainsi que l'on en convient, et qui tient du Gouverneur sa commission scellée du grand sceau de l'Etat.

Je nie aussi que la motion de référer la résolution au comité judiciaire ait été faite dans le but de gagner du temps et de différer le moment d'une action définitive sur la question. Cette motion a été faite afin que la question put se présenter entière et franche, afin que je pusse revenir parmi mes commettants et leur dire : Voici la question qui a été soulevée, voici les raisons pour lesquelles on a contesté le droit de J. P. Benjamin de siéger au Sénat des Etats-Unis. J'ai cru un moment que j'allais être excommunié du parti démocrate par le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, pour avoir pris cette position. Il y a longtemps que je suis democrate, et si je me connais bien, tous mes instincts sont démocratiques. Mais l'honorable membre semble croire que parce que les whigs votent avec moi, sur cette question, je suis allé à eux. Il est rare que les whigs votent avec moi, et je suis convaincu que pour cette fois leur vote est du bon côté puisqu'il est avec le mien.

Je n'ai pas le moindre désir de mettre en doute la démocratie de mon collègue, car lui et moi avons bien souvent combattu, l'un près de l'autre, pour en maintenir les principes. Je me souviendrai que pendant la campagne de 1851, lorsque je trouvai une opposition à laquelle je ne m'attendais pas, je pressai mes amis démocrates de voter le ticket démocrate, parce que nous étions obligés par la Constitution de 1845 et la loi de 1846 d'élire un sénateur au Congrès pendant la session de la Législature qui devait prochainement se réunir. Le sénateur d'Est-Bâton-Rouge fit la même chose, à une assemblée politique tenue dans cette paroisse même, il fit ressortir aux yeux des démocrates le nécessité d'agir de concert, attendu que nous étions obligés à la session alors prochaine de nommer un sénateur au Congrès, en remplacement de l'honorable S. W. Downs. D'où vient le changement qui s'est manifesté en lui ? Est-ce l'esprit de Hampden qui a opéré cette soudaine conversion ?

Mais l'honorable sénateur est allé plus loin. Il dit qu'on l'a accusé de se laisser influencer par ses sentiments de parti en soutenant la résolution en débat. Par qui donc est-il accusé ? Ce n'est certes pas par moi ni par personne autre, que je sache. Ce ne peut être que par sa propre conscience. Et je crois qun le sénateur est bon démocrate.

Le Sénateur a dit que nous sommes obligés de soutenir la Constitution de l'Etat, oui sans doute nous y sommes obligés. Mais n'avons-nous pas aussi le même devoir envers la Constitution des Etats Unis ? Le jugement que lui et moi, et vous, M. le Président avons prêté est celui-ci « Je jure solennellement de soutenir la Constitution des Etats Unis, etc.» Cette Constitution porte que l'époque, le lieu et le mode d'élection des Sénateurs au Congrès sera laissée exclusivement au contrôle de la Législature de chaque Etat respectivemrnt. L'époque pour nous n'a-t-elle pas été fixée par la loi de 1846 ? Une élection n'a-t-elle pas eu lieu en vertu de cet acte ? Le Sénateur admet cela. Qu'a-t-on fait ? La Législature à sa première session tenue après l'adoption de la Constitution de 1845 passa la loi connue sous le titre de l'acte de 1846. N'était-ce pas conforme aux dispositions de la Constitution de l'Etat et de celle des Etats Unis. Sous l'empire de cet acte, deux Sénateurs, le nombre auquel nous avons droit, S. W. Downs et Pierre Soulé ont été élus, et, l'an dernier, la Législature, conformément, au même acte a élu M. J. P. Benjamin comme successeur à M. Downs, dont les fonctions expirent le 3 mars 1853. Mais le Sénateur a essayé comme Thomas J. Durant, d'incorporer l'acte de 1812 dans la Constitution de 1845 et celle de 1852. Ce dernier, j'entends M. Thomas J. Durant, était candidat devant la dernière Convention démocratique pour la place d'avocat général. Heureusement pour lui-même et pour le parti, sa candidature a échoué, car son discours rapporté par le True Delta démontre son entière inaptitude pour le haut emploi auquel il aspirait.

Le sénateur, dans son discours, s'est référé à des précédents et il montra ce livre (un livre d'élection contestées), avec un tel air que j'ai cru vraiment que ce livre contenait quelque chose d'important en faveur de la position qu'il prenait sur cette question. Mais il n'y a dans le cas qu'il a cité rien d'analogue à la question que nous discutons.

Il me reste à apprendre qu'il existait un interrègne à l'époque où M. Benjamin a été élu, ou que l'Etat n'avait alors ni gouverneur ni législature. M. Durant invoque le langage tenu par Clay et Wright afin d'étayer sa position, voyons jusqu'à quel point ce langage lui est favorable. Dans l'affaire de Potter contre Robbins la position prise par M. Clay était que le sénateur élu en premier lieu devait prêter le serment d'office et prendre son siége attendu qu'il avait ses lettres de créance en bonne forme et que la constitution des Etat-Unis donnait droit au Rhode Island ainsi qu'aux autres états à deux sénateurs.

Que dit Silas Wright sur l'autorité duquel le sénateur s'appuie avec tant de force ; je cite :

« M. Wright, de New-York, regrette beaucoup de voir se présenter une pareille question devant le Sénat.— Il ignore presque entièrement la nature de l'affaire et des lois particulières qui régissent l'Etat du Rhode-Island. Il désirerait savoir s'il est appelé à se prononcer sur une mesure préliminaire ou définitive, sur la convenance qu'il y avait à élire ou sur l'élection de l'une ou l'autre des contestants. Il doit avouer que la conduite de la Législature du Rhode-Island lui paraît extraordinaire: Elle envoie au Sénat des Etats-Unis un sénateur qui, aux termes du certificat dont il est porteur, est déclaré dûment élu et à une session subséquente cette Législature envoie nn autre senateur, déclarant la première élection par elle-même nulle et non avenue. La Législature du Rhode-Island avait-elle ce droit.—Pouvait-elle statuer d'aucune manière sur cette question ? N'avait-elle pas au contraire par le simple fait de l'élection de M. Robbins référé la question à un tribunal plus élevé au Sénat des Etats-Unis, qui était à cette heure seule compétent pour la décider. Il dit encore une fois qu'il ignore entièrement les mérites de la question.— Il n'a jamais vu la loi du Rhode-Island et exprime l'espoir qu'il ne sera pas appelé à donner son vote avant d'avoir obtenu tous les renseignements nécessaires. Il conclut en faisant la motion que toute la question soit référée à un comité d'enquête.»

Pourquoi donc le sénateur n'a-t-il pas représenté correctement la position de Silas Wright ? pourquoi s'est-il référé au rapport de la minorité fait par Silas Wright. Mais s'il avait bien compris ce rapport il n'y eut rien trouvé qui vint à l'appui de la position qu'il a prise.

M. Lacey,—L'honorable sénateur voudrait-il bien lire un peu plus loin ?—Il trouverait un passage dans le discours de M. Ewing qui laisse supposer que les observations de M. Wright n'avaient pas été correctement interprétées.

M. Wickliffe—Je vais lire Mais ceci est le discours prononcé au moment où les lettres de créance ont été présentées. (M. Wickliffe lit alors quelques passages du discours de M. Ewing et les extraits qui suivent du rapport dü comité.)

RAPPORT DU COMITE.

EXTRAITS.

«En exerçant ce devoir, l'Etat agit dans sa plus haute capacité souveraine et les causes qui rendraient nulle l'élection d'un sénateur doivent être telles qu'elles entraineraient aussi la nullité de toutes les lois passées par le corps qui aurait choisi le sénateur.

D'autres causes peuvent exister qui rendraient l'élection susceptible d'être annulée et ces causes sont énumérées dans la constitution audelà de laquelle le sénat ne peut interposer son autorité afin de troubler ou de contrôler les pouvoirs souverains des Etats, pouvoirs dont la constitution des Etats Unis a investi leurs législatures respectives.

«Votre comité ayant égard à ces règles, telles qu'elles sont applicables à toutes les élections contestees dans le Sénat, procède à en faire l'application à l'affaire soumise à sa considération.

Il est admis que le membre siégeant, Asher Robbins, possède toutes les conditions d'éligibilité requises par la Constitution des Etats-Unis pour être admis comme sénateur au Congrès et que sa commission comme tel est en bonne forme, selon les lois et les usages du Rhode-Island. Ces points étant accordés, la seule question qui reste à décider est celle-ci : Le corps délibérant par lequel il a été choisi était-il la Législature du Rhode-Island, ou bien n'était-ce qu'un assemblage de citoyens sans autorité pour passer des lois, prescrire ce qui est juste et défendre ce qui est injuste au peuple de l'Etat ? Les deux contestants paraissent d'accord pour placer sur ce terrain la question de leur droit à un siége au Sénat.

L'époque à laquelle l'élection a eu lieu, la manière dont elle a été conduite, ont été strictement conformes aux lois du Rhode-Island. Les deux Chambres se sont réunies en grand comité, conformément à la loi, à la session précédant immédiatement l'expiration du terme de service d'Asher Robbins, alors sénateur au Congrès, et l'élurent pour un autre terme de six années, à commencer du 3 mars 1833, et alors le grand comité réuni à cet effet se dissout. Le choix a été fait par la Législature de l'Etat, dont les lois sont reconnues valides et obligatoires dans tout l'Etat. Elles commandent et reçoivent obéissance de la part du peuple. Nulle objection n'est faite ni ne peut être faite, soit au temps, soit au modo de l'élection. Le sénateur élu réunit toutes les conditions d'éligibilité requises par la Constitution, et sa commission ou ses lettres de créance lui ont été remises en bonne forme et par lui présentées au Sénat. Votre comité considère que c'est là un droit acquis dont les obligations et les effets ne peuvent être attaqués par aucune Législature subsequente. Cette Législature avait encore moins le droit de procéder à l'election d'un autre sénateur avant que le siége du sénateur élu en premier lieu eût été déclaré vacant par une decision solennelle du Sénat des Etats-Unis. Entretenant les opinions ci-dessus énoncées sur le sujet qui lui a été référé, votre comité recommande l'adoption de la résolution suivante :

Résolu qu'Asher Robbins étant dûment et constitutionnellement élu sénateur au Congrès pour l'Etat de Rhode Island, a droit à son siégé au Sénat mais on prétend que nous avons droit de procéder à une élection, attendu que M. Benjamin n'a encore ni prêté le serment ni pris son siège.—Je laisse à ces messieurs le soin de faire accorder leur proposition avec celle du rapport qu'ils envoyaient comme autorité. (M. Wickliffe lit alors le passage suivant extrait du rapport de la minorité fait par Silas Wright.)

« M. Potter a-t-il donc été validement élu sénateur des Etats-Unis?—On ne conteste pas que le corps délibérant qui l'a élu constituait la législature de cet Etat, mais en touchant ce point la majorité du comité exprime son opinion que cette législature n'avait aucune autorité pour procéder à l'élection d'un autre sénateur jusqn'à ce que le siège du sénateur élu en premier lieu ait été déclaré vacant par une décision solennelle du Sénat des Etats-Unis. Si nous parlons au point de vue légal et constitutionnel, il y avait un sénateur élu et cette opinion est sans contredit correcte, car on ne prétendra pas que la législature d'aucun état ait le droit de déclarer vacant le siège d'un sénateur au Congrès.—Ou en termes plus explicites et plus intelligibles «Si l'élection de M. Robbins était susceptible d'être annulee seulement, et non pas absolument nulle, une législature subséquente n'avait aucun droit d'agir avant que le siège eut été rendu vacant par une décision du Sénat. Mais si, comme le soussigné en a déjà exprimé l'opinion l'élection de M. Robbins n'a pas été faite par la législature de l'Etat, alors cette election n'était pas seulement annullable mais absolument nulle ; ce n'était pas une élection aux termes de la constitution et la place était vacante depuis l'expiration de son terme en mars 1848. Si le Sénat adopte ces conclusions, le soussigné ne voit aucune raison sur laquelle on puisse s'appuyer pour prétendre qu'une législature constitutionnellement organisée dans l'Etat de Rhode Island n'avait pas le droit de pourvoir à cette vacance, ou que l'élection de M. Potter faite par une semblable législature en octobre 1833 n'est pas valide.

La résolution présentée par la majorité du comité était en ces termes :

« Résolu qu'Asher Robbins, étant dûment et constitutionnellement élu sénateur au Congrès pour l'Etat de Rhode-Island, a droit à son siége au Sénat "

La question, étant mise aux voix, est décidée dans l'affirmative par le vôte suivant :

Oui MM. Bell, Bibb, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Kent Knight, Leigh, McKean, Mangum, Naudain, Poindexter Porter, Preston, Selsbee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Swift, Tipton, Tomlison, Waggaman, Webster.— 27.

Non—MM. Benton, Brown, Forsyth, Grundy, Hill, Kane, King de l'Alabama, King de la Georgie, Linn, Morris, Robinson, Shepley, Tallmadge, White, Wilkins, Wright—16.

De sorte que M. Robbins a été maintenu dans son siége.

Résolu que ledit Elisha R. Potter, considérant les circonstances de cette affaire, doit recevoir le montant alloué par la loi aux membres du Congrès pour ses frais de voyage (mileage), en se rendant de sa résidence, dans l'Etat du Rhode-Island, au Capitole; ainsi qu'en s'en retournant et aussi à la rémunération quotidienne (per diem) d'un membre du Congrès, pour le temps pendant lequel il est resté à Washington, attendant la décision du Sénat relativement au siége contesté par lui et occupé par l'honorable A. Robbins; et que le comité judiciaire reçoive instruction de préparer un bill ou une résolution à cet effet.

Décidé dans l'affirmative, par 24 voix contre 22.

Le sénateur a invoqué les droits des Etats dans l'examen de cette question. Il est inutile à moi de dire au sénateur que je suis du parti du droit des Etats (State Rights) et je suis raffermi dans l'opinion que j'ai adoptée par l'autorité de John C. Calhoun. Quel rôle a-t-il joué dans l'affaire à laquelle il a été fait allusion? Le sénateur n'a-t-il pas lu son discours? Ne sait-il pas l'attitude qu'il a prise lorsque le sénateur du Rhode-Island présenta ses lettres de créance, que cette attitude fut identiquement celle que nous défendons aujourd'hui. Le sénateur peut essayer de me rayer du parti démocratique; s'il arrive à ses fins, il m'en délogera en compagnie de John C. Calhoun. Eh bien! monsieur le président, M. J. P. Benjamin n'a-t-il pas ses lettres de créance? Le sénateur ne sait-il pas qu'une résolution adoptée collectivement par les deux Chambres; après l'élection de M. Benjamin a autorisé le Gouverneur à lui donner ses lettres de créance. Que veut donc faire le sénateur? Ce qu'il veut, c'est que le parti démocratique et l'Etat se placent dans une position fausse et peu honorable à mon avis, en envoyant trois sénateurs au Congrès, tandis que la Constitution des Etats-Unis, à laquelle nous avons tous prêté serment, n'en accorde que deux.

L'affaire que le Sénateur a invoquée fournit les raisons, les arguments les plus forts contre la thèse que soutient le Sénateur, et en faveur de l'opinion qui maintient que la Législature n'a pas le droit d'examiner la validité de l'élection de M. Benjamin. Nous n'avons plus rien à y voir. La décision de cette question appartient exclusivement et en dernier ressort au Congrès des Etats Unis. Et quelle a été la décision du Congrès dans l'affaire que le Sénateur a citée? Il a décidé que celui qui est porteur des lettres de créances a droit à siéger, que Asher Robbins, ayant été dûment et constitutionnellement élu Sénateur au Congrès pour l'Etat de Rhode Island, il avait droit à siéger dans le Sénat. Clay, dont le Sénateur invoque l'autorité, a élevé la voix en faveur d'une doctrine qui avait reçu la consécration du temps et des principes constitutionnels, quelle a été la conséquence? Asher Robbins fut admis à prêter serment, et un commis fut nommé pour faire l'investigation sur cette qustion. Le Sénateur semble croire que la nomination de ce comité peut avoir quelqu'influence sur la question qui nous est soumise. Ne sait-il pas que toutes les élections contestées sont renvoyées à des comités? Quel fut le rapport de ce comité? Que l'election de M. Robbins était d'accord avec la Constitution et les lois de l'Etat de Rhode Island, et que nulle législation subséquente ne pouvait le priver de son droit de siéger au Sénat. Parmi les noms de ceux qui votèrent en faveur du rapport du comité, je vois ceux de MM. Robb, Calhoun, Poindexter, Preston et Porter, sénateur pour notre propre Etat. Quel est l'homme connaissant Porter qui prétendrait dire, comme l'a fait entendre le sénateur, que sa conduite a été influencée par des considérations ou des préjugés de parti. Le sénateur dit que le vote, en cette occasion, fut un acte politique?—Non, ce vote fut donné par des sénateurs des Etats-Unis qui avaient prêté serment. Quels étaient ces senateurs? C'étaient MM. Bell, Bidd, Calhoun, Chambers, Clay, Clayton, Ewing, Frelinghuysen, Hendricks, Kent, Knight, Lee, McKean, Mangum, Worden, Poindexter, Porter, Preston, Silsbee, Smith, Southard, Sprague, Sweft, Tifton, Tomlinson, Waggaman et Webster.—27 oui contre 16 non J'arrive maintenant à la dernière partie de l'exemple que l on nous a cité. Cet individu, Elisha Potter, réclamait du Sénat le mileage et le per diem, et quoiqu'il fût soutenu bien plus que nous ne ne pourrions jamais soutenir quelqu'un qui réclamerait le siége de M. Benjamin, sa demande ne lui fût accordée qu'à une majorité de deux votes seulement.

N'est-ce pas là un exemple bien plus fort que tous ceux que nous pourrions présenter? La Législature du Rhode-Island n'a-t-elle pas déclaré parfaitement nulle et non-avenue l'élection qui avait eu lieu précédemment? et pourtant le Sénat refusa presque le mileage même au sénateur qu'elle avait nommé.

Quant à moi, comme représentant de mes commettants, je ne consentirai jamais à placer le parti démocrate dans la fausse position d'envoyer au sénateur à Washington pour lui voir fermer les portes du sénat. Je n'oserais plus regarder mes commettants en face et leur dire que je croyais bien faire. Je ne pourrais jamais leur dire que j'obéissais au mandat de la constitution et des lois, si je votais autrement que j'ai l'intention de voter sur cette question. Non jamais on n'obtiendra de moi de participer à cette manœuvre. Je votorai contre, ainsi que je l'ai résolu dès le début. Dans le principe, j'ai pris position à côté de MM. Mouton, Short et deux ou trois autres esprits hardis. Le sénat me pardonnera de les avoir nommés. Nous étions faibles et en petit nombre au commencement, mais je suis heureux de voir que les pensées ont été mûries et que le vote de l'autre chambre a donné aujourd'hui le coup de mort à cette mesure. Je suis maintenant persuadé que le parti démocrate occupera sa véritable position dans les archives historiques du pays.

Sur la motion de M. Griffin d'adopter la résolution, M. Wickliffe demande l'appel nominal, lequel résulte comme suit:

Oui: MM. Boatner, Derbes, Griffin, Kemp, King, Lacey, Lewis, McCay, Mullard, Neal—10.

Non: MM. Clifton, Evans, Hodge, Kenner, Kittridge, Martin, Mouton, Nicholls, Palfrey, Patterson, Rivers, Short, Smith, Taylor, Theriot, Todd et Wickliffe—17.

La résolution est donc rejetée.

Sur motion, le Sénat s'ajourne.

VENDREDI, 11 février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformément à l'ajournement

Les affaires du matin sont d'abord agitées et terminées; puis M. Clifton présente le bill suivant qui pourvoit à l'affectation d'une certaine somme du fonds des terres en marais pour terminer la grande levée dans la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée.

Acte pour approprier une certaine somme tirée du produit des terres marécageuses à l'effet de finir la reconstruction de la grande levée dans la paroisse Pointe-Coupee.

Attendu que l'achévement de la reconstruction de la Grande Levée de la paroisse Pointe-Coupée est absolument nécessaire pour protéger près d'un tiers de l'Etat de la Louisiane contre une inondation annuelle,

SECT. 1re.— Il est résolu par le Sénat et la Chambre des Représentants de l'Etat de la Louisiane, réunis en Assemblée Générale, que la somme de trente-six mille piastres soit tirée du revenu des terres marecageuses données à l'Etat par le Congrès, à l'effet de compléter la reconstruction de la dite Grande Levée.

SECT. 2me.— Il est de plus résolu &c, que les messieurs dont les noms suivent; savoir: James B. Harris, Robert McRea et le colonel Charles Morgan soient et demeurent nommés du bureau des commissaires chargés de surveiller l'exécution du dit ouvrage.

SECT. 3me.—Il est de plus résolu &c., qu'il sera du devoir des dits commissaires ou de la majorité des dits commissaires d'offrir et d'accorder le dit ouvrage par varde cubique au plus bas adjudicataire à tel temps de l'année presente qu'ils jugeront nécessaire, et en donnant au moins trente jours d'avis dans au moins une gazette des villes de Vicksburg, Natches, Nouvelle-Orléans et dans celle de la paroisse Pointe-Coupée.

SECT. 4me.— Il est de plus résolu &c., qu'il sera aussi du devoir des dits commissaires de tracer le dit ouvrage, de le recevoir du contracteur ou des contracteurs à mesure qu'il avancera, et quand ils donneront reçu d'une partie de cet ouvrage ou de son entier, ils devront spécifier dans le dit reçu ; la somme à payer pour cet objet au contracteur ou aux contracteurs du dit ouvrage ainsi reçu; et le dit reçu sera pris comme certificat par l'auditeur des comptes publics, qui sur ce certificat donnera son mandat sur le trésorier de l'Ftat, qui devra payer les dits mandats jusqu'à ce que la levee soit finie ou que la dite somme de trente-six mille piastres soit épuisée.

Sect. 5.—Il est de plus résolu qu'en cas de mort, de refus de servir, de résignation ou absence de l'Etat, de ces commissaires, il sera du devoir du juri de police de la paroisse de la Pointe-Coupée de remplir la vacance ainsi occasionnée.

M. Clifton explique le but de ce bill qui est de réparer ou de terminer la grande levée qui est maintenant dans la condition la plus dangereuse.

M. Rivers demande que la prise en considération de ce bill soit ajournée à quelques jours jusqu'à ce que tous les membres du Sénat soient présents. Beaucoup de membres sont absents et peut-être s'opposeraient-ils à ce bill. Il n'est pas juste que le bill soit insinué pendant leur absence.

M. Clifton fait nbserver que le cas est nécessaire, urgent.

M. Rivers demande si les nouvelles qui ont annoncé l'état déplorable où se trouvent cette levée ont été reçues depuis le départ de ces membres.

M. Clifton répond que les nouvelles ont été reçues aujourd'hui.

MM. Rivers, Short et McCay font quelques observations contre le bill et MM. King, Clifton et Nicholls en faveur du bill, puis la question préalable est demandée et emportée.

Le bill passe.

Sur motion le Sénat s'ajourne.

Lundi 14 février 1853.

L'appel nominal est fait ; il n'y a pas de quorum, le Sénat s'ajourne donc à demain à 11 heures.

Mardi 15 février 1853.

Conformément à une résolution conjointe le Sénat s'ajourne à Mercredi, 23 février à 11 heures A M.

Mercredi 23 février 1853.

Le Sénat s'assemble conformement à l'ajournement.

Bill approuvé.

Un message du gouverneur est reçu, lequel annonce que ce magistrat a approuvé l'acte pour l'émancipation de Susan Litell.

Message à la Chambre.

La démission de M. Mouton comme membre du comité des dépenses casuelles est présentée par lui et acceptée.

Le secrétaire va demander le concours de la Chambre aux actes suivants :

Acte pour l'émancipation de Judson L. Hower ton.

Acte pour l'émancipation de Laura Anna Robb, épouse de Perry Dorman.

Acte définissant les devoirs des notaires publics hors de la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

Un acte relatif au transfert du siége de la Cour de Justice de la paroisse de St-Jean-Baptiste

Un acte pour l'émancipation de Alcide Gonzaline.

Un acte créant une affectation d'une partie du fonds des terres en marais dans le but de compléter la construction de la Grande-Levée dans la paroisse de Pointe-Coupée.

Le secrétaire informe aussi la Chambre que le Sénat a donné son concours aux résolutions et bills suivants :

Un acte pour venir au secours des enfants mineurs de John Sulser, décédé.

Un bill enjoignant au comité sur les institutions charitables, de s'informer des affaires de ces institutions.

Bills présentés.

M. King.—Un acte autorisant des procédures in rem pour recouvrer toutes pertes ou dommages causées par négligence ou incapacité dans la direction ou la conduite de tout steamboat, ferry, chalant ou autres embarcations.

Un acte autorisant des procédures pour forcer les débiteurs par jugement à faire connaître leurs propriétés.—Référé au comité judiciaire.

M. Martin.—Un acte pour incorporer les sociétés des bâtisses, de prêt mutuel et des fonds capitalisés.

M. Lacey.—Un acte relatif aux avocats de District dans tout l'Etat de la Louisiane, à l'exception de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Un acte pour diviser l'Etat de la Louisiane en quatre Districts judiciaires suprêmes pour l'élection des Juges Associés de la Cour Suprême.

Un acte pourvoyant à l'élection du juge président, de quatre juges associés et les juges de district de l'Etat de la Louisiane, hors de la paroisse d'Orléans.

Un acte pour amender un acte intitulé : "Acte pour empêcher que les esclaves puissent obtenir sans le consentement de leur maître des liqueurs spiritueuses et enivrantes."

Et plusieurs autres bills.

M. Lacey dit qu'il y a devant le comité judiciaire un très grand nombre de bills qui devraient être imprimés. Il demande donc que l'impression en soit ordonnée.

M. Wickliffe dit qu'il est contre la coutume établie que des bills soient imprimés avant qu'ils n'aient été rapportés, à moins qu'ils ne fussent de la plus haute importance. S'il y a deux ou trois bills qui se contrarient, le comité judiciaire devrait faire choix de celui qui est le meilleur et faire au Sénat un rapport à ce sujet.

M. Lacey répond que ces bills sont tous d'un caractère très important. Ces bills venaient de la Chambre des représentants et avaient été référés à ce comité. Il est presque impossible au comité de les prendre tous en considération à moins qu'ils ne soient imprimés.

L'impression est donc ordonnée.

Le bill de M. Kenner prohibant l'émission et la mise à circulation de petits billets par des particuliers est pris en consideration.

M. Short présente un amendement prohibant l'émission par des particuliers de billets d'aucune dénomination. Il dit que d'après la manière dont il comprend le bill, il n'empêche pas l'émission de billets de plus de cinq piastres par les particuliers à qui il plairait de les mettre en circulation. Lui, désire priver entièrement de ce droit les particuliers. C'est pour cette raison qu'il a présenté son amendement d'après lequel aucun individu, à moins qu'il n'y soit autorisé par une loi générale ou par une loi spéciale, n'aura le droit d'émettre de papier-monnaie.

M. Kenner dit que le but de son bill est de mettre un terme à la mise en circulation de « chiffons » comme on désigne vulgairement ces mauvais petits billets. La loi générale qui sera sans doute passée à cette session de la Législature contient un article qui répond parfaitement bien au but que se propose le sénateur. Il ne croit donc pas nécessaire d'adopter l'amendement puisque son effet serait d'embarrasser le bill.

M. Short.—Ne me trompè-je pas en comprenant, d'après ce que je viens d'entendre, que le bill auquel le sénateur fait allusion contient un article qui défend aux particuliers d'émettre des billets d'une dénomination plus grande que cinq piastres.

M. Kenner.—Vous ne vous trompez pas, monsieur.

M. Short.—Alors, je retire mon amendement.

J'ignorais que tels fussent la nature et le caractère de ce bill.

Le Sénat s'ajourne.

Jeudi, 24 février.

La communication suivante de la Société des Artisans de la ville de la Nouvelle-Oriéans est soumise au Sénat et subit une lecture.

M. Lacey demande que, par courtoisie, le Sénat vote des remercîment à ces messieurs qui ont pris la peine d'envoyer les dimensions de leur local, et il fait la motion que cette communication soit deposée indéfiniment sur le bureau.

M. Martin dit qu'il considère que la motion du sénateur est entièrement, discourtoise et qu'elle ne doit pas être adoptée. Il est d'avis que cette communication doit être déposée indéfiniment sur le bureau sujette à l'appel et non indéfiniment

M. Lacey.—Loin de moi la pensée de manquer de de courtoisie envers ceux qui ont transmis cette communication au Sénat. Mon seul desir est de voir décider une fois cette question. Je voudrais mettre un terme à la longue et inutile agitation à laquelle cette question a donné lieu. Je suis convaincu qu'à cette session, du moins, on n'essayera pas de transférer le siége du gouvernement, et il est parfaitement inutile de perdre un plus long temps à ce sujet. Si le Sénat pense qu'il y a manque de courtoisie dans la motion que j'ai faite, de déposer indéfiniment sur le bureau cette communication, je suis prêt à la retirer. Je crois qu'il est nécessaire de mettre un terme à cette agitation. Je ne suppose pas que le Sénat ait jamais pensé à transférer pendant cette session le siege du gouvernement dans la ville de la Nouvelle-Orléans.

M. Martin ne partage pas l'opinion du sénateur dans ce qu'il a avancé en dernier lieu. Il s'est donné la peine de s'informer du sentiment et des vues des sénateurs sur cette question, et il croit être certain que la majorité est en faveur du transfert du siége du gouvernement : il ne croit pas cependant qu'on puisse sur cette mesure réunir une majorité constitutionnelle. Il pense que la motion du sénateur d'Est Bâton-Rouge de déposer indéfiniment sur le bureau cette communication des Artisans manque de toute courtoisie et qu'elle devrait être retirée.

M. Derbès.—Monsieur, je fais la motion que cette communication soit référée à un comité spécial.

M. Lacey.—Alors, monsieur, j'insiste sur ma motion, de déposer indéfiniment sur le bureau cette communication.

M Martin.—Si le but du sénateur est seulement d'obtenir un vote d'épreuve sur cette question, il peut l'obtenir bien mieux en présentant une motion dans laquelle son intention soit indiquée Mais il me semble, et je le répète, que la motion qu'il a faite manque de courtoisie.

M. Lacey dit qu'il insistera sur sa motion. Il répète qu'il n'a eu aucunement l'intention de se montrer discourtois envers ces messieurs. Il insiste sur sa motion pour obtenir un vote d'épreuve ; mais il ne présente pas de résolution spéciale contre la mesure proposée. Il ne veut pas se placer dans une position aussi absurde.

M. Martin dit que semblable question n'est pas maintenant devant le Sénat.

M. Short pense que la motion du Sénateur peut être rédigée différemment et de telle sorte qu'elle marque un peu plus de respect envers les personnes qui ont soumis au Sénat cette communication, puisqu'elles se sont données de la peine pour faire ce qu'elles croyaient devoir servir au bien être et à la commodité de la Législature. Elles ne se sont pas contentées d'offrir tout simplement ce qui était à leur disposition; elles ont pris la peine de mesurer les salles et de nous envoyer les dimensions afin que nous vissions bien que leur intention n'était pas d'entasser les membres de la Législature dans un espace insuffisant. Il pense que cela mérite bien qu'on se montre un peu plus courtois envers elles qu'on ne le serait en les remerciant seulement de leur peine, et en déposant indéfiniment sur le bureau la communication qu'ils ont adressée, sans même la prendre en considération. Le Sénateur a dit que par sa motion il n'avait aucunement eu l'intention de manquer de respect à ces personnes. De quelque manière qu'il veuille interpréter les termes de sa motion, la langue doit nous servir à exprimer nos idées et celle qui résulte clairement de sa motion, c'est qu'il veut dire aux auteurs de cette communication qu'ils se sont mêlés d'une affaire qui ne les regardait pas et qu'à l'avenir ils feront mieux de s'occuper des leurs.

M. Wickliffe espère que le Sénateur d'Est Baton Rouge retirera sa motion et qu'il laissera adopter celle du Sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans. Il désire mettre un terme à l'agitation soulevée par cette question, et il croit qu'il n'y a pas de chance de faire adopter une résolution ayant pour but le transfert du siège du gouvernement. Mais les auteurs de cette communication ont sans doute été mûs des meilleures intentions et ils ont du rendre service à la Législature en mesurant leur local et en en transmettant les dimensions au Sénat. Lui même est prêt à voter contre toute proposition qui serait faite de transférer le siège du gouvernement ; mais il en est d'autres qui pensent différemment et qui appuiraien la proposition. Le mieux serait donc de référer cette communication à un comité spécial.

M. Lacey dit qu'il n'a fait cette motion que pour obtenir un vote d'epreuve et mettre un terme a toute agitation ultérieure. J'ai dit clairement que je n'avais pas eu l'intention d'être discourtois et, puisque le sénateur de Madison est d'avis que « la langue nous est donnée pour exprimer nos pensées, » je désire être bien entendu par lui, lorsque je répète que je voulais, au contraire, être très courtois. J'ai la plus grande estime, la plus haute considération pour ce corps si digne, si important, si utile des artisans de la Nouvelle-Orléans, et rien ne saurait être plus éloigné de ma pensée que de dire ou faire quoi que ce fût qui pût les blesser. J'ai dit mon but en faisant cette motion ; j'ai terminé, et je puis la retirer maintenant.

M. Short dit qu'il n'a pas le moindre doute que l'intention du sénateur n'était pas de se montrer discourtois, mais son langage était de nature à être interprèté dans un sens que lui-même n'avait pas voulu lui donner.

M. Lacey. — Le sénateur est démocrate, il souffrira donc que je ne cherche plus à faire prévaloir que ma seconde intention conçue après réflexion.

M. King présente une pétition de la compagnie du moulin à riz de la Louisiane (Louisiana Rice Mill) demandant qu'il lui soit accordé une charte et l'usage d'une partie des terres en marais, pour la culture du riz pendant un certain temps ; la question principale est une concession de terres. Il fait la motion que cette pétition soit référée au comité des améliorations.

Après quelques remarques faites par divers sénateurs, M. King retire sa motion.

M. Wickliffe pense que la pétition devait être plutôt référée au comité judiciaire, attendu qu'elle embrasse une question de loi très importante. Il doute fort que les terres publiques puissent être affectées à un but semblable. L'acte de donation précise les objets auxquels ces terres doivent être destinées, et il croit que la mesure proposée serait en violation de cet acte.

M. King répond que sans doute le sénateur ne comprend pas le but que se proposent les pétitionnaires.

M, Wickliffe dit qu'il croit comprendre que le but de cette pétition est d'obtenir environ vingt mille acres des terres publiques pour un espace de quelques années et le privilége de les acheter plus tard, si les pétitionnaires le desiraient, au prix de $1 25 cts par acre.

Il ne doute pas qu'il n'y ait dans l'Etat des centaines de personnes qui voulussent obtenir semblable concession, si elle pouvait leur être accordées. Il le répète, la question embrasse un point de loi, très important, lequel consiste à savoir si la Législature a le droit d'affecter les terres publiques à aucun autre usage que celui qui est spécifié dans l'acte de donation. S'il ne se trompe pas, le bill propose d'accorder à une compagnie une quantité considérable de terres publiques, ou l'usufruit des dites terres dans le but de s'y livrer à la culture du riz.

Il désirerait avoir à ce sujet l'opinion du comité judiciaire.

M. Kenner—La Constitution prévoit et décide cette question de telle sorte, qu'il ne peut exister aucun doute. Cependant je n'ai aucune objection à ce que la pétition soit référée, car je suis bien convaincu que les pétitionnaires n'obtiendront jamais ce qu'ils demandent.

M. King dit que la proposition n'est pas d'appliquer ces terres publiques à autre autre usage que celui qui est spécifié dans l'acte de donation. La compagnie désirerait seulement obtenir certaines terres du fond et qui ne sont pas maintenant en culture, et d'en faire usage de telle sorte que, plus tard, elles fussent rendues propres à être cultivées. Ce n'est donc pas ce que pense le sénateur, c'est tout simplement donner de la valeur à ces terres. Il est de la plus grande importance pour l'Etat de favoriser la culture du riz, une des branches les plus importantes de l'agriculture et à laquelle le sol et le climat de la Louisiane sont le plus convenables. Si la Législature a le pouvoir d'accorder le «droit de préemption» aux premiers occupants, elle a certes le droit de faire ce que je propose dans ce bill. S'il est possible d'accorder aux pétitionnaires ces terres, rien ne saurait être plus désirable pour l'Etat que de voir ce plan réalisé, et nos marais si pauvres, si misérables, convertis en champs fertiles, en florissantes prairies où s'établirait une population heureuse, active et industrieuse.

Le débat se continua quelque temps, puis la petition et le bill sont référés au comité sur l'agriculture, le commerce et les manufactures.

ORDRE DE JOUR.

Le bill organisant le département du trésor est pris en consideration.

M. Martin pense que ce bill est superflu, attendu qu'il existe déjà un acte qui pourvoit au même but. Il fait donc la motion qu'il soit référé au Comité de Finances.

M. Lacey explique que l'objet de ce bill est d'organiser le département du trésor par un acte de cette Législature, et de mettre ainsi fin aux doutes de beaucoup de personnes qui croient que la nouvelle Constitution a aboli toutes les places existantes sous l'ancienne. Il désire donc embrasser tous les départements de l'Etat dans une série de bills, afin qu'il ne reste plus la moindre incertitude à ce sujet.

M. Martin—Considérant ces doutes auxquels fait allusion le Sénateur, je crois qu'il est convenable de référer le bill.

M. Lacey dit qu'il n'a aucune objection à cela.

Le bill relatif à l'éducation de la jeunesse aux frais de l'Etat, est pris en considération et discuté.

(Le Comité sur l'Education, auquel il avait été référé, a rapporté défavorablement.)

M. Wickliffe expose les raisons qui ont porté le comité à rapporter défavorablement. Il dit que le comité est arrivé à la conclusion que lorsque l'Etat accorde les bienfaits d'une éducation puplique, il ne le fait pas avec l'intention de les contraindre plus tard et de les forcer à adopter une profession plutôt qu'une autre.

Le bill propose qu'après avoir complété leurs études, les élèves de ces institutions s'engagent à embrasser pendant un certain temps la profession de professeurs. L'opinion du comité est que, (ils doivent être laissés en toute liberté de ne consulter que leurs inclinations, et qu'ils ne soient pas forcés à se coucher sous une nécessité qui, le plus souvent, contrariérait leur vocation). Ce sont là les objections que le comité élève contre ce bill ; néanmoins, si le Sénat désire l'adoption du bill, il ne s'y opposera pas.

M. Lacey expose son but. Il a eu plusieurs conversations avec M. Nicolas, ex-surintendant de l'éducation publique de l'Etat, et c'est de lui qu'il tient les suggestions qu'il a insérées dans son bill. Mr. Nicolas lui a exposé les grands avantages qui ont résulte pour d'autres Etats de l'etablissement du système de l'Ecole normale. Mais comme, pour diverses raisons, ce système ne peut être établi ici, nos efforts doivent tendre à obtenir, autant que possible, des résultats équivalants, si les circonstances le permettent.

Maintenant, monsieur, est-il injuste qu'un enfant élevé dans cette institution, et qui y a joui des bienfaits d'une éducation libérale, soit contraint à consacrer plus tard une partie (quelque longue qu'elle soit!) de son temps au service de l'Etat? Il n'y a certes là aucune imposition, il n'y a rien d'anti-démocratique ! N'est ce pas là, réaliser le système des écoles normales ? Le but de ce bill n'est-il pas louable ? Tous l'ont accepté comme tel. La seule objection qui ait été élevée, est celle-ci : est-il juste d'exiger de qui que ce soit, qu'il embrasse la profession de professeur ? Les personnes de qui on voudrait l'exiger, l'Etat leur a conféré d'immenses bienfaits ! Ils sont entretenus, éduqués à ses frais ; leur esprit est façonné au moule des hautes instructions dont l'Etat fait encore les frais ! Il est donc important qu'il reçoive quelque chose en retour; qu'ils donnent à d'autres, en son nom, ce qu'ils lui doivent, et qu'à leur tour ils dirigent la jeunesse future dans cette voie où l'Etat les a fait conduire à ses frais. Les objections contre ce bill n'ont aucun fondement, et ce qu'il réclame n'est pas une exigence trop forte. Ce bill, comme l'a dit avec raison un membre, dont l'attention s'est longtemps arrêtée sur cette question, ce bill, «propose seulement d'exiger de ceux qui ont reçu d'immenses bienfaits de l'Etat de lui en donner une faible partie en retour.» Et après tout, qu'exigeons-nous ? leur parole. J'espère donc que ce bill, dont les résultats, doivent être si avantageux pour l'Etat, ne sera pas rejeté par suite des objections élevées par le comité.

M. Lacoste voudrait savoir si, en vertu de ce bill, ces personnes sont tenues d'embrasser la profession de professeur, même contre leur désir.

M. Kenner demande que le secrétaire donne lecture du dit bill.

Cette motion est adoptée.

M. Kenner dit qu'il voterait à coup sûr en faveur du bill, s'il subissait quelques altérations. Le principe sur lequel il roule est bon. Malgré l'extrême besoin que nous avons de bons professeurs, dans cet Etat, le nombre de ceux qui comprennent leur profession est comparativement fort limité. Cette proposition n'a rien de nouveau. Le même principe a été consacré par tous les Etats où fonctionne le système des Ecoles Publiques. Il l'a été non-seulement par les Etats en particulier, mais aussi par les Etats-Unis. Le gouvernement général a établi une institution à West-Point, dans laquelle des jeunes gens sont élevés aux frais du gouvernement, avec l'engagement implicite qu'ils entreront dans l'armée et se consacreront au service du pays. Il en est de même des jeunes gens qui doivent devenir plus tard officiers de marine. Il y a une institution appelée "école navale" où ils sont élevés, sous la condition tacite qu'ils entreront ensuite dans la marine. Ce n'est donc pas imposer une trop dure condition. Aujourd'hui nous éprouvons une grande pénurie de professeurs, nous le proclamons au loin. Nous les envoyons chercher dans toute l'Union et nous les invitons à venir parmi nous pour nous aider à l'éducation de la jeunesse Louisianaise. Efforçons-nous donc par tous les moyens de les faire naître dans l'Etat. La Louisiane est aujourd'hui en fait d'éducation ce que la France est en fait de marine. La France dépense des millions pour la construction de vaisseaux; elle en possède plusieurs centaines d'armés, construits sur les meilleurs modèles, parfaitement équipés et dans un ordre excellent; mais il est un élément essentiel de la marine qui lui manque, et que tous ses efforts ne pourront parvenir à créer. La France manque de marins et sans marins il ne peut y avoir de marine. Il en appelle à ses collègues et leur demande ce qui se passe dans leurs paroisses respectives, dans quelle condition est l'éducation publique partout dans l'Etat ? Le but du système aujourd'hui adopté était surtout de se procurer de bons professeurs, mais il a été impossible de trouver des hommes compétants pour suivre cette profession, à cause de l'exiguité du salaire accordé.

Jusqu'à présent nous n'avons rien fait pour réaliser notre système d'éducation publique. Nous ne pourrions, il est vrai dépenser plus que nous n'avons fait. Nous n'aurions pas l'argent nécessaire, mais il faut absolument faire en sorte de nous assurer de bons professeurs. La proposition renfermée dans la loi est donc bonne. Il peut répéter avec le membre d'Est-Bâton-Rouge, il n'y a rien d'anti-republicain, rien d'anti-démocratique dans ce bill ! Et en le répétant, il espère qu'il n'a pas fait usage de cette expression dans aucune acception de parti.

Si le sénat ne résout pas par quelque chose de pratique cette question, ainsi que le bill l'a en vue. Le système public d'éducation s'en ira bientot en fumée.

Il souhaite que le bill soit adopté malgré l'opposition du comité d'éducation, mais cependant demande que le mot indigent soit effacé partout où il se trouve.

M. Lacey est heureux de voir que le bill a reçu l'aide puissant du sénateur de l'Ascension. Il espère voir les membres du comité d'éducation revenir sur leur opposition et voter pour l'adoption définitive du bill. Il espère voir tout le Sénat unanime sur ce point. La proposition qui a rencontré de l'opposition n'est pas nouvelle, ce n'est pas une création de son cerveau. Ce n'est autre chose que ce qui est mis en pratique pour les écoles normales, si florissantes dans les Etats du Nord et au Canada. Si la Chambre l'adopte, les professeurs pourront former une génération éclairée par une éducation libérale. Il espère donc que le bill sera adopté.

M. Short demande si l'Etat aura à fonder une école pour chaque professeur.

M. Lacey dit qu'il est prêt à engager sa parole et à affirmer qu'il est prêt à la tenir en disant qu'il est disposé à remplir sa tâche comme professeur.

Il est prêt à faire ce qui sera exigé de lui. Sa promesse sera enrégistrée, et l'engagement qu'il prend sera rempli.

Sur motion de M. Kenner, le bill est renvoyé de nouveau au comité.

VENDREDI, 25 février.

M. Kittridge présente un bill, ayant pour objet d'accorder certains privilèges sur la récolte pendante.

Digitized by Google

M. Burthe propose que le bill soit renvoyé au comité judiciaire. L'objet du bill est d'une grande importance, et les sénateurs doivent avoir le loisir de l'étudier avant d'être appelés à donner leurs votes sur la question qu'elle pose.

M. Kittridge dit qu'il est vrai que le bill est d'une grande importance pour les cultivateurs du sol, cependant il est d'une nature extrêmement simple. Il ne porte aucune atteinte aux droit acquis, et il n'y a aucune nécessité à le renvoyer au comité.

Mr. Burthe espère que l'on n'insistera pas sur l'adoption immédiate du Bill, que l'on accordera aux Sénateurs le temps de la réflection. Il doit avouer que la présentation de ce bill l'a pris par surprise, et il n'est pas préparé à voter immédiatement sur cette question.

M. Palfrey appuie la motion de renvoyer au comité. La question est trop importante pour permettre de la résoudre avec précipitation

M. Kittridge n'objecte pas au renvoi. Il propose que le bill soit mis à l'ordre du jour pour demain.

M Lacey dit qu'il sera impossible au comité judiciaire de faire un rapport demain.

Ce comité a été chargé d'une telle masse d'affaires qu'il lui est impossible d'examiner le bill et de présenter un rapport demain. Il propose de le mettre à l'ordre du jour pour un des jours de la semaine prochaine.

M. Burthe n'a pas fait sa motion dans l'intention que le rapport fût présenté demain Le comité doit avoir tout le loisir d'étudier la question et ne doit être tenu de faire un rapport qu'après s'être bien préparé.

M. Short fait observer qu'il est vrai que le bill n'a pour objet que de faire peser le privilege sur des objets qui en sont maintenant exempts, mais il créerait beaucoup d'embarras aux shériffs. Quand la saisie s'applique à la récolte pendante, elle produit un conflit entre les créanciers existants et le marchand.

Le bill est finalement renvoyé au Comité Judiciaire et mis à l'ordre du jour de jeudi prochain.

M. Martin présente une résolution enjoignant au Comité Judiciaire de préparer un bill qui défende à tout officier de l'Etat d'occuper plus d'une place salariée et qui ordonne que les commissions de tous les officiers qui remplissent deux places soient annulées.

M. Martin explique l'objet de la résolution. Elle s'applique principalement aux greffiers de cour qui ont des commissions d'encanteur —Sous la loi judiciaire de 1846 ils étaient autorisés à donner des licenses à d'autres personnes pour faire des ventes. Cet état de choses a pour but de créer le cumul et de donner aux greffiers un avantage illgitime en leur permettants d'empêcher d'autres perennes d'exercer les fonctions d'encanteur. Son but est qu'il soit enjoint au comité Judiciaire de préparer et de rapporter un bill qui soit de nature à mettre un terme à cet abus, à cette violation directe de l'article 122 de la Constitution.

Le bill pour venir en aide à.... est appelé à la discussion.

M. McCay dit que, selon sa manière d'entendre le rapport, la somme a été payee plus d'une année après qu'elle fût due. Si les membres veulent recourir au rapport du trésorier et l'examiner attentivement, ils seront fort surpris. Ils verront que plus de $60,000 de commission ont été remboursées de cette manière, et que le montant est plus grand cette année que dans aucune année précédente. En quelques cas, ses commissions qui remontaient jusqu'à l'année 1847 ont été payées. Il doit y avoir quelque part quelque avis qui produise cet état de choses. Lorsque quelques jours seulement se sont écoulés entre l'époque du paiement et celle ou l'argent était dû, il ne voit pas d'objection à payer les commissions; mais quand six mois ou une année se sont passés, il y est tout opposé.

M. Derbès demande que le bill soit de nouveau renvoyé au comité.

M. Wickliffe propose qu'il soit déposé sur le bureau sujet à l'appel, attendu que M. Boatner, qui est bien informé des circonstances de l'affaire, est absent.

M. Derbès fait observer qu'il est membre du comité qui a rapporté en faveur de la réclamation, et il avait pensé qu'elle était en tout semblable à celles qui avaient été approuvées par le Sénat. Il désirerait que le bill fat renvoyé de nouveau au comité, parce qu'il ne veut pas se placer dans une fausse position devant le Sénat.

M. McCay demande la lecture du rapport.

Le secrétaire lit le rapport, après quoi le bill est déposé sur le bureau sujet à l'appel.

M. Rivers demande que le bill requérant nos représentants et enjoignant à nos sénateurs du Congrès de faire tous leurs efforts pour obtenir une concession des lacs à eaux basses (shallow lakes), soit pris en considération.

M. Rivers ajoute que, vu la grande accumulation de bois de dérive qui obstrue le cours de la Rivière Rouge, les eaux inondent annuellement une grande partie des terres environnantes, lesquelles sont enregistrées au bureau des terres comme lacs à eaux basses. Les eaux de ces lacs sont excessivement basses, et la navigation y est impossible. En vertu des actes du Congrès, l'embarras serait enlevé et le pays environnant serait desseché; et alors il pourrait être amené à un état tel que la culture en devint possible. Le but de ce bill est d'enjoindre au secrétaire de l'intérieur de faire faire un relevé de ces terres et de les enregistrer comme terres en marais. Autrement des prétentious opposées pourraient être élevées à la propriété de ces lacs puisque lorsqu'ils auront été desséchés, ils peuvent être enregistrés comme terres hautes.

Le bill est pris en considération et adopté.

SAMEDI. 26 février 1853.

Compagnies pour la construction de Rail Roads.

M. King présente un bill amendant la seconde section de l'acte de 1847 qui limite l'existence des compagnies formées sous l'empire de cette loi à 25 ans.

M. King fait remarquer que son amendement a pour but d'affranchir les compagnies pour la construction de rail road des restrictions imposées par cette section, en étendant le temps de leur existence à 50 ans. Il désire s'assurer du sentiment du sénat à cet égard. Il est d'opinion que le terme de 25 ans est beaucoup trop court pour de pareilles compagnies, et en même temps il est opposé à la perpétuité des chartes.

M. Short établit, comme M. King, l'objet du bill. Le seul changement que propose le bill est de donner à ces compagnies une plus longue existence, des privilèges plus durables qu'elles n'en peuvent avoir sous l'empire des actes de 1847 et de 1848. Je ne vois pas pourquoi, dit-il, une compagnie de chemin de fer qui doit être d'un avantage réel pour l'Etat n'aurait pas une plus longue existence. Si elle venait à encourir une forfaiture par quelqu'un de ses actes, si elle se suicidait elle-même, le cas serait différent. Mais je désire prolonger l'existence de ces compagnies, c'est à dire leur capacité de poursuivre et d'être poursuivies en justice, par là, donner de la confiance aux capitalistes dont les fonds sont sollicités pour des entreprises de ce genre, et leur assurer un emploi avantageux de leurs capitaux. Il peut s'écouler dix ou quinze ans avant qu'ils puissent retirer du capital qu'ils ont engagé un intérêt qui leur prouve qu'ils ont fait une bonne affaire. Mon but donc est d'appeler l'attension du sénat à l'exception que le bill introduirait dans la seconde section de l'acte de 1847 en faveur des compagnies de chemin de fer. Si, avant l'expiration du terme de 25 ans, on vient à découvrir un autre mode de transport plus économique, plus expéditif que les chemins de fer, si les ballons peuvent être utilisés, et que l'on puisse traverser les airs sans toucher à la terre ferme, rien de mieux, l'existence d'une compagnie de chemin de fer ne sera point un obstacle à cette nouvelle conquête. Mais, tant que les chemins de fer seront utiles et avantageux, tant qu'ils pourront donner un profit, il faut leur permettre de vivre et de conserver leurs privilèges d'incorporation, réservant, toutefois, à la législature, le pouvoir de les limiter et d'empêcher le monopole.

M. King pense que l'objet du bill n'est pas suffisamment compris. Il lira la section de l'acte que le bill se propose d'amender

On me demande comment on pourra déterminer la suffisance de l'indemnité. Je réponds qu'on y arrivera en prenant l'opinion d'hommes compétents, en soumettant la question aux tribunaux, et par mille autres moyens. La décision de pareils points pourrait être transportée des cours d'Etat aux cours des Etats-Unis. Ces compagnies sont des societés privées. Leur propriété est d'une nature tout aussi particulière que celle d'un individu. Beaucoup de personnes s'imaginent qu'à l'expiration de la charte d'une compagnie son droit de posséder s'évanouit C'est une erreur. La compagnie, en pareil cas, cesse d'exister comme corporation, elle perd le droit de poursuivre et d'être poursuivie en justice. Ses propriétés ne sont pas confisquées au profit de l'Etat quand elle finit d'exister, et l'Etat n'a pas plus le droit de l'exproprier, qu'il n'a le droit de vous enlever votre maison. Il ne peut le faire qu'en donnant l'indemnité exigée par la Constitution, et qui doit être équivalante à la perte de la propriété. Mais je pense que le peuple a toujours ce droit restreint d'expropriation et qu'il faut l'exercer chaque fois que l'intérêt de l'Etat l'exige C'est pour cette raison que j'ai inséré cette disposition dans le bill; sans elle, un pareil acte ne pourrait jamais être accompli que par une convention du peuple, exerçant tout les pouvoirs de l'Etat dans la plénitude de sa souveraineté.

J'ai donc inséré cette clause pour qu'il ne fût pas nécessaire d'avoir recours à ce moyen extraordinaire. Je ne crois pas qu'aucune ligne présentant quelque utilite ait a en souffrir. Si elle est utile, l'Etat ne songera jamais à l'exproprier. Mais si elle venait à n'être qu'un embarras, alors l'Etat aura le droit d'expropriation droit qui, en pareilles circonstances, devrait être exercé de telle sorte que nous pussions être au plus tôt débarrassés d'une chose nuisible en elle-même. Je vais dire en quelques mots les raisons qui, dans mon opinion s'opposent à la perpétuité des corporations. La generation d'aujourd'hui ne doit pas enchaîner les générations futures pendant des siècles. L'homme n'est pas infaillible. Il est sujet à erreur. Il n'est pas une seule de nos opinions, pas une position prise par nous au sujet de laquelle nous puissions dire : j'ai incontestablement raison. Nous ne pouvons espérer que nos décisions seront finales, qu'elles lieront la postérité à tout jamais. Nous n'avons donc pas le droit de faire des lois de nature a empêcher les législatures qui nous succéderont de corriger nos erreurs, ou de porter remède au mal que nous avons créé. Mais je n'ai pas le moindre desir d'entraver ces projets d'amélioration intérieure, qu'il est du devoir de tout officier de l'Etat d'encourager. Si l'on peut prouver que le bill froisse en rien les principes de la justice, qu'il peut arrêter l'exécution de travaux importants pour le public, je suis parfaitement disposé à le modifier de quelque manière que ce soit, et de faire toutes les concessions qui pourront être demandées. Mais c'est en vain que vous parlerez de ces grands projets, de ce chemin de fer du Pacifique, s'étendant du Mississipi aux rivages de la Californie, de ce chemin de fer des Opelousas, allant se rallier aux bouches du Rio-Grande, c'est en vain que vous parlerez de tout celà, que vous vous bercerez de ces rêves : tant que le recueil de vos lois proclamera que vous ne donnerez aux compagnies qu'une existence de vingt-cinq ans, on comprendra que vous êtes opposés à tous ces projets, et, qu'en paroles, vous pouvez vous montré zélés partisans, de pareilles entreprises, mais, qu'au fond, vous n'avez jamais désiré les voir réussir.

Je serais bien aise de connaître l'opinion du Sénat sur le sujet important qui nous occupe. J'ai sur moi un bill important, et je suis incertain de la forme sous lequel je dois le présenter. Je desire savoir si cette charte sera perpétuelle, si nous sommes disposés à renoncer à conserver aucun pouvoir sur les compagnies de cette espèce, ou si nous entendons conserver un pouvoir de révision après le terme de 50 ans.

M. Wickliffe désire appeler l'attention du sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans sur les dispositions de la loi sur les corporations maintenant en existence. Il est contraire aux chartes à perpetuité, et votera certainement contre toute proposition qui tendrait à les accorder. Il pense que le bill doit être imprimé.

M. Hodge saisit cette occasion pour exprimer sa pensée en contradiction avec l'opinou émise par les sénateurs de la Nouvelle-Orléans et de West-Féliciana, et de démontrer le peu de solidité des raisonnements à l'aide desquelles ces messieurs ont entendu prouver que les compagnies du rail-road doivent être limitées à 50 ans. Si cependant le bill doit être imprime, il ne fatiguera pas en ce moment le Sénat de ses remarques, Il désire toutefois qu'il soit bien établi qu'il désire voir se réaliser le plan général des améliorations intérieures de l'Etat, et qu'il n'est nullement effrayé par ces cris : « Au monopole » qui font tant d'effet sur certaines personnes. Lorsque viendra le moment de discuter ces bills, il sera contraire à toute limite imposée aux compagnies de rails-roads, ayant pris naissance en vertu de la loi générale ou de lois particulière. Il est indispensable de donner à ces compagnies une existence plus longue que celle accordée par l'acte de 1847; sans cette coedition, les capitalistes ne seraient pas disposés, selon lui, à investir leurs capitaux dans ces compagnies. Ils ne courraient pas le risque de spéculations de cette sorte, alors qu'une partie importante du temps concédé devrait être employé à démontrer que la compagnie serait profitable. Il n'est pas d'avis de maintenir la section qui donne à l'état le droit d'exproprier de leurs propriétés, les compagnies de rails-roads après le terme de 50 ans. C'est inutile à dire, car la Constitution a reglé cette matière. (L'orateur donne lecture de l'article qui s'y rapporte.) Si donc il est jamais de l'intérêt de l'Etat d'exproprier les compagnies de rail-road, il a le pouvoir de le faire en payant une juste compensation.

M. Wickliffe n'a aucune objection à la position que le sénateur qui l'a précédé a jugé à propos de prendre. Il voit avec plaisir que les cris : « Au monopole ! » ne l'effrayent pas, mais lui-même n'en est pas effrayé davantage. S'il est appelé à voter sur cette question, son vote sera toujours contraire à la concession d'une charte perpétuelle. Il n'entend effrayer ni le sénateur de Caddo, ni aucun autre, mais seulement exprimer son opinion, ses intentions comme l'a fait le préopinant.

M. Short ignore pourquoi le sénateur de la Nouvelle Orléans montre tant d'empressement à disposer actuellement de ce bill. Il désire, quant à lui, donner à ses collègues l'opportunité d'exprimer leurs vues à ce sujet. Il désire connaître leur opinion sur la question du temps d'existence à accorder aux compagnies, et suppose le même désir au sénateur qui a rapporté le bill. Celui-ci ne doit pas s'occuper de la propriété des compagnies. Il peut seulement déterminer le terme de leur existence comme corporation. Il y a là deux choses très distinctes, le temps d'un côté. et de l'autre les propriétés accumulées pendant l'existence d'une compagnie. Celles-ci ne peuvent être touchées, à moins qu'elles n'aient été engendrées par l'acte d'in corporation lui-même.

Quant à lui il desire connaître ce qu'on entend faire au sujet de cette question des améliorations intérieures. Il s'est jusqu'ici abstenu de rien dire à ce sujet, bien qu'il y portat autant d'intérêt qu'aucun autre membre du Sénat. Il a entendu parler de beaucoup de choses qui se préparent, de différents projets qui s'élaborent, mais il voudrait voir quelque chose se réaliser, il désire voir le rail road construit, la locomotive en mouvement portant sur le marché son frêt de coton et de sucre et son sifflet retentissant dans les bois. Nous sommes ici reunis pour que ces choses se réalisent aujourd'hui. N'est ce pas ce désir qui seul a donné naissance à la nouvelle constitution ? N'est ce pas le besoin des améliorations intérieures, et peut-être aussi le désir de voir donner quelques facilités aux banques qui ont amené la convocation de la convention ? Chacun sait que ce sont là ces causes qui ont déterminé l'appel de cette dernière et l'enfantement de la constitution, Il espère donc que ses collègues se sont réunis pour realiser ces projets d'une manière pratique. Il espère que ceux de ses collègues qui sont opposés à accroitre la durée de l'existence des compagnie présenteront quelque moyen pratique pour satisfaire aux désirs de leurs constituants Quelques hommes croient que deux ou trois personnes réunies sous forme de compagnie presentent un grand danger de nature à faire sauter l'Etat. Quant à lui, telle n'est pas sa pensée, bien qu'il aie vu le temps où l'Etat etait annulé par les compagnies de banque. Il ne doit pas craindre de voir se concentrer dans les compagnies de rail road des capitaux assez considerables pour rendre ces compagnies dangereuses. Ce que ses commettants redoutent, c'est de ne pas voir les chars parcourir effectivement les rail roads. Ils craignent que les capitalistes n'osent pas investir leur capital dans ces entreprises en pensant que le privilége des compagnies pourrait être éteint, avant la venue des profits. Il désire donner confiance aux capitalistes, il sait qu'ils sont en général timides, et que leur timidité est en proportion du capital qu'ils possèdent. Notre devoir par conséquent est de leur donner toutes les facilités possibles et de ne pas les priver des fruits légitimes que le capital pourra produire. Et pourquoi les capitalistes ne sont-ils pas venus jusqu'à présent à notre aide ? parce que nous n'avons pas jeté de fondations pour eux et parce qu'ils n'ont pas confiance dans la durée des entreprises auxquelles ils pourraient contribuer. Son espoir est que ces craintes vagues et indéterminées ne pèseront pas assez dans la balance pour empêcher de jeter de solides fondations sur lesquelles les capitalistes viendront bâtir à notre appel nous aider des moyens dont ils disposent et nous permettent de voir le chenal de fer soufflant à travers les marais de Madison et les balles de coton empilées sur de véritables chars de rail roads.

M. Wickliffe veut laisser le préopinant se contenter à son aise de la vue de son cheval de fer, mais il ne voit pas de motif qui s'oppose à ce que le bill soit imprimé et mis à l'ordre du jour de mercredi prochain. C'est un sujet de grande importance, que l'on doit traiter sans précipitation.

Le bill est mis à l'ordre du jour spécial de mercredi prochain.

Abolition du Bureau des Travaux Publics,

M. King annonce arriver à une autre résolution de grande importance, celle qui a pour but d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics. Il la présente comme une question d'épreuve et il désire que le Sénat ne diffère pas au delà de lundi sa prise en considération. Il va cependant expliquer, dès à présent, son objet. Jusqu'aujourd'hui le comité des améliorations intérieure n'a pu produire aucun bill ou produire devant le Sénat aucun système général. Cela tient à ce que le bureau des travaux publics lui enleverait tout le pouvoir des mains et rendrait ses efforts inutiles. Une forte majorité de la Législature est, suivant lui, d'avis d'abolir cette partie de la Constitution qui traite de l'organisation de ce bureau, et jusqu'à ce que ce soit accompli les comités ne peuvent rien faire de pratique et d'utile. Personne ne se soucie de préparer un bill qui doit renfermer un vice inhérent qui doit rendre nulle son opération, et de le préparer pour mettre en opération une clause de la Constitution presque universellement condamnée. Quand à lui il a complètement renoncé d'arriver à un résultat pratique sous l'empire de cette disposition de la Constitution. Mais si quelque mesure peut être prise, elle ne pourra qu'être inapplicable et embarrassante. Quant à lui, sa conviction arrêtée, son opinion préconçue, sont contraires à cette disposition. Si cependant l'opinion de la Législature est favorable à l'existence du bureau des travaux publics, et si elle désire essayer son action, il consent à faire l'essaie qu'on lui imposera bien qu'il en comprenne l'inutilité. La Constitution permet d'abolir le bureau des travaux publics par un vote des 3/5. Il pense que cette proportion au moins de la Législature actuelle est favorable à cette abolition.

M. McCay lit les articles de la Constitution qui traitent de l'établissement du bureau:

Art. 130. Il y aura un Bureau des Travaux Publics, lequel se composera de quatre commissaires. L'Etat sera divisé par la Législature en quatre districts comprenant, autant que possible, un nombre égal d'électeurs: les votants de chacun de ces districts éliront chacun un commissaire pour une période de quatre années. Deux commissaires, désignés par le sort, sur les quatre qui seront d'abord élus, devront se retirer à l'expiration de la seconde année.

Art. 131. L'Assemblée Générale, à sa première session après l'adoption de cette Constitution, devra pourvoir à l'élection et à la rétribution des commissaires ainsi qu'à l'organisation du Bureau. Les commissaires qui seront d'abord élus se réuniront au jour fixé par la loi et tireront au sort pour déterminer l'ordre dans lequel expirera leur mandat.

Art. 132. Les commissaires exerceront une surveillance active et constante sur tous les travaux publics où l'Etat est intéressé, hormis ceux qui sont executés par des compagnies d'actionnaires. Ils communiqueront de temps à autre à l'Assemblée Générale leurs vues sur les travaux publics, et suggéreront les mesures qu'ils croiront les plus propres à réaliser avantageusement le but auquel sont destinées les terres inondées que les Etats-Unis ont concédées à cet Etat. Ils nommeront tous les officiers nécessaires aux travaux publics et exerceront tous autres devoirs qui leur seront imposés par la loi.

Art. 133. Les commissaires pourront être destitués par le vote de la majorité de tous les membres élus à chaque Chambre de l'Assemblée Générale; le motif de la destitution devra être inscrit au journal de chaque Chambre.

Art. 134. L'Assemblée Générale aura le pouvoir, moyennant le concours des trois cinquièmes des membres élus à chaque Chambre, d'abolir le Bureau des Travaux Publics, quand elle jugera que ce Bureau n'est plus nécessaire.

Ce bureau n'est pas encore établi, conséquemment ce bill a pour but d'abolir ce qui n'existe pas encore.

Le dernier article accorde à l'Assemblée Générale le pouvoir d'abolir le Bureau; mais cela veut certainement dire qu'elle ne pourra le faire qu'après que le Board aura été créé. Les termes de la Constitution ont évidemment cette signification et aucune autre. Si l'on admet d'autres suppositions ou d'autres interprétations, ce serait, il me semble, vouloir abolir ce qui n'existe pas—ce qui serait une absurdité. Cet article de la Constitution est un ordre pour la création d'un Bureau de Travaux Publics et nous devons nous y soumettre. Jusqu'à ce que nous en ayions fait l'essai et que nous ayions reconnu par expérience que ce n'est pas là une amélioration de l'ancien système sous lequel a longtemps gémi l'Etat, je donnerai mon vote dans le sens que je viens d'expliquer.

M. Short dit qu'il a le plus grand intérêt à cette question. Il s'occupe maintenant d'un rapport au sujet des Terres Publiques de l'Etat, lequel fournira une base sur laquelle pourra être établi un plan qui pourvoie à ce que le fonds provenant de la vente des terres en marais puisse être employé soit par scripts soit autrement, conformément à un système uniforme. Il a le plus grand intérêt à l'établissement de ce Bureau de Travaux publics et il partage l'opinion émise par le sénateur de la Nlle-Orléans qui a pris la parole avant lui, à savoir :—que nous ne pouvons pas abolir ce qui n'existe pas.

Le dictionnaire de Webster donne au mot abolir la signification suivante :— Mettre un terme à, effacer, annuler.— Si l'illustre auteur de ce dictionnaire avait vécu de nos jours, il croirait que sa définition n'est pas correcte et qu'il aurait dû ajouter « que l'on peut abolir une chose qui n'existe pas. »

Je dois dire que si cette interprétation est correcte l'article qui nous occupe est le plus remarquable de cette Constitution si remarquable !

Qu'il me soit permis maintenant de dire quelques mots des questions constitutionnelles qui entrent dans cette question générale. La Convention qui a fait la Constitution actuelle de cet Etat se réunit comme pouvoir souverain. Nous n'avons pas ce même pouvoir, et dans notre capacité législative nous sommes l'œuvre de la Constitution en vertu de laquelle nous occupons ce poste. Nous avons les pouvoirs conférés à un avocat par celui qui l'emploie. Mais dire que nous pouvons être indépendants, abolir les pouvoirs qui nous sont accordés, nous en arroger d'autres et refuser de faire ce qui nous est expressement ordonné est contraire au plus simple sens commun. L'interprétation que quelques sénateurs cherchent à donner à la Constitution n'a pas de fondement sérieux.

Il désire donc que le comité soit requis de présenter un rapport qui n'abolisse pas le Bureau de Travaux Publics ; mais qui l'organise au contraire. Alors ce fonds si important des terres en marais, ce fonds auquel certaines personnes ont tant d'intérêt que d'un seul coup elles en prennent pour la somme de $36,000, sera réglé et il pourra en être disposé.

Je ne désire pas inculper en aucune manière l'honorable sénateur [M. King] qui a présenté la résolution ; mais je la considère comme un cheval de Troie destiné à cacher le fonds des terres en marais, pour qu'il puisse être ensuite répandu. Je l'ai déjà dit, j'ai le plus grand intérêt dans cette question et je désire l'adoption de quelque système général de levées par lequel la Louisiane puisse être protégée contre les crevasses et les inondations qui trop souvent lui causent un tort considérable.

M. Lacey.—Si les arguments avancés par le sénateur de la Nouvelle-Orléans [M. McCay] relativement aux objections constitutionnelles qui s'élèvent contre cette résolution sont corrects, s'ils sont vrais, alors nous ne devons pas l'adopter. Mais je suis assez porté à croire que ces arguments ne sont pas bons. En concluant sur cette question, je m'efforcerai de le faire comme dans une occasion récente, lorsque le Sénat a eu à discuter une question constitutionnelle. Je l'essaierai pour arriver à la vraie interprétation.

M. Wickliffe.—A quelle question le sénateur fait-il allusion ?

M. Lacey.—A la question comprise dans la résolution ordonnant de procéder à l'élection d'un sénateur au Sénat des Etats-Unis.

M. Wickliffe.—J'avais cependant cru comprendre que le sénateur avait soutenu qu'aucune question constitutionnelle n'était comprise dans cette résolution.

Mr. Lacey. Si le Sénateur a entendu mes argumens sur cette question la, s'il en a lu le rapport imprimé et n'a pas vu, que je la prenais au point de vue Constitutionnel, il a alors essayé de répondre à une chose qu'il n'avait pas le moins du monde comprise.

L'article de la Constitution sur lequel ceux qui sont opposés à la resolution appuieut leurs arguments déclare, que le bureau des travaux publics peut être aboli par un vote des trois cinquièmes des membres de la Législature, lorsque ce corps jugera qu'il n'est plus nécessaire. Il me semble donc que nous devons d'abord composer ce bureau et le mettre en operation avant que nos puissions l'abolir. Mais peut on supposer, que si les 3/5 de la Législature sont opposés à ce bureau, si dans la même proportion ce corps considère que ce bureau est inutile peut-être même dangereux, peut on supposer, dis je, que la loi ait voulu nous forcer à le créer d'abord, à le composer seulement pour l'abolir immédiatament après ?

Il est évident que telle n'a pas eté l'intention de ceux qui ont fait la Constitution. Mais Monsieur, si les 3/5 de la Législature sont opposés à ce bureau, ils ont le pouvoir d'empecher qu'il ne soit créé. Mieux vaut donc, discuter cette question au point de vue de l'utilité. Mais je sais que la résolution elle même est injudicieuse en ce moment loin que le Sénat doive enjoindre au Comité de faire un rapport, demandant l'abolition du bureau des travaux publics, je crois qu'il est plus convenable, que le Comité expose devant le Sénat les raisons qui l'ont porté à recommander le plan indiqué dans la résolution. Le Comité a certainement eu ses raisons pour cela, et il peut les dire au Sénat, car sans le moindre doute il doit avoir longuement et soigneusement étudié la question. Il lui est bien plus facile de dire, les raisons qui l'ont influencé qu'à nous donner des instructions au sujet d'une question, qu'on ne peut esperer que nous connaissions aussi bien que lui. Pour l'obtenir je présenterai donc une résolution.

Mr. Lacey lit alors sa résolution.

Je considère que la question des améliorations intérieures est la plus importante dont la Législature puisse s'occuper. Elle est pour la Louisiane une question de prospérité ou de ruine. Je ne suis donc pas disposé à agir à la hate sur ce que je juge être si important, ni rien décider sans que le Comité nous ait donné les informations qu'il possède. Mais je dois ajouter, que loin de penser qu'il puisse être prêt à le faire lundi, je voudrais qu'on lui accorde plus de temps, jusqu'à Mardi par exemple.

M. Wickliffe fait observer, qu'une discussion importante doit avoir lieu ce jour là

M. McCay demande qu'on se dispense des règles.
